

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

---

BATES HALL.

---

NOT TO BE TAKEN AWAY.

Form No. 174--3-1-'56-5M.

No. 6153.27 E

✓ 10
1914

FROM THE

ROBERT C. BILLINGS FUND

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

TENTH ANNUAL CUMULATION

BOOK REVIEWS OF 1914 IN ONE ALPHABET

EDITED BY
CLARA ELIZABETH FANNING

---

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES WRITTEN BY MARY KATHARINE REELY

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y. and NEW YORK CITY
1915

Am Ref

Billing Fund

Nov-14, 1960

112

6153.27E

Vol 3

Page 1

300 605

PREFACE

This issue of the BOOK REVIEW DIGEST is a fourteen months' cumulation. The reason for this change from our usual practice of issuing a cumulated number at the end of the year has been outlined in previous numbers, but may be briefly restated here. An annual issued in December has always been unsatisfactory to us because of its incompleteness. Books issued late in the year could not be included and many of the best reviews were missed. In the preface to the 1913 annual, attention was called to some of our difficulties with belated reviews. For the present number we think we have caught a few of them and believe that in every way this cumulation will be found a more complete record for its year than were those preceding it.

A note is necessary concerning the use of the superior figure to indicate the month of entry in this number covering fourteen months. For books entered in January, 1915, no figure has been used. Those entered in February of 1914 and 1915 are both marked with the <sup>2</sup>. Hereafter this feature will be used only in cumulated numbers where it will be used to indicate new entries.

The descriptive notes for July and August of 1914 were written by Justina Leavitt Wilson.

The subject of book reviewing in America was given serious attention by Bliss Perry in two recent numbers of the Yale Review. In the early part of his first paper Mr. Perry draws an analogy, which seems to please him much, for he dwells on it, between the function of the critic and the act of a grocer weighing out a pound of butter. Criticism he defines as "the act of weighing." The weak point in this comparison is that the scales test only the weight, and any housewife could tell him that the true test of a pound of butter is in the eating, and that to be truly tested it must be eaten with a bit of bread, not merely tasted on the tip of the tongue. When the BOOK REVIEW DIGEST estimates the number of words in a book and works out the cost per thousand it has something that might do for an analogy with the grocer's scales, but the estimate has told nothing of the book's quality. You cannot eliminate the personal element either in butter or in books. Some like it salt and some like it fresh; some want it dairy made; others prefer the creamery brands. The critic, either of butter or of books, cannot attain a state of impartiality where his own palate will not influence him, and the BOOK REVIEW DIGEST has always pointed out the danger of trust in one palate only. In the second of his papers, after summing up ably the defects of American criticism, Mr. Perry outlines the qualifications of an ideal organ of literary criticism. It should utilize, he says, "every variety of training, of conviction, and of what Fenimore Cooper called 'gifts.' It should have its representatives of judicial, of interpretative, and of purely impressionistic criticism. Like the Church it should employ every variety of temperament, every range of scholarship, every pattern of personal inventiveness and initiation, every mode of discipline, and every mood of devotion. It should have its Bishops and Archbishops for the various dioceses of learning and taste,—perhaps its College of Cardinals and its Pope, for there must always be some Editor-in-Chief to keep the heretics in their proper place;—but the essential thing is that it should be a Church Militant, with daring young missionaries and explorers, bent upon the conquest and conversion of the whole Philistine world."

No such organ now exists,—perhaps never will, but we rather feel that the BOOK REVIEW DIGEST, gathering together in one place the divergent points of view of many critics, meets some of the conditions.

M. K. R.

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

VOL. X

FEBRUARY, 1915

No. 14

PUBLISHED MONTHLY BY
THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

White Plains, N. Y. . . . . 39 Mamaroneck Ave.
New York City . . . . . 501 Fifth Ave.

Entered as second class matter January 21, 1914, at the post office at White Plains, New York, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

One year . . . . . $5.00
Single numbers (Annual Cumulation, $3.00) . . . . . .50
The Book Review Digest will be sent to subscribers until an order to discontinue is received with remittance for amount due.

TERMS OF ADVERTISING

Combined rate for The Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature, The Cumulative Book Index and The Book Review Digest: One page, $25; one-half page, $12.50; one inch, $2. Special rates on annual contracts.

The outstanding feature of the books of the year presented in this issue of the Digest is the number of books devoted to the war—al tho the war did not begin till the year was well over half gone. One of the noteworthy things about the situation was the number of books dealing with the crisis that were ready to hand when the storm broke; another was the celerity with which publishers sprang into the breach to produce new ones. The "War Manual" of the World's Work holds the record for quick work in this respect. This, however, was a special issue of a periodical. Münsterberg's "War and America" was, we believe, the first book in the field. Since then books have been coming without let or stay—and will come. Many have been of ephemeral value, brought out hurriedly to meet the demands of the trade and catch some of the profits that are a by-product of war; others, more conscientiously done, will have a permanent value as a reflection of the mental attitude and spirit of the time. The Digest has made an effort to include all that came to our notice, believing that choice among these books would constitute a library problem.

A field in which we may look for an increase in numbers during the coming year is that of the "See America first" literature. The Panama-Pacific exposition acting as a positive and the war as a negative influence will drive the tide of travel westward. Already California authors are coming gallantly to the fore and we have had books by Mrs. Atherton, Edwin Markham, George Wharton James, and others celebrating the wonders of their state. Julian Street and Wallace Morgan set a fashion that will be followed by others, and we shall probably have more volumes by easterners who have discovered their country. And, just as a counter suggestion, why doesn't some westerner, preferably a San Franciscan, travel eastward, discover the east and write it up? He would assume that the east begins, as it does for him, with the Rocky mountains, he would write Chicago up as an eastern city, and reach the climax of his impressions with New York and Boston and the non-coeducational colleges of the Atlantic coast. Then a western publisher, Paul Elder, say, could publish it, and the east, if it would read the thing at all, could see itself thru others' eyes.

For, in spite of its official name, there are few bonds uniting these states of America. Julian Street found that out: "We do not know our country or our fellow countrymen as we should. We are too localized. We do not understand the United States as Germans understand Germany, as the French understand France or as the British understand Great Britain. This is partly because of the great distances which separate us, partly because of the heterogeneous nature of our population, and partly because, being a young civilization, we flock abroad in quest of the ancient charm and picturesqueness of Europe. The 'See America first' idea which originated as the advertising catch line of a western railroad, deserves serious consideration, not only because of what America has to offer in the way of scenery, but also because of what she has to offer in the way of people."

For several years we have printed for a number of libraries extra copies of monthly issues of the Book Review Digest in which the entries are printed on one side of the sheet only. These entries are clipped and used in various ways. Some librarians paste the entries into the books themselves as a help to the reader when selecting books to take home. They are used for annotating the bulletins and book lists, are mounted on cards to be used as order slips, and are distributed among the book committee as helps in book selection. Still another library has added the descriptive note to the catalog card. Mr. Theodore W. Koch, Librarian of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, has just sent us the following description of the use to which this copy is put in his library:

Our extra copy, printed on one side of the leaf, has been doing us a great service. We clip this for the benefit of the men in the different departments and send the notices to such as are likely to be interested, via the Campus messenger service. We pin these clippings to the enclosed multigraph form. Many have spoken most appreciatively of this service.

The multigraphed form which is sent with the clippings is reproduced as follows:

CLIPPED FROM THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST,
Published by the H. W. Wilson Company,
White Plains, N. Y.

The asterisk before the price indicates those books sold at a limited discount and commonly known as net books. The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazines indicate the degrees of favor or disfavor of the entire review.

In reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words.

For the benefit of any subscriber to the Book Review Digest who may be interested we call attention to the fact that an extra copy of the Digest printed on one side only will be supplied to subscribers at a yearly subscription rate of $3.00.

Publications from which Digests of Reviews are Made

- Am. Econ. R.—American Economic Review. $.50. American Economic Association, Ithaca, N. Y.
 Am. Hist. R.—American Historical Review. $.4. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 Am. J. Soc.—American Journal of Sociology. $.2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Am. J. Theol.—American Journal of Theology. $.3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 A. L. A. Bkl.—A. L. A. Booklist. $.1. A. L. A. Publishing Board, 78 E. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
 Am. Pol. Sci. R.—American Political Science Review. $.3. American Political Science Ass'n, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
 Ann. Am. Acad.—Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. $.5. 36th and Woodland Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Astrophys. J.—Astrophysical Journal. $.5. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Ath.—Athenæum. $.8. Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C., London.
 Atlan.—Atlantic Monthly. $.4. Atlantic Monthly Company, 3 Park St., Boston, Mass.
 Bib. World.—Biblical World. $.2. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Bookm.—Bookman. $.2.50. Dodd, Mead & Co., 4th Ave. & 30th St., New York.
 Bot. Gaz.—Botanical Gazette. $.7. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Cath. World.—Catholic World. $.3. 120-122 W. 60th St., New York.
 Chaut.—Chautauquan. Merged with the Independent.
 Class. J.—Classical Journal. $.1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Class. Philol.—Classical Philology. $.3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Dial.—Dial. $.2. 632 South Sherman St., Chicago, Ill.
 Educ. R.—Educational Review. $.3. Educational Review Pub. Co., Columbia Univ., N. Y.
 Elec. World.—Electrical World. $.3. McGraw Publishing Co., 239 West 39th St., New York.
 El. School J.—Elementary School Journal (continuing Elementary School Teacher). $.1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Engin. N.—Engineering News. $.5. Hill Publishing Co., 10th Ave. at 36th St., New York.
 Engin. Rec.—Engineering Record. $.2. McGraw Publishing Co., 239 West 39th St., New York.
 Eng. Hist. R.—English Historical Review. $.6. Longmans Green & Co., 39 Paternoster Row, London, E. C.
 Forum.—Forum. $.2.50. Mitchell Kennerley, 32 West 58th St., New York.
 Hibbert J.—Hibbert Journal. $.2.50. Sherman, French & Co., 6 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.
 Ind.—Independent. $.3. 119 W. 40th St., New York.
 Indust. Engin.—Industrial Engineering and Engineering Digest. $.2. Technical Literature Co., 47 Broad St., New York.
 Int. J. Ethics.—International Journal of Ethics. $.2.50. Prof. James H. Tufts, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 Int. Studio.—International Studio. $.5. John Lane Co., 116-120 West 32d St., New York.
 J. Geol.—Journal of Geology. $.4. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 J. Philos.—Journal of Philosophy, Psychology and Scientific Methods. $.3. Sub-Station 84, New York.
 J. Pol. Econ.—Journal of Political Economy. $.3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Lit. D.—Literary Digest. $.3. Funk & Wagnalls Company, 354-360 Fourth Ave., New York.
 Mod. Philol.—Modern Philology. $.3. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Nation.—Nation. $.4. P. O. Box 794, New York.
 Nature.—Nature. $.7.5. Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Ave., New York.
 New Republic.—New Republic. $.4. Republic Publishing Co., Inc., 421 W. 21st St., New York.
 N. Y. Times.—New York Times Book Review. $.1. Times Square, New York.
 No. Am.—North American Review. $.4. North American Review Pub. Co., Franklin Square, New York.
 Outlook.—Outlook. $.3. Outlook Co., 287 4th Ave., New York.
 Pol. Sci. Q.—Political Science Quarterly. $.3. Ginn & Co., 70 5th Ave., New York.
 Psychol. Bull.—Psychological Bulletin. $.2.75. Psychological Review Company, Princeton, N. J.
 Pub. W.—Publishers' Weekly. $.4. 241 W. 37th St., New York.
 R. of Rs.—American Review of Reviews. $.3. Review of Reviews Co., 30 Irving Place, New York.
 Sat. R.—Saturday Review. $.8. 10 King St., Covent Garden, London, W. C.
 School R.—School Review. $.1.50. University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Ill.
 Science, n. s.—Science (new series). $.5. Science Press, Sub-Station 84, New York.
 Spec.—Spectator. $.8. 1 Wellington St., Strand, London.
 Survey.—Survey. $.3. Survey Associates, Inc., 105 East 22d St., New York.
 Yale R.—Yale Review. $.2.50. Yale Publishing Ass'n, 209 Elm St., New Haven, Conn.
 In addition to the above list the Book Review Digest frequently quotes from Henry Turner Bailey's reviews in the School Arts Magazine (formerly School Arts Book); Boston Transcript; Springfield Republican; Cleveland Open Shelf; N. Y. Best Books; N. Y. Libraries; N. Y. City Branch Library News; Pittsburgh Monthly Bulletin; Pratt Institute Quarterly Book List, and Wisconsin Library Bulletin (Book Selection Dept.).

OTHER ABBREVIATIONS:

- Abbreviations of publishers' names will be found in the Publishers' Directory at the end of The Cumulative Book Index.
 An asterisk (*) before the price indicates those books sold at a limited discount and commonly known as net books.
 The superior figure at the beginning of the second line of the entry indicates the month when the book received its first mention in this publication.
 The descriptive note is separated from critical notices of a book by a dash.
 The plus and minus signs preceding the names of the magazine indicate the degrees of favor or disfavor of the entire review.
 In the reference to a magazine, the first number refers to the volume, the next to the page, the letters to the date and the last figures to the number of words in the review.
 A Maltese cross (✕) indicates that the A. L. A. Booklist recommends the book for small libraries, if needed.

Book Review Digest

Devoted to the Valuation of Current Literature

January, 1914—February, 1915

ABBOT, WILLIS JOHN. Panama and the canal: the story of its achievement, its problems and its prospects. il *$2 (2c) Dodd 14-7003

Mr. Abbot has written an entertaining account of the building of the canal and of life in the Canal Zone. A partial list of contents follows: The front door to Panama; Three Spanish strongholds; Col. Goethals at the throttle; The sanitation of the Zone; The republic of Panama; Social life on the Canal Zone; Labor and the government of the Zone; Problems of administration; Diplomacy and politics of the canal. The many small photographs that illustrate the book are excellent.

"It is gossipy and readable, but hardly worth reading."

— + Nation 99:529 O 29 '14 180w

+ N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 130w

ABBOT, WILLIS JOHN. Story of our army for young Americans. il *$2 (1c) Dodd 14-17274

This book for young people is a war history of the United States. It is not concerned with the make-up of our army but with its activities from revolutionary days to the present time. Military movements and battles of the wars in which we have been engaged are described with considerable detail.

+ A L A Bkl 11:223 Ja '15

+ Ind 80:413 D 14 '14 60w

"Mr. Abbot writes entertainingly and has evident knowledge of and familiarity with American history. His book should find cordial readers. Especially in our schools should it supplement the dry-as-dust accounts."

+ Lit D 49:1127 D 5 '14 170w

"Willis J. Abbot writes well, and the accounts of the revolution and the civil war are full and graphic."

+ Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 90w

"It is well written and the grown-up boys who know more about the subject matter will also find it interesting."

+ N Y Times 19:501 N 15 '14 120w

ABBOTT, ELEANOR HALLOWELL (MRS. FORDYCE COBURN). Little Eve Edgerton. il *$1 (3c) Century 14-15565

Motherless little Eve was still a child in her heart, although her eccentric father had dragged her all over the world to be a companion to him and his serious-minded scientific friends. Thus when Eve, by a strange mischievous whim of her father's, was forced to accept the company of a Boston society man on a ride, she didn't know what to talk about. A stroke of lightning which stunned the man solved her difficulties in one way but opened her childlike heart to new problems. The story of the transformation of this colorless wild flower into a delicate rose and the change in the heart of the young man who had known before only hothouse orchids is ingeniously developed by an author well known for her invention.

"The later chapters have charm, but a forced, artificial and contorted charm that, except for occasional flashes of convincing humor, makes us feel that the story lacks the genuine qualities which have made 'Molly Make-Believe' and 'The sick-a-bed lady' so successful. A mixture of the fantastic and absurd. But whereas Hector Munro in England, and Stephen Leacock in Canada, have achieved just the right touch to such a mixture, the author of 'Eve Edgerton' just falls short of imparting the correct flavor." The first chapter is by far the best in the book."

— + Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 530w

+ Ind 80:66 O 12 '14 60w

Nation 99:747 D 24 '14 370w

"The book has the virtue of brevity."

— N Y Times 19:388 S 20 '14 180w

ABBOTT, JAMES FRANCIS. Elementary principles of general biology. il *$1.50 Macmillan 14-2215

"This book is planned to supply a background for a laboratory course in biology and to supplement the facts acquired in such a course. . . . The book will be useful then to the student who is following a course in the laboratory, though it will not take the place of a laboratory manual; and it will also meet the demands of the general reader who has not the opportunity to study biology in the laboratory, but who wishes to get an intelligent view of the general principles of the science."—Boston Transcript

"Good for reference."

+ A L A Bkl 11:158 D '14

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 11 '14 300w

"It appears to be well ordered and up to date in its treatment."

+ Educ R 48:416 N '14 40w

"While the book will be complete enough for most readers, some will miss references to fuller presentations of details."

+ — Ind 78:258 My 11 '14 100w

"An excellent treatise. The sections on life and death, on oxidation and metabolism and on variation and heredity, are particularly good, but those on growth, differentiation, ontogenesis, and on species and their origin leave much to be desired."

+ — Nation 98:550 My 7 '14 90w

"The book is well-illustrated and marked by three other qualities—an admirable clearness which points to teaching experience, a pleasant freshness of treatment which is in part due to the numerous references to recent work, and on all-roundness of survey, for almost every aspect of biology is at any rate recognized and illustrated."

+ Nature 94:227 O 29 '14 170w

ABERCROMBIE, LASCELLES. Speculative dialogues. *$1.50 (3¼c) Kennerley A14-897

Something of the nature of these philosophical discourses in dialogue form may be inferred from their titles: Famine and pestilence; Minos and a ghost; A beggar and his dog; Earth and a crowd; Lust and love; Science and the world; Philosophy and the angel; Time and eternity.

ABRAHAM, GEORGE DIXON. Motor ways in Lakeland. il *$2.50 Scribner (Eng ed A14-397)

The author "has gone out of the beaten track of the ordinary tourist and writer and has penetrated into little sought corners of Lancashire and Westmoreland. He is not content to visit only the familiar Windermere and

ABRAHAM, GEORGE DIXON—Continued.
Derwentwater, but has followed every road that leads to every accessible valley and lake, finding the way exceptionally good for a hilly region and the beautiful scenery a reward for all the efforts made to reach it. . . . He gives a summary of routes and distances, and on an end-paper map may be traced the roads he followed."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 10:215 F '14

"We can imagine no better guide or one more fully equipped by experience and the artist's eye."

+ — Ath 1913.2:125 Ag 9 1600w

Reviewed by E. F. E.

Boston Transcript p25 D 3 '13 370w

"A thoroughly practical guide for the Lake motorist. Mr. Abraham is fluent and agreeable on the whole, but his ideas of humour are occasionally distressing. The pictures in this volume are excellent, and we are glad to see a good index."

+ — Sat R 116:334 S 13 '13 800w

+ Spec 111:252 Ag 16 '13 60w

ADAM, MRS. ADELA MARION (KENSINGTON). Plato; moral and political ideals. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) *40c Putnam 13-15842

"In Mrs. Adam's skillful treatment, as much of the Platonic philosophy as can be readily introduced is presented with limpid clearness, and without sacrifice of essentials. . . . The restricted scope of the work, however, cannot but cause disappointment to some readers, when the reference is to those most characteristic moments of the Platonic thought in which the metaphysician is indistinguishable from the practical and religious teacher. . . . As an example of what may be done in a book of wider scope, in bringing out in fullest measure the practical value of the Platonic teaching together with the philosophical import of the thought, the late Dr. Adam's 'Religious Teachers of Greece' may be cited. Mrs. Adam deserves all the more commendation for the art which enables her to give, within the inexorable limits of her task, as faithful a presentation of the real Plato as possible. She maintains Dr. Adam's standpoint in regard both to questions of time-honored dispute,—e. g., in the identification of 'the Good' with God,—and to more recent battle-grounds, notably the relation of the Platonic to the real Socrates."—Int J Ethics

"Within its limits this is a fresh and accurate little study."

+ A L A Bkl 10:131 D '13

"Admirable little book." H. D. Oakeley

+ Int J Ethics 24:466 JI '14 880w

ADAMS, BROOKS. Theory of social revolutions. *$1.25 (3½c) Macmillan 13-19047

Descriptive note in December, 1913.

Reviewed by I. Loos

+ — Am J Soc 19:842 My '14 1100w

"A thoughtful book for the student of politics and contemporary society, but its arguments and conclusions many will not find convincing."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:343 My '14

"This work while filled with errors and hasty generalizations, possesses the quality of stimulating thought."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:131 F '14 600w

"Many readers will hardly agree with the premises and hence will object to the conclusions. But we have here thought-provoking work and one well worth pondering in the light of contemporary facts." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ — Ann Am Acad 52:238 Mr '14 450w

+ — Ath 1914.1:819 Je 13 520w

"We do not agree to the partly expressed and partly implied conclusions with which Mr. Adams brings his volume to a close, namely, that America is on the eve of a drastic revolutionary settlement of the social problem which is to follow in 'the infinitely extended line of impressive precedents.' Nevertheless, we think the book is well worth attention and study."

+ — Bib World 43:140 F '14 550w

"The chief merit of the book is to be found in the multitude of very suggestive remarks of a sociological nature."

+ J Pol Econ 22:194 F '14 400w

+ No Am 199:151 Ja '14 750w

"Must be counted one of the few real contributions to the literature which interprets the political and economic changes now going on in this country. The book ought to have the widest reading, especially by men who are responsible for the management of great financial interests."

+ Outlook 106:503 F 28 '14 730w

Reviewed by T. R. Powell

+ Pol Sci Q 29:510 S '14 1250w

+ Spec 113:16 JI 4 '14 1750w

Reviewed by H. F. J. Porter

Survey 31:680 F 28 '14 500w

ADAMS, CHARLES FRANCIS, jr. Monroe doctrine and Mommsen's law. *50c (11c) Houghton 14-10325

A reprint of a paper read before the American society of international law at Washington, April 22, 1914. Mr. Adams takes the stand that the Monroe doctrine is now obsolete. He points out first of all that it was in reality a "John Quincy Adams doctrine" having been framed by Mr. Adams, then Secretary of state, and inserted in the president's message; he then goes on to show how conditions existing at the time have so changed as to render the doctrine meaningless.

N Y Times 19:264 Je 7 '14 90w

Pol Sci Q 29:548 S '14 80w

R of R 50:381 S '14 40w

ADAMS, CHARLES FRANCIS, jr. Trans-Atlantic historical solidarity. *$1.75 Oxford 14-1764

The four lectures contained in this volume were delivered at Oxford university in the spring of 1913. Three of them deal with the war between the states; the fourth is a study of General Robert E. Lee. "It has clearly been the author's aim in all these papers to emphasize especially those aspects of the war which are the most likely to interest Englishmen. He accordingly, devotes a considerable proportion of his space to the importance of the Lancashire cotton trade in determining the issue of the struggle, and to the turn of affairs which prevented the English cabinet from intervening in the autumn of 1862. . . . In his preface Mr. Adams says that Mr. Bryce, in the course of a conversation with him, once questioned the historical importance to the world at large of the American civil war, and he is therefore led to put forward his reasons for differing from this view." (Spec)

"Mr. Adams combines in a remarkable degree historical imagination, strong analysis, and convincing logic. The present volume has all the features of his best style." J. H. Latané

+ Am Hist R 19:912 JI '14 700w

A L A Bkl 10:333 Je '14

"Four wholly delightful lectures. There is in each chapter a thread of narrative which holds the attention of even the casual reader; while for the student of the period, the volume is certain to be read with care and genuine satisfaction." E. D. Adams

+ Dial 56:291 Ap 1 '14 2850w

"Probably the chief value of this little volume is the light it throws on the ideas of one who was himself 'formerly a soldier of the army of the Potomac.'" G. B. H.

+ — Eng Hist R 29:411 Ap '14 140w

"Such balanced judgments, heightened by the personal element and the methods of a trained investigator, offer good reading, a wholesome stimulus to the study of an important phase of the war, and a true contribution to its history."

+ Nation 98:212 F 26 '14 900w

N Y Sun p11 D 6 '13 1450w
 + N Y Times 18:749 D 21 '13 1200w
 + Spec 111:829 N 15 '13 280w
 + Springfield Republican p5 J1 30 '14 2500w

ADAMS, EPHRAIM DOUGLASS. Power of ideals in American history. *$1.15 (3c) Yale
 univ. press 13-26225

The Dodge lectures on the responsibilities of citizenship for 1912 were delivered by Professor Adams of Stanford university. As a teacher of history, he chose to talk on the power of ideals in American history, making his series of lectures a refutation of the extreme materialistic contention that economic interests have been the moving force in all history. He says "This is not to deny, nor does any one deny, the influence of industries and of geography, in national growth. All that I wish to express is that there are other influences of an intellectual,—it may be a spiritual,—character, and, in a time of undue emphasis upon the materialism of American history, to recall to your memory a few of the great ideals that have animated our national conduct and moulded our destiny." (Introduction) The titles of the lectures are: Nationality—a faith; Anti-slavery—a crusade; Manifest destiny—an emotion; Religion—a service; Democracy—a vision.

Reviewed by E. R. Greene
 + Am Hist R 19:923 J1 '14 470w
 A L A Bkl 10:259 Mr '14

"The author has done a real service in publishing these noble lectures."
 + Boston Transcript p23 F 11 '14 500w

Reviewed by Carl Becker
 + Dial 56:140 F 16 '14 1200w

"The papers do not impress us as either profound or important, altho they are agreeably written."

+ Educ R 47:101 Je '14 60w
 + Nation 99:109 J1 23 '14 250w
 N Y Times 19:110 Mr 8 '14 80w

"Able book."
 + Spec 112:574 Ap 4 '14 140w
 "A scholarly, readable study."
 + Wis Lib Bull 10:25 F '14 60w

ADAMS, FRANKLIN PIERCE. By and large.
 *$1 Doubleday 14-16927

A little book made up of a selection of F. P.
 A's humorous newspaper and magazine verse.
 A group of classic verses, after the manner of Horace, Catullus, and Propertius, introduces the collection and following these come A dream of fair cooks, The tired business man's song,
 Eugenic love lyrics, and so on.

"A worthy successor to 'Tobogganing on Parnassus' and 'In other words.'"
 + Dial 57:464 D 1 '14 130w

Reviewed by Howard Brubaker
 + New Republic 2:55 F 13 '15 770w

"'By and large' is good fun, tobogganing on Parnassus, in other words."
 + N Y Times 19:587 D 27 '14 400w

"They bring to the reader much laughter for their clear perspective on life's absurdities and occasionally a tear for human nature's foibles and weaknesses."

+ R of Rs 51:117 Ja '15 70w

ADAMS, FREDERICK UPHAM. Conquest of the tropics. (Romance of big business) II *$2
 (2c) Doubleday 14-10441

The first book of a series planned to describe certain big business enterprises whose histories and operations concern the public and which, therefore, should interest the public. This volume tells the story of the creative enterprises conducted by the United Fruit company, facts for which have been obtained directly from officials of the company. The story is principally the history of the organization and growth of the United fruit company and the influence politically, socially and commercially that this development has had upon banana-raising countries. Numerous illustrations accompany the text.

"It is interesting, informing, and attractively made up, with many good illustrations."

+ A L A Bkl 11:12 S '14

Boston Transcript p20 J1 29 '14 250w

+ Cleveland 6:73 S '14 40w

"The publishers have done their part excellently. The product is finely printed, illustrated, and bound, making an attractive volume. Unfortunately the title is misleading. Aside from one chapter devoted to sanitation there is relatively little concerning the real conquest of the tropics, but a great deal about the origin and methods of the fruit company."

+ Dial 57:58 J1 16 '14 150w

"Mr. Adams has made the most of his interesting theme. 'The romance of big business' series starts out well."

+ Ind 78:566 Je 29 '14 90w

Nation 99:529 O 29 '14 230w

N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 500w

+ Outlook 107:627 J1 11 '14 180w

"Very entertainingly and informingly presented."

+ R of Rs 50:116 J1 '14 150w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 570w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:261 N '14 60w

ADAMS, H. PACKWOOD. French revolution. il
 *$1 McClurg

"The author does not pretend to any researches of his own, but relies largely on the writings of Aulard and Sorel and on the 'Cambridge modern history.' He is interested in the French revolution as alive with problems of political freedom and economic justice which are still vital to-day. His own sympathies, and his reading of Kropotkin's 'The great French revolution,' lead him to a somewhat more radical attitude than is found in the sketches of the revolution by Mrs. Gardiner, Shailer Mathews, and R. M. Johnston."—Nation

"Based quite frankly upon secondary sources, but distinctly readable and on the whole very just in its conclusions. Like most of the recent histories of the revolution the book is radical in its sympathies."

+ Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 30w

"A clear-cut elementary account."

+ Nation 99:636 N 26 '14 110w

"Although necessarily much condensed, the book gives a lucid account, written in an attractive style, from which it is possible to get a clear view of the outlines of the struggle."

+ N Y Times 19:523 N 29 '14 80w

ADAMS, HENRY. Mont-Saint-Michel and
 Chartres. il *$6 Houghton 14-30089

A valuable privately printed work is here made available to the general public thru the instrumentality of the American institute of architects. Ralph Adams Cram, of that society, writes an introduction. "Every one who has seen Chartres or Mont-Saint-Michel or the glory of a rose window or of Gothic art in any form, will feel upon reading this work that he has come home to all he would have said and all he felt concerning this splendif-erous type of religious architecture. The author's knowledge of feudalism, guilds, crusades; of communes, of nationalities, sculptors, divines, musicians, and builders, the minutiae of great and widely differentiated art weaves brilliant threads throughout the volume." (R of Rs)

"The book is for us a rare 'trouvaille,' for whether Mr. Adams is merged in the middle ages, or vice versa, we have a moving presentation in which we hear them speak in terms intelligible to—the elect." H. O. Taylor

+ Am Hist R 19:592 Ap '14 1150w

"A work by a scholar, primarily for scholars."

+ A L A Bkl 10:215 F '14

ADAMS, HENRY—Continued.

"Beautifully printed, admirably balanced and intensely interesting monograph." N. H. D.
+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 7 '14 1500w

Reviewed by S. F. Kimball

+ Dial 56:246 Mr 16 '14 1050w

"We dare to express the strong hope that every library in America will possess itself of this book and bring it to the attention of its more thoughtful readers, and also that no teacher of European history will fail to tell his students what a treasure-house it is for them."

+ Educ R 47:197 F '14 380w

"Remarkable book." C. E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:510 D 11 '13 80w

"This work deserves a place in literature somewhere near Ruskin's 'Seven lamps of architecture' and Renan's essay on 'The art of the middle ages.'"

+ Lit D 48:1120 My 9 '14 550w

"The great merit of the book, however, lies less in its scholarship than in its sympathetic effort to penetrate to the core and kernel of mediæval thought and feeling."

+ Nation 98:239 Mr 5 '14 1150w

"The public will join with the men who have given this book to general circulation in sincere gratitude for so eloquent and profound an expression concerning the 'glory of mediæval art and the elements that brought it into being.'"

+ R of Rs 49:118 Ja '14 300w

"This fine book, excellent as to print and paper and bound with an attractive severity, is far from being the work of the usual traveller or student of architecture, however intelligent."

+ Spec 112:652 Ap 18 '14 520w

"It is not often that a book appeals with equal force to layman and expert, but 'Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres' is an exception to the rule."

F: B. Luquiens

+ Yale R n s 3:826 Jl '14 2200w

ADAMS, HENRY COOLIDGE. Glimpses of the East, and other poems. $1.50 Sherman, French & co. 13-26437

A group of lyrics and one of sonnets are followed by the half dozen or more long descriptive poems that give the glimpses of the East—of Japan, China and India—from which the book takes its title.

"The work in general is spoilt by the author's sentimentality."

+ Ath 1913,2:655 D 6 70w

"While there is something good for every one, the only weakness of the poems as a whole is the too persistent theme of a lover, and a lack of poetic originality necessary to see and describe everything in nature with the same usual words and phrases."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 27 '13 200w

"If the 'Glimpses of the East' had been done in prose and the 'other poems' omitted, the book might have been made interesting. There is not a gleam of poetic vision in the three hundred pages."

+ Chaut 72:620 Ap 4 '14 120w

ADAMS, JOHN QUINCY. Writings of John Quincy Adams; ed. by Worthington C. Ford. 12v v 3 and 4 ea $3.50 (2c) Macmillan (13-2027)

The period covered by this third volume of John Quincy Adams's letters and papers includes the years from 1801 to 1810. They are the years that "witnessed the aggressions on our flag which two years later provoked war with England. Mr. Adams during this period served as state senator in Massachusetts, then as United States senator, then was again sent on foreign service as our minister to Russia. He also served for a time as professor of rhetoric and oratory at Harvard. As a member of the Federal party, whose star was then declining, he was a fore-runner of the Republican 'mugwumps' in 1834. His strictures on features of our domestic politics touch evils that still persist." (Outlook)

The fourth volume of the letters of John

Quincy Adams covers the period from 1811 to 1813. He was in St. Petersburg at this time as a representative of the United States and his letters are of especial interest because of the reports of the Napoleonic wars then in progress and also because of their comments on the war between England and the United States as seen from a distance.

"The work of the editor has been on the whole well done, although it seems at times less complete than in the earlier volumes." Allen Johnson

+ Am Hist R 20:173 O '14 670w (Review of v 3)

+ A L A Bk 10:343 My '14 (Review of v 3)

+ A L A Bk 11:152 D '14 (Review of v 4)

"The third volume is less rich than its predecessors in new material of importance. Mr. Ford's notes to the various letters and papers continue to be adequate."

+ Nation 99:109 Jl 23 '14 270w (Review of v 3)

+ Nation 100:58 Ja 14 '15 330w (Review of v 4)

+ Outlook 107:563 Jl 4 '14 120w (Review of v 3)

+ Outlook 109:349 F 10 '15 160w (Review of v 4)

ADAMS, SAMUEL HOPKINS. Clarion. il $1.35 10 (1c) Houghton 14-17921

Two big themes are worked out in Mr. Adams's novel, quackery in medicine and dishonesty in journalism. Hal Surtaine, the only son of a patent-medicine millionaire, comes back to his native town after years of study and travel, knowing nothing of his father's business or its methods. Ambitious to enter on a career of his own, he buys up the "Clarion" and attempts to run an honest paper. He is fortunate only in having a loyal staff ready to stand by him, for all other forces array themselves against him. The boy is put to severe tests, the most bitter of them that which comes when the inevitable clash with his father occurs and he finds himself facing the alternative of printing the truth about "Certina, the sure cure" or of abandoning his principles.

+ A L A Bk 11:219 Ja '15

"There is much sterling stuff in 'The Clarion,' and just one little inconsistency." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:441 D '14 370w

"He gives us some interesting people in his pages, with their prejudices and passions, their interests and ambitions. Likely to arouse a great deal of interest and discussion." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 1500w

"While Mr. Adams is neither deep nor delicate he is readable, in the journalistic sense." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:299 O 16 '14 320w

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 60w

"A vigorous, exciting story."

+ Lit D 50:107 Ja 16 '15 250w

+ N Y Times 19:431 O 11 '14 330w

+ Outlook 108:845 D 9 '14 140w

"One of the most real and vital among recent novels." Ward Macauley

+ Pub W 56:1286 O 17 '14 700w

"Aside from his exaggerated and too sweeping strictures on the conduct of newspapers, in general his story is very inspiring and wholly interesting."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 15 '14 550w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:305 D 14 60w

ADCOCK, ARTHUR ST. JOHN. Booklover's London. il $1.75 Macmillan 14-30079

"Mr. St. John Adcock writes of surviving parts of old and later London that have their places in literatures; that have been described by poets, essayists, and letter-writers, or used as scenes in the plays of Shakespeare, of minor Elizabethan, and some of the restoration and more recent dramatists, and in the novels of Defoe, Fielding, Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Harrison, Ainsworth, Disraeli, Besant, Gissing, and many another. It is a descriptive, critical, anecdotal, gossipy chronicle."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 10:215 F '14

"Should appeal to all who are susceptible to the literary interest of London."

+ Ath 1913.2:sup437 O 18 80w

"A most readable book for those who love London and the imaginary people that once walked its streets, and even some of the real people who have dwelt in its nooks and corners are seen in their favorite haunts. The author knows his London well and many are the bits of information that show how tireless has been his work in trying to bring out the relations between places and people."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 600w

"Mr. Adcock's book would have been perhaps less interesting but certainly more useful if he had omitted some of the long quotations and had included a full topographical index, in addition to the somewhat meagre general index which is provided." C. S. Northup

+ Dial 56:293 Ap 1 '14 1100w

"If we felt inclined to criticise so pardonable an enthusiasm, we might assert that the figure of Dickens looms unduly large in these pages, sometimes to the exclusion of others whose claims to a share of the scene are equally just."

+ Nation 98:112 Ja 29 '14 550w

+ N Y Times 19:212 Ap 26 '14 100w

"The material is so varied of interest that just as every man finds 'his own charm in London,' so every reader will find his own charm in this delightful combination of literary lore, history, and description."

+ R of Rs 49:119 Ja '14 120w

"His book will certainly make London more interesting to the man who has read."

+ Sat R 116:624 N 15 '13 110w

ADCOCK, ARTHUR ST. JOHN. In the firing line: stories of the war by land and sea. (Pocket books) *50c Doran

"How does the war look to the man in the trenches? That is the question which the man in the trenches answers in 'In the firing line,' chiefly composed of extracts from letters written home—many of them to their mothers—by British privates. . . . One chapter is composed of extracts from letters written by sailors descriptive of the battle in the North sea. The letters are from Scotch and Irish, English and Welsh. Most of the men had not seen service before. Some fought the Boers; these say South Africa in comparison was 'child's play' and 'a picnic.'" —N Y Times

+ Ath 1914.2:420 O 24 280w

"Here is a real book of the war. In language always of the simplest, in language at times so artless and so terrible that the phrases of many a lettered mind would seem paltry in comparison, these plain men tell of the battle of Mons, of the long retreat to the shadow of the walls of Paris, and of miscellaneous fighting."

+ N Y Times 19:497 N 15 '14 900w

ADOLF FRIEDRICH ALBRECHT HEINRICH, DUKE OF MECKLENBURG-SCHWERIN. From the Congo to the Niger and the Nile: an account of the German Central African expedition of 1910-1911. 2v il *$9 Winston (Eng ed A14-2326)

"Adolf Friedrich, duke of Mecklenburg, adds to the laurels he gained as a member of the Central African expedition of 1907-8 with a two-volume account of the expedition 'From the Congo to the Niger and the Nile' in 1910-11, of which he was the leader. The purpose of the expedition was to supplement the scientific knowledge collected by the former effort with similar facts concerning the aborigines, the fauna and flora of the country north of the tropical forests of the Congo and Aruwimi rivers. . . . The chapters dealing with the special sections of the journey are written by different members of the expedition."—N Y Times

"The two volumes are handsomely got up; and we have noted only one or two trifling misprints." + — Ath 1914.1:sup431 Mr 21 2000w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 18 '13 350w

"Although the amount of material contained in the books seems so great, their plan is such that they are never allowed to lapse into monotony."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 17 '14 500w

"No lack of unusual and often exceedingly interesting information is to be found in these generous volumes. The translation, commendable especially for its successful avoidance of the tone of a translation, is from an unnamed hand or hands. Some evidences of haste in the preparation and proof-reading and printing of the book are discoverable, as is commonly to be expected in a work issued simultaneously in several languages; but the substantial worth of this contribution to our knowledge of equatorial Africa is not thereby impaired." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 57:12 Jl 1 '14 1750w

+ Lit D 50:156 Ja 23 '15 190w

+ Nation 99:351 S 17 '14 550w

"The work presents an immense mass of information along the lines of its special objects." + N Y Times 19:251 My 31 '14 180w

"The book, being made up by so many writers, varies a good deal in style and interest."

A. H. W. Haywood

+ — Sat R 117:210 F 14 '14 2000w

"The translation is well done, but German terminology, especially in connexion with big game, is not always the same as ours, and it would have been better if the right equivalents had been always supplied."

+ — Spec 111:762 N 8 '13 1350w

ADY, JULIA (CARTWRIGHT) (MRS. HENRY ADY). Christina of Denmark, Duchess of Milan and Lorraine, 1522-1590. il *$6 Dutton .14-19701

The author tells the story of Christina of Denmark, afterwards Duchess of Milan, whose portrait by Holbein hangs in the National gallery in London, and who was at one time wooed by Henry VIII. Her book is "the first exhaustive account which has been written of the Duchess's eventful life. An appendix contains a selection of hitherto unpublished documents, chiefly letters from the Duchess. The volume is provided with a bibliography and a number of portraits." (Ath)

+ — Am Hist R 20:225 O '14 40w

Ath 1913.2:590 N 22 50w

"Mrs. Ady has told the story of the much-sought lady with charm and thoroughness, leaving little scope for adverse criticism."

+ Ath 1914.1:sup361 Mr 7 1350w

"This life of contrasts, of great joy and great sorrows, is now given to the world in a form commensurate with its importance. The author has not spared herself in research."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 20 '13 430w

"The Danish phase of the story is not given the attention that it deserves."

+ — Dial 56:253 Mr 16 '14 450w

+ Lit D 48:498 Mr 7 '14 300w

"From beginning to end the book holds the reader's attention, and gives a faithful portrait of one of the most charming, high-minded, loyal, and devoted women."

+ — Nation 99:47 Jl 9 '14 730w

N Y Times 19:123 Mr 15 '14 180w

Outlook 106:321 F 7 '14 350w

"The book is bright and lively, but always showing that indefinable restraint and artistry which is so indispensable in the treatment of historical characters and the annals of the world."

+ Sat R 117:87 Ja 17 '14 170w

"No one who is familiar with Mrs. Ady's work can question her superiority to most of the writers who have taken the same line, and her present book shows no falling off in quality."

+ Spec 112:sup674 Ap 25 '14 1500w

ADY, JULIA (CARTWRIGHT) (MRS. HENRY ADY). Italian gardens of the renaissance, and other studies. il *$3 Scribner

"The renaissance gardens whose beauty and the romance of whose history the author studies, are those of the Florentine humanists, of the Este and Gonzaga princes, of papal Rome, and of Venice, along whose ilex-shaded paths, beneath whose towering pines and cypresses, and beside whose delicately falling waters, sweep the memories of that glorious company of immortals, whose stories are among the most dramatic of the romances of history, and win a fresh appeal told in the environment those of whom they speak loved above all others in their long-finished lives. Of an equal fascination are the other Italian studies included in the book: 'Cardinal Bembo and his villa,' 'Bianca Storza, the lady of the Ambrosiana,' 'The Certosa of Val D'Ema,' 'A tomb at Ravenna,' 'A visit to La Verania,' and 'Giovanni Costa; his life and his art.'—Boston Transcript

"If these papers are a little lacking in life, they have the thoroughness and the genuine interest in the subject that characterize her other work."

+ — Ath 1915,1:35 Ja 9 1200w

+ Boston Transcript p23 D 30 '14 700w

"With a wide knowledge of the life and literature of the time she has given her book a wider scope than is disclosed by the title."

+ Ind 81:139 Ja 25 '15 80w

+ Outlook 109:294 F 3 '15 70w

AIKEN, CONRAD. Earth triumphant, and other tales in verse. *$1.25 Macmillan 14-16195

Like Masefield and Gibson, Mr. Aiken chooses to tell his stories of daily life in verse. To forestall the possible charge that he is an imitator of Masefield he tells us in his Foreword that he had been experimenting in poems of this kind before he had ever heard of the English poet. The eleven poems that make up the book's contents are: Earth triumphant; Youth; Romance; Earth tedium; Innocence; Sophistication; Laughter; Youth imperturbable; Youth penetrant; Parasitics; Dilemma.

"Mr. Aiken's book is one of the most pleasing of the year."

+ R of Rs 51:117 Ja '15 60w

AIKEN, EDNAH. River. il *$1.35 (1c) Bobbs 14-20737

A story of man's efforts to harness the Colorado river and use it for his own ends. The action begins at that time, a few years ago, when the river, defying its would-be masters, broke bounds to turn its course northward toward the Salton sink and create the Salton sea. Casey Rickard, a young engineer, is sent down to see what can be done. "Stop the river" is the only direction given him by his chief. His task is made difficult by the fact that the man who has bungled the job and whom he must supersede is Tom Hardin, an old college acquaintance, and to make matters more embarrassing, Hardin's wife whom Richard had once loved, and Hardin's sister in whom he is beginning to take an interest are members of the desert colony. Desert and camp life are picturesquely described.

"The author writes in a swift, nervous, picture-making style that, pleasing in itself, does not harmonize well with the slow movement of the story and the superabundance of detail."

+ — N Y Times 19:487 N 3 '14 300w

"Well-told virile tale."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 450w

ALDEN, CARROLL STORRS. George Hamilton Perkins, commodore U. S. N. il *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 14-5372

This story of Commodore Perkins's life and of his service in the civil war is told largely by means of letters written by him to his home folk in New Hampshire. The chapters of the book take up: Family and boyhood; At the naval academy; In Central and South American waters; In the West African coast; The capture of

New Orleans; In the West gulf blockading squadron; The battle of Mobile bay; Later service; The sailor-farmer; The measure of the man.

"This book will serve a two-fold purpose: it is a memorial tribute to a gallant officer in the United States navy at the time of the civil war, paid by a fellow officer in the same service, and it is also an interesting and valuable contribution to the history of that period."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ap 15 '14 700w

"The author has on the whole done well with this memoir, but the last two chapters, bearing plain evidence of having been written to order, mar the book and should, if printed at all, have been preserved for family consumption only."

+ — Nation 98:399 Ap 9 '14 750w

+ N Y Times 19:285 Je 21 '14 160w

"The story, as told in the family letters, is doubtless far more interesting than would have been the case if it had been prepared with a view to publication."

+ R of Rs 49:631 My '14 120w

ALEXANDER, ARCHIBALD BROWNING DRYSDALE. Christianity and ethics. *75c (1c) Scribner A14-2986

A handbook which presents a brief but comprehensive view of the Christian conception of the moral life. It is a treatise intended primarily for students which deals with principles rather than details and suggests lines of thought instead of attempting an exhaustive treatment of the subject. The four broad divisions of the work are: Postulates, dealing with the meaning of Ethics generally and its relation to cognate subjects; Personality, treating man as a moral subject; Character, involving a consideration of the formative principles of character; Conduct, discussing the molding of the soul, the ideals, motives and forces by which the "New man" is recreated and fashioned.

"Doubtless most readers will find in the book much inspiration; for the style is agreeable, and the easy apologetic arguments tend to preserve the feeling that Christianity is a 'perfect' system, with revealed principles adequate to the ethical handling of any and all questions. The critical reader, however, will note with regret the almost total absence of an accurate historical spirit, and will feel keenly the formalism of the abstract deductive method employed by the author."

+ — Am J Theol 18:487 Jl '14 470w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 80w

ALEXANDER, JOHN L., ed. Teens and the rural Sunday school. *50c (1½c) Assn. press 14-11587

This volume contains the report of a commission organized under the auspices of the International Sunday school association in 1912. The object of the commission was a study of adolescence; in this book the part of the report dealing with the adolescent in the rural Sunday school only is presented. Some of the papers that make up the report are: Conditions which affect adolescence in rural districts by Warren H. Wilson; The individual, by Wilbert L. Anderson; Leadership and the rural Sunday school, by N. W. Stroup; Teaching in the rural Sunday school, by G. Walter Fiske; Cooperative activities, by W. A. McKeever.

"The book should prove helpful to ministers and other Sunday school workers in analyzing conditions."

+ A L A Bkl 11:195 Ja '15

ALEXINSKY, GREGOR. Modern Russia; tr. by Bernard Miall. *$2.75 Scribner 13-35964

"The first part of this book is devoted to a general sketch of the historical development of Russia, its geography, races, and the evolution of the state and of the national mind, up to the freeing of the serfs in 1861. That year saw the birth of the modern period, when the poor of mediaevalism was first stirred by the currents of modern life introduced by Russia's participation in the commerce of the world and the development of her own resources. The author discusses lucidly the growth of capital in this period, the problem of rural economy, the agrarian question, and the rise of the intelligentsia and of the nihilist. The remaining chapters deal with the organization and resources of the absolute power, the Japanese war, the revolution of 1905, literature and the religious and national questions." —N Y Times

"Among the innumerable books about Russia that have appeared in recent years, the reviewer knows of no other that gives so many-sided and complete a survey within so small a compass. The historical parts of the book are to be used with caution." R. H. Lord
+ — Am Hist R 19:632 Ap '14 600w

"An able and authoritative work of reference."
+ A L A Bkl 10:175 Ja '14

"Though not a systematic discussion of the Russia of our time, this book contains much material of value to the students of contemporary institutions. The concluding chapters on the church and literature of Russia are sketchy and unsatisfactory." C. L. Jones
+ — Ann Am Acad 52:239 Mr '14 480w

"Apart from minor points, the reader will find M. Alexinsky's book an able and comprehensive survey of the political and economic position of modern Russia."
+ — Ath 1913,2:271 S 20 630w

Reviewed by G. G. Wyant

+ Bookm 40:313 N '14 500w

"All its failings do not prevent Alexinsky's book from being of considerable value."
+ — Nation 99:44 Jl 9 '14 550w

"M. Alexinsky is an economist and he gauges Russian social and political progress by statistical evidence. His picture lacks a sympathetic recognition of the Russian soul, that which gives the Russian his abundance when he is most poor, his might when he is impotent."
+ — N Y Times 18:695 N 30 '13 850w

"There is nothing new in his book, but there is a good deal of condensed and well classified information. The book is well worth reading, but it must be read without forgetting that the author is an ex-deputy of the Duma."
+ — Sat R 116:751 D 13 '13 970w

"M. Alexinski's volume is full of information, but as he does not enable us to form any estimate of the authenticity or correctness of his statements it cannot be recommended to anyone who is anxious to arrive at a clear conception of either the present or the future of the vast empire with which it deals."
+ — Spec 111:123 D 27 '13 1450w

ALEY, MAX. Barnstormers. il $1.25 (2c) Scribner 14-7874

The Barnstormers were four boys who organized a dramatic company and gave plays in an unused barn. Their first efforts were the production of "The captive of Castile" and "Blanca" from Louisa Alcott's "Comic tragedies." After that they wrote a play of their own, "Rupert the red ranger," the text of which is printed in full at the end of the book.

"Will tend to arouse interest in amateur acting."
+ A L A Bkl 11:126 N '14

"The account of their doings is not unamusing, and contains some good hints for other young amateurs. It would have made an excellent short story, but spread out over 247 pages the material seems rather thin."
+ — N Y Times 19:222 My 3 '14 200w

ALLEN, ABEL LEIGHTON. Message of new thought. il $1.25 (2c) Crowell 14-5281

The purpose of this volume is to answer three questions: What is New thought? Wherein does it differ from the orthodox religions? What is the line of divergence between New thought and Christian science? The author describes New thought as "largely a restatement of old thought, vitalized with new life and meaning from the discoveries of modern psychology and the latest deductions of science." Contents: New thought defined; Origin of the creeds; New thought and the creeds; New thought and Christian science; Universal mind in man; Man illimitable; Man unfinished; As a man thinketh; Ethics of the creeds; Ethics of New thought; Voices of New thought; The art of living.

Boston Transcript p5 Je 3 '14 120w

"Written with calmness and restraint, this book will interest people of all beliefs."

+ Chaut 72:637 Ap 11 '14 220w

ALLEN, CAROLINE STETSON. Well-bred dolls. il $1 (5c) Pilgrim press A14-879

Eight good stories for little girls who love dolls. The stories are named, Polly Comforter; The doll who liked Sunday; The doll who wouldn't study; The domestic doll; The energetic doll; The ill-tempered doll; The doll who loved poetry; Christmas with all the dolls in the family circle. The stories are linked together in a chain, for all the dolls belong to Bettie and her friends.

"A most entertaining little story." M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 38:443 D '13 50w

ALLEN, FRANCES NEWTON SYMMES. Her wings. $1.25 (1½c) Houghton 14-16471

A story built on the thesis that there is an inherent antagonism between the woman movement and marriage. Because she herself had suffered, the mother of Georgia Frame has taught the girl to hate the masculine sex and to believe that her life must be dedicated to the cause of freeing women from enslavement. Georgia enters the suffrage movement and avoids men; she lives with a friend, Theodosia Pell, another man-hating suffragist, but comes under the influence of Linda Rush, an old college friend now the mother of five children, and is brought in the end to renounce her theories and marry one of the two men who love her.

"Both suffragists and its opponents can read the story with pleasure. But even the best of mothers may find Linda, the ideal mother, a trifle too saccharine, for practical domesticity."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 370w

"The book is human, sincere, and readable, told with an easy style and sympathetic touch."
+ Lit D 50:106 Ja 16 '15 180w

"Miss Allen writes with eloquence and fervor, and when she has learned to discipline her powers, and to look more to life itself and less to theories for her material, she will probably do much good work."

+ — N Y Times 19:413 O 4 '14 320w

"The story is warmly human and quite reasonably judicial."

+ Outlook 108:603 N 11 '14 200w

"While many readers will disapprove of Georgia and Theodosia, none will deny that the author achieves a large measure of success in portraying them."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 370w

ALLEN, HERBERT STANLEY. Photo-electricity: the liberation of electrons by light. (Monographs on physics) il $2.10 Longmans A14-500

"This book is based on a course of lectures delivered at King's college, London, in the Lent term, 1910, which have been brought up to date and largely rewritten. The text is illustrated with diagrams." (Ath) "Dr. Allen includes in his book certain other subjects that are allied to the main one, such as fluorescence and phosphorescence, photo-chemical actions, and photography." (Nature)

Ath 1913,2:707 D 13 30w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

ALLEN, HERBERT STANLEY—Continued.

"His book is not only a real addition to our knowledge of the subject, but should also be of great value to students."

+ Ath 1913,2:757 D 27 500w

"The chief importance of the book is its value to the physicist who has not time to read through all the literature on photo-electricity and wishes to get a connected account of it."

+ Nature 93:503 JI 16 '14 370w

"The value of the book would have been greatly increased if a complete list of articles had been given. But even without this the book is of great value." Ernest Merritt

+ Science n s 40:596 O 23 '14 830w

ALLEN, PERCY STAFFORD. Age of Erasmus.

*$2 Oxford 14-17238

"The aim of these lectures, in the author's words, is 'to present sketches of the world through which Erasmus passed, and to view it as it appeared to him and to some of his contemporaries, famous or obscure.' . . . The first five lectures are chiefly concerned with study, education, and the religious life; lectures six to nine describe the general social condition of the period; in the tenth, certain differences between the Italian and the transalpine renaissance are touched on, and the antagonism of the Germans to the Italians represented as preparing the ground for Luther. The eleventh describes Erasmus's relations with the early Moravians."—Ath

"The final effect of the book is to leave the reader not only with a more lively picture of the period, but also with a distinct impression of the personality of some of those who assisted at the new birth of learning."

+ Ath 1914,1:785 Je 6 880w

"Of the Erasmus himself Dr. Allen writes with a critical analysis as keen as his research is profound."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 350w

"These lightly-written papers will delight all those who are interested in Erasmus and his work. At the same time they are charming sketches of renaissance personalities."

+ Cath World 99:686 Ag '14 300w

"The book as a whole is a collection of scraps often interesting, but often also commonplace."

+ Nation 99:286 S 3 '14 350w

"By the side of Froude's rich, well-nourished style of dramatic grasp and ease of narration Prof. Allen's pages seem thin and dryly impersonal. He presents us with interesting material, but his manner of presenting it is rigorously free from any quality that might be construed as misleading attractiveness. However, as furnishing illustrative appendices to Froude's book Prof. Allen's lectures have real value." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times 19:355 Ag 23 '14 820w

+ Sat R 117:744 Je 6 '14 280w

ALTHAM, EDWARD A. Principles of war historically illustrated; with an introd. by General Sir Horace L. Smith-Dorrien. v 1 il

*$3.50 Macmillan War14-58

v 1 "Gen. Altham's book is frankly one of preparation for war. No enemy is mentioned, no indication given of an approaching or even of a possible conflict, but none the less it is a fair deduction from its atmosphere that its author is skeptical of a future of unclouded peace. He has used as headings of his most important chapters certain extracts from the British field service regulations, and then drives home the principles therein stated or implied, by a discussion based chiefly on the important wars of the last half century or so; wherever possible, he closes his discussion by an analysis of the latest of these, the Russo-Japanese."—Nation

Am Hist R 20:219 O '14 90w

+ Ath 1913,2:sup436 O 18 '90w

"The index is fair, and the maps are collected in a separate volume. The text is well printed and presents a handsome appearance."

+ Nation 99:134 JI 30 '14 1450w

+ Nature 93:399 Je 18 '14 750w

"Singulantly interesting and instructive volume. There is a lesson in every page, and both to old war dogs and students who aspire to military fame the book may be commended."

W. G. Knox

+ Sat R 117:538 Ap 25 '14 2300w

"Admirably written book."

+ Spec 113:303 S 29 '14 180w

ALTMAYER, CARL LEWIS. Commercial correspondence and postal information. rev ed il *70c Macmillan 13-21665

The first edition of this book was published in 1904. To the present edition a new chapter on letter filing and card indexing has been added, and the postal information has been brought up to date to 1913.

+ A L A Bkl 10:250 F '14

"No simpler or more comprehensive volume on correspondence ever has been published. The section on Postal information should be copied by the government. It is intelligible."

+ Chaut 72:398 Ja 17 '14 100w

ALTOGETHER Jane, by herself. *$1.35 (1½c)

<sup>12</sup> Kennerley 14-18809

The anonymous author of this book was once accused, she says, of putting too much of herself into her stories. This prompted her to write a book in which she could put all of herself. She tells her own life story from childhood to middle age. There is a thread of plot to her narrative, for her marriage is unhappy and she finds solace in the friendship of one man and the love of another, but for the most part the tale is dependent for its interest on her comments on men and things, particularly on men in their capacity as husbands.

"Much of the book is well done, Jane's childhood and youth are prettily described, her relations with her own 'Boy' have a certain charm and pathos, and the scenes of her mother's death and her own grief are pictured with truth and poignancy. The book has promise despite its many faults."

+ N Y Times 19:505 N 15 '14 370w

ALTSHELER, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Apache gold. il *$1.35 Appleton 13-20343

"Describes a boy's hunt for treasure in the strange southwest land among the cliff dwellers. Terrifying Apache Indians make the reader's hair stand on end and satisfy a craving for the melodramatic which used to be more frequently supplied than it is nowadays."—Bookm

"An improbable but extremely interesting tale which gives considerable information on the cliff dwellers of Arizona."

+ A L A Bkl 10:289 Mr '14

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson

Bookm 38:318 N '13 70w

N Y Times 18:520 O 5 '13 170w

ALTSHELER, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Guns of Bull Run: a story of the civil war's eve. il

*$1.30 Appleton 14-4303

The first of a series of four romances based upon the civil war. It "tells how the passions of the South and the North were fomented in the towns and cities, weeks and months before Sumter was fired upon, by the fiery speeches of the leading men of the times and by the newspaper writers. The action of this story opens in Kentucky, the border state that was divided in its affections between union and disunion. Harry Kenton, the central figure, naturally follows the lead of his father, a West Point officer, and is warmly for the Confederacy. . . . He figures in many thrilling incidents ending at the famous Bull Run." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 10:416 Je '14

"Every important feature of the battle is touched upon briefly and most interestingly, while all through the narration the characters of the story stand out conspicuously."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 420w

Ind 80:418 D 14 '14 40w
Lit D 49:1133 D 5 '14 60w

ALTSHELER, JOSEPH ALEXANDER. Texan triumph. il *$1.35 Appleton 13-20342

This "is the last volume about Ned Fulton's escapades in Texas, and tells the story of the San Jacinto campaign which gave that country her independence." (Bookm) The two preceding volumes of the trilogy were "The Texan star" and "The Texan scouts."

"It has exaggerations in character and incident but the book is full of dramatic incident and heroic action and holds the interest."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:246 F '14

"Suitable for boys from ten to sixteen." M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 38:319 N '13 50w

"In the field of adventure Joseph A. Altsheler seems to fill worthily the place once held in boys' esteem by Edward S. Ellis."

+ N Y Sun p9 O 11 '13 80w

AMBLER, CHARLES HENRY. Thomas Ritchie; a study in Virginia politics. il *$1.50 Bell bk. 13-21487

"A biography told through many extracts from the Richmond Enquirer, founded by Ritchie in 1804 and edited by him for forty-one years. Ritchie became a man of importance in Virginia; he was known as 'Father Ritchie' and the 'Napoleon of the press,' and incidentally his biography covers the political history of the state during the years that he wielded his aggressive and facile pen." (Boston Transcript) "It makes it possible to understand better than before the gradual decrease of Virginia's power in the South and the slowly increasing influence of the Gulf states." (Nation)

"The author has worked in an entirely new field. One lays down the book with the conviction that it is a piece of sound original historical composition." J. S. Bassett

+ Am Hist R 19:913 J1 '14 1000w

"Dr. Ambler's volume is too much of a running commentary on Ritchie's editorials. Nevertheless, the volume has a distinct value."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:291 My '14 150w

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 3 '13 300w

"But neither faults in the organization of materials, misprints, nor stylistic idiosyncrasies seriously mar the value of the book. For it gives, perhaps, the best insight into the ramifications of Virginia politics, from the time of Randolph, Marshall, and Roane, to the time of Rives, Tyler, Upshur, R. M. T. Hunter, and Stevenson, that is now available."

+ — Dial 57:79 Ag 1 '14 750w

"His book is not easy reading for even the well-informed reader. On the other hand, it is a treasure-house of valuable matter."

+ — Nation 98:88 Ja 22 '14 350w

N Y Times 18:702 N 30 '13 100w

R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 70w

"Mr. Ambler has done his work carefully, and as an historical document the book deserves praise."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 10 '14 530w

AMBLER, LOUIS. Old halls and manor houses of Yorkshire. il *$14 Scribner (Eng ed 14-10055)

"As the best way of showing the development of domestic architecture in Yorkshire, the scope of this book was limited to the study of one particular period—A. D. 1500-1700—and includes all kinds of houses, large and small, built before 1700, 'only omitting castles built for defence and now in a more or less ruinous condition.' The author's desire 'to choose interesting examples illustrating the variety of types characteristic of the different parts of the county'—has been admirably fulfilled." (Boston Transcript) Full-page illustrations from photographs accompany the text.

"Both to the lover of history and its memorials, and to the student of architecture, Mr.

Barry has given a gift of equal value and delight."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 430w

"The illustrations are remarkably good, often strikingly beautiful."

+ Dial 55:533 D 16 '13 130w

"Is sure to be cordially welcomed on this side of the ocean as well as on the other."

+ Nation 98:94 Ja 22 '14 260w

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF MEDICINE. Physiological bases of crime: a symposium. $4 Am. acad. of medicine

"The American academy of medicine was organized originally to serve the standardization of medical education. Since this task is now accomplished, it has turned its attention to the study and discussion of social problems which have a basis in physiology or medicine, or which in any vital way involve the members of the medical profession. The volume under review is a compilation of the papers read before the annual meeting of the academy held in Minneapolis in June, 1913, and presents the subject from various points of view. Papers were contributed by physicians and surgeons; professors of education, physics, sociology, psychology, law; superintendents of hospitals, reformatories and prisons."—Ann Am Acad

Reviewed by J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 54:337 J1 '14 430w

Reviewed by J. Kantor

+ Int J Ethics 25:115 O '14 350w

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION. Index to general literature; supplement 1900-1910. $4 A. L. A. (1-21913)

This is a cumulation of the Index to general literature sections of the "Annual literary (library) index" 1900 to 1910 inclusive, with additional analytical entries to 125 new books. The work has been compiled and edited by Mrs. E. N. Manchester (Alice Amelia Wood) formerly of the University of Chicago library.

A L A Bkl 11:49 O '14

AMES, JAMES BARR. Lectures on legal history and miscellaneous legal essays. il *$3 Harvard univ. press 13-5391

"This is a posthumous collection of the principal contributions of the late Professor Ames to the history of English law. It is prefaced by a memoir which shows the author to have been not only a great lawyer and historian, but also a great teacher and much beloved by his pupils. . . . The major portion of the book contains twenty-two lectures on points in legal history. Of these the more important have been published in reviews, and a certain number were reprinted with additions and notes in 1908-9 in 'Select essays on Anglo-American legal history.' The remaining lectures are little more than full notes by a lecturer."—Eng Hist R

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 8 '13 70w

"As an introduction to a scientific knowledge of the common law these lectures seem unrivalled. The most serious blot from the point of view of English students is that, especially in the miscellaneous essays, the English law referred to is not up to date and is at times incorrect." J. C. Miles

+ — Eng Hist R 29:593 J1 '14 1050w

"Not a few of the essays have attained the rank of legal classics. But every serious student of our law will rejoice in having these widely scattered writings brought together in a single volume, and thus made easily accessible."

+ Nation 96:577 Je 5 '13 350w

AMES, JOSEPH SWEETMAN. Constitution of matter. *$1.50 (4c) Houghton 13-23849

This volume contains the lectures delivered by the author, who is professor of physics at Johns Hopkins university, at Northwestern university, as the N. W. Harriis lectures for 1913. "The plan adopted. . . was to accept the general theory of molecules and atoms as proposed by Sir J. J. Thomson and the properties of electrons as deduced by H. A. Lor-entz, and to attempt to explain how from these one may deduce the general and even specific properties of matter." (Preface) The subject is presented in the following chapters: General properties of matter, mass; Corpuscles and atoms, electric mass; Radio-activity, gravitation; Radiation, formation of molecules, elasticity; Properties of metals, thermionics, magnetism; Models of atoms.

AMES, JOSEPH SWEETMAN—Continued.

"Though written from full knowledge, the author fails to expound his subject with lucidity and clearness of style. While he states fairly the scientific method of hypothesis, he makes the book too much a metaphysics of science. But because of the lack of accurate, popular books, this will be useful in libraries having a demand for such reading."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:299 Ap '14

"To anyone in search of a brief, elementary, and reliable sketch of modern physics in which the drawing is good and the perspective correct this volume is highly recommended." H: Crew

+ Astrophys J 40:239 S '14 600w

"The task of Dr. Ames was not an easy one, but he has succeeded in placing before the reader in terms which can be understood by those who are not physicists the present state of our knowledge about the constitution of matter."

+ Boston Transcript p25 D 3 '13 330w

"Professor Ames combines with learning the gift of clear exposition. As a result, those who wish to obtain a knowledge of the recent experiments and theories of the nature of matter and electricity, especially those of Lorentz and Thomson, can be sure of finding them stated accurately and simply in this book. The press-work is good, although attention may be called to two mistakes."

+ — Nation 98:439 Ap 16 '14 200w

"The fourth, fifth and sixth lectures are the finest and most stimulating of the course. These chapters represent I think the best general discussion which has appeared in English of the big problems which the researches of the past two decades have presented to modern physics." R. A. Millikan

+ Science n s 40:485 O 2 '14 720w

ANDERSON, ARTHUR JAMES. A B C of artistic photography in theory and practice. il *$2.50 Dodd A13-2690

This is a cheaper edition of "The artistic side of photography," published in 1910. The author "maintains that the interests of pictorial photography are served better by those who employ photographic methods than by those who introduce the technique of other arts. The strength of photography lies in accuracy of detail and delicacy of gradations of light and shade, not in producing prints which by manipulation are worried into a superficial resemblance to the brush-work of a painter." (Spec)

A L A Bkl 10:250 F '14

"His work should be in the hands of every amateur photographer who has ambitions beyond the mere taking of snapshots."

+ Ath 1913,1:385 Ap 5 50w

"Mr. Anderson understands his subject thoroughly, and handles its several phases with marked intelligence and lucidity."

+ N Y Times 18:505 S 28 '13 70w

+ Spec 110:sup693 Ap 26 '13 100w

ANDERSON, DAVID ALLEN. School system of Norway. *$1.25 (1½c) Badger, R: G. 13-26221

Little is known here of the educational tendencies of the Scandinavian countries, and Dr. Anderson set for himself the task of making a special study of the school system of one of them, Norway. His findings and conclusions are set forth in four long chapters, each with several subdivisions. The chapter headings are: Background and organization; Teachers; Courses of study in state schools; Interpretative conclusions.

"Dr. Anderson's book contains a wealth of information, technical and general, presented in a direct and logical manner with the greatest possible clearness and a commendable brevity, characteristics which render his book especially convenient both for reference and for class use." E. J. Vickner

+ EI School T 14:350 Mr '14 230w

"That he has made an accurate interpretation is attested by the Foreword by one of Norway's eminent scholars, and that he has made an interesting account will be conceded by all who peruse the pages." F: E. Bolten

+ School R 22:280 Ap '14 550w

ANDERSON, FREDERICK IRVING. Adventures of the infallible Godahl. il *$1 (1½c) Crowell 14-5165

A half dozen detective stories that have seen magazine publication make up the contents of this book. Godahl is a wealthy young New Yorker who loves excitement for its own sake. The titles of the stories are: The infallible Godahl; Blind man's buff; The night of a thousand thieves; Counterpoint; The fifth tube; An all-star cast.

"Mysterious, thrilling, attention holding, are these tales."

+ Chaut 72:621 Ap 4 '14 25w

"The stories seem less satisfactory in the mass than they do when taken, one at a time, sandwiched in among the widely varying contents of a magazine."

+ — N Y Times 19:136 Mr 22 '14 280w

"Detective stories with anything even remotely approaching distinction in style are so much a rarity that the present volume of short stories for this alone would deserve special mention." Fremont Rider

+ Pub W 85:1338 Ap 18 '14 300w

ANDERSON, FREDERICK LINCOLN. Man of Nazareth. *$1 (2c) Macmillan 14-18410

"This is not a life of Jesus, nor a summary of his teachings, nor a mere character sketch. It is rather a treatment of the important problems about Jesus and his career, and that so far as possible from the viewpoint of Jesus himself." (Foreword) It is not an investigation, the author says further, but a statement of the results of fourteen years of research, and it has been written with the "ordinarily intelligent" man in mind. Contents: The power behind the history; The situation in which Jesus found himself; How did Jesus come to believe himself the Messiah? How Jesus handled Messianism; How Jesus handled legalism; Jesus' positive teaching; Jesus' work and his view of its future; The character of Jesus; The finality of Jesus.

"We commend this book particularly to the intelligent reader. It is not a technical treatise. There are points at which technical scholarship may feel that Professor Anderson has hardly given full weight to certain elements in his problem, but the book has a real value and along with its centering of attention upon the significant elements in the historical Jesus should serve to make the complacent mind feel that traditional views are not necessarily infallible and that there is still an opportunity for new study and increased appreciation of the Master's personality."

+ Bib World 44:430 D '14 350w

"The book is well written and is in the main probably true, but it is hard to see how it adds anything of real value to a discussion which has engaged the greatest minds for nearly twenty centuries and shows no signs of coming to an end."

+ — Boston Transcript p9 Ja 16 '15 200w

N Y Times 20:21 Ja 17 '15 120w

+ Outlook 109:237 Ja 27 '15 150w

ANDERSON, ISABEL WELD (PERKINS)
" (MRS. LARZ ANDERSON). Spell of Japan.
il *$2.50 (3c) Page 14-14483

Mrs. Anderson, who went to Japan to live in 1912 when her husband was appointed American ambassador to the court of the Mikado, writes from a long acquaintance with the country, having known it as a visitor before she took up official residence there. She has attempted to tell, she says, not of the Old Japan, of which much has been written, but of the New Japan, "of social and diplomatic life, of present-day education, of motor trips, and politics, of bear-hunting among the Ainus, and of cruising in the inland sea." There is a folding map, many full-page illustrations, some in color, a bibliography and an index.

+ A L A Bkl 11:168 D '14

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 22 '14 780w

"Not every one, alas, has a seeing eye, a discriminating taste, and—what is best of all—the gift of talking simply and pleasantly on paper," Mrs. Anderson has."

+ Ind 81:136 Ja 25 '15 250w

"It is doubtful whether any reader will be moved to make a Japanese tour by reading this book; but if he ever does find himself in Yokohama or Tokyo, he will be glad that he did read it."

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 180w

"The chapters on the various religious beliefs of Japan are well written and informing," J. Marchand

+ Pub W 86:819 S 19 '14 500w

ANDERSON, JAMES DRUMMOND. Peoples of India. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c Putnam 14-61

"A hundred small octavo pages cannot of course give more than a bird's eye view of the peoples of India. Mr. Anderson does not attempt more. The material is, as the author repeatedly points out, very largely drawn from standard works of reference. The discussion is divided into chapters on race and caste, languages and religions. . . . A bibliography gives a select list of the best authorities and there are two excellent maps showing the density of population and the location of the chief language groups."—Ann Am Acad

"A very interesting and informing view of the fundamental conditions of native life."

+ A L A Bkl 10:344 My '14

"The style is excellent and the proportion well maintained."

+ Ann Am Acad 53:307 My '14 100w

"The reader will obtain an excellent understanding of the fundamentals of life in the most picturesque of England's dependencies." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 21 '14 920w

+ N Y Times 19:185 Ap 12 '14 20w

"On the whole, his treatment is successful."

+ Spec 112:sup1062 Je 27 '14 100w

"Simple, systematic and clear."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:190 Jl '14 20w

ANDERSON, MARGARET STEELE. Study of modern painting. il *$2 (3c) Century 14-18437

This book presents a study of currents and tendencies in modern painting. It is addressed to the layman who knows something of the famous work of the past but who is not intelligently familiar with present-day art and its leaders. "To this layman," says the author, "I have endeavored to bring the movements and the significance of modern painting, together with some idea of the work of the great men who stand for it." The book is divided into six parts, taking up: Modern French painting; Modern German painting; Modern English painting; Modern American painting; Modern Spanish and Italian painting; Modern painting in the lesser countries. There are a number of well selected illustrations and an index.

"A most comprehensive and interesting study."

+ A L A Bkl 11:108 N '14 +

"Both instructive and stimulating, Miss Anderson's 'Study of modern painting' deserves the kind of acceptance that ought to find it in the hands of all those who appreciate art and have a desire to know something more of its modern tendencies."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 21 '14 680w

"Miss Anderson is an intelligent and trustworthy guide, fair and rational, even when it comes to treating of tendencies which seem to the average layman (for whom the book is written) as preposterous." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p26 N 25 '14 1500w

"The chapters are clearly written and judicious, but the whole thing makes the impression of a result not attained vividly before pictures but excerpted and paraphrased from books."

+ Nation 99:785 D 31 '14 160w

R of Rs 50:756 D '14 100w

"Enthusiastically appreciative and tolerant rather than critical or censorious. Shows artistic discernment, facility of expression and confident intimacy with the motives and methods of practically all important modern painters. Not a book for the beginner."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:302 D '14 50w

ANDREIEFF, LEONID NIKOLAEVICH. Savva, and The life of man; tr. with an introd. by T. Seltzer. (Modern drama ser.) *$1 (2c) Kennerley 14-11725

Two plays, the first taken bodily from the revolutionary life of Russia, the second dealing with the problem of existence, forcibly illustrate Andreyev's groping for the truth that saves mankind in spite of the destructive powers in league with death. Savva was first published in 1906. The production of it is prohibited in Russia, but has met with success in Vienna and Berlin.

Reviewed by H. E. Woodbridge

Dial 58:49 Ja 16 '15 450w

"Plays of the revolution, done with all the mysticism, vivid realism and fatalistic pessimism that put this author in the foremost rank of the younger Russian school."

+ Ind 79:72 Jl 13 '14 30w

R of Rs 50:246 Ag '14 250w

"Andreyev's work vibrates with the spirit of his political faith, saved, however, from the utter distortion of prejudice by the sympathy of his artistic perception."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 17 '14 300w

ANDREWS, CHARLTON. Drama to-day. *$1.50 Lippincott 13-21277

A work which "aims to be a brief compendium of drama as it is practised not only in England and America but on the continent. It presents an excellent survey of the methods, themes, and tendencies of modern drama."—R of Rs

"Will aid students in schools and colleges, besides being interesting reading for the general public."

+ A L A Bkl 10:176 Ja '14

"The author's qualifications for the task are incomplete in one important respect—he cannot divest himself of the influence of the popular mind. His judgments are the judgments of the crowd, and whatever is unfamiliar to him he is inclined to belittle, if not misrepresent. Mr. Andrews is consequently at his best when dealing with American drama."

+ Ath 1914,1:239 F 14 550w

"A well ordered and highly readable book."

J. W. Tupper

+ Dial 56:56 Ja 16 '14 850w

"An excellent book for the average reader who wishes to familiarize himself with things dramatic."

+ R of Rs 49:247 F '14 60w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:88 Ap '14 30w

ANECDOTES of the hour, by famous men. il 6 50c (2c) Hearst's int. lib. 14-7907

The editor, who modestly withholds his name, has gathered together some two hundred or more anecdotes that have been related by famous men and women. A picture of the storyteller in a number of cases accompanies the anecdote.

ANNESLEY, MAUDE. Sphinx in the labyrinth.
 *$1.25 Duffield 13-12598

"A sentimental little tale concerning a man who loves two women—his wife and a friend who visits them—and is loved by both in return. The wife, who is an invalid, dies, and the other girl refuses to marry him on the ground that she does not wish to 'hurt the soul' of the dead woman." (Ath) "The title of the romance is from Monkshead: 'The heart of a woman is a sphinx within a labyrinth.' The author . . . presents at least two women who have precisely that kind of heart." (Boston Transcript)

Ath 1913,1:432 Ap 19 50w

"In spite of the complexity of the situation she handles it with commendable delicacy."

+ — Boston Transcript p11 D 19 '13 200w

Nation 98:110 Ja 29 '14 300w

"It is a pretty inane piece of vulgarity."

— N Y Sun p3 D 27 '13 40w

ANTIN, MARY. They who knock at our gates. il
 *$1 (4c) Houghton 14-9103

Mary Antin considers three questions: the first a question of principle, Have we any right to regulate immigration? the second a question of fact, What is the nature of our present immigration? the third a question of interpretation, Is immigration good for us? She favors an open immigration policy, altho she says, "I do not ask that we remove all restrictions and let the flood of immigration sweep in unchecked." And she defends the "new" immigration, saying that what we get in the steerage "is not the refuse, but the sinew and bone of all the nations."

"The book is marked by charm and vigor of presentation, rather than by originality of thought or closeness of reasoning." P. S. Feirce
 + Am J Soc 20:421 N '14 450w

A L A Bkl 11:8 S '14

"This book is highly compressed with fact and feeling; it is moving to a degree because of the author's eloquent sincerity. In fact this book does for the immigrant what Olive Schreiner has done for the woman in 'Woman and labour'; both have expressed with a broad epic touch the inner cry of a group." Geoffrey Monmouth

+ Bookm 39:458 Je '14 1000w

+ — Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 850w

"The author's love for her adopted country is beautiful to behold, her Americanism is as thorough-going as any true patriot could wish, and her enthusiasm in espousing the cause of both the immigrant and the new land to which he is hastening, is contagious. And, with it all, her command of her adopted language is remarkable."

+ Dial 56:470 Je 1 '14 370w

+ Ind 78:565 Je 29 '14 60w

— Nation 99:750 D 24 '14 150w

+ — N Y Times 19:305 Jl 12 '14 180w

"Through its intelligent emphasis upon the elements of idealism and humanity it adds something vital to a discussion that may easily become too exclusively scientific. Intuition, an intimate perception of what the immigrant thinks and feels, are of at least as much value as are tabulated facts and rows of figures."

+ — No Am 200:159 Jl '14 770w

"Does not equal in appeal her 'Promised land,' but is full of interest."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:187 Jl '14 60w

ANTRIM, SAIDA (BRUMBACK), and ANTRIM, ERNEST IRVING. County library. il $2 (1½c) Pioneer press, Van Wert, O. 14-10625

An interesting account of an important library venture whose aim is to minister to the library needs of the country people in a way comparable with the library service which the well-endowed public libraries render city people. The Brumback library of Van Wert county, Ohio, was the pioneer library in this county library movement; and the present volume gives the history of the movement locally, and, further, tells something of its extension to about a hundred other counties. The work done at the central library so far as it ministers to the needs of the city of Van Wert is similar to that of the average municipal library. But it is chiefly the headquarters for the rural extension work: namely, maintaining county branch libraries and furnishing books to the schools of the county, both city and country.

"Should be recommended to any library which contemplates county extension."

+ A L A Bkl 11:49 O '14

"Especially worthy of note are the care with which the every-day working of the Brumback library in all its departments and branches is made clear to the reader."

+ Dial 57:24 Jl 13 '14 300w

Ind 79:74 Jl 13 '14 50w

"Contains much that should interest librarians and library trustees the country over."

+ Outlook 107:425 Je 20 '14 100w

"All interested in the progress of public education, especially every librarian, should read this account." M. R. Haines

+ Survey 33:90 O 24 '14 400w

ARDEN, JOAN. A childhood; with a preface by * Gilbert Murray. *$1 Macmillan A15-54

"The author of this simple description is a faithful transcriber of her childish sensations and experiences. Her account of days passed in the country at a boarding-school on the main road to London is naturally uneventful, and the interest of the book lies mainly in the writer's own retrospective power."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 11:209 Ja '15

+ Ath 1913,2:700 D 13 90w

"A naive genuineness characterizes these tales and shows how strongly the feeling and sense of childhood has lasted into Miss Arden's grown-up years. Professor Murray is exactly right when he finds in this little book a 'sense of a mysterious life in lifeless things.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 18 '14 850w

+ Dial 57:25 Jl 1 '14 200w

ARENSBERG, WALTER CONRAD. Poems. $1
 * Houghton 14-7253

A little volume of verse containing besides original pieces translations of poems by Gerard de Nerval, Baudelaire, Laforgue and Verlaine. It is "a contribution to the poetry of America which in importance is out of all proportion to its quantity for two reasons—because in the first place it expresses a whimsical quality of mind; a caprice, in no wise contradictory to depth, in the treatment of the things of the senses and the spirit; a deft and fanciful juggling with thought and word, and because in the second place it is written in harmony with the most fastidious traditions of English verse, even when its author treats verse with the greatest freedom." (Boston Transcript)

Reviewed by W. A. Bradley

+ — Bookm 40:209 O '14 50w

"No one who really cares for poetry, whether considering the original pieces or the translations in this little volume, can do otherwise than rejoice in the revelation of a new poet and look forward with longing to the appearance of another volume from the pen of Mr. Arensberg." Pitts Sanborn

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 2 '14 1100w

+ Lit D 48:1188 My 16 '14 60w

+ — Nation 99:249 Ag 27 '14 380w

"The book has a unique quality—a flavor of delicious and ironic humor that is fresh and delightful."

+ R of Rs 50:637 N '14 40w

"Is of interest for the promise it shows rather than for anything of abiding value in it. The author writes easily, his technic is generally good and, best of all, he apparently knows his limitations and attempts nothing beyond them."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 16 '14 330w

ARKWRIGHT, WILLIAM. The trend. *$1.25 (2c)
 * Lane 14-10075

The story is concerned with the development of a boy genius, found singing in the streets by a rising young composer who is in need of a tenor to sing a part in a cantata he has just finished. The boy seems to have just the voice required and Robert Rushton takes him in hand, only to find that he is confronted with a problem, for William refuses to follow conventional lines of development. The other characters in the story are a group of charming, every-day people whom it is pleasant to meet.

"Originality is the most striking quality of Mr. Arkwright's new novel, which is written with commendable smoothness."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 320w

"There is almost as much salt as sugar here, but the writing is too formal for contemporary taste. Most readers will find it stilted and some will be utterly put out to find a lecture on style, several pages of it, toward the end." Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:54 J1 16 '14 200w

"The plot per se is much more entertaining than the book, in which the wings of mystical fantasy are made to carry a heavy load of argumentative dialogue."

+ — Nation 99:224 Ag 20 '14 430w

"The trend' is evidently a work of love, the result of much thought. The author has written because he really had something to say, and, generally speaking, he says it well. The thoughtful reader will find this book an interesting one."

+ — N Y Times 19:235 My 17 '14 650w

"The underlying moral of the book is clear and true to life and genius and art."

+ — Sat R 117:510 Ap 18 '14 350w

"The end of the book, which should be impressive, is really a little melodramatic."

+ — Spec 112:919 My 30 '14 100w

ARMITAGE, TAYLOR. Bob Spencer the life saver; or, Guarding the coast for Uncle Sam. (Uncle Sam's service ser.) il $*1 (1½c) Sully & Kleinteich 14-7574

This is the first volume of a series for boys in which the author plans to show something of the methods of different government departments. Bob Spencer, the youngest of a family of five boys, is the most adventurous of the lot. He is fond of the water, and in choosing a career finds just what he wants in the life-saving service. The story of his experiences in one of the Atlantic coast stations is full of exciting incident.

ARMSTRONG, DOUGLAS B. Boys' book of stamp collecting. il $*1.75 Stokes A14-2983

"Mr. Armstrong has little patience with those who have a passing craze for 'gathering together numbers of coloured postage labels in an arbitrarily planned album. His book is a practical guide for ardent young collectors who take an intelligent interest in their stamps, and wish to know the historical and geographical associations of each. It is fully illustrated."—Ath

"Written for the older boy, to help him appreciate and continue his hobby, it will be perhaps useful also on the adult shelves."

+ A L A Bkl 11:178 D '14

+ Ath 1913,2:751 D 27 60w

"All the information one should know about the science of collecting is given compactly and entertainingly."

+ Ind 80:417 D 14 '14 40w

"Written from the English standpoint, but none the less significant to the American enthusiast."

+ Nation 99:695 D 10 '14 90w

+ N Y Times 19:571 D 13 '14 90w

ARNIM, MARY ANNETTE (BEAUCHAMP), gräfin von. Pastor's wife. il $*1.35 (1c) Doubleday 14-18806

That theme, dear to the heart of the author of "Elizabeth," the differences between the working of an English and of a German mind, is made the basis for this tragic comedy. Ingeborg, the daughter of an English bishop, is married to Herr Dremmel, pastor of a little parish in East Prussia. Ingeborg married the pastor in a moment of revolt against her father, the bishop, and after seven years of what she calls "a wild career of unbridled motherhood" rebels again. This time she runs away to Italy in company with an English artist. But finding that his ideas of the expedition are not on the same Platonic level with her own, she returns home, nerved to meet the worst. She finds her Robert, quite unperturbed by her absence, pursuing his hobby, the fertilization of East Prussian soil.

"Lacks the spontaneity and will not be as popular as 'Elizabeth and her German garden.'" + — A L A Bkl 11:172 D '14

"Even in comparison with its predecessors from the same pen, this is a singularly charming volume."

+ — Ath 1914,2:353 O 10 520w

"A book among many." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 40:562 Ja '15 730w

"The inevitable humorous twist which made 'Elizabeth and her German garden' such delightful reading, as truly characterizes that author's new story." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p25 N 25 '14 750w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:456 D 1 '14 320w

"Suddenly the author's buoyancy deserts the story and left to its own devices it merges into a heavy chronicle of the bleak existence of an English girl and her uncouth German husband."

— Ind 80:290 N 23 '14 70w

+ Lit D 50:159 Ja 23 '15 250w

+ Nation 99:690 D 10 '14 300w

"The fourth dimension' of race differences is more insistent here than in Kipling's story itself; and this fourth dimension gives pathos as well as humor to an unusually clever novel."

+ N Y Times 19:517 N 22 '14 200w

"Audacity and satire run riot, yet the wit we love in 'Elizabeth' is here, though somewhat acidulated and occasionally verging upon actual coarseness."

+ — Outlook 108:845 D 9 '14 150w

"It's a worth-while book! A sermon to chuckle over—a farce to weep over—a guide book for the stay-at-homes—a warning to the pure in heart." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 86:2013 D 12 '14 680w

R of Rs 50:765 D '14 90w

"The novel, even if we must pronounce it in some ways faulty in design, is brilliantly faultless in literary detail and execution. There is a touch of virile originality in 'Elizabeth's' style which is often amazing. There is no padding in her books. What a rare, what a delightful gift."

+ — Spec 113:566 O 24 '14 1900w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ja 14 '15 550w

ARNOLD, HUGH. Stained glass of the middle ages in England and France. il $*7 Macmillan 14-30359

The author describes a few of the best known examples of medieval stained glass surviving in England and France. "The English instances are almost exclusively taken from the cathedral church of Canterbury, and from the remarkable window pictures of York minster and certain parish churches of that northern city. Almost the only exceptions to this are the brief discussions as to the glass of the priory church of Great Malvern and the much-described windows of Fairford. The treatment of French glass is also confined, so far as illustrations are concerned, to the noble examples to be seen at Chartres, Rouen, Poitiers, and Le Mans, which are familiar to many travellers." (Ath)

"The best popular work devoted to this subject. All expect large and special libraries would be satisfied with Sherrill's 'Stained glass tour in Italy' and his tours in England and France, which appeal more to the average reader and tourist."

+ A L A Bkl 10:344 My '14

ARNOLD, HUGH.—Continued.

+ Ath 1913,2:500 N 1 270w

"Mr. Saint has succeeded in rendering the qualities peculiar to stained glass very effectively."

+ Int Studio 51:245 Ja '14 350w

"The best popular work on the subject that has come to our notice."

+ Nation 98:21 Ja 1 '14 130w

+ — Sat R 116:622 N 15 '13 350w

ARNOLD, WINIFRED. Little Merry Christmas. il *60c Revell 14-16201

"Miss Arnold tells of the happy transformation of Uncle Lemuel Perkins, alias 'Grouchy Gruff,' by his fascinating little niece, Mary Christie, who also has a nickname, 'Little Merry Christmas.'"—Dial

Dial 57:509 D 16 '14 50w

"Pretty little story."

+ N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 50w

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 150w

ASHLEY, WILLIAM JAMES. Economic organization of England: an outline history. *90c Longmans 14-20268

"Prof. W. J. Ashley has gathered together a course of lectures which he delivered before the Colonial Institute of Hamburg. They are similar to the brief course which he has been in the habit of giving for the last few years at the University of Birmingham, and are an admirable philosophical survey of English economic history from the self-sufficing manor of the thirteenth and the narrow gild of the fourteenth centuries down to the gigantic iron amalgamations, shipping rings, and other monopolistic combinations of the twentieth century. He does not argue theories about manorial and gild origins, but begins directly by describing concrete institutions as they actually existed in medieval England."—Nation

+ A L A Bk1 11:152 D '14

Reviewed by T. W. Van Metre

+ Ann Am Acad 57:336 Ja '15 300w

"There are true things said here which either have never been said so well or have never been said at all by our economic historians." J. H. C.

+ — Eng Hist R 30:188 Ja '15 380w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 13:431 Ja '15 60w

+ Ind 81:212 F 8 '15 180w

"If he omits much that one expects to find in a textbook of economic history, he also enriches his pages with thoughtful suggestions of his own and mature conclusions on the suggestions of others. His volume, though intended for beginners, has food for those who already know something of the subject."

+ Nation 99:326 S 10 '14 450w

N Y Times 19:580 D 20 '14 650w

"There is an astonishing amount of good 'stuff,' as Bacon would have phrased it, in this small volume. There are some points which, in our judgment, Mr. Ashley would do well to reconsider when revising the work for a second edition. We know of no other book—of similar compass—which we should with equal confidence recommend to anyone who desires a survey of English economic development—a survey which should be rapid without being superficial, and close packed without being congested. In fine, it is work worthy of its author."

+ — Sat R 118:114 J1 25 '14 1300w

ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGIATE ALUMNAE. COMMITTEE ON VOCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES. Vocational training. pa 50c Assn. of collegiate alumnae 13-22272

The association of collegiate alumnae aims to assist educated women in finding opportunities in professions other than the much over-crowded one of teaching. They issue in this volume a list of the institutions that offer special training for particular vocations. First, the occupations are listed alphabetically, then under each the schools which offer the necessary courses are named, with particulars as to requirements, cost, etc.

A L A Bk1 10:216 F '14

ASTON, SIR GEORGE GREY. Sea, land, and air strategy; a comparison. il *$3.50 (4½c) Little (Eng ed 14-18665)

The lectures that make up the contents of this book were delivered at the Staff college at Camberley during the years 1904-1907, but the author says that "experience gained since those days has been embodied, in order to bring the matter up to date." An introduction which considers briefly such matters as the psychology of war, finance and war, etc., is followed by chapters taking up: Preparations and war plans; Objectives and sea warfare; Concentration; Dispersion; Lines of communication; Fortification; Coast defence; Air warfare; The invasion of islands. As illustrations for some of his arguments he makes an examination of the naval campaign of Lissa, 1866, Napoleon's movements in 1814, the Marengo campaign of 1800, and provides a map for each.

+ Ath 1914,2:191 Ag 15 1450w

"On every page there is something to be found apposite to the present state of affairs and of absorbing interest now. Moreover, how excellent is the quiet tone of Sir George Aston's lectures on war contrasted with the savage thunders of General Bernhard's book."

+ Sat R 118:274 S 5 '14 1200w

Spec 113:273 Ag 22 '14 180w

"The chapter on 'Air warfare' contains much useful information, and the book itself is deeply interesting at the present time, but requires to be read with discrimination."

+ — Spec 113:330 S 5 '14 1700w

ATHERTON, GERTRUDE FRANKLIN. California: an intimate history. il *$2 (2c) Harper 14-18821

After a chapter giving a brief account of the geological history of the state, Mrs. Atherton tells the picturesque story of California from the days of the Spanish missions to the present. She says: "In compressing the history of California into one volume it is only possible to select the main historic events for treatment, connecting them with a synopsis of the contributing causes and illustrating them with all the personalities and anecdotes available. . . . I have striven to be as accurate as history—never accurate—will permit, while writing an interesting story."

+ A L A Bk1 11:212 Ja '15

"A book of importance beyond its possible momentary use by those who would know something of the land toward which their feet are set." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:572 Ja '15 280w

"Mrs. Atherton's 'California' reveals an historian gifted with a keen sense of the dramatic, a penetrating power of analyzing the springs of human action, and a virile forcefulness and freedom of expression." C. A. Kofoid

+ — Dial 57:498 D 16 '14 400w

+ Ind 81:138 Ja 25 '15 80w

Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 200w

"Gertrude Atherton's 'intimate history' is more entertaining than most other volumes on its subject, although she does not romance in the least, but sticks to the facts established by other historians."

+ Nation 99:715 D 17 '14 180w

"A narrative of unusual quality, rich in individuality, in picturesqueness, and in interest." + N Y Times 20:5 Ja 3 '15 1250w

"We may read her book not only for its artistic effect, but for the information it contains."

+ No Am 201:93 Ja '15 820w

"Mrs. Atherton has selected only main events and stirring incidents, but the result is a dramatic story which marks also the gradual growth and upbuilding of the state."

+ Pittsburgh 19:566 D '14 90w

"Herself a native of the state, Mrs. Atherton puts into the story a vim and enthusiasm that seem in keeping with the record of the stirring deeds recounted."

+ R of Rs 50:761 D '14 80w

"Mrs. Atherton's 'California' is a moving film of human characters from the earliest padres down to Hiram Johnson."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 D 3 '14 400w

ATHERTON, GERTRUDE FRANKLIN. Perch of the devil. *$1.35 (1c) Stokes 14-14806

A half class story that could easily serve as propaganda for anti-divorce. The setting is Butte, "known at a period when less famous for metals and morals as 'Perch of the devil,'" and the principal characters are two married couples—the Comptons and the Blakes. Gregory Compton at the end of two years in the School of mines marries a crude, commonplace West side belle of whose beauty he soon tires. However, he underestimates the latent possibilities in his oval-eyed, shallow-voiced wife who, as soon as he resolves to finish his engineering course, begins heroically to correct the defects in her education and natural equipment. The wife of Blake takes a hand. While Gregory's wife is spurred on at first only by her ambition to keep up with her husband she soon finds it a game of absorbing values. When the crowning point of her achievement is reached she is stunned to find that her husband has been making love to Blake's wife. Then she shows the true metal of her heroism and is superb as she sets her house in order. The dénouement is logically and morally convincing.

"Interesting to people who can read to be entertained without feeling that they must approve or agree with the philosophy of life expressed."

+ A L A Bkl 11:30 S '14 +

"At half its present length the book would have been more effective and much easier to read."

— Ath 1914,2:306 S 26 350w

"Quite independently of the book as a whole, which is often exaggerated and amazingly uneven, Mrs. Atherton has given us one of the strongest, most consistent, most carefully developed women characters of which the last half century can boast." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:310 N '14 380w

+ Boston Transcript p21 S 9 '14 650w

"Like a hundred other novelists, Mrs. Atherton has failed to do the impossible. She has tried to make us believe that Gregory's love for Ora was a supreme passion, and that he was happy in giving it up. Her attempt is hardly to be respected, however respectable it may be." Lucian Cary

— + Dial 57:204 S 16 '14 170w

"The creation of Ida Compton is an achievement worthy of a Wells, told with the narrative skill of a Conrad."

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 60w

Lit D 50:106 Ja 16 '15 230w

+ — Nation 99:379 S 24 '14 330w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 150w

"Readers who have a fondness for tracing the 'development' of an author may compare 'Perch of the devil' with that early tale of western life, 'The Californians,' and possibly to its disadvantage, for 'The Californians' is the pleasanter book." Helen Bullis

+ — N Y Times 19:361 Ag 30 '14 1550w

"The novel is a strong piece of work, a little too verbose in places, but free from the exuberance of the author's early writing; the interest is fully sustained, and there are to be found in it both entertainment and careful character depiction."

+ Outlook 108:104 S 9 '14 200w

"All the author's passion is wasted if, as we believe, most readers will close it without caring to know what happened to the characters afterwards."

— + Spec 113:399 S 19 '14 850w

ATTERIDGE, ANDREW HILLIARD. Famous land fights. il *$2 (2c) Little

The author traces the development of land fighting from the earliest days down to the close of the Balkan war, describing typical battles of each period. In the course of the narrative the evolution of weapons and of tactics is followed. The book is plentifully supplied with maps and there are interesting illustrations from old prints, and an index. It is issued as a companion volume to "Famous sea fights" by John Richard Hale.

AUBRY, PIERRE. Trouvères and troubadours:
a popular treatise; tr. by Claude Aveling. il
$1.50 Schirmer 14-13080

This study of the troubadours of southern France and the trouvères of northern France is translated from the second French edition of a monograph by an able scholar who met an untimely death in 1910. He presents a side of the subject hitherto neglected, devoting his work to the musical aspects of these medieval songs, their literary merits having received due attention from others. The words and melodies for many of the songs are inserted in the text.

"An invaluable little book." H: T. Finck

+ Nation 99:614 N 19 '14 400w

AUERBACH, JOSEPH SMITH. Essays and miscellanies. 2v *$2 (2c) Harper 14-9943

Two volumes of essays which demonstrate the author's belief that the practical man of affairs should be active in bringing the literary spirit and business life, not only into harmony, but into close acquaintance and actual contact. One essay, "Literature and the practical world," makes a special plea for the union of the world of affairs and the world of letters. The volumes contain the following chapters: The Bible and modern life; Bible words and phrases; Future in America; English style; One phase of journalism; Responsibility of the community to the hospital; The search of Belisarius; Literature and the practical world; A club; The lesson of Bishop Potter's life; Protest of the Democratic party; The university journal; President Roosevelt and the trusts; Matthew Arnold.

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 10 '14 650w

"The volumes, as a whole, under whatever process of culling or humoring the reader may choose, surrender the impression of a personality kindly, enlightened, and companionable."

+ — Nation 99:108 JI 23 '14 650w

"These essays belong to permanent literature, and more and more will they be appreciated as they come to be read and understood. They are a plea for culture, for right conduct, for a broader charity toward men and things, for reasonableness, and for a higher responsibility in citizenship. And the plea is irresistible." E. R. L. Gould.

+ N Y Times 19:249 My 31 '14 1550w

+ No Am 200:153 JI '14 450w

"The two volumes are particularly noteworthy for mellowed breadth of judgment on public affairs and a charming literary style."

+ R of Rs 50:123 JI '14 170w

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 8 '14 800w

AUSTIN, MARY (HUNTER) (MRS. STAFFORD
W. AUSTIN). California. il *$4 Macmillan
14-33981

"In 'California' Sutton Palmer has painted the country at its most beautiful—which it isn't always—and Mary Austin has written the text and both of them have seen that 'in the presence of that vast plain (the Valley) palpitating with heat, the sluggish, untamed water, the white-fanged Sierras combing the cloudless blue, beauty becomes a poor word.'"—Ind

+ A L A Bkl 11:214 Ja '15

"Mrs. Mary Austin undoubtedly succeeds in giving a picturesque impression of California in its many aspects of beauty and wonder. She overloads her pen at times."

+ — Ath 1914,2:349 O 10 680w

AUSTIN, MARY—Continued.

"The pictures give no hint of that perception of beauty which thrills in her pages. Indeed, they seem rather like photographs tranquilly coloured at home; and lacking therefore in both actuality and emotion." Algernon Tassin

+ — Bookm 49:130 D '14 280w

"Foremost among these books [on California] in beauty of conception and execution is Mr. Sutton Palmer's and Mrs. Mary Austin's 'California, the land of the sun.'" C: A. Kofoid

+ — Dial 57:496 D 16 '14 770w

+ Ind 80:26 O 5 '14 20w

"The leisurely pages are quite as colorful and appreciative as the delicately toned illustrations."

+ Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 150w

+ Nation 99:714 D 17 '14 180w

"The paintings of Sutton Palmer, admirably reproduced in color, and the sprightly and poetic text of Mary Austin make this something far superior to the ordinary guide book."

+ N Y Times 19:529 N 29 '14 50w

"There is an admirable combination here of subject, art, and authorship."

+ Outlook 108:392 O 14 '14 100w

+ R of Rs 50:758 D '14 60w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 3 '14 300w

AUSTIN, MARY (HUNTER) (MRS. STAFFORD W. AUSTIN). Love and the soul maker. $1.50 (3c) Appleton 14-10326

A frank treatment of love, marriage and divorce from a woman's point of view. Mrs. Austin looks upon love not primarily as a race-producing force but as an energizing force which stimulates men and women to work up the stuff of their natures into superior personalities, one which inspires them to the highest degree of usefulness. She handles sex as an active principle, one that must work forward into the field of life or secretly corrode. "The best love-life is not necessarily the most loving, but the one which has the best use of love's activities." Because there is so much incompetency in our mating methods divorce is unavoidable. If marriages cannot be permanent, and there are reasons why certain ones should not be, let the dissolution be private and simple. "The whole ground of our estimate of divorce proceedings must be shifted from the implication of offence to the more hopeful one of falling short."

+ — Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 420w
Ind 78:491 Je 15 '14 50w

"She throws a new light on sex in its relation to the feminist movement. The psychology student will appreciate the truths deduced by the author, altho her poetic imagery and elusive phraseology will be slightly 'over the heads' of the ordinary reader."

+ Lit D 49:199 Ag 1 '14 160w

"If, to speak to the whole world as one may speak to an intimate of one's own sex is indecorum, this book is indecorous."

+ — Nation 99:75 J1 16 '14 500w

"The value, though by no means the virtue, of Mrs. Austin's book about love, marriage, and divorce, is its modernity. It is a book which runs a fair chance of attaining to some degree of permanence when to-day shall have subsided into yesterday, largely by reason of the fact that it indexes pretty thoroughly how and what we, of this turbulent day, think concerning these sober subjects. Summing up, Mrs. Austin's book is an honest effort to put a few big facts in their true perspective. Some of them she has unduly foreshortened in the process, but the effort will help more than it will hinder."

+ — N Y Times 19:301 J1 5 '14 930w

"There is a realism of common life that always carries within it a high idealism. It is just this which lends distinction to the homely counsel of 'Love and the soul maker.'"

+ Springfield Republican p5 J1 2 '14 420w

AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a happy woman. $1.50 / Moffat 14-12294

"The story of one woman's hard working life, a life that began with handicaps, that throve on struggle, that met the world cheerfully in open ground and fought for livelihood. And all the time and author found her happiness in work, and her advice to other human beings who want to be happy and believe they are not is to plunge into work, to fill up their days with useful toil, and to keep themselves so busy that they have no time to think whether or not they are happy. She has herself worked at several different kinds of things, but mostly, it would seem, at one or another sort of newspaper work. But it is not only of herself that she writes. She tells numberless stories of people who have crossed her path, some of whom failed and some succeeded, while with shrewd insight she attempts to throw bare the vital thing that led to failure or success."— N Y Times

"Her hard sense and impatience with impotent discontent and self pity lend a wholesome, tonic quality which is reinforced by the brisk, colloquial style."

+ A L A Bkl 11:8 S '14 +

"Since we feel no reason to doubt that 'The autobiography of a happy woman' is an honest account of personal experience, success and failure of one woman's life, we cannot but feel that the book would have gained an interest if the identity of its writer were known. If, however, it is fiction instead of autobiography, then again we cannot fail to feel admiration for a writer who can make fiction appear so entirely the truth."

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 15 '14 480w
Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 30w

"What she has here written is not properly an autobiography, but a tract. The book presents neither a consecutive story nor a sustained and progressive argument."

— Nation 99:164 Ag 6 '14 250w

"With an innate strong driving power of sincerity and conviction the narrative of this rather striking book moves along forcefully, making one feel on every page that whoever wrote it has lived at close grip with life and has gained her knowledge herself, and not by hearsay from others."

+ N Y Times 19:271 Je 14 '14 200w

"In an odd jumble of good writing and extreme colloquialism the author imparts an amazing amount of absolutely usable information, sorely needed by all women (and most men) wherever they are at work."

+ — Outlook 107:821 Ag 1 '14 250w

AVEBURY, JOHN LUBBOCK, 2c baron. Pre-historic times. il $3.50 (1c) Holt 14-30272

This is the seventh edition of Lord Avebury's book. Shortly before his death the author had made a thoro revision of the work, "making numerous additions dealing with recent discoveries and theories, and cutting out portions which seemed no longer essential. Besides this a number of new illustrations have been added to replace or supplement those of the earlier editions." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 10:332 Ap '14

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 430w

"Its wide scope, its lucid discussions of controversial matters and of interesting points raised by the fragmentary evidence of primitive man, and its abundant and well chosen data and illustrations, make it a mine of anthropological information."

+ Dial 56:192 Mr 1 '14 200w

"The style is graphic, simple and wastes no time."

+ Ind 78:174 Ap 27 '14 60w

+ Lit D 48:837 Ap 11 '14 200w

+ Nation 98:763 Je 25 '14 2000w

"For the wide range of its information, and the fairness with which divergent views are discussed, the book well deserves the improved lease of life now given to it as a popular textbook of archaeology. Its defects are those of its class." J: Griffith

+ — Nature 93:57 Mr 19 '14 250w

Spec 111:1128 D 27 '13 40w

"The book is at once scholarly and popular in treatment."

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 4 '15 300w

"One of the most interesting and yet scholarly books on prehistoric life."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:126 My '14 30w

AVERILL, MARY. Japanese flower arrangement (ike-bana) applied to western needs. il *$1.50 Lane 13-22680

"Beginning with brief chapters on the history and the theory of the art the author soon proceeds to give directions for the proper arrangement of flowers under different circumstances, with the reasons explained clearly and with many pictures that illustrate her meaning." (N Y Sun) "She follows not the more abstruse and artificial canon of the school of Enshiu-Ryu, but the simpler and more informal methods of Koshin-Ryu. These are still sufficiently conventional for a western taste." (Nation)

"Useful and enlightening to the average American whose taste in flower arrangement expresses itself in heavily massed effects."

+ A L A Bkl 10:344 My '14

"The book is to be commended to such as wish something less elaborate and expensive than Josiah Conder's fine volume which is based on Enshiu Ryu."

+ Ind 77:72 Ja 12 '14 160w

"The directions are simple and explicit, the diagrams clear and often intrinsically delightful."

+ Nation 97:547 D 4 '13 160w

"It is a helpful and practical book."

+ N Y Sun p13 O 18 '13 130w

+ N Y Times 18:751 D 21 '13 60w

"A standard work on the subject."

+ Outlook 106:46 Ja 3 '14 650w

"The book is full of important considerations and directions for the practice of this art of flower arrangement which deserves in the western world a serious position among the avocations of thoughtful people." J. H.

+ School Arts Magazine 13:403 Ja '14 370w

AYDELOTTE, FRANK. Elizabethan rogues and vagabonds and their representation in contemporary literature. il *$2.50 Oxford 14-7468

The author is a Rhodes scholar and his monograph is published as the first volume in a series of "Oxford historical and literary studies." He is concerned "not merely with the rogue in literature, already the subject of extended study, but with the real Elizabethan rogue, with the changing conditions of land tenure which filled the country with sturdy beggars, with their methods of getting a living, and with the growth of legislation which, in 1575, by the simple device of getting them to work, destroyed the freedom and excitement which gave zest to the life of 'rufflers' and 'upright men.'" (Nation)

"Mr. Aydelotte has written an excellent monograph. He has made brilliant use of his materials. He has done more; he has caught the deeper significances of his subject. Moreover he handles with ease and lightness what may be called the English of Oxford." Wallace Notestein

+ Am Hist R 19:886 Jl '14 600w

"He has made his monograph on the seamy side of life interesting by wide reading and careful collation of documentary as well as printed authorities, also by a large number of contemporary illustrations."

+ Ath 1913,2:519 N 8 700w

"A finished and well-balanced study." J. H. C.

+ Eng Hist R 29:792 O '14 420w

"Interesting monograph."

+ Nation 98:437 Ap 16 '14 230w

"His book is entertaining, dealing as it does with begging and conny-catching as an art."

+ Sat R 116:624 N 15 '13 300w

"His work is a satisfactory proof of the usefulness of the Rhodes foundation, as well as a valuable contribution to social history."

+ Spec 112:138 Ja 24 '14 150w

AYER, REV. JOSEPH CULLEN. Source book for ancient church history. *$3 Scribner 13-23627

In this source book "Professor Ayer gives trustworthy translations of the most important documents from the apostolic age down to the close of the conciliar period, i. e., about 800 A. D. Short introduction, suggestions in regard to the historical value of the excerpts, references to the most accessible editions in the original languages, and notes on the literature of mooted questions furnish suitable helps for the student who is seeking to estimate the evidence and draw his own conclusion in accordance with it."—Ind

"We do not hesitate to commend the volume, not only to teachers of church history, but to all teachers working within the period it covers."

+ Am Hist R 19:850 Jl '14 680w

+ Am J Theol 18:485 Jl '14 150w

"The author's aim at strict impartiality has been fairly well attained."

+ A L A Bkl 10:300 Ap '14

"It is a volume which will be a standard tool for work in the field of ancient and mediaeval history."

+ Bib World 43:228 Ap '14 220w

"The volume will prove a most useful adjunct to any good textbook of church history, and is sure to be gratefully received by earnest teachers of this subject and by many diligent readers who wish to get a little nearer the foundations of historical knowledge and hear the echoes from the master builders at their work."

+ Ind 77:315 Mr 2 '14 190w

"The book is both a history and a source book. Its value will be appreciated by theological students who will find their church history made both more interesting and more easily memorable by this collection of sources. The accounts of the many heresies, in particular, are often more clear in Prof. Ayer's words than in his quoted passages which, from the nature of the case, have to be restricted in number. Prof. Ayer is himself an Episcopalian, but many of the books from which he takes his sources were compiled by Roman Catholics, and there is no reason why the book should not be used by Baptist or Presbyterian students of theology."

+ N Y Times 18:710 N 30 '13 450w

"A valuable thesaurus of first-hand information for ready reference."

+ Outlook 106:603 Mr 14 '14 130w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud. Monksbridge. *$1.35 Longmans 14-5426

"This is a study of characters, told mainly by conversations. A family of four—the mother, twin daughters, and a son—have a little fortune and a house on the borders of Wales left to them unexpectedly. . . . One of the sisters possesses a calculating and managing mind, and the rest of the book is taken up with her influence over her family, and over the nobility and gentry of that part of the country. She arranges excellent marriages for herself and her mother, but her sister and brother rebel against her plans for them."—Ath

"The best things about the book are a few sudden, vivid descriptions, of a person speaking or of some little action, which set a whole scene before our eyes in two or three words. This clever trick of the author's—it seems no more than that—is the only thing which relieves the monotony of the book."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup473 Mr 28 150w

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 13 '14 280w

"This is a quiet picture of English rural scenes and the life of gentlefolk infused with a rare humor."

+ Nation 98:468 Ap 23 '14 250w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud.—Continued.

"Nothing distinguished about it, but, on the other hand, nothing vapid or ignoble or 'smart,' in the ill sense of the word. The author has a keen sense of humor."

+ N Y Times 19:169 Ap 5 '14 280w

"A lively and amusing novel."

+ Sat R 117:443 Ap 4 '14 750w

AYSCOUGH, JOHN, pseud. Prodigals and sons.
$1.25 Kenedy

A collection of short stories. "Some are weird and uncanny, as 'A shadow of death' and 'The pink-eyed man'; some are full of humor, as 'Changed' and 'The happy end of Sister Elizabeth'; some inculcate a moral lesson, as 'By easy instalments' and 'The schoolmistress'; others are rather commonplace." (Cath World)

"Lovers of the short story will welcome this amusing collection."

+ Ath 1913,2:418 O 18 30w

"About thirty short stories that most of his readers will devour at a sitting. The chief objection to many of these stories is the constant harping on one theme, the death theme. It is developed dramatically enough at times, but becomes rather monotonous in its constant repetition."

+ Cath World 98:691 F '14 110w

+ Cath World 99:542 J1 '14 330w

"But good as are most of these stories, the chief virtue of them all is the quality which made friends for 'Gracechurch.' It is not in plot nor in dialogue that their chief strength is found; it is in their revelations of their author's genial, cultured, sympathetic personality."

+ N Y Times 19:411 O 4 '14 530w

"There is one supremely good story among the twenty-seven which compose this book, and that is the account, which is called 'Changed.' No reader who wishes to laugh aloud in his chair should miss this highly entertaining sketch, but the rest of the book is not up to this level. Indeed, it is not up to 'John Ayscough's' usual standard. Short stories are never his forte, but these are rather more commonplace than others which he has written."

— + Spec 111:923 N 29 '13 200w

Spec 112:1097 Je 27 '14 30w

B

BABSON, ROGER WARD. Future of nations; 11 economic facts for business men. $1 (1c)
Babson statistical organization

The author points out those things on which the prosperity of any nation must be based. His brief chapters consider: Taxation; Religion; Education; and International affairs. In the latter he outlines a plan for the organization of a permanent International relations congress which would have power to enact immigration, customs, trade, and other legislation affecting the free intercourse of races.

BACHELLER, IRVING ADDISON. The mar-
ryers. il $1 (2½c) Harper 14-7568

Another narrative by Socrates Potter. Part of the story is concerned with the efforts of Socrates to marry off a fine American girl to a fine American young man, and the other part with his endeavor to shield the girl's father from blackmail. The scene of the story shifts from America to Italy, where the blackmailer, who has followed his victim, is finally overcome, and where sundry Italian counts attempt unsuccessfully to marry Gwendolyn.

"About the figure of the American heiress pursuing her favorite big game abroad, Mr. Bachelier's carefully rustic humor plays with a good deal of effectiveness."

+ Nation 98:605 My 21 '14 350w

N Y Times 19:218 My 3 '14 300w

BACKHOUSE, EDMUND, and BLAND, JOHN.
OTWAY PERCY. Annals and memoirs of the court of Peking (from the 16th to the 20th century). il $4.50 Houghton 14-30273

"The success of the authors' volume on the life and reign of the Empress Dowager Tzu Hsi has suggested that an account of a wider stretch of space and time might prove interesting. The present volume includes four centuries of Chinese history written for the most part by contemporaries. Annals and memoirs have been carefully scrutinized, and those that have historical significance have been embodied in this work in chronological order. The reader thus gets his information from original documents, and he is kept in a Chinese atmosphere throughout his reading."—Boston Transcript

"It constitutes a very valuable contribution to our literature concerning China." S. K. Hornbeck

+ Am Hist R 19:506 J1 '14 700w

A L A Bkl 10:300 Ap '14

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:510 Ag '14 1250w

Ann Am Acad 55:275 S '14 220w

"The lives of the Manchu emperors, especially K'ang Hsi and Ch'ien Lung, are carefully done."

+ Ath 1913,2:sup397 O 11 70w

"Extraordinarily valuable as the book is, we are left in some doubt as to its exact ambition. Is it meant for the study or for the drawing-room? The cover; the curious, inconsistent, and sometimes ludicrous forms of Chinese words; the absence of references even to the titles of the published or manuscript sources; the many misprints—all suggest the latter; while, on the other hand, the greater part of the contents is worthy of the attention of the most serious student, and we confess to being old-fashioned enough to regard some sentences as making the book unsuitable to be left on the drawing-room table."

+ Ath 1914,1:190 F 7 1450w

"History as such is valuable only as we get the facts, even when they are unpleasant facts. And it would have been better if the authors had said just this in their introduction, and not attempted to say something in defence of polygamy."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 25 '14 400w

"The authors are to be criticised for having omitted needed references to authorities in a good many passages where interpretations of vitally important events are offered to the reader."

+ Dial 56:425 My 16 '14 500w

"It is as good as the same authors' 'China under the empress dowager,' and that is the highest praise possible."

+ Ind 77:355 Mr 9 '14 60w

"The book has a value, far transcending its interest as a series of stories and scenes, in relation to our estimate of the Chinese people and their ideas."

+ Nation 98:634 My 28 '14 2750w

"The book is one which no student of Chinese affairs can afford to miss, while those who are interested in the study of comparative morality or of national character, or even of mere human nature in general will find informing."

+ N Y Times 19:253 My 31 '14 1250w

"The present volume is particularly notable, not only because of its admirable historical survey, but also because, unlike most recent books on China, it protests that a republic there does endanger the foundations, in that it undermines the ethical basis of China's whole social system."

+ Outlook 107:212 My 23 '14 950w

R of Rs 49:508 Ap '14 150w

"The design of Messrs. Backhouse and Bland's book is perhaps not altogether satisfying. It is neither a continuous history nor a series of frankly isolated studies, and the abruptness of some of the transitions may puzzle readers not familiar with the subject. The style is sometimes a little irritating. But with all deductions, it must be said that the book is alive with interest."

+ — Sat R 117:240 F 21 '14 1350w

"Messrs. Backhouse and Bland's recent work on the Court of Peking, which forms a very fitting sequel to the Life of the 'Old Buddha,' affords abundant instruction, not only to those who are specially interested in the affairs of China, but to all who are in any way concerned with Eastern politics. The authors of this work have no new gospel to expound. They merely clothe some time-honoured truths in new and, from a literary point of view, highly attractive garments." C.

+ Spec 112:187 Ja 31 '14 2300w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

+ Yale R n s 3:823 J1 '14 1500w

BACON, ALBION FELLOWS. Beauty for ashes.
12 il $1.50 (1½c) Dodd 14-18694

Mrs. Bacon tells the story of her evolution as a housing reformer. She was one of the sheltered women, engrossed in her own family affairs and serenely ignorant of conditions outside her doors. Like many another she knew of the evils far away, in New York and Chicago, while she remained blind to conditions in her own city. The city happens to be Evansville, Indiana, but the book has a lesson for dwellers in all other small cities and towns, for it shows that the slum with its evils of disease and poverty and vice is not confined to large centers. In the course of her story the author describes the fight that resulted in Indiana's model housing law. Much of the material in the book appeared in the "Survey" during 1913 and 1914.

"Aside from the literary charm of its vivid and ingenuous narrative, 'Beauty for ashes' commands attention. Its importance is urgent not only to those actually interested in 'social service,' but to everyone who has felt even the vaguest impulses to help the poor. The awakening of the uninterested will be Mrs. Bacon's real achievement."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 450w

Ind 80:210 N 9 '14 30w

"Much of the book has appeared in the 'Survey,' but there must be many who will want the material in this convenient form."

+ Nation 100:27 Ja 7 '15 120w

+ N Y Times 20:26 Ja 24 '15 80w

"She tells her story with spontaneous wit and deep feeling."

+ Outlook 108:1021 D 30 '14 120w

"This book deserves a place on the best shelf of social welfare volumes, along with Riis, Spargo and other apostles of social uplift. But before being put on the shelf it challenges the membership of women's clubs and every lover of humanity to a double reading, first for the thrill and again more thoughtfully for detail and decision to go and do likewise where opportunity presents itself."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 17 '14 900w

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Christianity old and new. *$1 (3c) Yale univ. press 14-6261

Lectures delivered at the University of California on the E. T. Earl foundation. The first treats of the evolution of religion in general, and of the development of the great historic types of early Christianity. The second and third make proposals for the reconstruction of Christianity. One, "Nineteenth century liberalism," would reconstruct Christianity by restoring "the religion of Jesus"; the other, "Twentieth century mythical idealism," by eliminating the historical element from Christianity and using its mythology for soul culture. The author aims to serve mainly the historian of religion and the student of Christian origins by throwing clearer light upon their specific tasks.

"The survey is valuable and suggestive." G. B. Smith

+ Am J Theol 19:141 Ja '15 680w

"This is one of those small books by big men which are becoming increasingly common." J. M. Thompson

+ Hibbert J 13:226 O '14 520w

"If this book proved nothing more, it would be welcome for showing to the man or woman of eclectic culture that the historical study of Christian origins is not merely a highly interesting, but an essentially religious, approach to Christianity."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 980w

"A meaty little volume, clearly and forcefully written, and packed with stimulus and suggestion from beginning to end. It has, we would venture to say, a real contribution to make to contemporary thought." D. C. Macintosh

+ Yale R n s 4:429 Ja '15 1000w

BACON, BENJAMIN WISNER. Theodore
5 Thornton Munger, New England minister. il
*$3 (3c) Yale univ. press 14-39

"The present work," says Dr. Bacon, "aims to be purely and simply a biography—the life-story of a New England minister. . . . It is not a 'Life and letters' which we present. Of dramatic incident there is almost nothing. The reader's sympathies will be called forth neither by adventure nor by martyrdom. It is the simple story of a noble ideal faithfully and successfully pursued." The first chapter takes up Early years, 1830-1847, the chapters that follow give a record of: College days; Training and ordination for the ministry; First years in the ministry; War and reconstruction; Widening influence; The mantle of Bushnell, California; Pastor and teacher, North Adams; Church building, New Haven; Retirement, New Haven.

"In addition to its deep human interest, it has literary charm. The author's task is well done, and the volume should find much appreciative attention."

+ Bib World 44:292 O '14 230w

"The author has done more than draw the portrait of a minister, whose ideal was to be faithful. He will cause many to turn to Dr. Munger's books, and thus they will understand why he commanded attention."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 14 '14 530w

"It is the great merit of Dr. Bacon's book that, while dealing with the simple annals of the quiet life of a New England minister, he has realized the significance of that life for the world at large."

+ Nation 98:607 My 21 '14 950w

"The book is interesting as a biography, but it is more than that. It gives the new theology in a vital form as the inspiration of a noble life interpreted by a sympathetic but also a keen-minded historian."

+ Outlook 106:773 Ap 4 '14 200w

"Interesting, conscientious, and noble book." G. A. Gordon

+ Yale R n s 4:209 O '14 2300w

BACON, EDWIN MUNROE. Rambles around old Boston. il *$3.50 (11½c) Little 14-20365

The rambles described in this book were taken by three friends, an antiquary, an artist, and a visiting Englishman. The Englishman wanted to see Old Boston exclusively and it is to the old bits of the colonial town that persist in the modern city that the book, made up of descriptive text by the antiquary and pictures by the artist, is devoted. Contents: The storied town of "crooked little streets"; Old State house, Dock square, Faneuil hall; Copp's hill and old North (Christ) church region; The Common and round about; Over Beacon hill; The water front; Old South, King's chapel, and neighborhood; Picturesque spots.

"All that this notable and handsome book needs to make it wholly satisfying is an index."

+ — Dial 57:506 D 16 '14 250w

+ Ind 80:383 D 7 '14 80w

"The book, if it occasionally lapses into guide-book preoccupation with thirty-three facts, displays an amazing amount of interesting antiquarian information, and the unassuming sketches are frequent enough to make visualization easily possible."

+ Nation 99:692 D 10 '14 50w

BACON, JOSEPHINE DODGE (DASKAM)
 11 (MRS. SELDEN BACON) (INGRAHAM
 LOVELL, pseud.). To-day's daughter. il
 *$1.35 Appleton 14-30721

"Dr. Stanchon, whose 'strange cases' have been set down in an earlier volume, again appears as the central male figure; but to Lucia, his daughter, belongs the place of honor under the spotlight. . . . Lutie Stanchon is thirty when we meet her. She is supposed to be keeping house for her father, but thinks the job beneath her—or rather finds it uninteresting, and sees no cause for sticking to it from a sense of duty. Prison reform is her hobby; she is ambitious and capable. At the opening of the scene she is about to desert her father and throw over her lover, in order to devote herself to a cause. She does neither, but her ensuing efforts as housekeeper, wife, and mother are feeble and ineffective, till finally the motive of 'the child' effects a conversion: 'Out of to-day's daughter the mother of to-morrow had been born.'"—Nation

A L A Bkl 11:30 S '14 *

"A wise, discerning book, with a pervading vein of not ungentle irony."

+ Bookm 40:683 F '15 170w

Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 450w

"To have done the thing more by the method of the novelist and less by that of the pamphleteer would have made her moral the more convincing for being the less insisted upon." Lucian Cary

— + Dial 57:256 O 1 '14 370w

"It cannot be said that Mrs. Bacon's art grows. Her best work is still to be found in those earlier short stories—'The madness of Philip' and the rest. 'Margarita's soul,' with its pseudonymous and hectic success, was a sad blow for those who had hoped for a steady ripening of product from this quarter. It is hardly too much to say that 'To-day's daughter' finally disposes of the possibility of any such hope." — Nation 99:434 O 8 '14 550w

"Mrs. Bacon apparently finds her heroine charming in spite of her faults; unluckily, she does not succeed in conveying the charm." H. W. Boynton

— Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 110w

"Despite its artistic defects the book is worthy of respectful attention, and will probably arouse a good deal of discussion."

+ — N Y Times 19:387 S 20 '14 750w

Outlook 108:604 N 11 '14 300w

BAEDEKER, KARL. Russia: handbook for 9 travelers. il *$5.40 Scribner 14-14633

"The first edition of this guidebook to be published in English includes also Teheran, Port Arthur, and Peking. The volume is prepared with the same care for accuracy which habitually marks the Baedeker handbooks. In the introduction of sixty-two pages, besides special information of a practical kind, are given excellent short sketches of the geographical and ethnological history, and of the political, economic, and social history of Russia, as well as chapters on government and administration and on the Russian church. The book is accompanied by forty maps and seventy-eight plans." —Nation

A L A Bkl 11:70 O '14

"A mine of information." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 22 '14 850w

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 100w

+ Nation 98:642 My 28 '14 120w

+ N Y Times 19:266 Je 14 '14 60w

"The book comes just at the right moment, neither too soon nor too late."

+ Sat R 117:679 My 23 '14 150w

"This guide-book for Russia is up to the standard long set by the firm of Baedeker—from the average tourist's point of view there could be no higher praise."

+ Spec 112:838 My 16 '14 80w

BAGLEY, WILLIAM CHANDLER. School dis-
 2 cipline. *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-21127

Positive and non-coercive rather than restrictive and repressive methods of treatment are emphasized in this work on school discipline. Several chapters however are devoted to the unruly school and its causes, and to the methods that may be used in bringing it back to a state of order. Other chapters take up: Coercion through rewards and penalties; Corporal punishment and the reaction against it; Contemporary school penalties; The troublesome types, and the book closes with a discussion of Discipline and the doctrine of interest.

"The young teacher who reads, studies and inwardly digests the wise, practical and elevating suggestions in Professor Bagley's volume will certainly enter upon a successful career."

+ Boston Transcript p24 F 10 '15 100w

BAILEY, HENRY CHRISTOPHER. Sea cap-
 4 tain. *$1.25 Doran 13-21264

A tale "wherein, an't so please you, you may read of Capt. Dick Rymington's adventures by land and sea, and likewise of his deep and faithful love for the sweet Lady Mary. Also of how he encountered many other fair and noble ladies, even that most beautiful 'Daughter of debate,' Mary, Queen of Scots, and was received in audience by the gracious Elizabeth—who owed him much—together with many other stirring events truthfully and diligently set down."—N Y Times

"Good fun."

+ A L A Bkl 10:285 Mr '14

Ath 1914.1:sup469 Mr 28 60w

Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 150w

+ N Y Times 18:632 N 16 '13 250w

Spec 112:654 Ap 18 '14 30w

BAILEY, HENRY TURNER. Art education.
 6 (Riverside educational monographs) il *60c
 (4c) Houghton 14-3413

The editor of the series, who writes an introduction to this volume, points out that while the formal study of art so many periods a week is important, "it is fruitless without the thought of realizing beauty in the child's immediate life." Mr. Bailey's purpose in the pages that follow is to show how beauty may and should be realized in the everyday school life of the child. He holds that the school estate, the schoolroom, school costume, school work, specific instruction, and the teacher herself are all factors in achieving this end.

"Good for any library."

+ A L A Bkl 10:300 Ap '14

Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 130w

BAILEY, LIBERTY HYDE. Standard cyclopedia
 7 of horticulture. 6v v 1-2 il ea *$6 Macmillan
 14-6168

v 1 The cyclopedia of horticulture, published fourteen years ago, and revised several times since, has now been almost entirely rewritten and expanded from four volumes to six. Volume one covers the letters A and B. "The first casual inspection reveals that many full-page pictures, including a number of colored plates, have been added, and the number of drawings has been doubled; all of which is a decided improvement over the old equipment. A synopsis of the plant kingdom (78 pages), a key to the families and genera (69 pages), a glossary giving the English meanings of Latin names, and the usual glossary of botanical terms are other additions." (Nation)

v 2 Volume 2 of this revised edition begins with Cabbage and ends with Experiment stations and Extension teaching in horticulture. One of the important contributions to the volume is that on Diseases and insects, to which about forty pages are devoted.

A L A Bkl 11:81 O '14 (Review of v 1 and 2)

"It will be an indispensable work of reference to everyone who is interested in the land and its products, whether commercially, professionally, as a student or as an amateur."

+ Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '14 100w (Review of v 1)

"This record of horticulture as it is omits nothing important and states each situation with full knowledge." J. M. Coulter

+ Dial 57:102 Ag 16 '14 1630w (Review of v 1)

"The completeness of this work under the most competent editorship makes its possession most desirable."

+ Ind 80:288 N 23 '14 170w (Review of v 1)

"With the standard here set and maintained throughout, the book will be one that should be in every public and reference library, and on the bookshelves of all who make horticulture their business in life."

+ Lit D 49:25 J1 4 '14 180w (Review of v 1)

"It is the Bible and the Britannica of the garden-folk, amateur and professional alike. And the remarkable thing is that, while it is fundamentally a work of reference, full of paralyzing Latin names and botanical descriptions, it also contains limitless quantities of good reading of the sort dear to the heart of the garden enthusiast."

+ Nation 98:460 Ap 23 '14 330w (Review of v 1)

"This work should find a place in every public library, and have a warm welcome to the shelves of every horticultural amateur."

+ Nation 99:330 S 10 '14 150w (Review of v 1)

+ Nature 94:279 N 12 '14 350w (Review of v 1)

N Y Times 19:550 D 6 '14 250w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"The illustrations are so good that, from the drawing teacher's point of view, they alone are sufficient to warrant the addition of the 'Standard encyclopedia of horticulture' to every school library."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:67 S '14 110w (Review of v 1)

BAIN, FRANCIS WILLIAM. Syrup of the bees. 2 il *$1.25 (5c) Putnam 14-17987

Like F. W. Bain's other fanciful tales of the East this one purports to be "translated from the original manuscript." It is the story of a king who vows that he will marry only the woman who had been his wife in a previous incarnation and the daughter of the Wid'yádhara people (fairies) who leads him by her magic to believe that she is this woman of his dreams. Then comes a revelation of her deceit, her own jealousy of her rival, the slaying of the king and herself; and all the time only the gods know that she herself had been that wife of a former existence and that her only rival had been herself.

"'A syrup of the bees' is to our mind by far the best of the series from the point of view both of invention and construction. The Preface contains the usual amount of fine writing, with sentences extending to 150 words, which waggle like a loose-jointed fly-rod, and destroy our pleasure in reading a really picturesque description of an approaching storm seen from the hills of Mysore."

+ Ath 1914:2423 O 24 250w

"Admirers of the exotic talent of Mr. F. W. Bain will welcome his latest fantasy as an anodyne for their present anxieties."

+ Spec 114:23 Ja 2 '15 80w

BAINBRIDGE, WILLIAM SEAMAN. Cancer problem. il *$4 (2c) Macmillan 14-18277

A book devoted to one of the unsolved problems in medical science. The author speaks of it as "the one major problem of medicine still defying any real approach to solution, as regards prevention, reliable early diagnosis, or guaranty of permanent cure." His purpose in this work has been "to give a clear, concise, comprehensive, and available résumé of the world's work with reference to cancer, its history, distribution, etiology, diagnosis, possibility of prevention, and treatment, together with various minor matters." He has touched upon every phase of the cancer problem, attempting to maintain all the while an attitude of "suspended judgment pending proof." One chapter of immense value presents an investigation into "cancer cures." Another takes up The campaign of education, and considers how far public education is possible in a subject on which so little is known. The author has prepared a bibliography, taking up over fifty pages, and the book is well indexed.

"From first to last this book is likely to be consulted only by those general readers who have some special reasons for inquiring into the conditions pertaining to cancer. An examination somewhat in detail makes all wonder if it is wise to present the gropings and uncertainties of 'medicine' in such a frank and hopeless manner. But the book is likely to be of most value to the medical practitioner who is not in direct touch with the chief sources of medical news and who does not have easy access to large medical libraries fully supplied with current technical periodicals and reports. The medical student will find here is a summary and guide, and indeed an inspiration for study in a field which will early and continuously thrust itself upon him in whatever branch of medicine he may specialize." F. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '14 450w

"A thorough and valuable work written for the public."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 750w

BAKER, ARTHUR E., ed. Concordance to the 12 poetical and dramatic works of Alfred, lord Tennyson. *$6.50 Macmillan 14-20124

"Mr. Baker has done his work with admirable completeness, and we can well believe that it was a labour of love. He prints the whole line in which a word occurs, adding thus materially to the value of his work for reference, and supplies the first two or three words of a poem which has a vague title such as 'Song.'" (Ath) "It covers the suppressed early poems and those included in the Life of Tennyson, as well as both the poetical and dramatic works, and contains one hundred and fifty thousand quotations and references." (Spec)

"With exceptional materials for testing his work, we have scrutinized it thoroughly, and in no case have we found it wanting. Every library of any standing should at once secure the volume."

+ Ath 1914:2280 S 19 950w

"Will be of great value to the librarian, the student of English literature, and the public speaker."

+ Dial 58:59 Ja 16 '15 150w

"So far as we have examined this work, it is trustworthy and well arranged."

+ Sat R 118:89 J1 18 '14 200w

"Mr. Baker has done his work very efficiently."

+ Spec 113:174 Ag 1 '14 60w

BAKER, EMILIE KIP. Stories from northern myths. il *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-16569

The Norse myths are here told in simplified form for young readers. Among them are the familiar stories of Si's golden hair; Thor's hammer; Iduna's apples; The wooing of Gerd; Balder; the Siegfried cycle; and the Twilight of the gods.

"The book is well written and clear and, though the make-up is not very attractive and some of the illustrations rather poor, the whole is very acceptable."

+ A L A Bkl 11:178 D '14

"Miss Baker has made a wise selection from a vast amount of material."

+ Ath 1914:2504 N 14 90w

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:446 D '14 20w

"A well-written book for older children."

+ Spec 113:sup780 D 5 '14 130w

BAKER, ERNEST ALBERT. Guide to historical fiction. *$6 Macmillan 14-5413

This work "is the outgrowth and development during the past ten years of a list of historical fiction first appended to 'A guide to best fiction,'

BAKER, ERNEST ALBERT—Continued.

and it now appears as a companion volume to the latest edition of that work. In its square octavo pages are listed and described by countries and epochs all important novels and romances that are based upon historical fact, and any desired work of fiction may instantly be found by references to an index of authors, titles, historical names, etc., that fills about one hundred and fifty three-columned pages." —Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 10:421 Je '14

"The genius in bibliographical compilation already shown by Ernest A. Baker is emphasized by the size and form now taken by 'A guide to historical fiction.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 Mr 21 '14 850w

Dial 56:511 Je 16 '14 90w

"The mass of information presented inclines one to be lenient with deficiencies."

+ — Nation 99:168 Ag 6 '14 300w

"Besides the service that this work renders to those interested in prosecuting their studies in historical fiction, there are some valuable statistics that will attract the attention of those who are curious on this subject."

+ N Y Times 19:210 Ap 26 '14 350w

"A reference book on an admirable plan and scale."

+ Outlook 106:867 Ap 18 '14 80w

+ R of Rs 49:630 My '14 50w

Spec 112:sup680 Ap 25 '14 150w

BAKER, IRA OSBORN. Treatise on roads and pavements. 2d ed, enl il $5 Wiley 13-18687

A new edition of a work issued something over ten years ago. "The addition of a new chapter (42 pp.) entitled 'Automobile roads and concrete pavements' is the only apparent change in the present edition. This chapter summarizes new and changed practices which have followed and to a large extent been caused by the advent of the automobile and, as regards concrete, largely by the 'development of the portland-cement industry.' The main divisions of the chapter deal with dust suppression, protective coverings for water-bound macadam, bituminous macadam, and concrete roads." (Engin N)

A L A Bkl 10:332 Ap '14

"Although the new chapter serves as a revision of the original merely in bringing a few topics up to date and adding a few others not included in the original edition, it materially increases the value of the book and should lead many who do not have the original edition to add the new one to their libraries."

+ Engin N 70:1271 D 18 '13 200w

"The [new] chapter is written in the same clear, concise, analytical method which the author has so happily used hitherto in all of his text work. It is not well to close this review without a friendly criticism of the author in that he has allowed this opportunity to pass without revising his chapters upon concrete foundations, particularly regarding machine mixing and wet or dry concrete, and upon the brick-rattler test, with perhaps some revision and somewhat fuller discussion on asphalt and bitumens."

+ — Engin Rec 69:175 F 7 '14 450w

BALDENSBERGER, PHILIP J. Immovable East. il *$2 Small 13-9799

"A book about the Orient written from within. . . . Herr Baldensberger was born, of German and Christian parents, on Mount Zion, lived as a boy entirely among Bedawin and Fellahin, and from 1880 to 1892 devoted himself to pastoral apiculture in Palestine." (Sat R) He deals particularly with the mode of life of the people, which has changed little, he says, in the course of four thousand years. The book is illustrated and provided with a biographical introduction by Frederic Lees, the editor.

"Interesting to both traveler and student."

+ A L A Bkl 11:70 O '14

"It is a pity that the author did not consult some competent Orientalist before committing himself to a system of transliteration which is calculated to exasperate the learned. To those who know already something of the people and the life described there is no book we should recommend more strongly, to enlarge their knowledge."

+ — Ath 1913,1:242 Mr 1 950w

"There are many almost unknown sides of Palestinian life which Herr Baldensberger depicts in these sixteen vivid stories and sketches."

+ Sat R 115:364 Mr 22 '13 380w

BALDWIN, EDWARD CHAUNCEY. Our modern debt to Israel. *$1.25 (2½c) Sherman, French & co. 14-22

"The crowning glory of the nineteenth century was the rediscovery of the Old Testament." This is the statement that greets the reader in the first paragraph of this book, and as he reads on thru the first chapter on The literature of Israel he will find the contention ably defended. The chapters that follow take up: The prophets; The influence of the prophets upon modern thought; The priests; The debt of Israel and the world to Hebrew law; The sages; Our modern debt to the sages; The message of Israel to the modern world. In this final chapter he comes to his conclusion: "To Israel the debt of our modern world is simply beyond compute. . . . Our ideals of personal character are very largely those of the sages; our visions of the kingdom of God on earth are those of the prophets; our hopes of social justice are those of the prophets and the priests."

"An ingenious work which will repay careful study."

+ A L A Bkl 10:344 My '14

"The book is original in design, with its masterly study of the prophets, priests and sages; their work and their writings. It will be valuable and suggestive both to the church-worker and to the general reader."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 10 '14 180w

"This book is most timely and will be found valuable to all those who are real students of the Old Testament and who wish to profit by modern study of the Bible by the historic and literary methods and to get away from the bane of textual study." C: E. Rhodes

+ Chaut 72:589 Mr 28 '14 330w

BALDWIN, ELBERT FRANCIS. World war; how it looks to the nations involved and what it means to us. il *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-21771

The majority of books on the war have looked at the matter from the point of view of one or the other of the countries involved. Mr Baldwin, who was in Munich when Austria declared war on Serbia, and who between that date and the twentieth of October passed thru Germany, France, Belgium, Holland and England, tries to sum up in one volume the attitudes of these different nations, as expressed not only by official documents and the press, but by the people themselves. There is a chapter devoted to the position of America, and one which speculates on the probable effects of the war. A chronology, The war in brief, and appendix giving President Wilson's despatch to the German emperor, and an index complete the volume.

"Mr. Baldwin's idea is to give the viewpoints of the countries involved justly and temperately. In a measure he succeeds in this, but not being a German he fails totally to appreciate that country's point of view." F. W. F.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 Ja 6 '15 800w

"A war-book that is 'different.'"

+ Ind 81:57 Ja 11 '15 730w

"His book gives an impression of fairness and detachment. It is wholesome reading for any one who is inclined to regard any of the belligerents as diabolically inspired."

+ Nation 100:175 F 11 '15 130w

N Y Times 19:572 D 13 '14 110w

N Y Times 20:18 Ja 17 '15 40w

"An excellent though not perfect book. Leave cannot be taken of this book without again commending its clarity and admirable spirit."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 980w

BALDWIN, JAMES FOSDICK. King's council in England during the middle ages. il *$5.75 Oxford 14-5110

"The author has given us a complete study of the history and operations of the King's council from its first appearance to the reign of Henry VIII; he has worked over all the material collected and arranged by earlier students, has even added to it by his own researches, and has indicated new sources from which further information may be obtained."—Ath

"A rare union is here of critical insight, self-control, and patient industry, and it calls for very high praise." A. B. White.

+ Am Hist R 19:867 Jl '14 1050w

"The book is one of the most important constitutional studies of recent years, suggestive and well informed, and though it is not to be expected that its conclusions will be accepted in their entirety, it is one that will take a permanent place in historical libraries. All reservations made, the author has mapped out a new and untilled field in masterly and complete outline. We note the addition of an excellent index and some good facsimiles."

+ Ath 1914.1:443 Mr 28 1250w

"Mr. Baldwin's book is clearly written and accurate in detail. A few cases of slips, mainly trivial, are necessarily to be found in so long a book." T. F. Tout

+ — Eng Hist R 30:117 Ja '15 3700w

"A distinct contribution to the history of the English constitution in its formative period. Professor Baldwin has corrected many misleading statements made by Stubbs and other writers and has elucidated many obscure points. The work supersedes the earlier treatises by Hale, Palgrave and Dicey."

+ Nation 98:400 Ap 9 '14 1750w

"An important book upon a very obscure and difficult aspect of constitutional history."

+ Spec 113:465 O 3 '14 770w

BALDWIN, JAMES MARK. History of psychology. 2v il ea *75c Putnam 13-25062

The two volumes of this work appear as numbers in the "History of the sciences" series. Volume one presents, in brief outline, the history of psychology from the earliest times to John Locke; volume two, from John Locke to the present time.

A L A Bkl 10:176 Ja '14

"This work should be welcome to students of psychology and of the history of education."

+ Ath 1913.2:313 S 27 40w

"Though these volumes might serve the nefarious purposes of crammer and crammed, we venture to say that no person could be more cultivated or nearer to the truth of things through their perusal. They may be well done within the narrow limits of excellence proper to their kind; but they pander to a popular idleness which should rather be sternly disciplined."

— + Ath 1913.2:342 O 4 630w

"It is a good outline of the subject for a beginner."

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 22 '13 120w

"The entire work is of a character which should make it very serviceable to all students of the development of thought, and it is well worthy a place in the 'Argiletum' of the classical philologist." H. P. Houghton

+ Class J 9:230 F '14 700w

"It is weakened by the selection of points of emphasis according to the special interests of the writer, and by an irrelevant insistence upon the novelty of the positions taken."

+ — Dial 56:113 F 1 '14 420w

"Although a history of psychology in the English language would fill a long-felt want, it is not the historical but the interpretative slant which makes Prof. Baldwin's work of greatest value."

+ N Y Times 19:78 F 15 '14 350w

"In these 'general points of view' in the scientific psychology of the nineteenth century Baldwin has furnished what might be called a first reader for students of psychology. In taking up 'special lines of work' the author, except for his favorite social psychology, is cramped for space." Woodbridge Riley

+ — Psychol Bull 11:342 S 15 '14 3000w

BALL, EUSTACE HALE. Art of the photoplay. 3 *$1 Dillingham 14-30794

"To those who wish to earn some of the money which the moving picture folk disburse for the 10,000 or more scenarios they annually use, Eustace Hale Ball proffers expert and valuable advice in his little book. He shows what sort of plays are wanted by the film producers and tells how they should be prepared."—N Y Times

"A compact, suggestive little book."

+ A L A Bkl 11:67 O '14

"A most surprising fund of information has been condensed into this little book, from the scenario embryo to pictures on the screen."

+ Ind 77:317 Mr 2 '14 80w

+ N Y Times 19:25 Ja 18 '14 60w

BALLANTYNE, DR. J. W. Expectant motherhood; its supervision and hygiene. *$1.50 (2c) Funk

"This book," says the author, "has to do with the health value of the nine months which precede birth, and with the commandments in hygiene which the parents, but especially the mother, must obey if their child is to come strong and well into the world. It has to do with the investigation of all the things which may go wrong with the unborn infant, and with the inquiry into possible prevention and cure." (Introduction) The treatment is at once both popular and scientific. The book is written for the expectant mother herself, not for the nurse or practitioner, but it gives a fuller account of obstetrical science than do most of the books meant to serve as guides during pregnancy.

"A sane and plainspoken book."

+ Hibbert J 12:915 Jl '14 60w

"Admirable treatise."

+ Spec 113:209 Ag 8 '14 20w

BALLOU, FRANK WASHINGTON. High school organization. (School efficiency ser.) tables $1.50 (3c) World bk. co. 14-13889

This volume, made up of studies of certain problems of organization and administration presented by the high schools of New York city, is published as a volume of the series which is presenting the findings of the Committee on school inquiry of the Board of estimate and apportionment. The contents comprises five monographs on: The size of sections (classes) in the high schools; The work of chairmen of departments; The work of other teachers; Administrative control of the high schools; Estimating the number of teachers needed. The volume closes with a summary of findings and recommendations by topics.

"The book will be of large practical value to all those who are connected in any way with the work of high schools."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 23 '15 200w

N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 100w

BANGS, JOHN KENDRICK. Foothills of Parnassus. *$1.25 Macmillan 14-2548

"There is abundance of typical John-Kendrick-Bangs humor in this book, also much that is serious. He defines the spirit of his poetry in a selection called 'Between fact and fancy.' He writes: 'I wonder where, deep-hid from mortal eyes, the fine-spun line 'twixt fact and fancy lies.' 'Profit and loss,' a poem that estimates the values of life and ends with just 'gratitude

BANGS, JOHN KENDRICK—Continued.
for having lived at all," will delight lovers of thoughtful verse."—R of Rs

A L A Bkl 11:18 S '14

"There is a high and fine quality of manliness about many of these serious poems, and they give the right foil to the merely gay and jolly trifles which have given the author his reputation as a humorist."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 200w

"Mr. Bangs writes humorous verse that is graceful and effective. There are also some serious poems of real beauty."

+ Lit D 48:708 Mr 28 '14 100w

"Mr. Bangs not only makes us smile, but, what is more important, he makes us want to smile. Even an indifferent joke in his verses takes on an air of pleasant grotesquerie that is most winning, and his jokes for the most part are not indifferent."

+ No Am 199:790 My '14 310w

"He is gay and happy in many lines, and there is a genial good-heartedness in his verse which relieves the lightness of tone of any suspicion of frivolity, though his wit sometimes lacks deftness."

+ Outlook 107:626 Jl 11 '14 160w

+ R of Rs 49:500 Ap '14 80w

BANKS, EDGAR JAMES. Armenian princess: a tale of Anatolian peasant life. *$1.25 (3c)
Badger, R: G. 14-10427

The author, who is an archaeologist of note, has spent much time in Asia Minor and knows well the country of which he writes. He gives a picture of boy and girl friendship in an Armenian village before Turkish oppression and persecution put an end to happiness, and follows it with a series of descriptions of atrocities that would be unbelievable did not known facts bear out his statements. But his Takvor and Armenouhi are true lovers who dare and endure, and after long separation and the braving of many perils, they triumph over their persecutors.

"There is nothing incredible in the scenes of massacre and imprisonment in which the hero figures, though the reader would like to believe them so; nor is their reaction upon character melodramatic. It is an apparently truthful picture of a repellent region, perhaps too strongly tinged with a moral purpose."

+ Nation 99:194 Ag 13 '14 180w

"A narrative that, while written simply, draws graphic and effective pictures of the people and their ways of living."

+ N Y Times 19:346 Ag 16 '14 170w

BANKS, HELEN WARD. Boy's Motley. il *$2 (3c) Stokes 14-14625

Using Motley's book as a basis, the author has told the story of the rise of the Dutch republic in her own words. Each chapter of the book tells a separate story and is prefaced by a "cast of characters" after the manner of a play. Twelve color plates by A. D. McCormick illustrate the stories.

Ind 80:413 D 14 '14 60w

"The simplifying the manner of narration, Miss Banks has given all the necessary historical detail which is connected with the patriotism of the Dutch on land and on sea."

+ Lit D 49:1127 D 5 '14 100w

BARBE, WAITMAN. Great poems interpreted; with biographical notes of the authors represented. $1.25 Hinds 14-5201

This book follows an earlier published volume, "Great poems explained," and is like it in plan, dealing, however, with poems somewhat more difficult to understand. Some of them are: Lycidas; Alexander's feast; Lines composed a few miles above Tintern abbey; The problem; The cloud; Ode on a Grecian urn; Ulysses; Andreade del Sarto; The blessed damozel, and a group of sonnets.

Ind 78:256 My 11 '14 16w

"All the poems chosen are worth study and the information provided is usually to the point."
+ Nation 99:322 S 10 '14 50w

BARBEE, LINDSEY. In the college days. *$1 (5½c) Denison 14-6007

A group of short monologs, suitable for public presentation. The author says of them that "they attempt to portray the different phases of the campus life; to depict the different individuals that compose the campus citizenship; to give to the uninitiated a glimpse of the glad, free life within the college walls." With a few exceptions the speakers are college girls.

"Cleverly done."

+ Ind 78:256 My 11 '14 20w

BARBOUR, SIR DAVID MILLER. Influence of the gold supply on prices and profits. *$1.25
Macmillan 14-5837

"Merely a restatement of the usual arguments for the quantity theory with little originality of treatment. Throughout the author shows himself a firm believer in the Ricardian explanation of the movement of the precious metals—so much so that one wonders how he would explain the heavy importations of gold into France and Germany in the last few years since price differences are at least not obvious as an explanation. Belief in natural law is repeatedly emphasized as in the assertion (p. 8) that 'prices are determined by human beings who are able to make mistakes. But there are influences at work which tend to correct such mistakes and prices always tend to be regulated by economic considerations.'"—Ann Am Acad

"Little that is original has been introduced into the treatment and the book cannot be viewed as a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject." E. M. Patterson

+ Am Econ R 4:669 S '14 650w

"As a brief summary of the arguments for the quantity theory the volume is interesting but it adds little to our knowledge of the subject either in its statement of fact or in its method of treatment."

+ Ann Am Acad 54:321 Jl '14 250w

Ath 1914.1:sup182 Ja 31 350w

"Sir David Barbour's long experience in connection with the finances of India gives great weight to his conclusions on questions of currency and of the standard of value, in which he holds a position of authority."

+ Nature 93:294 My 21 '14 220w

Pol Sci Q 29:565 S '14 40w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY. Benton's venture.
il *$1.30 Appleton 14-4305

A lively story for boys which tells of the experiences of two enterprising lads who, with a second hand automobile, get into the transportation game of a town and rival the established hackman. Trouble results which threatens the position of young Benton's father unless he uses his influence to put the boys out of business. At this juncture the son of the disgruntled liveryman is hurt in a football game in a nearby town and the boys rush the father to the scene. His arrival is the means of saving the son's life, and the fate of the offending "Transportation company" is settled.

A L A Bkl 10:416 Je '14

"The story is full of excitement and the boys are an interesting and an enterprising crowd."
+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 260w

BARBOUR, RALPH HENRY. Left end Edwards.
il *$1.25 (1½c) Dodd 14-18423

Brimfield academy, a boys' school in the neighborhood of New York city is the scene of this story in which football is the main, almost the only, interest. Steve Edwards and Tom Hall, two friends from a small Pennsylvania town, enter the school together and work up from the "awkward squad" to places on the school team.

"Cut after the usual pattern, but Mr. Barbour maintains his spontaneous spirit."
+ Ind 80:418 D 14 '14 50w

"Boy foibles are well depicted, and friendships and misunderstandings dealt with understandingly."

+ Lit D 49:1133 D 5 '14 80w

Reviewed by H. L. Reed

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 150w

BARCLAY, EDITH NOËL (DANIELL) (MRS. HUBERT BARCLAY). East of the shadows. *$1.25 (2c) Doran 13-12870

An absorbing love story with an unusual plot. For twenty-two years Francis Heathcote has lived in a kind of waking sleep, as the result of an accident which deprived him of present consciousness but left him with vivid memories of the past. Then the sight of Philippa Harford, who resembles closely the Philippa Harford whom he loved in his youth, awakens him. But the awakening is only partial, for he does not realize the long lapse of years and believes that this young Philippa is the other Philippa who has been long since dead. Philippa herself, first out of pity for the man, later because she loves him is willing to play the part. Then, as is inevitable, there comes the shock of a full awakening, and Mrs. Barclay is sufficiently logical to realize that the expected, conventional ending is not possible.

"An innocuous tale of a lost memory which occasions many complications. It is written not without skill, but with a superabundance of sentiment."

+ Ath 1913,1:187 F 15 23w

Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 150w

"A story that is throughout of absorbing interest."

+ N Y Times 19:132 Mr 22 '14 600w

BARCLAY, FLORENCE LOUISA (CHARLES-WORTH). Wall of partition. il *$1.35 (1½c) Putnam 14-15178

A misunderstanding has separated hero and heroine ten years before the story opens; Madge has married and Rodney has become a world-wanderer and famous author. The story opens with his return to England. Believing that Madge is in India, he takes up quarters with her brother Billy. She, however, is in England, living in the next apartment, with but a wall between them. A series of intimate telephone conversations, in which he does not recognize her, is the link that holds them together, until the truth is revealed to him together with the fact that she is now a widow. A novel, published anonymously in which he has retold their own romance, furnishes a subject of much conversation as the story advances.

"The author has depended too much on the technical devices she adopts: her plot outlines itself too swiftly, and the devices stand out, stripped and thin, at the outset."

+ Ath 1914,2:283 S 19 300w

"If Mrs. Barclay could have maintained her story on the level of the first two hundred pages she would have accomplished something far more worth while." P. G. Hubert, Jr.

+ Bookm 40:561 Ja '15 530w

"An entertaining story with a very evident ethical import. 'The wall of partition,' is a success in what Mrs. Barclay set out to achieve. It would not be fair to attempt to judge it by some other perhaps equally arbitrary standard of our own."

+ Boston Transcript p22 O 14 '14 1150w

"It is some time after the story is really over before Rodney and Madge are finally permitted to hang up their receivers."

+ Nation 99:660 D 3 '14 570w

"[Has] an abundance of padding."

+ N Y Times 19:448 O 13 '14 270w

"Whenever I think of 'The wall of partition' I shall hear the 'kind voice' and thank Mrs.

Barclay for letting me meet so lovable and true a woman as Madge." F. M. Holly

+ Pub W 86:1283 O 17 '14 530w

Spec 113:334 S 5 '14 800w

BARCLAY, SIR THOMAS. Thirty years: Anglo-French reminiscences (1876-1906). il *$3.50 Houghton 14-15028

"'Thirty years,' is made up chiefly, as its subtitle indicates, of 'Anglo-French reminiscences,' covering the years 1876-1906. It was in 1876 that Sir Thomas, not yet knighted and hardly more than a boy, entered the service of the London 'Times' and was sent to Paris. . . . Sir Thomas's connection with 'The Times' was severed in 1882, when he resigned his place in order to devote himself to French law practice; and since 1900 he has taken a most active part in the agitation for amicable relations with France." (Dial) "The final diplomatic steps he details with first-hand knowledge; though his book was completed before he could know that the 'entente,' which he thought of as a great instrument of peace, would prove to be part of the material of a terrible European conflagration." (Nation)

+ A L A Bkl 11:52 O '14

"The book is, unfortunately, sometimes stale. It must have been written a long time back, and has not been well revised."

+ Ath 1914,2:112 JI 25 820w

"A thoroughly interesting book, and a timely one." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 57:100 Ag 16 '14 1800w

+ Ind 80:63 O 12 '14 700w

+ Lit D 49:637 O 3 '14 500w

+ Nation 99:285 S 3 '14 300w

"It is thus an author who knows his subject in utmost detail who discusses the entente, now so signal a factor in Europe's fate. And this discussion by Sir Thomas is a sprightly one, lively with anecdote, filled with word pictures of men who played the master rôles in England and France a few years ago and who were known by the author."

+ N Y Times 19:337 Ag 9 '14 1850w

"Written in a friendly and human spirit and containing flashes of unusual observation and philosophy, the book is not entirely even in interest." Algernon Tassin

+ Pub W 86:542 Ag 22 '14 1000w

Spec 113:62 JI 11 '14 120w

"Capital book."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 1200w

BARING, MAURICE. Lost diaries. *$1.25 (3c) Houghton A14-1081

Mr. Baring, who has a lucky way of finding interesting records of the past that have been overlooked by other historians, has made a new find, this time a collection of forgotten and mislaid diaries. Among the diarists are King Cophetua; Mrs. John Milton; George Washington; Ivan the Terrible; the Emperor Tiberius; Hamlet, while a student at Balliol college; Iseult of Brittany; and Mrs. James Lee's husband.

"They are all cleverly written, if somewhat unequal in merit. The humour, for instance, of the extract from the diary of Oedipus Rex strikes us as rather forced."

+ Ath 1913,2:623 N 29 60w

+ Dial 56:430 My 16 '14 280w

"There is an amazing amount of diversion in Mr. Baring's audacities."

+ Sat R 116:749 D 13 '13 730w

"Enough has been said to give our readers some notion of the varied entertainment to be found within the compass of little more than two hundred pages. The occasional blunders and inaccuracies are, we suppose, inevitable in a writer whose literary sense is far keener than his scholarship."

+ Spec 111:125 D 27 '13 1500w

BARING, MAURICE. Round the world in any number of days. il *$1.25 (4c) Houghton 14-18890

Mr. Baring traveled around the world eastward, going by way of Gibraltar, the Red sea and the Indian ocean to Australia and New Zealand, then across the Pacific to San Francisco and from San Francisco to New York. He says something in the course of his narrative about books on Gardening which devote themselves to discussions of modern art, criticisms of Shakespeare that run into discourses on woman suffrage, etc. His book of travel is much that kind of a book, for he wanders off on to many subjects that have little relation to the countries visited. His comments on America are genial and kind.

"An entertaining book for a dull or blue hour."
+ A L A Bkl 11:215 Ja '15

"Parody, poetry, pungency, persiflage, and sundry other constituent elements, not all beginning with 'p,' go to the making of [this] humorously entertaining book."

+ Dial 57:506 D 16 '14 189w

N Y Times 19:508 N 15 '14 120w

+ R of Rs 50:759 D '14 40w

"It is well worth spending as many minutes on the trip as Baring spent days, and getting his wit and wisdom without the rough weather of the southern Pacific."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 730w

BARKER, ARTHUR H. Theory and practice of heating and ventilation. il *$8 Van Nostrand

"In this book the author has admirably succeeded in combining a discussion of the fundamental theory of the principles of heating and ventilation with common sense modifications thereof. . . . A sound knowledge of elementary mathematics only is required for an understanding of the calculations and formulas used. The student and engineer will find much that is new in the discussion of principles and practice, together with many new formulas and charts of real value. . . . Especial attention is given to such subjects as the flow of fluids, conduction of heat and the theory of fans, and new charts are given to the application of the author's principles of low-pressure circulation of water. A simplification of Rietschel's theories of determining pipe sizes is undertaken, this being based upon extensive original experimentation."—Engin N

"Altogether the book is interesting and instructive, complete in many respects, but deficient in others, and not a specially notable contribution to the science of heating and ventilation." D. D. Kimball

+ Engin N 70:1265 D 18 '13 1050w

"This bulky volume on heating and ventilation should possess some interest to others than those connected with the heating and ventilating trades, but it is so loaded down with empirical formulæ that it requires a nice discrimination on the part of the reader to separate the chaff from the wheat."

+ Nature 89:629 Ag 22 '12 130w

BARKER, DALGAIRNS ARUNDEL. Theory of money. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c Putnam 13-15785

"Mr. Barker's book is confessedly in large part a digest of recent American literature on the subject, and he unhesitatingly admits that such American writers as Laughlin, Kemmerer, and Irving Fisher have carried the theory of money definitely beyond the point reached by Professor Jevons. A few pages are given to the subject of bimetalism, which is declared, however, to be of no great practical value."—Nation

"Serviceable in that it popularizes the recent contributions of Fisher in the treatment of the equation of exchange, and of Kemmerer on the quantity theory of money."

+ Am Econ R 4:410 Je '14 50w

"A clear, brief, elementary text."

+ A L A Bkl 10:176 Ja '14

"In many particulars, this small volume follows the traditional treatment and may be viewed as a good summary of current theory—as perhaps its author intended."

+ Ann Am Acad 51:265 Ja '14 250w

"The book is simple, non-technical, and systematic and may well be recommended to beginners."

+ J Pol Econ 22:604 Je '14 100w

Nation 97:516 N 27 '13 90w

N Y Times 19:185 Ap 12 '14 100w

BARKER, ELSA. Letters from a living dead man. *$1.25 (2c) Kennerley 14-8217

Elsa Barker in an introduction vouches for the truth of the occurrence described and for the letters that followed it. One night in Paris she felt impelled to take up a pencil and write. The words written with her hand, but without volitional control, constituted a message from a man, recently dead, who signed himself X. After that X came often, and the letters, describing his life after human death, make up the contents of this book.

"The book is interesting, the reader must admit, whatever his predilection for receiving it as a direct communication from a man who has passed beyond the bounds of our present life." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 16 '14 900w

R of Rs 50:250 Ag '14 280w

BARNARD, CHARLES INMAN. Paris war days: diary of an American. il *$2 (5c) Little 14-20660

Mr. Barnard was acting as Paris correspondent of the New York Tribune when the war broke out. His book is made up of notes "jotted down at odd moments in a diary" and published "with the idea of recording, day by day, the aspect, temper, mood and humor of Paris" at that trying time. The diary begins with an entry for August 1, 1914 and is continued to September 16, covering forty-five days of the war. The book is illustrated with interesting photographs.

Ind 80:474 D 21 '14 300w

+ Nation 99:749 D 24 '14 230w

N Y Times 19:511 N 22 '14 270w

"His book is well worth reading for its vivid succession of pictures."

+ Outlook 108:1021 D 30 '14 450w

"It is fortunate that the incidents of those midsummer days have been recorded and preserved by so faithful and keen an observer as Mr. Barnard."

+ R of Rs 50:761 D '14 160w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 330w

BARNARD, HOWARD CLIVE. Little schools of Port-Royal. *$2.50 Putnam E13-1972

"Mr. Barnard points out that the Port-Royalists are in some respects the most interesting of all the French school-reformers of the seventeenth century. This is due partly to their educational doctrines, which were in many respects far in advance of those of any of their contemporaries, and partly to their intense earnestness, their complete disinterestedness, their courage in the face of persecution, their pathetic but not inglorious fate. . . . Port-Royal education was a distinctly moral education based upon affection for the pupils. It realized that the master should study the individual psychology of his pupils and adapt his methods accordingly. Another point in the system was to make learning easy and pleasant."—Sat R

"The book is written with the thoroughness required by the specialist and expert, and with an eminent readability which should commend it to the general public."

+ Ath 1913,2:305 S 27 1600w

"Mr. Barnard has written a very satisfactory study of the 'Petites ecoles.' The narrative, though at times dealing with minor matters of school administration and the details of the curriculum, is useful to the student of the general question of Jansenism."

+ Nation 99:309 S 10 '14 450w

"Admirable and instructive book."

+ Sat R 116:465 O 11 '13 400w

+ Spec 112:135 Ja 24 '14 180w

BARNES, PARKER THAYER. Suburban garden guide. (Countryside manuals) *50c Macmillan 13-22682

A very practical little work. The first chapter is devoted to the best vegetables for the home garden, with brief descriptions of some fifty vegetables. The second chapter gives a like treatment of flowers. Chapters on How and when to spray, and Fertilizing the small garden follow, with tables of planting, etc. in an appendix.

"Gives concise, accurate, practical information specially valuable to the amateur."

+ A L A Bkl 10:260 Mr '14

N Y Times 19:78 F 15 '14 50w

"Practical little manual."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:87 Ap '14 30w

BARNETT, LIONEL DAVID. Antiquities of India. il *$4 (4c) Putnam (Eng ed 14-1010)

The author's purpose is to present within a moderate compass a general account of the history and culture of ancient India. He begins with a survey of the historical conditions from the earliest times down to the beginning of the thirteenth century, and then takes up the discussion of: Law and government; Vedic ritual; Non-Vedic rituals, Yōga, and magic; Astronomy; geography, and cosmography; Weights and measures; Medicine; Writing; Architecture; Sculpture and painting. The book is provided with a colored frontispiece, a folding map, and a number of full-page plates.

+ Ath 1913,2:723 D 20 470w

Boston Transcript p8 Ap 18 '14 500w

"The scholar will be thankful for so handy a vade mecum, while the student of things Oriental, if not a Sanskritist, will find this excellent handbook to be a thoroughly trustworthy as well as readable manual."

+ Nation 99:440 O 8 '14 520w

"This is a vast subject, and one feels that the material has been overcompressed. The result is a storehouse of facts rather than a living piece of literature."

+ Outlook 106:867 Ap 18 '14 60w

BARR, MRS. AMELIA EDITH (HUDDLESTON).

"Playing with fire. il *$1.35 (1½c) Appleton 14-7280

Mrs. Barr takes the Scotland of her girlhood as the scene of this story in which she tells how Ian Macrae, Calvinist minister, loses his belief in God and finds it again. He is a hard, bitter and just man, who exacts of his children an obedience which promises to destroy their happiness. Against the advice of his shrewd and wise sister-in-law he begins to read skeptical philosophers, in order that he may better refute their arguments. He finds as the reading progresses that the foundations of his own faith are weakening, and in the end conscience forces him to leave his church. Then thru certain human experiences and contact with other sides of life he comes into a new faith—faith in a God of love.

+ Ath 1914,2:561 N 28 100w

"It is a timely tale in these days of new freedom of various kinds and is especially strong in the human touch that brings its people so close to readers, and the peaceful happy ending in which the good preacher finds his God, his son and his daughter and himself."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '14 260w

"There is no 'fine writing' anywhere in the book, but the simplicity and directness of Mrs. Barr's method is a real refreshment."

+ N Y Times 19:226 My 10 '14 730w

"In 'Playing with fire,' Amelia Barr ripples through her story with the same gentle ease which has marked her work throughout the years of her popularity." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 85:1345 Ap 18 '14 280w

"It is a story that will find much favor with a certain ultra conservative audience which will find in it an antidote to Mr. Churchill's recent story of clerical uncertainties of mind, 'The inside of the cup.'"

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 16 '14 320w

BARRETT, ALFRED WILSON. Silver king. il. *$1.25 (2c) Dillingham 12-40106

The play from which this novel was made was one of Henry Arthur Jones's first attempts at play writing. It was written in collaboration with Henry Herman and staged in London in 1882. It had a long life and is still subject to occasional revivals. "In making over 'The silver king' into a novel, Alfred Wilson Barrett, who we presume is a son of the actor whose name he bears has retained all its most effective scenes and with them all its effective melodrama. The greater part of the dialogue and all the sensational scenes remain, Mr. Barrett's chief task being to link them with descriptive and narrative passages." (Boston Transcript)

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 15 '14 900w

"Much of the work he has done very creditably, but it is a question if he has bettered its quality as a novel by keeping it in harmony with the conventional lines upon which the play was written."

+ N Y Times 19:370 S 6 '14 220w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 280w

BARRETT, REV. MICHAEL. Rambles in Catholic lands. il *$2 (4c) Benziger 14-19976

The journey described by the author led thru Germany, Switzerland, Austria and the Tyrol into Italy. Churches, monasteries and shrines were objects of first interest to him and it is of these he writes. Many of his pilgrimages took him off the beaten line of travel and his book, with its fine illustrations, may offer suggestions to travelers as to new places worth visiting. His account ends with Florence. Rome, as worthy perhaps of a book devoted wholly to itself, is omitted.

"A bit of humor creeps in here and there, helping to keep the book from being too serious reading. It contains many excellent illustrations."

+ Boston Transcript p24 D 2 '14 100w

+ Cath World 100:540 Ja '15 140w

"Those to whom cathedrals, churches, abbeys, and monasteries are the most interesting features of the European landscape will thoroughly enjoy 'Rambles in Catholic lands.'"

+ Dial 57:507 D 16 '14 150w

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. "Der tag"; or, The tragic man. *25c (11c) Scribner 15-1536

Barrie's one-act play, which appeared first in America in the pages of the New York Times, has been reissued in this slender volume. The play is an attempt to determine what was going on in the mind of the German emperor at the outbreak of the war, and it is made up largely of a dialog between the Emperor and the Spirit of Culture. The closing words are significant. Says the Emperor: "God cannot let my Germany be utterly destroyed," and Culture answers: "If God is with the allies Germany will not be destroyed."

"The simplicity of this dialogue—it is really too much to call it a play—makes it effective." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 2 '15 1000w

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart. Half 12 hours. *$1.25 (3½c) Scribner 14-18746

A nicely balanced volume made up of four plays each a perfect little thing of its kind. Pantaloon, is a fantasy; The twelve-pound look, a satire in which feminists will rejoice; Rosalind, is a comedy faintly shadowed with pathos; and The will is a tragedy.

BARRIE, SIR JAMES MATTHEW, bart.—Cont.

Reviewed by H. E. Woodbridge
Dial 58:49 Ja 16 '15 500w

"Fine for reading because the stage directions are made interesting."

+ Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 60w

"This little volume is a welcome addition to the modern stage library and a convincing witness of the efficacy and artistic possibilities of the one-act play in the hands of a master."

+ Nation 100:124 Ja 28 '15 470w

"It is better simply to advise all persons having any consideration for themselves to go and get the book and read therein for their own delectation, leaving the reviewer to return comfortably to his own copy, with a glance at the clock and a mumble to the effect that time was made for slaves, as every one knows, and that he and Sir James Barrie, at least, are superior to the old curmudgeon." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:493 N 8 '14 850w

+ R of Rs 51:120 Ja '15 120w

Sat R 119:65 Ja 16 '15 750w

"Written with that delicate insight and whimsical grace which create an irresistible appeal. All are well worth reading."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 40w

BARRINGTON, EMILIE ISABEL (WILSON) (MRS. RUSSELL BARRINGTON). Life of Walter Bagehot. $4 Longmans 14-30792

This life of Bagehot is written by his sister-in-law. "Her appreciative and illuminating volume ought to increase the circle of those who read with keen relish the books of the man of whom President Wilson wrote nearly ten years ago, and eighteen years after his death, that 'his fame is still singularly disproportioned to his charm.'" (N Y Times)

+ — A L A Bkl 11:73 O '14

"Into his story Mrs. Barrington has woven some strongly coloured topographical descriptions, and, though she is careless in small details, she holds our attention throughout by her presentment of a picturesque and outstanding personality."

+ — Ath 1914:1:752 My 30 1700w

"Judged by comparison with the stream of amateur essays called biography, Mrs. Barrington's work is excellent. But by any stricter norm of criticism it would have to be condemned pretty severely for its mass of irrelevant matter and its futile circumlocutions. The letters quoted are the usual meaningless correspondence of a boy; there are few telling anecdotes, and the attempt to trace the character of the man to the surroundings of the child, as generally happens with those who try to bend the bow of Sainte-Beuve, is merely a multitudinous waste of words."

+ — Nation 99:165 Ag 6 '14 1150w

+ N Y Times 19:323 Jl 26 '14 100w

"Mrs. Barrington has written a book of great natural charm, which accomplishes the end of all biography—the creation of a sense of familiar acquaintanceship. It would be quite easy to criticise her work for its lack of proportion, its discursive chroniclings of domestic events, its devotion of a whole chapter not to Bagehot but to Wilson in India, but the important fact is that at the end we feel that we know Bagehot, and Bagehot is emphatically worth knowing."

+ — Sat R 117:741 Je 6 '14 1350w

"The value of Mrs. Russell Barrington's most interesting book is that it shows us more of the man in his private life, more details of the personality which has already been correctly enough described in its outlines."

+ Spec 112:871 My 23 '14 2600w

BARRUS, DR. CLARA. Our friend John Burroughs. il $2 (2c) Houghton 14-5340

The author writes of John Burroughs from a long acquaintance and she presents many an intimate picture of the naturalist—washing dishes at Slabsides, meeting John Muir in the desert, and so on. One long chapter is given up to Autobiographical sketches prepared for her at odd times by Mr. Burroughs. Other chapters are: The retreat of a poet naturalist; The early writings of John Burroughs; A winter day at Slabsides; Camping with Burroughs and Muir; John Burroughs: an appreciation.

"It is this intimate treatment which makes the book more enjoyable than De Loach's 'Rambles with John Burroughs.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:345 My '14

Boston Transcript p25 Mr 11 '14 700w

"The purpose and method of the entire book are well conceived, and the author's success in bringing before us a very real and living and lovable Mr. Burroughs is worthy of warm praise, even though she must share that praise largely with Mr. Burroughs himself, whose own pen has contributed no the least valuable portions of the volume." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 56:335 Ap 16 '14 2250w

Ind 78:106 Ap 13 '14 27w

"Admirable little biography."

+ Lit D 48:1441 Je 13 '14 2150w

"The result of the plan of the book is that nothing has its proper place, and that many things are mentioned twice, with a limping 'as has been said' by way of apology. In substance, most of the book is pretty close to the ordinary magazine article on 'My visit to Slabsides'; that is, it shows faithful rather than penetrating 'observation,' and is always likely to slip from triviality to fatuous profundity and back again."

+ — Nation 98:468 Ap 23 '14 950w

"It is a book every reader of the man will want, a lovable book full to the brim of the sane, sweet, wholesome spirit, the honesty and sincerity of its subject." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:293 Je 28 '14 950w

+ No Am 199:945 Je '14 1050w

+ Outlook 107:213 My 23 '14 300w

"There has been nothing quite so intimate relating to his life as a boy and youth as we now have revealed in these sketches."

+ R of Rs 49:508 Ap '14 130w

"Entertaining volume."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 30w

BARTHOLOMEW, LOUIS. Mirabeau: a biography. il 1 $3.30 Dodd 14-30192

"This biography of the greatest figure at the beginning of the most absorbing period in modern history gains double interest and significance at the hands of Monsieur Barthou, whose office as prime minister of France suggests his peculiar ability to dissect a political career. . . . Although it is so essentially a biography of political principles that it seems to have vital connection with today, the author, wishing to give a complete understanding of Mirabeau's character, has over rather than under proportioned his earlier life, devoting half the book to the years before his election to the States-General."—Boston Transcript

"Only for large libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 10:260 Mr '14

"A painstaking study of character development as well as a political biography." M. J. V.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '13 800w

"Apart from the peculiar value attaching to it as the work of a practical statesman, the volume by M. Barthou is the best short life of Mirabeau now available in English." F. M. Fling

+ Dial 56:499 Je 16 '14 1400w

"A complete survey of Mirabeau's career, written in a temper at once candid and critical." F. C. M.

+ Eng Hist R 29:407 Ap '14 220w

"Written with literary skill and political discrimination."

+ Ind 80:102 O 19 '14 40w

"The latest life of Mirabeau is at its best in describing the statesman. It fails in giving us a vivid idea of one of the most baffling and fascinating personalities in modern history."

+ — Lit D 48:497 Mr 7 '14 240w

"M. Barthou has no footnotes, but it is evident that he has used the best printed material in French. The unnamed translator has succeeded admirably in preserving something of the epigrammatic vigor, humor, and brilliancy of M. Barthou's French original."

+ Nation 98:432 Ap 16 '14 1000w

"We learn a great deal about him; we do not come to know the man himself. Nevertheless the book is a very interesting one and well worth reading."

+ N Y Times 19:212 Ap 26 '14 1150w

"Well balanced and convincing, the biography reflects the volcanic passion and contradictoriness of Mirabeau, in many brilliant sallies of characterization, reminding one in this respect of Lord Rosebery's 'Chatham.'" F. M. Colby

+ No Am 199:305 F '14 700w

"A very brilliant biographical sketch."

+ R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 40w

"As an English translation the book is readable, but some expressions jar."

+ Sat R 116:397 S 27 '13 1000w

Spec 111:462 S 27 '13 2000w

BARTON, BRUCE. Young man's Jesus. il *$1
" (4c) Pilgrim press 14-12218

Mr. Barton's book is a protest against the popular conception of a "tired, unhappy, martyred Jesus who lived without a real laugh and looked forward to dying in a sort of fanatical eagerness." For this conception he blames Sunday school teaching which insists too much on the meekness and lowliness of Jesus. His own picture is of "a young man glowing with physical strength and the joy of living, athrill with the protest of youth against oppression and intolerance, yet radiating a spiritual power that has transformed the world."

"His book is written with much eloquence and is fervid with eager conviction."

+ N Y Times 19:392 S 20 '14 170w

"There is a good deal of real insight in Mr. Barton's book, but some fancy. How does he know that Christ was 'big framed' and 'never sick' and 'never tired'?"

+ Outlook 107:820 Ag 1 '14 140w

"The preface of the book is one of its strong features. It is a splendid introduction to a vigorous, virile book."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 29 '14 270w

BARTON, DUNBAR PLUNKET. Bernadotte; the first phase, 1763-1799. il *$3.75 Scribner 14-18954

"Bernadotte is one of the most famous of Gascons. The story of his life, however calmly told, reads like a chapter from Dumas. Born the son of a local attorney at Pau, he died King of Sweden. Romantic as his career is, its romance has gathered other romance imposed upon it by narrators who picked up anecdotes which did not belong to him and pieced them into their narratives. . . . Mr. Barton strips off some of this false romance. He shows that Bernadotte never served in America or in India, that he was never driven to enlist by yearnings for a military career, but simply became a soldier because by so doing he made the lot of a fatherless household dependent on the earnings of his elder brother easier. . . . The book leaves off just as Bernadotte is at the threshold of the second phase at the culmination of which was royalty. To read it to the best advantage one should have some familiarity with the politics of the French revolution of which it is in part a study."—Boston Transcript

"It may be hinted that a condensation of his materials might make them more like a considered judgment, and less like a judge's notes."

+ Ath 1914,2:475 N 7 1200w

"Mr. Barton's account of Bernadotte's first phase is stirring reading. Mr. Barton is not dull." E. W. H.

+ Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 300w

"A distinct gap in biographical history has been filled through the publication of this carefully prepared and well written book."

+ N Y Times 20:14 Ja 10 '15 120w

+ Sat R 118:sup6 N 14 '14 270w

"Excellent study."

+ Spec 114:83 Ja 16 '15 1650w

"It is a work of great interest, without being very well written."

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 4 '15 530w

BASCOM, JOHN. Things learned by living. 10 *$1.25 Putnam 13-10574

"'Things learned by living' is an autobiography of the mind. The author's mental processes interest him more than the quiet events of his life. He is less concerned with the personal aspect than with the hope that the lessons which he has learned in the school of life may be summed up in some principle of philosophy, some law of action, which shall serve other men. Mr. Bascom cherishes no illusions. With a calm frankness that is sometimes startling, he analyzes the characters of his friends and colleagues. . . . Ever serious, thoughtful, reticent, unemotional, positive in his convictions, sacrificing one position because of liberal religious tendencies and another because of the integrity of his political attitude, Mr. Bascom reaches the last period of his honorable life with a growing sense of the certainty of the coming of the kingdom of heaven in the earth."—Lit D

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 14 '13 330w

+ Lit D 47.28 Jl 5 '13 330w

"The ripe wisdom of a great teacher, and the pregnant summary of a long life of intellectual leadership, are compressed within the covers of this little book. We know of nothing in literature quite like it; perhaps the nearest analogy would be with the 'Autobiography of John Stuart Mill.'"

+ Nation 99:309 S 10 '14 1300w

BASHFORD, HENRY HOWARTH. Vagabonds in Périgord. *$1.25 (2c) Houghton 14-2776

An account of pleasant and not too eventful wanderings in the South of France. Indeed Sophronia, one of the members of the party of three, questions whether it is worth while writing down at all, because to most people it must seem so childish. But that indeed is what constitutes the book's charm; we all love childish things, however much we may pretend to have put them away; and in us all, too, there is a strain of the vagabond, and records of wanderings along country roads, of nights spent out of doors or in little inns, will always claim our attention.

+ A L A Bkl 11:114 N '14

"Upon the whole, the merits of the little work outweigh its defects, the latter being all of affectation. Mr. Bashford does succeed in bringing to his reader something of the pleasant air of Périgord of June, and, what is more, the sense in holiday."

+ Ath 1914,1:713 My 23 450w

"The author's account of each day's tranquil adventure is both graphic and sympathetic, with an undercurrent of whimsical humor witnessing that friendly outlook upon life which is the mark of the true traveller."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 480w

"Mr. Bashford is an artist in light and humorous narrative; also an artist with his pencil."

+ Dial 57:302 O 16 '14 380w

"Quite innocuous."

— Nation 99:780 D 31 '14 160w

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 80w

"His adventures are told in an infectious spirit of sunny contentment, and his book is delightful to read."

+ Spec 112:751 My 2 '14 80w

BASSETT, SARA WARE. Story of wool. (Industrial ser.) il *75c (3c) Penn 13-24113

In the form of fiction the author describes the wool-growing industry. Donald Clark of Boston visits his father's sheep ranch in Idaho and learns all about sheep raising from dipping to shearing. On his return to the east, he follows the later processes, the spinning and the weaving.

"Though a readable story with considerable plot, much information on wool is presented."
+ A L A Bkl 10:246 F '14

"Interwoven with a pretty good story all the essential facts regarding sheep-raising and getting the wool to market are revealed."
+ N Y Sun p6 N 29 '13 30w

BASTIDE, CHARLES. Anglo-French entente in the seventeenth century. il *$3.50 Lane 13-24990

The author has made a study of "the life that Frenchmen led in England during the seventeenth century, and of the general attitude of one country to the other at that period. The quotations and extracts, many of which are naturally taken from the contemporary English drama, are of various kinds, and concern all ranks of men from Charles II to Thémiseul, who began to translate 'Robinson Crusoe.' The book also contains a study of Huguenot thought in England."—Ath

"There is some interesting material in this study."
+ Ath 1913,2:451 O 25 90w

"A book which has all the fascination of an ancient scrap-album." H; C. Shelley
+ Boston Transcript p9 N 8 '13 320w
+ Boston Transcript p11 N 21 '13 530w
Nation 98:504 Ap 30 '14 270w

"It is a book which both deals with an unusual and special theme and is full of meat for the general reader." H. W. Boynton

+ N Y Times 19:313 Jl 19 '14 900w

"A volume with this title gives one the impression that it will be a book of sober character. As a matter of fact, the volume is lively."
+ Outlook 106:425 F 21 '14 210w

"It is well adapted, pleasant to read, and full of amusing details of the intercourse between England and France in the seventeenth century."
+ Spec 111:1087 D 20 '13 670w

BASTIN, HAROLD. Insects: their life-histories and habits. il *$2.50 (2½c) Stokes A13-2129

A book in which the author attempts "to set forth, in simple terms, the salient facts of entomology." He adopts Professor G. H. Carpenter's scheme of classification in which nineteen different orders are recognized. A description of the structure of the insect is followed by chapters which give a general view of insect life. The illustrations and colored plates will do much to commend the book. There is a good index.

"He has consulted some good authorities, and written a very readable and instructive book, but he mentions the names only of the authors from whom he has quoted, and gives no bibliographical references. A few indiscretions have found a place in the text."
+ Ath 1913,1:627 Je 7 270w

"Mr. Bastin has brought together a mass of information in a way that makes good reading."
+ Boston Transcript p23 Ja 7 '14 900w

"About everything one wishes to know about insects is set forth in Mr. Bastin's carefully written and intelligently illustrated book."
+ N Y Times 19:493 N 8 '14 250w

"To give a general survey of insect life all over the world in a single volume is no easy task. This Mr. Bastin has done in a useful and attractive fashion."
+ Spec 111:sup493 O 4 '13 250w

BATCHELLER, MRS. TRYPHOSA BATES. Royal Spain of today. il *$5 Longmans 13-25405

"An account of a motor journey across the Spanish peninsula, taken with the Infanta Eulalia. An illuminating picture is given of the country's present progress, of all classes of society, of Spanish art and architecture, and of Spain's industrial reawakening. In a lively style we are treated to many interesting sidelights on Spanish conditions."—R of Rs

"Too expensive except for large collections. No index."
+ A L A Bkl 10:261 Mr '14

"The book contains a few statistics, and a good deal of information accompanies the descriptions of places and edifices visited. Indeed, were it not for its size and weight it would make an excellent guide-book for any one wishing to reconstruct the sightseeing part of the trip. Some needless repetition and confused punctuation might have been avoided, but the get-up of the book is good."
+ Ath 1914,1:196 F 7 530w

"Mrs. Batcheller has the faculty, whatever the country she visits, of looking right through and beyond the exalted personages by whom she is entertained and with whom she even travels, to the background of their history and the environment of present conditions, of their respective countries." E. H. C.

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 1050w

"The style is pleasing and vivid. The author has studied carefully both people and history."
+ Lit D 48:632 Mr 21 '14 200w

+ Nation 97:619 D 25 '13 750w

"Her book suffers somewhat from the obligation she feels to speak courteously and with due deference of all the persons of rank from whom she received kindness, and also from her explaining as though they were new many things that are known to most people of intelligence who have read about Spain. At the same time she has a great deal to say that is of great interest."
+ N Y Sun p11 D 6 '13 1250w

"One can either read the story or look at the pictures; it is impossible to correlate them. It is unfortunate, too, that a book of this sort was not read more carefully in proof. If one takes 'Royal Spain of to-day' for what it is—not a historical work, not a study of the Spanish people, even less a study in any true sense of the Spanish aristocracy, but the pleasant narrative of an unusual personal experience, it will be found very enjoyable reading."
+ N Y Times 18:752 D 21 '13 1600w

Outlook 106:320 F 7 '14 160w

"Throughout the volume are delightful touches on art, architecture, and music."
+ R of Rs 49:119 Ja '14 180w

"She gives an interesting account of modern Spain, and of those in whose hands the destinies of the country lie to-day."
+ Spec 112:104 Ja 17 '14 140w

BATES, FRANK AMASA. Camping and camp cooking. il *75c (3c) Ball pub. co.

A new edition with little change in the body of the book, but with an appendix, entirely new, on the care of the health. The accidents and ailments are all of the sort that occur frequently in camp and the remedies suggested are simple and efficacious.

BATES, KATHARINE LEE. In sunny Spain with Pilarica and Rafael. il *$1 Dutton 13-22760

A volume in the "Little schoolmate" series. The two little Spanish children of the story live in an old Moorish house on Alhambra hill, just outside Granada. The war with the United States, in which the father and big brother of the two are called upon to fight for their country, breaks into their peaceful, happy lives.

+ A L A Bkl 10:203 Ja '14 +

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson
+ Bookm 38:444 D '13 70w

"No child can read it without absorbing not only its spirit of patriotism and of gentle courtesy, but a really extraordinary amount of information regarding the manners and customs of Spain."

+ Boston Transcript p27 D 17 '13 320w

Chaut 72:222 N 15 '13 130w

+ Ind 76:556 D 18 '13 70w

"It is an entertaining and charmingly told story both for children and grown-ups."

+ Lit D 48:632 Mr 21 '14 150w

"Though hampered by the craving to impart travel impressions, she is fairly successful. The pictures are curiously interesting, for Alice Beard has tried to translate Spanish costumes into the Monvel form of decoration."

+ N Y Sun p6 N 8 '13 50w

"An excellent story."

+ N Y Times 18:695 N 30 '13 40w

BATESON, WILLIAM. Problems of genetics. (Silliman memorial lectures) il *$4 Yale univ. press 13-21769

A book that "records the present pause in enthusiasm over evolution and the closer consideration of evolutionary forms and processes; and its discussion centers upon the question: What are species? How did they arise? . . . The author's conclusion is that, while acceptance of the theory of evolution is inevitable, we know as yet little of the forces which have guided and shaped the evolutionary process."—Survey

"Only for large libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 10:345 My '14

"All students of the problems of heredity—and they are many at the present day—will owe Prof. Bateson a debt of gratitude for this volume, written in so scientific a spirit and with such commendable self-restraint."

+ Ath 1914.1:94 Ja 17 1050w

"Taken altogether, this is the freshest and most original book on the problem of species that has appeared for many a year. Whether the reader sees eye to eye with Mr. Bateson or not, there can be no question about its stimulative value."

+ Nature 92:497 Ja 1 '14 1000w

+ N Y Times 18:670 N 30 '13 330w

"One of the most stimulating and suggestive books for students of evolution and heredity which has appeared since the rediscovery of Mendel's law." W. E. Castle

+ Science n s 40:242 Ag 14 '14 3000w

"Although of definitely scientific content, this study will interest the many social workers who, in their own fields, have endeavored to follow the progress of modern thinking." Gertrude Seymour

+ Survey 32:347 Je 27 '14 330w

BATIFFOL, LOUIS. Duchesse de Chevreuse: a life of intrigue and adventure in the days of Louis XIII. il *$3 (2½c) Dodd

A life of Mme. de Chèvreuse, by Victor Cousin appeared in 1862. The author of this more recent biography says: "I have ventured to treat the subject afresh, because it has appeared to me that Victor Cousin was unacquainted with a number of documents which throw a new light on the life-story of Cardinal Richelieu's famous opponent; that he did not, perhaps, extract all the advantage he might have gained from the texts published in the appendix to his work." Of the other personages who figure in these pages—Louis XIII, Richelieu, and others—he says further: "I have striven to instill life into these figures and to give them their real physiognomies, such as the documents consulted show them to have been, and not transformed, as we find them in novels, plays and legend." (Intro.)

Ath 1913.2:523 N 8 40w

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 750w

Nation 99:474 O 15 '14 170w

+ N Y Times 20:47 F 7 '15 130w

"A monograph of this sort ought not merely to relate a series of occurrences in a lifetime: it ought to indicate the springs of action and the sources of power."

+ Sat R 116:816 D 27 '13 830w

"Valuable book. M. Batiffol has certainly succeeded in producing 'a life-like impression' of his central figure, as well as of the world that surrounded her."

+ Spec 112:136 Ja 24 '14 750w

BATTERSBY, HARRY FRANCIS PREVOST<sup>10</sup> (FRANCIS PREVOST, pseud.). Uncertain glory. *$1 30 (2c) Lane 14-14922

The scene of the story is a Central American republic, the characters, an American, acting as president of the country, his two daughters, two young Englishmen and an American engineer. The three latter had been friends at Oxford when Maurice Doyme was there as a Rhodes scholar. They meet again by chance in this out-of-the-way country and take part in a stirring revolution. The love interest of the story is somewhat complicated, for the two Englishmen promptly fall in love with the two sisters, to one of whom Doyme is already devoted.

"Several of the characters, notably the two girls and the three young men, stand out real, distinctive and alive. But to get this effect the author has sacrificed the swift action and the bold outlines which a novel of adventure demands."

+ N Y Times 19:371 S 6 '14 300w

"A romance that will be found entertaining."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 380w

BAYLEY, HAROLD. Lost language of symbolism: an inquiry into the origin of certain letters, words, names, fairy-tales, folk-lore and mythologies. 2v il *$6 Lippincott 14-2336

"What Frazer's 'Golden bough' has done for religious anthropology Mr. Bayley attempts in these volumes for symbolism. He has reproduced some fourteen hundred facsimiles of mediæval emblems, supporting them with innumerable facts relative to the ancient and modern symbolisms of the East and West. Dealing with the familiar insignia of Christianity in the earlier chapters, he connects them in direct development with the symbols of pre-Christian art and philosophy, treating them from a wholly new and fresh point of view."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Bayley seems to confuse facts with what he calls 'suggestions'—guesses at etymology, which are apt to be without sound foundation, and contrary to the careful research of competent scholars."

—Ath 1912.2:658 N 30 70w

"This is a very astounding work that Mr. Bayley presents us, and even if in our ignorance it is hard to convince us of the interpretations he puts upon water-marks as emblems of historical and symbolic significance, its interest is so compelling and its theories so important that no scholarly or knowledge-craving mind can afford to pass it by without examination."

+ Boston Transcript p13 D 2 '13 750w

"It is the combination of scholar and poet that renders the effect unique. When the pains of erudition have failed to track a word to its primal lair, the author does not scruple to use the divining rod; and the result often passes out of the realm of pedestrian chronicle into the demesne of winged literature." T: P. Beyer

+ Dial 56:143 F 16 '14 1350w

"It would be pleasant to be able to say a word in commendation of so well-meaning and industrious a writer. But he adds nothing to our knowledge of the subjects he treats; and, what is more important, he encourages (in those who may be influenced by him) reliance on superficial and fanciful resemblances instead of careful geographical, historical, and philological research."

—Nation 98:216 F 26 '14 300w

BAYLEY, HAROLD—Continued.

"The fascination of following Mr. Bayley in his task of reading in the most literal sense between the lines is second only to the pleasure of independent discovery, and the quaint designs with which almost every page of the work is illustrated are as attractive as the matter itself."

+ — Spec 110:586 Ap 5 '13 150w

BAYNE, CHARLES GERWIEN. Anglo-Roman relations, 1558-1565. (Oxford historical and literary studies, v 2) *$2.90 Oxford 14-7467

A monograph dealing with "the opening years of the period when the lists of Europe were set for Elizabeth of England and Philip of Spain to champion the causes of reform and orthodoxy. . . . The writer has made exemplary use of the Calendars of foreign and domestic state papers, and of the transcripts of foreign documents preserved in the Record office and the British museum. He employs the Simancas archives to take up the story of intrigue where the dispatches of the English and French ambassadors and the records of the Vatican leave it. He has used and printed in an invaluable appendix many notable documents unknown to previous writers, which enable him to correct their views and to substantiate his own."—Ath

"There is much to applaud and little to criticize in Mr. Bayne's book." R. B. Merriman

+ — Am Hist R 19:880 Jl '14 680w

"Mr. Bayne's narrative is lucid and convincing. He is to be congratulated upon a sound and scholarly contribution to a series which bids fair to be worthy of its editors and the learned university whose imprint it bears."

+ Ath 1913,2:693 D 13 700w

+ Spec 112:617 Ap 11 '14 59w

BAZIN, RENÉ. Those of his own household (Madame Corentine); tr. by L. M. Leggatt. *$1.25 (2c) Devin-Adair 14-18079

A simple story of French family life. The scenes are laid in the island of Jersey and in a fishing village on the coast of Brittany and the plot is concerned with the re-union of a husband and wife. Guillaume and Corentine l'Héréc, who had been separated for ten years, thru the influence of their young daughter. A counter romance is that of Corentine's sister, Marie-Anne, and the sailor husband who was lost at sea and returned to her again.

"The book from beginning to end will hold the reader. The work of translation is, in places, not altogether smooth, but these slight deficiencies do not obtrude themselves unpleasantly for, on the whole, the translation is good, and the interest of the reader will not lead him to be hypercritical. René Bazin, past-master of description and analysis, has in this book created an atmosphere and developed characters that will impress themselves indelibly on the mind."

+ — Cath World 100:392 D '14 330w

+ — Ind 81:139 Ja 25 '15 70w

"It is a very simple story, told with a good deal of charm."

+ Outlook 109:236 Ja 27 '15 140w

BEACH, REX ELLINGWOOD. Auction block. 10 il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 14-17991

A novel which follows the usual type of the "story of New York life" in picturing the careers of members of a certain fast set, made up of dissipated millionaires, adventuresses and chorus girls. The chorus girl in this case is Lorelei Knight, whose ambitious family bring her to New York that her beauty may prove the means of enhancing their fortune. According to schedule, she goes on the stage, attracts offers of marriage from wealthy young men, and after a melodramatic marriage to one of them, reforms him and settles down to a life of happiness. On the whole, a most unpleasant lot of people make up the characters of "The auction block," altho, the dancer of notorious reputation whose ambition is to leave the stage and raise ducks, is rather engaging.

"Has real power."

+ — Ath 1914,2:532 N 21 270w

"Lorelei fails to make you forget that it is just a story; she never comes to life." F. T. Cooper

— Bookm 40:308 N '14 380w

"It is constructed in alternate layers of melodrama and realism, and while it presents vice in all its hideousness, it neither moralizes it nor reprehends its participants, but allows the reader to form his own conclusions. It is written to please a public avid of sensation, and it is to literature what the yellow newspaper is to journalism. That is certainly the best word than can be said both for the cleverness of its appeal and for its popularity." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 1200w

Dial 57:342 N 1 '14 170w

— Ind 80:211 N 9 '14 80w

"It is all fairly well written and described, and much of the dialogue is easy and natural, especially those portions of it put in the mouths of Campbell Pope, the dramatic critic, Bob Wharton and Adorée Demorest, but the book as a whole seems to have no adequate excuse for being."

+ — N Y Times 19:378 S 13 '14 700w

"In spite, though, of its defects, the book is a very fair presentation of a certain unpleasant phase of metropolitan life which gets much space in the press, and was so successfully exploited in that recent best-seller 'The salamander.'" Joseph Mosher

+ — Pub W 86:1290 O 17 '14 350w

BEACONSFIELD, BENJAMIN DISRAELI, 1st earl of. Whigs and Whiggism; ed. with introd. by W. Hutcheon. il *$3 Macmillan. (Eng ed A14-1244)

"It was a happy idea, in connection with the official life of Disraeli, which is coming out so slowly, to issue a volume of his political writings, and this has now been done, under the editorial care of Mr. William Hutcheon. . . . The two longest and most important pieces are 'The vindication of the English constitution' and 'The letters of Runnymede,' the former of which appeared in December, 1835, as a 'letter to a noble and learned lord,' the latter in the first half of 1836 in the London 'Times,' being republished anonymously in July of the same year."—Nation

"Mr. Hutcheon has bestowed much industry and thought on this meritorious collection. He has, perhaps, been over-lenient in printing an article or two that might have been left to the oblivion of old newspaper files. Still, the writings of Disraeli, even at their worst, have the interest belonging to the productions of an extraordinary mind."

+ — Ath 1913,2:652 D 6 1150w

"No one who cares to understand English politics of the nineteenth century can neglect this volume, any more than in understanding Disraeli they can neglect the official life of the statesman that is in process of completion." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 8 '14 1450w

"To the student of English history the volume will prove very useful."

+ Dial 57:25 Jl 1 '14 210w

"Some of the pieces included have been reprinted in earlier volumes, but even these are not out of print, and the brilliance of their style, apart from their historical value, would justify their presentation again in popular form."

+ Nation 95:305 Mr 19 '14 750w

"This is a volume of interesting reference to students of English history."

+ Outlook 106:651 Mr 21 '14 60w

"Students of politics will be grateful to Mr. Hutcheon for giving them what he aptly calls 'Bye-products' of Disraeli. The bye-products of genius are, as a rule, better than the best products of mediocrity, and Disraeli's early writings are more stimulating and illustrative than the solemn treatises of a Lecky or a Morley. There is much, of course, which is sheer nonsense, and of which Disraeli must have been ashamed." A. A. Baumann

+ — Sat R 117:44 Ja 10 '14 1200w

+ — Spec 111:1119 D 27 '13 1850w

BEAMAN, ARDERN. Travels without Baedeker. *$2 Lane 14-7465

"The author doesn't make many admissions as to his personality. But one guesses, from his knowledge of an interest in horses and from an occasional brief remark, that he is a young officer in an English cavalry regiment. His 'expedition' took him from Bombay to Suez and Cairo into upper Egypt, then to Alexandria, Jerusalem, Athens, Constantinople, Budapest, and finally to Venice. And after that one gathers that he meant to complete his journey to England in a conventional way among people whose shell of civilization is so thick that they are not worth putting into books."—N Y Times

"He had no notable adventures, and the mere experience of cheap modes of transit, though no doubt uncomfortable and engendering a sense of heroism in any one accustomed to the lap of luxury, does not strike us as exceptional or harsh enough to justify a book."

— Ath 1913,2:312 S 27 150w

"He has written a book which must be the envy of all professional writers. He has a charming wit, a keen eye for human nature, and a delightfully conversational style." H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p11 O 11 '13 380w

"Delightfully unusual and entertaining is this record of a journey."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 27 '13 380w

+ N Y Sun p4 O 4 '13 100w

"A very jolly, companionable sort of book that takes you, with frank conviction that you will enjoy it as much as he did, into a great many places and among a great many people where you would never think of going yourself, the sort of book that without any such intention, or any self-consciousness, widens one's horizon and enlarges one's sympathies."

+ N Y Times 18:723 D 7 '13 870w

BEAN, FLORENCE ORDWAY, and BRODHEAD, JOHN C. Bookbinding for beginners. il $1.25 School arts pub. 14-10626

A handbook for teachers. "All its projects are of immediate practical use in home and school. Fifty plates of working diagrams and illustrations of methods and results, richly supplement and complete the text." (School Arts Magazine)

"Brief, practical handbook for teachers of the lower elementary grades and equally useful for self instruction."

+ A L A Bk 11:59 O '14

"Any person wishing to increase his own skill in the manual arts, beginning with this book, would find it a wise teacher, insuring success from the first."

+ School Arts Magazine 13:716 My '14 150w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN. Contemporary American history, 1877-1913. *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 14-31118

A text-book in American history covering the period since the civil war. "The book is necessarily somewhat 'impressionistic' and in part it is based upon materials which have not been adequately sifted and evaluated. Nevertheless I have endeavored to be accurate and fair. . . . Although the volume has been designed, in a way, as a textbook, I have thrown aside the methods of the almanac and chronicle, and . . . have omitted with a light heart many of the staples of history in order to treat more fully the matters which seem important from the modern point of view." (Preface) Contents: The restoration of white dominion in the south; The economic revolution; The revolution in politics and law; Parties and party issues, 1877-1896; Two decades of federal legislation; The growth of dissent; The campaign of 1896; Imperialism; The development of capitalism; The administration of Theodore Roosevelt; The revival of dissent; Mr. Taft and republican disintegration; The campaign of 1912.

"While valuable and stimulating in many respects, good in spots, is poorly grounded, unauthorized, and far too restricted in point of view. Unless used with discrimination, it cannot furnish a true 'background' to contemporary politics and government."

— Am Hist R 20:179 O '14 730w

"A careful, impartial interpretation, largely from the economic viewpoint."

+ A L A Bk 10:345 My '14 †

"Although exhibiting the shortcomings which necessarily attach to the writing of such recent history, the work is nevertheless the most satisfactory single volume covering this period."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:668 N '14 70w

"As a stimulus to thought and as a basis for discussion this book will prove of the greatest value." R. G. Gettell

+ Ann Am Acad 54:328 Jl '14 420w

"A genuine desideratum is this book. The book is worthy of a place on the shelf of all those who wish a comprehensive view of the issues of the past generation which have given us our problems today."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 25 '14 450w

+ Chaut 72:620 Ap 4 '14 140w

"The present book was done so hastily that even its facts are inaccurate."

— Educ R 48:213 S '14 120w

"Professor Beard, altho he treats of topics of living interest upon which he has very decided opinions, never swerves from the strict impartiality of the historian. For this reason as well as for the author's scholarship and grasp of the factors which make our modern politics the book can be quite confidently recommended as a college textbook in civics or American history."

+ Ind 78:47 Ap 6 '14 250w

"The book is a readable one, and valuable for its purpose, although the author admits it to be somewhat 'impressionistic' and in part based on materials which have not yet been adequately sifted."

+ — R of Rs 49:508 Ap '14 150w

"The narrative includes rather too much detail for most English readers, but for the student the volume—which is remarkably well written for an American text-book—should prove of great value."

+ Sat R 117:478 Ap 11 '14 170w

+ — Spec 112:654 Ap 18 '14 130w

"The volume is intended primarily as a textbook for students of American history, and as such it is extremely valuable."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 10 '14 600w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:163 Je '14 50w

BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN, and BEARD, MRS. MARY RITTER. American citizenship. il *$1 (½c) Macmillan 14-7061

The authors have felt that there exists a need for a new text-book on civics. Those in present use have many defects; one common to all is that they treat government as static or settled rather than dynamic and progressive. Another is that they are written almost wholly from a masculine point of view, ignoring the fact that the majority of pupils in high schools are girls and that women are now required by social necessity to concern themselves in the business of the community. These defects their book seeks to remedy. The subject matter is arranged under three headings: Human needs and government; The machinery of government; The work of government.

"The plan of the volume is admirable." A. B. Hall

+ — Am J Soc 20:419 N '14 230w

"Thoroughly modern treatment, well balanced and judicial, though the authors occasionally betray their sympathies."

+ A L A Bk 11:8 S '14 †

BEARD, C. A. and MRS. M. R.—Continued.

Reviewed by Scott Nearing

+ Ann Am Acad 57:337 Ja '15 350w

"The present volume will be welcomed because of its lucidity and fairness."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 120w

"'American citizenship' is interesting because of the broad human way in which the subject is handled, even in its analysis. The present reviewer can pay this book no higher praise than to say that, if he were now a teacher of civics as he was a few years ago, he would use American citizenship in preference to all other books."

C. E. Rhodes

+ Chaut 72:743 My 23 '14 520w

+ Educ R 48:424 N '14 150w

"The book is adapted to use by teachers by various devices, such as topical analyses, list of questions, and references for additional reading for each chapter."

+ Nation 99:22 Jl 2 '14 170w

"Prof. Beard does not, we think, present as clearly as he might, and ought, the reasons, for fear that 'direct' government would give professional politicians more power for mischief than they have now, and would seriously impair the ability of the people to defend themselves against abuses. In general we get the impression from his writing that, in his sincere interest in beneficent, or benevolent, ends, he inclines somewhat to disregard the probable effect of means."

+ N Y Times 19:223 My 10 '14 1050w

"An excellent high-school text-book."

+ R of Rs 50:635 N '14 15w

BEARD, DANIEL CARTER. Shelters, shacks, and shanties. il *$1.25 (2c) Scribner 14-15383

The title of the book is so comprehensive that little added description is necessary, and the author's name is sufficient guarantee of the trustworthiness of the volume. He tells boys how to go about building every kind of shack, from the simplest temporary shelter up to a very complete log cabin, and provides working drawings for their guidance.

+ A L A Bkl 11:126 N '14

N Y Times 19:393 S 20 '14 90w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:264 N '14 20w

BEARD, PATTEN. Jolly book of boxcraft. il *$1.35 (14c) Stokes 14-18480

The author tells children how they may make the most fascinating toys out of the most simple materials—card-board boxes, empty spools and so on. The illustrations show houses, churches, hotels, village stores and school buildings, automobiles and house furnishings and railway trains; and directions for making accompany them all.

"More elaborate and comprehensive than 'When mother lets us make paper box furniture.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:223 Ja '15

+ Lit D 49:1134 D 5 '14 90w

+ Nation 99:695 D 10 '14 130w

"The book carries unanimously."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:444 F '15 100w

BEARNE, MRS. CATHERINE MARY (CHARLTON). Court painter and his circle: François Boucher (1703-1770). il *$4 (5c) McBride, Nast & co.

Mrs. Bearne does not claim to have written a technical work on the art of Boucher; neither has she written a biography. The book is a gossipy chronicle of the time in which he lived with anecdotes of Louis XV and those who made up his court. The book is fully illustrated.

Ath 1913,2:259 S 13 60w

"It is regrettable that the author has not revised her manuscript more carefully. Her book contains numerous repetitions, and some paragraphs are so loosely constructed that they are almost unintelligible. Her style has a tendency to lapse into the colloquial. The illustrations, however, which consist of reproductions of the pictures of Boucher and other masters of the period, are excellent."

+ Ath 1913,2:289 S 20 500w

"The whole mixture will be most attractive to those who care least about the main point, the artist who happens to be involved."

+ Nation 98:767 Je 25 '14 80w

"Mrs. Bearne makes no pretensions to writing a technical study of eighteenth century art, or an exhaustive life of Boucher . . . yet her book is not without numerous indications that should prove useful to the technician as well as to the collector and connoisseur of the decorative painters of France." T. Walsh

+ N Y Times 19:425 O 11 '14 720w

BEASLEY, THOMAS DYKES. Tramp through the Bret Harte country; with a foreword by C. A. Murdock. il *$1.25 (6c) Elder 14-9356

The author tells the story of a tramp taken thru that part of California that is associated with Bret Harte's name. The journey took him thru Tuolumne, Calaveras, Amador, El Dorado, Placer, Nevada and Yuba counties, where the mining camps of Bret Harte's stories were located. Mark Twain was another celebrity known in this country, and the author in his travels met more than one old man who had recollections of the early days and of these two famous men. In his first chapter he describes his own first meeting with Bret Harte forty-four years ago. The book is attractively illustrated.

Boston Transcript p7 O 3 '14 430w

"Very good reading, not lacking in 'local color' and, no cold commendation, erring rather on the side of brevity than of length."

+ Dial 57:457 D 1 '14 200w

Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 100w

BEAUMONT, JOSEPH. Minor poems; ed. from the autograph manuscript with introd. and notes by Eloise Robinson. il *$5 Houghton 14-843

A reprint of the quarto volume of 173 pages containing the minor poems of Dr. Beaumont. The manuscript is owned by Professor Palmer of Harvard and is reprinted under its auspices of the English department of Wellesley college. "Relying chiefly on Gee and correcting some errors of Grosart by the way, Miss Robinson has incorporated in her introduction an excellent account of Beaumont's quiet and in the end not unprosperous career." (Nation)

Ath 1914,1:193 F 7 570w

Review by W. A. Bradley

+ Bookm 39:193 Ap 14 50w

"The editor of this valuable contribution to the scholar's library and the public libraries to which students go, has done her work well. Her introduction is not only careful, it is very interesting—in fact much more so than the poetry of Joseph Beaumont." J. M.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 1050w

"Miss Robinson's editorial care in bringing out the volume is commendable, but she has fallen into the too common error of editors in finding parallels and suggesting borrowings on the most unconvincing coincidences of language."

+ Nation 98:303 Mr 19 '14 1050w

"A scholarly and painstaking fervor, not unlike that which actuated the small group of seventeenth century lyrists who turned from Spenserian idealism and romance to the celebration of God and His good works, is the pleasant characteristic of this edition."

+ N Y Times 19:322 Jl 26 '14 200w

+ R of Rs 49:500 Ap '14 160w

BECK, JAMES MONTGOMERY. Evidence in the case. *$1 (2c) Putnam 14-22660

A world court before which differences between nations could be tried and settled without resort to arms, is the ideal of forward looking pacifists. The author, late assistant attorney-general of the United States, imagines such a court as existing now and brings before it the nations involved in the present war, Germany,

Austria, Russia, England, France and Belgium; hears the evidence presented by each in the form of their White, Grey, and other papers, their official declarations, speeches in parliament, etc.; and pronounces a judgment in which Germany is condemned.

"The book is especially valuable for its searching analysis of the specious rhetoric of the German notes. It is clear, pungent, and informed by a rather remarkable combination of shrewd good sense and fine idealism."

+ Nation 100:175 F 11 '15 250w

"Has been one of the most successful books which the war has produced."

+ N Y Times 20:18 Ja 17 '15 280w

"If Mr. Beck's admirable book has any fault at all it is that of taking too legal a view of the case, that is too limited a view." Robert Lynd

+ — Pub W 87:180 Ja 16 '15 700w

BÉDIER, JOSEPH. Romance of Tristan and Iseult; rendered into English by H. Belloc. *$1 (3½c) Dodd

A translation of "Le Roman de Tristan et Iseult," a work crowned by the French academy. It is drawn from French sources and follows the familiar lines, telling of Tristan's birth, his youth, the journey to Ireland to bring home the bride of King Mark, of the drinking of the magic potion and the secret love of these fated two, of Tristan's marriage with Iseult of the White Hands, of his waiting the coming of the first Iseult and their death together.

"Those who care to read this earliest and most enduring of modern love stories can get it from no better source than this."

+ — Nation 99:610 N 19 '14 220w

"The fair old story is exquisitely told anew for our reading."

+ N Y Times 19:399 S 27 '14 430w

BEERBOHM, MAX. Fifty caricatures. *$2 Dutton (Eng ed 14-8408)

The fifty caricatures are satiric representations of men prominent in English public life today. Among those pictures are: Sir Edward Carson; John Masefield; Winston Churchill; Lord Curzon; Sir Edward Grey; Lloyd George; Thomas Hardy; Caruso; Arthur Balfour; Arnold Bennett; King George.

Ath 1913,2:sup398 O 11 100w

+ Ath 1913,2:461 O 25 300w

"For many reasons Mr. Beerbohm's audience in America is bound to be less numerous and less enthusiastic than his conferees at home but this volume is distinctly worth bringing out and will be eagerly possessed by those whose knowledge of English life admits them to the charmed circle of Max's acquaintances."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 20 '13 280w

"A book to dispel the blues."

+ Dial 55:532 D 16 '13 160w

Ind 77:417 Mr 23 '14 50w

+ Int Studio 51:246 Ja '14 200w

+ Nation 97:562 D 11 '13 100w

"His jokes are usually bright, but once in a while an explanatory note would enable Americans to catch the point."

+ N Y Sun p3 D 6 '13 40w

"Max Beerbohm is among the few caricaturists who can achieve the paradox: How to be funny without giving pain."

+ N Y Times 18:700 N 30 '13 120w

+ Spec 111:872 N 22 '13 870w

BEGBIE, HAROLD. Crisis of morals; an analysis and a programme (Eng title, The weakest link). *75c Revell 14-2409

"Impurity is, the author says, the chief disease of this age. And he insists that the chief danger of civilization lies in a dishonoring attitude toward woman." (Boston Transcript) "Mr. Begbie declares that the wave of sensuality is being spread by telepathy from the minds of the impure to the collective mind of humanity, and that there is only one way of turning it back, namely, by the church's setting up a stronger counter-telepathy of purity, with emphasis on the fact that purity is natural and impurity is unnatural and a perversion. But the church can accomplish little by merely sending out precepts into the world; it must send out a life that springs from the heart, and something more than a religious convention or a glorified paganism. It must lay hold of the life which is from Christ, which is different from anything in the world, which is a new life." (Springfield Republican)

Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 350w

+ Ind 79:175 Ag 3 '14 100w

"Mr. Begbie has a vigorous style."

+ R of Rs 49:624 My '14 50w

"He exhibits no filth, but he does give something to think about."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 2 '14 300w

"It is done with the art of an impressionist, not with the science of either the moralist or sociologist. It is to be hoped that those hitherto thrilled by the author's vivid instances of the direct exercise of divine power in transforming human lives, will now be as much inspired by this impassioned appeal." Graham Taylor

+ Survey 32:436 Jl 25 '14 300w

BEGBIE, HAROLD. Day that changed the world. *$1.25 (2c) Doran A14-1811

A chronicle of millennial import which tells of the miraculous events that would happen—some of them, at least—in London if for one day people should act as if "everything which Christianity declares to be true is indeed absolutely, entirely and gloriously true." The world for that day conducted its affairs on the lines of kindness; wealthy landlords pulled down old tenements and planned new; the haughty turned to the poor and needy; the wicked became good; criminals reformed; churches reached out to the lowly and fallen; opposing factions in parliament cooperated in reform legislation; and militant suffragettes adopted the modest, simple and dignified methods of the constitutional suffragists working for the vote. The writer moves about thru these scenes and describes them in detail.

"There is no plot and little continuity to the story; but it is rather a series of moving pictures rushing before the eyes, with some original, striking scenes, and some sordid and dull."

+ — Boston Transcript p20 Jl 8 '14 110w

"The topic is peculiarly fitted to bring out the author's weak points—lack of creative imagination and occasional want of humor."

+ — Nation 99:165 Ag 6 '14 270w

+ N Y Times 19:479 N 1 '14 110w

BEGBIE, HAROLD. Happy Irish (Eng title, The lady next door). il *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 14-20355

Observations and impressions relating to the question of government for Ireland made on a trip zigzag thru the country from south to north. When among the Irish of the southern section, the charming, delightful, virtuous and sagacious type—Ireland's best—the writer easily became an advocate of Home rule, but in the north where industrial conditions depressed him, where he found in the poverty, ugliness and depravity of Belfast, for instance, so sharp a contrast to the situation in the south, he was sure that Unionism is the only thing for the people.

A L A Bk1 11:71 O '14

"The arguments advanced in regard to the economic benefits which may be expected to result from Home rule are interesting, and well deserve consideration."

+ — Ath 1912,2:63 Jl 20 120w

"Mr. Begbie has written well of the Irish question—of several Irish questions, and offers much interesting evidence on many points, but if his purpose was to write of the happy Irish he seems to have missed a good opportunity." F. L. W.

BEGBIE, HAROLD—Continued.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 J1 25 '14 880w

"Mr. Begbie is in the main impartial, his observation is discriminating and sympathetic, and his conclusions are really enlightening. In style the book is popular and a trifle slipshod; but it contains many attractive sketches of rural Irish life and some grim ones of the Belfast factories and slums."

+ — Nation 99:137 J1 30 '14 750w

"There are interesting and entertaining sketches of men, women, and children, and the narrative part of the book is lively."

+ Outlook 107:680 J1 18 '14 120w

R of Rs 50:249 Ag '14 180w

"The fact that he is devoid of historical and critical senses diminishes the value of this treatise upon Ireland, which is really an orgy of emotionalism."

— Spec 103:137 J1 27 '12 400w

"Very readable in style and containing attractive sketches of rural life."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:260 N '14 90w

BEGBIE, HAROLD. Proof of God. *75c Revell
14-14168

"Mr. Pegbie has made a rather ambitious attempt in 'The proof of God,' the first of a trilogy, to present in an attractive and conversational style some of the ideas held by men of great intellect, particularly scientists and philosophers, with regard to the existence of an efficient spiritual power in the universe. Through the pages of the book runs an imaginary discussion between the author and a political friend, utterly skeptical about the existence of God or of other than material forces."—Springfield Republican

Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 250w

"Simple and attractive in style and full of common sense in its subject matter."

+ Ind 80:383 D 7 '14 30w

N Y Times 19:426 O 11 '14 100w

"'Tis a little book, but meaty."

+ Outlook 108:442 O 21 '14 180w

"In spite of the excessive enthusiasm about Bergson and an insufficient stress upon the importance of traditional Christianity as a redemptive religion and source of faith, this book of Mr. Begbie's may be commended as provocative of thought and, above all things, interesting."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 O 1 '14 580w

BEGNI, ERNESTO; GREY, JAMES C.; and KENNEDY, THOMAS J., eds. Vatican—its history—its treasures. il $10 Letters & arts pub. co., 1 W. 34th st., N. Y. 15-1060

"The book is not the hastily done work of a few hacks, supplemented with some reproductions of common photographs. It is, indeed, an exhaustive study of the Vatican, in all its important historical, artistic, and administrative details, written by an illustrious company of scholars. And the mechanical perfection of the book, with its large pages, its hundreds of rare photographs, its beautiful type, its sumptuous binding, is in accordance with the importance of its subject. . . . The editors secured as 'contributing authors' to write about the various phases of the Vatican the men best fitted to write about the subjects to be assigned to them, and secured their cooperation in the matter of obtaining photographs."—N Y Times

"As a whole the work is admirable, full of fascinating information, of fair and broad-minded criticisms and of eloquent and elegant descriptions. It unfortunately lacks an index. All the allied authors evidently entered into the spirit of their task with enthusiastic delight." N. H. D.
+ Boston Transcript p9 D 5 '14 1350w

"In general the work is succinct and fresh, agreeably unlike the usual compilations. The book is well planned but suffers in places from inequality of translation and lack of right editorial oversight."

+ — Nation 100:89 Ja 21 '15 300w

"Its numerous splendid photographic illustrations, many of them of subjects never before exposed to the camera, give it a unique place among the season's 'picture books.' And the clarity and scholarship of the text give it an educational value not easy to overestimate. It is, indeed, a veritable interpretation of the great soul of the Eternal City." Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 19:553 D 6 '14 850w

"It is a well-rounded work."

+ Outlook 109:348 F 10 '15 270w

BEITH, JOHN HAY (IAN HAY, pseud.). Knight<sup>10</sup> on wheels. *$1.35 (1½c) Houghton 14-15566

The first section of this story in which the author carries out a novel and whimsical idea is the most readable. Philip Meldrum, the hero, is introduced at the age of fourteen, acting as secretary to his uncle Joseph, a philanthropist. Uncle Joseph is also a misogynist. He knows women to be fools and, taking advantage of their propensity to give money to foolish and sentimental causes, he extracts large sums from them by means of a series of absurd begging letters which it is Philip's duty to write for him. The money thus obtained is then turned to good uses and expended in reliable and legitimate charities. So much for the first part of the story, in which Philip is taught to look upon Woman as the disturbing element in nature. For the rest of its course it follows the more conventional lines of the ordinary love story, and "Pegs" the slim-legged little girl who had been the first to upset Uncle Joseph's theories, enters it again to play an important part.

+ A L A Bkl 11:76 O '14

"He takes a mass of improbabilities and welds them into a highly convincing and extremely amusing whole—a gilded, if not, indeed, a golden whole. Readers should not miss this exceptional book."

+ Ath 1914,2:197 Ag 15 480w

"Long, crowded, and in places somewhat dull volume." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:676 F '15 500w

"The charm that is to be found in Ian Hay's new story lies principally in its whimsicality."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 260w

"It is a tale full of high spirits and whimsicalities, with just enough serious touches to make it real, and some delightful characters."

+ N Y Times 19:386 S 20 '14 550w

"The book is amusing and its action moves vivaciously."

+ Outlook 108:224 S 23 '14 60w

"That the plot is hardly plausible will not spoil it for many novel-readers."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:262 N '14 30w

BELL, CLIVE. Art. il *$1.25 Stokes
(Eng ed 14-10203)

"The root of Mr. Bell's argument is that a true work of art produces in us aesthetic ecstasy and emotion, and by doing so awakens and stimulates the spiritual side of our nature. The writer proceeds to inquire what it is in plastic art that causes this emotion, and we are told that the all-essential is significant form." (Spec) "The artists Mr. Bell prefers are the early Japanese, the Sumerians, the archaic Greeks, the Byzantines, the modern engineers—as compared with the modern architects—Cézanne, Henri-Matisse." (Sat R)

"Several different kinds of people will be violently irritated by this book. It has a malignant ingenuity which will put most painters, art-critics, art-historians, archaeologists, and connoisseurs beside themselves. It is on Mr. Bell's historical chapters that the critics and connoisseurs will fasten with particular fury. The hangers-on of official art who cross swords with Mr. Bell will not be nearly so entertaining as he is. It is the first book, since Ruskin began to publish 'Modern painters' in 1843, that could even conceivably convince a serious-minded person of good judgment that Art is something more than an agreeable ornamentation and seasoning of life.

+ — Ath 1914,1:280 F 21 1600w

"Frankly we find it impossible to fit his fantastic theory in with the most elementary laws of psychology. Criticising things in general the author is surprisingly refreshing."

+ — Int Studio 52:339 Je '14 300w

"The argument is always amusing, if not very satisfying. The style is highly seasoned for a sedate taste."

+ — Nation 100:179 F 11 '15 180w

"It is in this insensitiveness to art of a kind that does not reveal its significance by means of the formulas he has learned that Mr. Bell shows his lack of the deep insight often called tolerance which marks the highest order of mind."

+ — N Y Times 19:500 N 15 '14 470w

+ — Sat R 117:sup4 Mr 21 '14 1300w

"If we make allowances for the attitude of self-satisfaction and complacency which seems generally to overtake writers on aesthetics, who, by the nature of the case, are bound to start from the assumption that their own intuitions and personal tastes must be right, we shall find that Mr. Bell's book is quite worth reading."

+ — Spec 113:97 Jl 18 '14 1650w

BELL, EDWARD I. Political shame of Mexico. * Il $2 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-12544

An inside view of the workings of Mexico's military and financial intrigues and the hidden causes of the recent political upheaval. The author reviews the events of the past four years leading up to Huerta's ascendancy and then discusses the part that the United States has taken in helping to set Mexico's house in order, the difficulties that confronted President Wilson and the trying position he has been placed in while meeting them. If President Wilson has made mistakes they are due, the author believes, to some lack of a full understanding of the Mexican question. The Mexican people are not fitted for self-government. What they require is a business government much better and much more modern than that of the United States, a business government equipped with every device of science, and above all with the method.

Ind 80:104 O 19 '14 200w

"Although bearing the earmarks of personal prejudice and lack of perspective, it has the advantage of having been written by a man who saw with his own eyes many of the recent occurrences in Mexican history which he describes. Furthermore, Mr. Bell appears to have been in an extremely favorable situation for acquiring information concerning the underground diplomacy of Mexico City."

+ — Nation 99:555 N 5 '14 430w

"While his whole narrative is readable, parts of it are of permanent value because of the clear light thrown upon some events of international importance heretofore commonly shrouded in semi-darkness."

+ Outlook 108:656 N 18 '14 200w

BELL, JOHN JOY. Bobby. *$1 (3c) Doran 14-3768

Bobby is the successor of Wee Macgregor, and those who recall the mirth provoked by the "grumfy" and the turkey egg experiences of this latter youngster will pick up "Bobby" with sheer delight. He is a naughty, adorable human boy, the kind Mr. Bell knows so well. He wants "beenahnas" for breakfast when there are none; cries for them all day; and when grandparents, aunts, and parents all order bananas and the larder is stocked to overflowing Bobby announces in an aggrieved tone that it is not bananas but strawberries that he wants. Among the surprises that he treats his parents to is the announcement that he is not going to say his prayers, and that he won't be a lamb any more; if he has to be a beast he will be a bull. His young individuality dominates every page, making grown-up wisdom that gets mixed up with it seem inexpressibly futile.

"The real trouble with 'Bobby' is a lack of spontaneity; it reads like a conscious effort."

Norman Bryce

+ — Bookm 39:685 Ag '14 180w

"As one of the direct successors of Wee Macgregor, Bobby, in some way surpasses him, for he is a very real small boy as we find him described in the various chapters of the book called by his name. He has a fascination because he is so real."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 27 '14 250w

"We commend Mr. Bell's latest boy—may it by no means be his last—to all who have a mind to add for a brief pause to the joy of living."

+ N Y Times 19:282 Je 21 '14 150w

BELL, JOHN JOY. Misadventures of Joseph. il *$1 (2½c) Revell 14-15745

Ten sketches in Mr. Bell's characteristic vein make up the contents. Joseph Redhorn, a bachelor of forty, is a painter, paper-hanger and decorator; by the inhabitants of the Scotch village he is generally spoken of as Ridhorn, the penter. His first misadventure follows a gift of a silver mug to an infant who has been named in his honor; thereafter all babies born in the village become either Josephs or Josephines. In the last of the stories however the circumstance which brings Aggie Fraser to take the place of Mrs. McFadyen, Joseph's erstwhile slovenly housekeeper, could hardly be termed a misadventure.

"The humor and the delicious atmosphere of Scotch life that Mr. Bell so excels in depicting are well illustrated in this new story."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 250w

"The humor, and there is much of it, is inherent in the characters, and it is typical Scotch humor, dry, quaint, and full of tang."

+ N Y Times 19:379 S 13 '14 130w

"Joseph Redhorn is, in his way, a better creation than 'Wee Macgregor.'"

+ Outlook 108:224 S 23 '14 60w

BELL, JOHN KEBLE (KEBLE HOWARD, pseud.). Lord London. *$1.25 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 13-25717

Mr. Howard tells in the guise of fiction of a London journalist's rise in power. "As the reader follows the amazing narrative of his career—from the day when as plain 'Hannibal Quain' he launches his weekly paper, 'You and I,' to that on which he dines with a prime minister and dictates the tariff reform policy of the British empire—he cannot escape the conviction that 'You and I' is 'Answers,' that the 'Little daily' is the 'Daily mail,' and that Lord London is Lord Northcliffe." (N Y Times)

"The book has excited caustic comment in some quarters, but there is nothing objectionable in it; indeed, it suffers from being somewhat too idyllic. The author has not seen fit to remark on any of his hero's shortcomings. The story is, however, brightly written."

+ — Ath 1913,2:331 O 11 80w

"It is really a very stimulating story that Mr. Howard tells in 'Lord London,' and it is none the less stimulating because it is essentially true." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 980w

"Few will say that Mr. Howard gives a really accurate portrait of Lord Northcliffe, but he does something better—he tells a good story." Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 19:57 F 8 '14 1050w

"Novelists must not write—or try to write—the lives, careers, of actual men and women, living men and women of the day, and present their work to the public as a novel. That is inexcusable. It is a sin against art, and it is a sin against taste. View 'Lord London' how one will, it is impossible to overlook the fact that its author is guilty of both sins. It is a pity, for Mr. Keble Howard has a way with him."

+ — Sat R 116:462 O 11 '13 900w

BELLOC, HILAIRE. Book of the Bayeux tapestry il *$3.50 (29c) Putnam 14-20288

Mr. Belloc treats the famous Bayeux tapestry as a historical document. "There is no other example," he says, "of a record, contemporary or nearly contemporary, of an event so remote in the story of Christendom, detailed upon so considerable a scale and relating to a matter of such moment." In the length of the tapestry the story of the Norman conquest is told, with a wealth of detail relating to "the vivid life of the earlier middle ages." A facsimile of the tapestry is presented in a series of seventy-six panels, with a running commentary by Mr. Belloc.

+ A L A Bkl 11:206 Ja '15

Ath 1913,2:sup438 O 18 60w

"The most notable feature of Mr. Belloc's book on the Bayeux tapestry is the reproduction, so distinct and minutely careful as to gain even by examination under a magnifying glass."

+ Ath 1915,1:4 Ja 2 890w

+ Dial 57:507 D 16 '14 170w

"In spite of its somewhat ambitious title, this is a disappointing book. It describes itself as 'presenting the complete work in a series of colour facsimiles,' but the introduction of colour, which is its novel feature, is not very successful, and the student will find the monochrome facsimiles, from the official negatives, in Mr. Fowke's handy volume, clearer in definition of detail as well as larger in scale. It is to be regretted that a writer who has made so considerable a name for himself as a 'littérateur' should have set himself to put historians right on a subject of which he only had an imperfect knowledge." J. H. Round

— Eng Hist R 30:109 Ja '15 1150w

Int Studio 54:158 D '14 60w

"As far as he goes Mr. Belloc has made a most interesting book. He has treated his subject freshly and lucidly, making the whole story curiously living and intimate."

+ Sat R 118:398 O 19 '14 970w

"It is a fascinating volume."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:217 N '14 200w

BENÉT, WILLIAM ROSE. Falconer of God, and other poems. *$1 Yale univ. press
14-15448

"The falconer" is as noble a poem as has appeared in America, at least for several years. It has majesty, assurance of wing, and clearness of sight, and depicts the marauding aspirations of youth that bring to earth only a dead quarry after all its sweep of pinions and tenacious claws. . . . Other poems in Mr. Benét's new volume display his fine appreciation of literary values—"The schoolroom of poets," with its graphic pictures of the young Chatterton, the boy Keats, and the youthful Goldsmith and Shelley, makes charming reading. . . . "On the waterfront" and "Poor girl" and "The cats of Cobblestone street" are Mr. Benét's concessions to the muse of toil, grief, and humor of the metropolis, balancing a truly literary collection of poems."—N Y Times

"The reticence in Mr. Benét's new book has toned considerably the exuberance of his first volume. There are pieces here that are better than anything in the earlier volume, and there are in other pieces better workmanship upon far less important and interesting themes. But in general the substance of Mr. Benét's art is a solid substance." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 23 '15 400w

"It can not justly be said that his 'The falconer of God' will greatly increase his reputation. The title poem is admirable, but the other poems, altho excellent, are perhaps not sufficiently distinctive to render advisable the publication of this volume so soon after 'Merchants from Cathay.'"

+ Lit D 49:800 O 24 '14 430w

"In 'The falconer of God,' while the occasional purple splendors of Mr. Benét's earlier volume are lacking, there is discovered a somewhat finer sense of emotional and ethical values." T: Walsh

+ N Y Times 20:8 Ja 3 '15 470w

BENÉT, WILLIAM ROSE. Merchants from Cathay [poems]. *$1.20 Century 13-21274

"Mr. Benét's book of poems takes its title from a gay ballad—a tale of two strange merchants who rode into town on paunchy beasts with golden hooves. They bought sacks of magic merchandise, and they sang a carol in praise of the Grand Chan, 'the king of all the kings across the sea.' . . . He has written few 'nature poems,' but a keen and sympathetic observation of trees, flowers and clouds is manifest throughout his work. There are, of course, many love poems (the beautiful dedication is perhaps the best) and they are poems of real love, not sordid, not feverish, but strongly whitely passionate."—N Y Times

Reviewed by W: A. Bradley

+ Bookm 39:199 Ap '14 20w

"It is the spiritual energy of Mr. Benét that confirms him as a poet of really exceptional gifts." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 380w

"Gifted with an opulent imagination, and bearing a staggering load of the stuff of poetry on his shoulders, he makes us a little to conscious of the burden, and does not quite succeed in so ordering his expression as to escape turgidity. Now and then he achieves restraint and clean-cut form." W: M. Payne

+ Dial 56:67 Ja 16 '14 880w

"For the whole book we may well be grateful; it is a book of real poetry, musical, imaginative, vigorous. Mr. Benét's second book will be better, but 'Merchants from Cathay' is good enough to make all friends of American poetry glad." Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 18:683 N 30 '13 900w

"The author shows a quaint originality of fancy and a definiteness of feeling and point of view that win respect and give pleasure. Occasionally tapestry-like in mere decorativeness of effect, and in sentiment often short of the thrilling, the verses are in no case shamefully weak and now and then yield the surprise of discovered beauty."

+ No Am 198:887 D '13 200w

"If his jewels are not all in proper settings, if they are bundles of precious stuffs littered about carelessly, it is well to remember that Mr. Benét is still writing with the lavishness of his first youth. He possess versatility, power and an astonishing sense of rhythmic values."

+ R of Rs 48:754 D '13 400w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Author's craft. *75c (4c)
Doran 14-14556

Believing that the author must see before he can write, Mr. Bennett devotes his first essay to the subject of Seeing life. Writing novels is his theme in the second; Writing plays in the third. As an author of both novels and plays he is qualified to discuss the technique of both, and he holds that it is easier to write plays than novels; altho he would "sooner get seventy-and-seven novels produced than one play." In the final essay, The artist and the public, he comes to the defence of the pot-boiler and upholds the artist who works to please the public.

"Interesting and illuminating to the general reader who wants to be informed of the author's craft."

+ A L A Bkl 11:110 N '14

"Interesting not for any help that it would give the young aspirant, but for the sidelights that it throws upon Bennett himself." Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:568 Ja '15 150w

"In every line Mr. Bennett's philosophy of the art of novel-writing carries with it the assurance of the experienced practitioner. It is obvious that while he takes himself seriously, he is never too serious, and that at every moment he believes thoroughly in the mission of the novelist to describe, to record, to entertain." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 19 '14 980w
+ Dial 57:344 N 1 '14 450w

"A curious blend of wisdom and folly."
+ Ind 80:210 N 9 '14 200w

"Frank and interesting essay, by a man whose experience fits him to speak."

+ N Y Br Lib News 1:155 N '14 40w
+ N Y Times 19:402 S 27 '14 220w

"Written in such an arresting and picturesque way that it will appeal to readers who are not particularly interested in the subject."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:300 D '14 40w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. From the log of the Velsa. il *$3 (7c) Century 14-19193

A description of a yachting voyage along the coasts of Holland, Belgium and France, into the Baltic, and along the east coast of England. There are pictures by E. A. Rickards, who accompanied the author, and by Mr. Bennett himself. The voyage was a leisurely one and the voyagers stopped off long enough in the various towns, including Amsterdam, Brussels, Bruges, and Copenhagen, to see the life of the cafés and streets as well as of the water fronts. The five parts into which the work is divided are: Holland; The Baltic; Copenhagen; On the French and Flemish coasts; East Anglian estuaries.

+ A L A Bkl 11:168 D '14

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin
Bookm 40:425 D '14 420w

"The whole book is extremely entertaining and the pictures by E. A. Rickards, some of which are in colors, add greatly to the value of the volume."

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 16 '14 780w

"From the log of the Velsa' is as jaunty as 'Your United States' and less self-conscious; and, if the strongly dramatic quality of the Paris and London sketches is generally lacking, there is instead a delightful rambling informality, a rich variety of experience, and a fine zest for those 'pleasant average sights' that for most of the world, exemplify the adventure of living." E. K. Dunton

+ Dial 57:504 D 16 '14 1650w
+ Ind 80:413 D 14 '14 60w

"The book will remind many readers of Stevenson's 'Inland voyage,' tho the tone of its humor is scarcely equal to that of its predecessor."

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 200w

+ N Y Times 19:531 N 29 '14 120w

"Mr. Bennett's book is made attractive with pictures by E. A. Rickards and a frontispiece in color by Mr. Bennett himself. The descriptions are delightful."

+ Outlook 108:900 D 16 '14 130w
R of Rs 50:757 D '14 160w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Liberty! a statement of the British case. *25c (4½c) Doran 14-19008

In part 1 Arnold Bennett outlines the causes of the war as they appear on the surface—the murder of the Austrian archduke and the ultimatum to Serbia; in part 2 he discusses the real causes, those which lie below the surface, German militarism and the German national ideal; in part 3 he presents a "New conception of war" and states the final case for Great Britain, that she is fighting for liberty—the right of every individual to call his soul his own.

N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 250w

Outlook 108:816 D 9 '14 40w

BENNETT, ARNOLD. Price of love. il *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 14-10073

There are six characters in this five towns story who are important in its action and who will be remembered after the book it closed. They are Mrs. Maldon and Rachel, Louis and Julian, Mr. Batchgrew, and Mrs. Tams. Mrs. Maldon is a gentlewoman of the five towns, Rachel is her lady help, Louis Fores and Julian Maldon are her nephews, Mr. Batchgrew is her solicitor, and Mrs. Tams is her charwoman. The story turns upon the loss of a roll of bank notes which Mr. Batchgrew left in Mrs. Maldon's keeping and which mysteriously disappeared between an evening and a morning. But it is not the bank notes themselves that the author interests us, but in the state of mind of Louis Fores, who knows most about them, and in the reaction of Rachel, then Louis's wife, when she learns the truth.

+ A L A Bkl 11:30 S '14 *

+ Ath 1914:2328 O 3 500w

+ Atlan 114:529 O '14 100w

"There is no use in pretending that this is a big book, for it is not. But it has possibilities, which the author somehow failed to follow up." F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:679 Ag '14 6800w

"To the reader who remembers 'The old wives tale,' 'Clayhanger,' 'Denry the audacious' and 'Hein with the high hand,' Mr. Bennett's latest novel will be an emphatic disappointment. It possesses, of course, many of the emphatic Bennett qualities, but it lacks many of the best of them." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 1000w

"An excellent example of what a first-class craftsman may do with a little material." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 56:505 Je 16 '14 170w

+ Ind 79:106 Jl 20 '14 120w

+ Nation 99:17 Jl 2 '14 600w

"The Arnold Bennett 'boom' is over—and this is good for the world and better for Mr. Bennett. His art has lost none of its distinction, but it has mellowed; today he makes no startling photographs of humanity, but sympathetic interpretations."

+ N Y Times 19:241 My 24 '14 1050w

Reviewed by W. D. Howells

+ No Am 200:918 D '14 270w

+ Outlook 107:370 Je 13 '14 110w

Reviewed by Norman Bryce

Pub W 86:551 Ag 22 '14 470w

Sat R 118:sup10 O 24 '14 370w

+ Spec 113:502 O 10 '14 1650w

"Fairly interesting 'Five towns' story. Skilful treatment of a slight, unoriginal plot."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:191 Jl '14 30w

BENSON, ALLAN LOUIS. Our dishonest constitution. *$1 (2c) Huebsch 14-13030

An arraignment of the inefficiency of our constitution and of the personalities in the convention that framed it. The author shows the fundamental unfitness of this instrument for the democratic ideals of the American people, and then sketches a constitution under which the people may become self-governing. Each part of his outlined constitution is in successful operation somewhere in the world. A closing chapter tells in plain, clear terms what socialism is. It is defined as a program combined with a passion, a program that can bring about social justice.

Ind 79:32 Jl 6 '14 60w

+ N Y Times 19:391 S 20 '14 850w

"Mr. Benson's appeal is to the emotions rather than to the intellect. Some of his proposals deserve an advocacy more distinctly thoughtful than that which he has undertaken."

+ Pol Sci Q 29:544 S '14 250w

R of Rs 50:249 Ag '14 230w

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER. Where no fear was. *$1.50 (3½c) Putnam 14-9523

Of psychological and metaphysical value this volume traces to their lurking places a weird variety of fears that goad men from babyhood to old age. Mr. Benson tells us the shapes these fears take, interrogating his memory throuout, where they find us most vulnerable, and what their uses have been in the progress of the human race; he illustrates the lurking fear in the lives of Dr. Johnson, Tennyson, Ruskin, Carlyle,

BENSON, ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER—Cont.

Charlotte Brontë and John Sterling; finally he advocates simplicity, affection and serenity as all powerful qualities with which to combat innate fear.

+ A L A Bkl 11:18 S '14

+ Ath 1914,1:551 Ap 18 900w

"The contents of 'Where no fear was,' comes pretty near, in its treatment of an intangible but very real subject, the rich cream of the essayist's earliest literary production." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p10 Je 6 '14 1150w

"We find him entertaining, save when he ventures out of his depth by daring to discuss such problems as sin and hell."

+ Cath World 100:687 F '15 100w

"Helpful and suggestive and eminently readable chapters."

+ Dial 57:57 Jl 16 '14 300w

"Humanly, frankly told, a helpful and consoling book."

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 30w

"This is a book to be placed beside such earlier volumes as 'The altar fire' and 'The gate of death.'"

+ Nation 99:285 S 3 '14 270w

"His book is rather inadequate as a serious study and unconvincing in the remedies it suggests. Its interest is chiefly in the recollection of his own experiences and those which lie within the range of his sympathy and discernment."

+ Pittsburgh 19:294 Jl '14 110w

"Another delightful book of Benson essays—the sincerity of the author and the freedom with which he gives us glimpses of his own heart give a double charm to his work."

+ R of Rs 36:250 Ag '14 220w

"Mr. Benson has tracked down the fears of all ages and kinds of men, putting them to rest with good sense, making them vanish in the serenity of his pages."

+ Sat R 117:441 Ap 4 '14 670w

"Mr. Benson has a great gift of sympathy. The reading of his book is calculated to relieve the torment of the fearful."

+ Spec 112:638 Ap 18 '14 1450w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Dodo's daughter. *$1.35 (1c) Century 13-17336

Mr. Benson has written many novels but on the title-page of most of them he is described as "the author of 'Dodo.'" That novel was published twenty years ago; this book is its sequel and in it the Dodo whom we left in her twenties appears just as vivacious, just as loquacious, just as fascinating in her forties. Nadine, the daughter, a very modern girl, differs from her mother in type, but between the two there is a deep sympathy and perfect understanding. The book tells two love stories and leaves Dodo happily married to Jack whom she so heartlessly jilted in the year 1893.

"Their dialogue is sprinkled with good things. As a matter of fact the setting of these gems often jars on our nerves as badly as does the bad setting of real jewellery on the nerves of one of Mr. Benson's male characters. Their speech is, however, self-revealing, and few novelists nowadays can claim so much."

+ Ath 1914,1:493 Ap 4 600w

"It is 'smart,' cynical, flippant, for the first two hundred and fifty pages. Nothing really naughty happens, but Mr. Benson works industriously to make us think that something of the sort may take place. Suddenly the story takes a twist. It reforms and leads a better life as abruptly as if it had been to a revival and 'got religion.'" E. L. P.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 4 '14 1100w

"The story aims too evidently at recording the coarse sayings and doings of the English fast set, so that the reader is bored rather than interested."

+ Cath World 99:690 Ag '14 180w

"The whole book is full of brilliant conversation on all kinds of subjects."

+ Lit D 48:1119 My 9 '14 230w

"'Dodo's daughter' is a readable book, and it is plain that Mr. Benson has mellowed with the years, but it is not as clever either as 'Dodo' or as some of the other novels that he has written in the interim."

+ Nation 98:575 My 14 '14 400w

"'Dodo's daughter' is a kind of glorified nonsense, but has the juice of life in it, and it has the power of making you feel entirely content as you read. One would like a new Dodo every year. Lacking that, this new Dodo will probably be read and reread as often as was the earlier volume. The lovers of Dodo may be a selected class, but they are not inconsiderable in number, and they will grow in bulk considerably during the ensuing months." Hildgarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:130 Mr 22 '14 1350w

"But there is not great harm in Dodo; nor is there in the younger set now introduced, except that they rather tire and displease by their strained efforts to appear 'blasé' and clever."

+ Outlook 107:46 My 2 '14 156w

"The reader will not be disappointed with the sequel."

+ R of Rs 49:627 My '14 200w

+ Spec 112:918 My 30 '14 170w

"The humor of 'Dodo's daughter' is of a sort to appeal to mature rather than youthful readers, and as has been suggested some of the dialog is audaciously frank."

+ Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 720w

BENSON, EDWARD FREDERIC. Winter sports in Switzerland. il $4 Dodd

"Every one going to Switzerland for the first time in winter wants hints on the particular form of sport which he intends to pursue; and here he can find excellent advice on curling, on the four kinds of tobogganing commonly practised in Switzerland, highly technical information about skating, gossip about ice-hockey, practical suggestions about ski-ing, and directions as to the best equipment for each of these winter games. . . . The difference between the English and the international styles of skating is well pictured, and the places where each is the fashion are all set down. Mr. Benson also tells of the particular advantages of Mürren, Montana, Villars, Grindelwald, and many other places, and, without going into excessive detail, says enough to help new hands to choose the place they are looking for."—Ath

+ Ath 1913,2:622 N 29 370w

"A very good book Mr. Benson has made of his comment upon sports and their uses."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 11 '13 200w

"Not only is he informing, he is able to convey the zest which the topics demand."

+ Nation 97:534 D 4 '13 200w

"A notable book, both as a piece of literature and as an exposition of the phases of ski-ing, tobogganing, &c."

+ N Y Times 18:701 N 30 '13 60w

"Mr. Benson is well equipped for the work, but he has his faults."

+ Sat R 117:84 Ja 17 '14 900w

"An intermittently amusing book, marred here and there, it is true, by wearisome descents into an elaborate jocularity, but giving on the whole a spirited account of the pastimes of a Swiss winter. Many of the photographic illustrations are excellent, but Mr. Fleming Williams's three-colour process plates suffer from the usual faults of this blatant and colour-blind device."

+ Spec 111:1127 D 27 '13 150w

BENSON, HENRY KREITZER. Industrial chemistry for engineering students. il $1.90 Macmillan 13-26706

The chapters of this book are developed from the author's lecture notes for courses in industrial chemistry for second year engineering students. His aim thruout has been "to describe from the standpoint of chemistry, the more common materials used in the various branches of engineering. Emphasis is accordingly laid upon the occurrence, the mode of manufacture, the properties, and, to a limited extent, the uses of the various materials. . . . The work presupposes a knowledge of elementary physics and general chemistry." (Preface)

"This book is one of the best of its type and should have a successful career as a textbook."
+ Educ R 47:532 My '14 80w

"The presentation is clear and readable, and the selection of matter shows care and judgment. The work will seem unbalanced in a few spots to many readers, though this is not a serious matter."
+ Engln N 71:649 Mr 19 '14 320w

"The book is suitable not only for students but also for a more general class of readers. The book is timely and readable and should be useful."
+ Engin Rec 69:84 Ja 17 '14 220w

"Most of the descriptions of plant and apparatus are too brief to indicate the way in which the apparatus works, and in many cases a diagrammatic representation would have been much more illuminating than reproductions of photographs of the outside of the machines. Apart from this defect, which would be corrected by a good lecturer, we have nothing but praise for the book. The chapters on hydraulic cements are particularly good, and there is also a good description of industrial alloys."
+ Nature 94:167 O 15 '14 400w

BENSON, ROBERT HUGH. Initiation. *$1.35
12 (1c) Dodd 14-4263

A story of vicarious sacrifice and of the sins of the fathers visited upon their children. Sir Nevill Fanning of the story suffers from an hereditary disease, yet this affliction, bequeathed him as the harvest of his father's dissipations, is not to be looked on as a curse, according to Father Benson, speaking thru one of his characters, since it enables the son to expiate the father's sin and to make easier the way of his soul in the after life. Sir Nevill is an ordinary, likable young Englishman, who falls in love with a girl who seems to possess great sweetness and charm. Part of his initiation into an understanding of suffering comes with the revelation of her true character.

"It will give to non-Catholic readers some idea of the true Catholic faith."
+ A L A Bkl 10:323 Ap '14

"The interest of the story never flags. All, in fact, that the novelist's art can fairly be expected to do has been done to embellish a thesis which in itself the reviewer can only qualify as repellent."
+ Ath 1914,1:225 F 14 470w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper
+ Bookm 39:324 My '14 820w

"Father Benson's sympathetic touch has succeeded in making this religious theme ring true and convincing, though the action takes place in the midst of a gay and happy set of English people in the present day."
+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 550w

"The story furnishes an admirable instance of the absorbing interest that a purely religious theme can create in fiction when developed by a sympathetic and experienced hand."
+ N Y Times 19:96 Mr 1 '14 500w

"Despite its somewhat sombre subject, Monsignor Benson has written an attractive story."
+ Sat R 117:245 F 21 '14 400w

"The book is extraordinary interesting, especially for people who like a drama of the spirit than a drama of action."
+ Spec 112:573 Ap 4 '14 320w

BENSON, ROBERT HUGH. Oddsfish! *$1.35
12 (1/2c) Dodd 14-18880

For the time of this, his last novel, Father Benson has chosen the reign of Charles II. Roger Mallock, a young Englishman educated in Rome, is sent home by the pope to act as a secret and unofficial representative of the church at the English court. He serves his church faithfully, but also serves his king; for Charles the Second, in spite of all his weaknesses, wins the young man's allegiance and his love. Roger comes to England in the year 1678 and first finds himself involved in court intrigues at the time of the "popish plot." After that he remains in the thick of things up to the time of the king's death. His love for his cousin Dorothy and her tragic death give the story another line of interest.

A L A Bkl 11:172 D '14

"A distinctly readable book."
+ Ath 1914,2:329 O 3 200w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper
+ Bookm 40:552 Ja '15 300w

"No one has grasped as has Monsignor Benson the secret of the true historical novel."
+ Cath World 100:539 Ja '15 600w

+ Ind 81:213 F '15 80w

"'Oddsfish!' is his masterpiece."
+ Nation 100:53 Ja 14 '15 420w

"It is not the author's acquaintance with history that makes 'Oddsfish!' a notable book. It is his ability, never before more apparent, to infuse life into history, to recreate the loves, hates, and aspirations of a bygone time. Even more than his other historical novels, 'Oddsfish!' is a vivid, and, in the best sense of the word, a realistic work."
+ N Y Times 19:486 N 8 '14 730w

+ Outlook 109:348 F 10 '15 200w

"As is the case in most historical novels, it is hard for the reader to take much interest in the imaginary personages of the book, but the portrait of the King himself is well drawn and life-like."
+ Spec 113:641 N 7 '14 40w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 3 '14 500w

BERESFORD, CHARLES WILLIAM DE LA
12 POER. Memoirs of Admiral Lord Charles Beresford. 2v il *$7.50 (4c) Little
(Eng ed 15-1384)

Admiral Beresford, author of this two-volume work of reminiscences, was born in 1846, but he begins the story of his life with his introduction to the navy, which he entered as a cadet in 1859. His active career covered the Egyptian war and the Soudan war, both of which are written of in detail. There are also accounts of many cruises on H. M. S. "Undaunted" and on other ships, and many reminiscences of men famous in naval affairs and in politics. The whole presents a view of the evolution of the British navy during a half century. Lord Beresford retired from active service in 1911.

"One opens the book expecting it to be full of good stories, and one is certainly not disappointed, though some of the tales have the flavour of age."
+ Ath 1914,2:350 O 10 1800w

"His two-volume autobiography is packed with events of interest, sometimes of thrilling interest, and often of great historic importance. His life is, in very truth, a part of his country's history."
+ Dial 58:87 F 1 '15 600w

"This work is interesting from several points of view."
+ Lit D 50:249 F 6 '15 300w

"It would not be fair to think of what Lord Charles has written as merely a collection of good stories. He is too good a seaman not to have left his mark on the British navy, and in his later chapters, as some of his light-heartedness is worn off by years, he gives many a valuable hint to sea commanders."
+ N Y Times 19:561 D 13 '14 1750w

"There is no better reading than a good biography, and here is one of the best. As a reference book on the development of modern navies and naval strategy during the half-century (1859-1909) in which Lord Charles Beresford was in active service, this work will be much sought after by naval men and military experts generally, while as a story of human experiences it will appeal to all who love tales of action and adventure in the open air afloat and ashore."

BERESFORD, C. W: DE LA POER—Cont.

+ — Outlook 108:1019 D 30 '14 1500w

+ R of Rs 50:753 D '14 170w

"We have no doubt of the welcome his memoirs will receive from all those who value a vigorous chronicle of deeds and can appreciate the spirit of one who is a fighter at all seasons. No romance of the sea could be as inspiring as this true tale lighted by the fires of immortal youth."

+ Sat R 118:397 O 10 '14 1900w

"Lord Charles Beresford's autobiography is as jolly as a novel by Lever."

+ Spec 113:636 N 7 '14 2100w

BERESFORD, JOHN DAVYS. House in Demetrius road. $1.30 (1c) Doran 14-16198

Martin Bond comes to the house in Demetrius road as secretary to Robin Greg, whom he is to help in writing a book on socialism. On his first visit he is conscious of an atmosphere about the house that is repellent and during the first few days of his stay he decides more than once to give up the position and leave, but stays on, held by the personality of Greg and perhaps, too, by a growing interest in Margaret Hamilton, Greg's sister-in-law who acts as his housekeeper. Some weeks pass before he learns the secret of the house, that its master is a dipsomaniac, drinking steadily and secretly, and never, even in his most brilliant moments, wholly sober. Then follows the fight of Martin and Margaret to redeem the man, a fight in which they are hopelessly defeated.

"A depressing story."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:121 N '14

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup739 My 23 280w

"It is seldom that a novel of such sustained power, such unquestioned magnitude may be adequately and comprehensively summed up in so few words. It is a grim, compelling, relentless, book. A depressing book undoubtedly."

F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:437 D '14 480w

Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 820w

"Mr. Beresford has written truly and well in every respect save one. His story needs an important figure, such a figure as Greg was apparently intended to be, but is not." Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:300 O 16 '14 270w

"A remarkable analysis of character, ruthless yet not without fineness of feeling and insight."

+ Ind 80:174 N 2 '14 70w

"The house in Demetrius road' is a well-wrought, well-finished, strong, and artistic whole—a novel whose craftsmanship and whose realism alike compel admiration."

+ N Y Times 19:410 O 4 '14 730w

"The book is for those who love the quieter forms of literature, whose interests are aroused not by stirring and exciting episodes but by the interplay of human character. To such this novel will make its inevitable appeal."

+ Sat R 117:576 My 2 '14 500w

Spec 113:140 JI 25 '14 130w

BERGSON, HENRI LOUIS. Dreams; tr. with an introd. by Edwin E. Slosson. $60c (6c) Huebsch 14-12215

A brief analysis of dreams which first explains the mere mechanism of a dream. Professor Bergson shows that our faculty of sense perception, instead of being narrowed during sleep, is extended in its field of operations, and that the phantom memory, incarnated in the sensation which brings to it flesh and blood, becomes a being with a life of its own, a dream. Next follows an explanation of the difference between perceiving and dreaming, of the psychological characteristics of the sleeping state. The author shows that in the dream the same faculties are exercised as during waking, but that they are in a state of tension in the one case and of relaxation in the other; that the dream consists of the entire mental life minus the tension, the effort and the bodily movement. The essay closes with an explanation of how the peculiar relaxation of the mind in the dream accounts for the preference given by the dreamer to one memory image rather than others.

"Clear and understandable and interestingly written, but very slight."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:5 S '14

Ath 1915,1:35 Ja 9 250w

"As an 'aperçu,' clear, succinct, to the point and purpose, the essay will delight the attentive public which M. Bergson has made his own."

+ Dial 56:510 Je 16 '14 150w

+ Outlook 107:520 JI 4 '14 1700w

R of Rs 50:118 JI '14 200w

"Well worth reading."

+ Spec 113:676 N 14 '14 30w

"The latest and one of the most fascinating examples of Bergson's brilliant simplicity of thought and statement. Excellent introduction of the translator."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 4 '14 1450w

BERLE, ADOLPH AUGUSTUS. Christianity and the social rage. $1.50 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-18385

The author feels that in our zeal for social reform we go to extremes that defeat our own ends. "The border line between rational growth and progress and fanatical rage, is not always observed, with the result that what begins by being a perfectly sound protest against onerous conditions and iniquitous principles eventuates often in a mere rage for change." Contents: The true nature of Christianity; Miracles or money; Religion and taxation; The moral distrust of social institutions; Quacks abound; Social justice on the curbstone; Feminism; Israel in bondage; Democracy; Health; Religious education; Universities and social advance; Civilization must be born again.

"Stirring, but unsatisfactory."

+ — Ind 80:210 N 9 '14 40w

N Y Times 19:503 N 15 '14 130w

"The volume as a whole reveals its author as a keen student of social problems, wielding a trenchant pen, and having the courage of his convictions. His vocabulary is always picturesque and abundant, and if he seems to overstate his case in any particulars, it is doubtless in the hope that by getting his readers to aim at the highest mark they may be able actually to hit something above the lowest. The book is never dull; the author has injected his own personality of vivacity and moral earnestness into every page."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 24 '14 1100w

BERLIOZ, HECTOR. Critical study of Beethoven's nine symphonies; tr. by Edwin Evans. il $1.50 Scribner 14-30191

"The essays in this little volume are taken from Berlioz's famous collection of his newspaper articles entitled 'A travers chants.' . . . The essays include not only those on the nine symphonies, but also one on the trios and sonatas, on the Paris production of 'Fidelio' in 1860 and an ironical article entitled 'Beethoven in the rings of Saturn.'"—N Y Times

"Treatment is musically but not technical. Good literary style and translation."

+ A L A Bkl 10:261 Mr '14

"A very welcome little volume."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 22 '13 100w

"The analyses of the symphonies are brief, readable, and helpful; one must agree with the translator, Edwin Evans, that they depict their leading features more vividly than any other treatise on the same subject."

+ Nation 98:219 F 26 '14 250w

"The reader of today will find matter in these essays sometimes fantastic, sometimes exaggerated; but their intense conviction, the fervid admiration of Beethoven they embody, the acute and illuminating interpretation that abounds in them, will give delight and stimulus."

+ N Y Times 18:741 D 14 '13 230w

BERNHARDI, FRIEDRICH VON. Britain as Germany's vassal; tr. by J. Ellis Barker. *$1 (2c) Doran

A book published a year after the appearance of "Germany and the next war." Bernhardt's thesis is that a nation cannot stand still politically. It must either rise or decline. Germany has now reached a turning point. "The question which calls for an answer is whether Germany is to become a world-power or is destined to decline." To become a world-power she must subjugate England; then it will be possible to crush France and to dominate the continent of Europe, North Africa and Asia Minor. The original title of the work was "Our future—a word of warning to the German nation," but, the translator says "the title I have selected seems to summarize more correctly its chief contents as it affects this country [Great Britain]." As an appendix the translator has added selections from the "Kriegsbrauch," the German handbook on the customs of war, and from the regulations adopted at the Hague Conference of 1907 and subscribed to by Germany, saying, "They will enable every reader to form for himself an opinion as to the character and legality of Germany's actions based on the highest international and German authorities."

Nation 100:113 Ja 28 '15 1300w

N Y Times 19:562 D 13 '14 1350w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

Pub W 87:179 Ja 16 '15 630w

"Those who are eager to find the essence of the German militarist prophet's theories will find it embodied here in its extreme form."

+ R of Rs 51:123 Ja '15 90w

Spec 113:893 D 19 '14 650w

BERNHARDI, FRIEDRICH VON. Cavalry. *$1 (1½c) Doran 14-20241

A technical work on cavalry in war and peace. The editor's note says: "General von Bernhardt is best known in England as a writer of the 'jingo' school which has done so much to produce war, but this is only one side of his literary activity. He is also a writer of recognized ability on the theory and practice of modern war." Field-marshal French who writes the preface to the book commends it highly, saying "[It] contains sound doctrine on this subject [tactics of cavalry] and will show to every one who has an open mind and is capable of conviction by reasoned argument how great is the future rôle of cavalry."

Outlook 108:815 D 9 '14 50w

R of Rs 50:762 D '14 100w

BERNHARDI, FRIEDRICH VON. How Germany makes war. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 14-18506

A complete translation of General von Bernhardt's book is published in England with the title "On war of to-day." This is a condensed version. In it "some of the more technical details of the original work have been omitted; but nothing has been set aside which affects the writer's main argument. . . . The book is a revelation of German policy as well as of German ideas on the way in which war should be conducted with modern weapons and under the new conditions of to-day." (Editor's preface) Contents: The secret of modern war; Armies of masses; Force and numbers; Modern arms and appliances; The importance of cavalry; Self-reliance, method, and command; Attack and defence; The object and the conduct of war; Time, space, and direction; Principles of command; Naval warfare; Retrospect and prospect.

A L A Bkl 11:181 D '14

Ath 1914.2:387 O 17 180w

Reviewed by E. B. Krehbiel

Dial 57:380 N 16 '14 200w

+ Ind 80:242 N 16 '14 90w

"Interesting, authoritative book."

+ N Y Times 19:421 O 11 '14 3000w

Outlook 108:815 D 9 '14 40w

"Bernhardt is positively charming. He writes exceedingly well—clearly, straightforwardly, and frankly, as befits his soldierly calling. He knows a good deal of history, is usually logical, and possesses a large fund of common sense. Not only does he know thoroughly the modern science of warfare but he knows how to write intelligibly for his lay readers." Carlton Hayes

+ Pol Sci Q 29:695 D '14 80w

"In its present form it cannot but fail to be of wide interest. The translation is happy in that it is clear and uninvolved, marred only occasionally by the use of compound words which are not English in cases where such literal translation is not especially illuminating."

H. Dick

+ — Pub W 86:2017 D 12 '14 730w

R of Rs 50:633 N '14 200w

BERNHARDI, FRIEDRICH VON. On war to-day; auth. tr. by Karl von Donat. 2v il *$5 Dodd

"The author has set himself the task of bringing the teaching of Clausewitz, if not completely up to date, at any rate much further in the direction of modern times than that most philosophic of writers on war had done. It is an ambitious project, and if adequately carried through will satisfy a demand which has long been felt in this country at any rate. For there is no one book in existence which will enable a young officer to gain a clear view of every phase of war and of the machinery by which war in our time is conducted." (Sat R) "General von Bernhardt is actually little concerned either with morals or with economics. His ideal is, nevertheless, no low one. Essentially, its basis is high confidence in the mission of Germany as an instrument of civilization—a factor, as he puts it, in the development of mankind. It is the expression of national aspirations, honourable in themselves, whatever may be said of the methods by which it is proposed to give effect to them." (Spec) A condensed version of this book has been published with the title "How Germany makes war."

N Y Times 19:586 D 27 '14 430w (Review of v 1 and 2)

+ — Sat R 115:523 Ap 26 '13 2000w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"A definite attempt is made to evaluate the factors which the most modern innovations have introduced into war, and the result is interesting. But the manner is somewhat pretentious, and the matter is not epoch-making."

+ — Spec 110:sup125 Ja 25 '13 730w (Review of v 1)

BERNHEIMER, CHARLES SELIGMAN, and COHEN, JACOB MORRIS. Boys' clubs. *$1 Baker 14-18676

"Of this book it may truthfully be said: It shows on every page that the writers know boys. It recognizes the changing interests of boys at different ages under different conditions. It is especially suggestive of the part a club leader may play through use of authority, fellowship, and personality largely by the method of suggestion and advice in making groups of different kinds of boys successful. It gives specific and wise suggestions as to constitutions, bylaws, minutes, financial and other reports, topics and programs."—Survey

Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 130w

"Altogether the book is genuinely suggestive to leaders of boys' clubs. It has no index."

H: W. Thurston

+ — Survey 33:340 D 26 '14 170w

BERRY, MARY, and BERRY, AGNES. Berry papers; being the correspondence hitherto unpublished of Mary and Agnes Berry (1763-1852); comp. by Lewis Melville. il *$6 (4c) Lane 14-17637

Mary Berry was born in 1763, her sister Agnes in 1764. They were not of aristocratic birth and had little claim to distinction except that won by themselves thru their friendships with famous people. This volume is made up of letters written by them or addressed to them, and among their correspondents are Horace Walpole, John Playfair, Maria Edgeworth, the earl of Hardwicke, and other of the great men of the later eighteenth century.

BERRY, MARY and AGNES—Continued.

"Mr. Melville's book fails in attractiveness. Of his industry and toil there is undoubted proof. He has printed, it seems to us, little of interest for the student, and, for the most part, still less that can pleasingly engage the attention of the ordinary reader."

— Ath 1914.2:227 Ag 29 1250w

"These reminiscential letters give interesting pictures of the life of the time, and in spite of their prolixity and often obscure allusions, present to us new views of the notable characters with whom the two sisters came in contact. The glimpses of the master of Strawberry hill which are here given for the first time will endear this book to all lovers of Horace Walpole."

+ — Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 920w

"The correspondence of the Hon. Mrs. Damer and of General O'Hara with Mary, is the best and most readable part of the new volume." Garland Greever

+ — Dial 57:450 D 1 '14 1750w

"Mr. Melville's editing does not inspire one with entire confidence. The notes are fairly full and judicious. The price of the book is out of all reason, simply exorbitant."

+ — Nation 99:498 O 22 '14 1450w

+ N Y Times 19:515 N 22 '14 250w

— + No Am 200:789 N '14 750w

Sat R 117:772 Je 13 '14 650w

Spec 112:860 My 23 '14 1150w

"All in all, for those who are interested in the study of the manners, using the word in its largest sense, of another period, both in England and in Paris, this collection will prove of unfailing fascination."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 15 '14 720w

BERTRAND, LOUIS. Saint Augustin; tr. by Vincent O'Sullivan. *$3 (3c) Appleton

A14-1680

The author sees in St. Augustin a man much like ourselves, who lived in a time much like our own. "Upon even a slight familiarity with his books we recognize in him a brother-soul who has suffered, felt, thought, pretty nearly like us." He divides Augustin's life into five periods and tells his story in five parts as follows: Days of childhood; The enchantment of Carthage; The return; The hidden life; The apostle of peace and of Catholic unity; Face to face with the barbarians. It is with the life of Augustin not with his philosophy that the author is concerned, and his book is conceived and written, as he says, in "a spirit of veneration for the saint and for the great heart and the great intellect that Augustin was."

"More artistic and sympathetic than McCabe's 'St. Augustine.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:27 S '14

Boston Transcript p7 My 6 '14 300w

"The author of this work catalogues the chief events in St. Augustine's life, but shows no grasp whatever of St. Augustine's teachings. Occasionally the writer's estimates are unwarranted by the facts."

— + Cath World 109:554 Ja '15 180w

"Mr. O'Sullivan's version is close and accurate, fitting the original like a glove. It is readable, too, and for the most part fairly idiomatic; but somehow the flavor of the French seems rather to have evaporated in the translation, as is so often the case. Mr. McCabe's work has nothing like the art and the human insight which distinguish M. Bertrand's almost passionate pages."

+ — Nation 98:699 Je 11 '14 1000w

"A narrative that is vital in its theme and vivacious and moving in the manner of its telling. M. Bertrand makes his subject stand forth, a very real and fascinating man."

+ N Y Times 19:323 Ji 26 '14 260w

"The translation is good, but a little jaunty. We think M. Bertrand might have touched the details of Augustin's voluptuous years, especially those spend in 'Carthago Veneris,' with a lighter hand."

+ — Sat R 117:677 My 23 '14 900w

BEST, HARRY. Deaf. *$2 (2c) Crowell 14-7526

"The aim of the present study is to ascertain as far as possible the standing of the deaf, or, as they are so often called, the 'deaf and dumb,' in society in America, and to examine the treatment that has been accorded to them—to present on account of an element of the population of whom little is generally known. . . . In other words, the design may be said to set forth respecting the deaf something of what the social economist terms a 'survey.' " (Foreword) Part 1, considers The position of the deaf in society; Part 2, Provision for the education of the deaf.

"The fullest compendium of information about deaf mutes yet published."

+ A L A Bkl 11:8 S '14

"There will be many who will welcome this well-written and comprehensive account."

+ Ann Am Acad 55:276 S '14 100w

"It is the most complete manual on the subject that we have in English, and will prove invaluable to the physician, the educator and the social worker."

+ Cath World 99:685 Ag '14 220w

"Mr. Best covers ground hitherto wholly neglected. The book will be found valuable to all who are interested in the subject of the deaf and dumb."

+ Chaut 72:727 My 16 '14 80w

"As a study of his subject so far as our country is concerned, Mr. Best's treatise is the fullest yet published; and what is more, its tone throughout—its refusal to consider the deaf as objects of charity—is sane and wholesome, and promotive of self-respect and self-help in the handicapped but not disabled sufferers from the lack of one of the five senses."

+ Dial 57:24 Ji 1 '14 400w

"The author writes with wide sympathy and full understanding of his subject, his treatment of which is exceedingly satisfactory."

+ Educ R 48:424 N '14 50w

"The book is too lacking in life and color to make new friends for that handicapped class, and it impresses one as being hardly authoritative enough to be of great value to those already informed on the subject with which it deals."

— + J Pol Econ 22:923 N '14 190w

"A scientific study of great interest. Those who read this story will inevitably come into a distinctly friendly attitude toward the unfortunate with whom it deals."

+ N Y Times 19:253 My 31 '14 130w

"Scholarly work."

+ R of Rs 50:253 Ag '14 70w

Reviewed by E. A. Fay

+ Survey 33:272 D 5 '14 400w

BETTS, GEORGE HERBERT, and HALL, OTIS
* EARLE. Better rural schools. il *$1.25 (1c)
Bobbs 14-1734

The rural school, for so long a victim of changing social and industrial conditions, is coming into its own. This volume "aims to interpret the rising tide of interest in the rural school, and to offer whatever help it may in guiding the energy in fruitful lines." It is written for rural teachers, administrators, normal schools and study classes. It discusses such topics as the demand for better rural schools, the curriculum, old and new, the teacher and the rural school, consolidation and rural school efficiency, rural school administration and the outlook for rural education. Bibliography and index.

"A comprehensive, constructive treatment of the whole rural school situation, carefully planned and full of practical suggestions."

+ A L A Bkl 10:353 Je '14

"A most instructive and readable book."

+ R of Rs 49:637 My '14 220w

"This volume is an exhaustive and thorough treatment of the problems of the rural school in America. An especial merit of the book is the wide range of actual rural problems that are taken up and treated in a sensible, suggestive, and constructive manner." J. C. Werner

+ School R 22:704 D '14 400w

BEVAN, EDWYN ROBERT. Stoics and sceptics. *$1.50 Oxford A14-6

This book "contains four chapters, of which the first two deal with Zeno and the Stoa, the third with Posidonius, and the fourth with the Sceptics; and it was originally given to the world in the form of lectures delivered in Oxford during Hilary term last year." (Eng Hist R) "The theories which Mr. Bevan discusses arose in an age whose complexity resembles that of modern times more than any other period of antiquity; its doubts and difficulties were not unlike our own. Mr. Bevan explains and criticizes the Stoic and Sceptic doctrines with an appreciation of historical conditions and a freshness and incisiveness of style which we have learned to expect in English work." (Class J)

"We welcome Mr. Bevan's lectures because they present the old learning in an attractive light, and often in a new point of view."

+ Ath 1913,2:451 O 25 220w

"Mr. Bevan's book is unusually free from technicalities and will attract many readers who are repelled by some of the more formal treatises on Greek philosophy." S. N. Deane

+ Class J 9:228 F '14 430w

"We may be permitted to thank the author for the pleasure and benefit derived from a perusal of its inspiring pages." W. A. G.

+ Eng Hist R 29:333 Ap '14 90w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

+ Hibbert J 12:653 Ap '14 160w

+ Nation 98:668 Je 4 '14 330w

"Mr. Bevan has produced a fascinating and illuminating book on a subject of perennial interest. He has something of Professor Gilbert Murray's persuasive manner in argument, his scrupulous candour, and also his sudden boldness of suggestion. His whole method of exposition, in its clarity of style and justness of proportion, could scarcely be bettered, and he has a happy gift of making unforgettable phrases."

+ Spec 111:613 O 18 '13 1550w

BEYSCHLAG, FRANZ HEINRICH AUGUST; VOGT, JOHAN HERMAN LIE; and KRUSCH, PAUL. Deposits of the useful minerals and rocks; their origin, form, and content; tr. by S. J. Truscott. 3v v 1 il *$5 Macmillan 14-20298

"Much discussion has arisen from time to time, especially in courts of law, with regard to the strict definition of the term 'mineral.' It is, therefore, not without reason that the title of this work is sufficiently broad to include all natural substances of utility derived from the mineral kingdom whether conforming to the definition of a mineral or to that of a rock. Several scientific authorities have cooperated in the production of this treatise. Two of the authors—Dr. F. Beyschlag and Dr. P. Krusch—are attached to the geological survey in Berlin, the former being the director; whilst the third author—Dr. J. H. L. Vogt—is the distinguished authority on ore-deposits in the University of Christiania. . . . The authors follow a rather complex system of classification in which four fundamental groups, with numerous subdivisions, are recognized. On the whole, their scheme makes apparently a fair approach to a natural classification, inasmuch as it seeks to bring together those ore-deposits that are believed to be genetically related." (Ath) Volume 1 takes up: Ore-deposits in general; Magmatic segregations; Contact-deposits; Tin lodes; Quicksilver lodes.

"Comprehensive treatise. His task as translator has been performed with conscientiousness and judgment."

+ Ath 1914,2:333 O 3 900w

"The work is done with characteristic German thoroughness and will undoubtedly prove of the greatest value as a reference book to those readers who are unable to read the original German text."

+ Engin N 72:1289 D 24 '14 60w

"Excellent version of a well-known German work."

+ Spec 113:470 O 3 '14 80w

BHARTIHARI. The satakas, or Wise sayings of Bhartihari; tr. from the Sanskrit with notes by J. M. Kennedy. (Oriental philosophy ser.) *$1.25 (4c) Luce, J. W.

The translation of the "Satakas" is preceded by an introductory chapter on Indian philosophy. "The 'Satakas' fill about two-thirds of the book and contain the reflections upon life expressed in brief sentences of Bhartihari, who, after reigning as King of Malwa for seven years of indolence and licentiousness, somewhere in the early centuries of the Christian era, sickened of worldly pleasures . . . and gave himself up to meditation and devotion." (N Y Times)

"The lyrics of Bhartihari are so presented in an English garb by Mr. Kennedy that most readers will have some difficulty in finding in them either poetry or wisdom."

+ Ath 1913,2:180 Ag 23 450w

"Mr. Kennedy is well known as a competent scholar, but we confess that we prefer his translations to his history."

+ Nation 98:367 Ap 2 '14 200w

"Mr. Kennedy's version is clear, but lacks lyrical or epigrammatic nerve."

+ Nation 98:437 Ap 16 '14 120w

"Mr. Kennedy, who is an authority upon the religions and philosophies of the East, has supplied a useful and interesting preface to his collection of these 'Wise sayings'—more useful and interesting to the ordinary reader, indeed, than the rest of the book."

+ N Y Times 19:71 F 15 '14 200w

BIBLE. Old Testament. Apocrypha. Apocrypha<sup>1</sup> and pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament in English, with introd. and critical and explanatory notes to the several books; ed. in conjunction with many scholars, by R. H. Charles. 2v *$19.25 Oxford A14-1167

In this work "we have for the first time a substantially complete collection, in English translation, of the non-canonical Jewish writings of the period extending from 200 B. C. to 100 A. D." (Nation) "The only other critical edition of the apocryphal and pseudepigraphal literature as a united whole was issued at Tübingen in 1900, under the able editorship of the late Prof. E. Kautsch; but the present work has been constructed throughout on a much fuller scale, and the new editors of the different parts had, moreover, besides the benefit of more recent discoveries and investigations, the chance to profit from the labours of their German and other immediate predecessors." (Ath)

"It is surely not too much to say that the student of the Old and New Testaments is in duty bound to acquaint himself with this extra-canonical literature, and that it is indispensable to the proper pursuit of his task. For the texts themselves, in English form, and for the study of their place and meaning, these two volumes must for a long while maintain their place as the standard edition." F. C. Porter

+ Am J Theol 18:106 Ja '14 5300w

"It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of this great and scholarly work."

+ Ath 1913,2:9 Jl 5 1900w

"The contributors to the result are men who have in most cases won their spurs by previous publications in this field. The general oversight of the editor is, of itself, a sufficient guaranty of the high quality of the work as a whole and in detail." J. M. P. Smith

BIBLE—Continued.

+ Bib World 43:59 Ja '14 1500w

Nation 97:570 D 11 '13 470w

"The result is a triumph not alone for English typography but for English scholarship. This is a piece of work which one has hitherto been accustomed to see done best by Germans." Joseph Jacobs

+ — N Y Times 18:681 N 30 '13 2250w

BIGELOW, JOHN, Jr. American policy: the Western hemisphere in its relation to the Eastern. il $1 (2½c) Scribner 14-8235

A broad treatment of American policies and of the political problems of the United States and all America. There is a clear exposition of the Monroe doctrine which distinguishes between the extension and the perversion of it; which shows its bearing and that of Washington's farewell address upon present national affairs; and which expounds the theory of Pan Americanism in its true relation to the Monroe doctrine.

"It is concise, logical, charmingly definite in places, well balanced, and filled with epigrammatic generalizations which by their trenchant crispness compel attention. The work is characterized by sober common-sense."

+ Nation 100:114 Ja 28 '15 1600w

"Packed with information and rich in suggestion."

+ N Y Times 19:261 Je 7 '14 1100w

+ R of Rs 49:755 Je '14 110w

BIGGERS, EARL DERR. Love insurance. il 10 $1.25 (1½c) Bobbs 14-16206

A farce of the type that will make over easily into a stage version. The fantastic plot starts with the inspiration of a young English nobleman to take out insurance against the possibility that his bride-to-be,—lovable and rich, of course,—might change her mind before the wedding date. Although the Lloyds office takes the risk, it makes the mistake of sending a handsome young American to Florida to watch the young lady and then begins a week of most marvelous incidents. Only an amusing farce could weave in such complications as a real heir to the nobleman's title, a bogus heir with a publicity agent, a blackmailer, a diamond thief on the trail of the family jewels, and an actress with compromising love letters. It is the man from Lloyds who cleverly foils the harm intended by each and who at the eleventh hour receives his deserved reward.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 500w

Dial 57:342 N 1 '14 90w

Reviewed by J. L. Gilder

Ind 80:404 D 14 '14 60w

+ — Nation 99:499 O 22 '14 350w

"There are several cleverly managed surprises, and a nice little twist to the ending."

+ N Y Times 19:398 S 27 '14 920w

"The book is clever and ingenious from cover to cover. Best of all, it is always good humored so that the reader lays it down with the one regret that he has come to the end." H. Dick

+ Pub W 86:548 Ag 22 '14 470w

BILGRAM, HUGO, and LEVY, LOUIS EDWARD. Cause of business depressions as disclosed by analysis of the basic principles of economics. $2 Lippincott 14-5337

"In the opinion of the authors, fluctuations in business are due to the fact that our money is limited, partly by natural conditions and principally by law. As a remedy it is proposed to remove the legal limitations of the use of credit as a medium of exchange which prevents the supply of money from meeting the demand. The following methods are advocated: 1, Broaden the range of securities acceptable from the agents of issue by the treasury as a basis for bank notes. Liens on real property are suggested as desirable for this purpose; 2, Notes issued on this basis to be redeemable in gold from a fund in the custody of the government. Such fund is to be supplied by the banks applying for currency; 3, An insurance fund to secure deposits, to be created by requiring all banks to deposit, say 2 per cent of their capital and surplus; 4, The formation of a credit clearance system by composing societies of business men in their respective localities."—Ann Am Acad

"The book is interesting, well written, and explains with refreshing clearness some of the most controversial economic topics." E. W. Goodhue

+ Am Econ R 4:903 D '14 1000w

"All investigations have failed in the attempt to show conclusively one predominant cause of variations in business generally, and this one is no exception in this respect. It is, however, a very good presentation of the lack of an exchange medium theory and of the defects of the previous currency system in this country." R. Riegel

+ — Ann Am Acad 54:329 Jl '14 450w

"The main contention of Mr. Bilgram, that the phenomenon of interest is brought about by legal limitation of the medium of exchange, is a fallacy. Economists of all schools will agree as to that. Mr. Bilgram has clouded rather than clarified the questions that he discusses. Consequently it were better to leave the book unread."

— Nation 98:757 Je 25 '14 970w

Reviewed by W. C. Mitchell

— Pol Sci Q 29:539 S '14 650w

BILSE, OSWALD FRITZ. Life in a garrison town: the military novel suppressed by the German government. 10th ed $1 (1½c) Lane

This book when published in Germany some ten years ago brought about the court-martial of its author, an officer in the German army. A translation of the story published at that time is now reissued with a new Foreword by Theodore Dreiser and the original introduction by Arnold White. It is a revelation of a petty, sordid existence, filled with malicious scandal and intrigue.

Boston Transcript p10 Ja 9 '15 160w

"It is less a novel than a tract, and less a tract than a lampoon."

— Nation 100:80 Ja 21 '15 500w

"All in all, Lieut. Bilse's book is best described with one adjective—'nasty.' It is that from cover to cover, and leaves a nasty taste in the reader's mouth long after he has closed it."

— N Y Times 20:53 F 14 '15 380w

Springfield Republican p5 F 4 '15 230w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. For the Allinson honor. il $1.30 (1½c) Stokes 13-20340

The Allinsons an old and respected business firm in England have undertaken to develop a Canadian mine. Andrew Allinson, the youngest member of the family is sent out to Canada as its representative. He knows little of the business affairs of the house, for, since his father's death, they have been largely controlled by his brother-in-law, but when he is once arrived on the scene, he learns quickly enough that there has been crookedness somewhere in the previous management. He learns that the stockholders have been deluded, that they have put their money into a worthless proposition, and, for the Allinson honor, he tells the truth about it. Then when a prospecting tour proves successful and he discovers a paying lode, he more than makes good all their losses by making them shareholders in the new mine.

+ — Ath 1913,2:381 O 11 45w

"Mr. Bindloss has scarcely taken advantage of his own excellent materials. Giving himself a series of absorbing incidents, he fails to make his story absorbing enough."

+ — N Y Times 19:429 O 11 '14 400w

"This story of character-building in admirably told."

+ Outlook 108:440 O 21 '14 70w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"A fairly entertaining story."

— + Sat R 116:531 O 25 '13 30w

"There is a permanent quality of entertainment in Harold Bindloss's romances that finds a perfect example in his latest book."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 380w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. The intriguers. il $*1.30 (1½c) Stokes 14-3902

Another Anglo-Canadian romance of the type Mr. Bindloss has made popular. Dick Blake who has left the British army with a cloud of suspicion hanging over him, is knocking about Canada. He meets a girl from home who believes in him, but feels himself separated from her by an impassible barrier, and, joining an American adventurer, he goes up into the little explored regions of northern Canada. Circumstances call him to England where an opportunity to clear his name is offered, but because accepting it would mean a cousin's disgrace, he refuses. His sacrifice makes a strong appeal to the girl, who knows the truth, and she overcomes his scruples against allowing her to share his lot.

"Readable."

+ A L A Bkl 10:323 Ap '14

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 18 '14 350w

"The novel will please all those who have enjoyed the author's previous books."

+ N Y Times 19:109 Mr 8 '14 300w

BINDLOSS, HAROLD. League of the leopard. il $*1.30 (1½c) Stokes 14-11243

The Leopards are a league of negro magicians who rule over a large section of country in the heart of Africa. White men enter their country at the peril of their lives. One Englishman who had outwitted the band had penetrated to their river of gold and had mapped its location; but, upon returning to the civilized coast to plan mining operations, he is stricken with fever. He bequeaths his claim and his map to a fellow Englishman on condition that he hunt down and kill a certain member of the negro band who had treacherously murdered the prospector's companion. Of such ingredients the story is compounded, not omitting the usual element of romance. Mr. Bindloss is successful with his tropical setting and atmosphere.

"Action multiplies in every chapter, and the hairbreadth escapes will keep awake the most jaded reader."

+ Nation 99:75 Jl 16 '14 140w

"It is a pity that, with all his good material and his many gifts for fiction, Mr. Bindloss should have developed a mannerism in his writing that with each succeeding novel becomes more and more stilted, wooden, and uninteresting."

+ — N Y Times 19:282 Je 21 '14 320w

BINYON, LAURENCE. Auguries. $*1 Lane 14-4946

"Mr. Binyon not inappropriately dedicates his new book to Mr. Robert Bridges, for he has much of the Laureate's exact scholarship and fine conscience. He calls it 'Auguries,' meaning thereby, as we read him, that he offers not robust and rounded verses, but guesses and half-caught visions, 'shadowy recollections,' the work rather of a seer than a 'maker.'—Spec

"Mr. Binyon's poems strike deep because they have in them the solid worth of honest thought and feeling, the lure of imaginative description, and the appeal of original and melodious verse forms."

+ A L A Bkl 10:384 Je '14

"Mr. Binyon shows the constructive deliberation, the faculty of governing, sustaining, and distributing his emotion, without which ideas of this altitude, though they can be stated, have no poetic substance. Viewed formally, his composition has dignity and a broad outline. As soon as a poem opens we feel that we are under the sure guidance of a pilot who knows the voyage and will see us safely to port."

+ Ath 1913,2:620 N 29 550w

"Rather listless volume." W: A. Bradley

— Bookm 40:207 O '14 130w

"The delicate art of Mr. Binyon with its apparent fragility, is surcharged with the deepest significance of spiritual moods." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 220w

"This poet's work is not unlike that of the Laureate in its dignity and restraint."

+ — Lit D 48:708 Mr 28 '14 450w

"The verse is highly, minutely, pliantly expressive, but it lacks, in the accepted phrase, viscerata."

+ — Nation 99:248 Ag 27 '14 140w

"A book that will appeal not only to the cognoscenti, but to the wider multitude who love not art less, but life more."

+ N Y Times 19:354 Ag 23 '14 750w

"The lover of fine poetry will miss a great deal if he neglects to read 'Auguries.'"

+ R of Rs 50:246 Ag '14 90w

"His simplest verses carry a weight of thought."

+ Spec 112:sup675 Ap 25 '14 300w

BIRD, RICHARD. Gay adventure. il $*1.25 (1½c) Bobbs

A story filled with extravagant absurdities and delightful mysteries. Lionel Mortimer, in a cheerful state of poverty in which even the trivial price of a week's board is lacking, sits day-dreaming. A runaway horse, a beautiful maiden, a grateful father figure in the dream. His awakening is sudden; both the horse and the maiden appear on the scene; Lionel springs to the rescue, and the adventure has begun. To tell what comes next would be to spoil the story, for its charm lies in its tantalizing little uncertainties. Is Lukos a figment of Beatrice's imagination, or is he a real Turk? Are Winifred and Beatrice one and the same girl or are they twins? These questions are answered only in the last chapter. One other question remains unanswered: Did Lionel ever go back to pay his board bill? One hopes that he did.

"It has almost a Chestertonian flavor, but it is devoid of that author's excessive brilliance, which is apt to induce a feeling of weariness rather than refreshment."

+ Ath 1913,1:381 Ap 5 50w

"If anyone who can write good English and has a moderate sense of humor should take a dozen groups of people, write a series of the most absurd adventures he could imagine, set them down in alternating chapters and then try to unite them into something like a plot, the result would be something like this latest work of Mr. Bird."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 230w

"The story moves along swiftly with a gay, rollicking irresponsibility that is often droll and amusing, but sometimes palls a little because of its lack of refinement. The author has fertility of invention and he writes with inexhaustible good humor and sense of fun. But he is sadly lacking in good taste, and his slap-dash style is often offensive."

+ — N Y Times 19:77 F 15 '14 300w

"The book certainly has no dull pages and lives up to its title by being gay, amusing and irresponsible from cover to cover." H. Dick

+ Pub W 35:1063 Mr 21 '14 300w

"Ingenuous and agreeable farce."

+ Spec 110:310 My 10 '13 4w

BIZZELL, WILLIAM BENNETT. Judicial interpretation of political theory. $*1.50 (2½c) Putnam 14-790

This book, presenting "a study in the relation of the courts to the American party system," is made up in the main of a series of lectures delivered at the Illinois college of law in 1910 and used later by the extension department of that institution. There were nine lectures in the series with titles as follows: Judicial power over legislative enactments; Theory of constitutional construction; Nature of the federal union; Imperialism v. expansion; The theory of internal improvements; The theory of the United States bank; The theory of legal tender; The theory of a protective tariff; The theory of an income tax. To these the author has added two chapters on: The theory of direct legislation and The theory of the recall of judicial decisions, and a chapter in conclusion. There is an index of cases and a general index.

BIZZELL, WILLIAM BENNETT—Continued.

"The volume is discursive, is for the most part based upon the works of previous writers, and contains numerous errors."

— Am Pol Sci R 8:670 N '14 100w

"Dr. Bizzell's work can hardly have been designed to serve the academic world. It is aimed rather to meet the needs of the reader whose study of our constitutional and political history has not been intensive. For such a reader it will prove a useful isolation of material. His mind will be refreshed by its familiar truths, while ordinary alertness will protect him from its more palpable errors." R. E. Cushman

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:708 D '14 1000w

BJÖRNSON, BJÖRNSTJERNE. Plays; tr. with an introd. by Edwin Björkman. *$1.50 Scribner 14-4129

"The present volume, forming the second series of three plays by Björnsen which Mr. Björkman has translated, contains 'Love and geography,' 'Beyond human might,' which is the second part of 'Over Evne,' and 'Laboremus.'" —Nation

A L A Bkl 11:18 S '14

+ — Dial 56:507 Je 16 '14 400w

"All interesting and significant dramas, no one of which, we believe, has been rendered into English before. It is not entirely pleasant to students of Björnsen to have him introduced to American readers through Mr. Björkman's imperfect English. The translator has not yet rid himself of certain disagreeable Teutonisms, and does not appreciate the difference between colloquial idioms and downright vulgarisms."

+ — Nation 99:51 Ji 9 '14 1000w

"The plays themselves are, as works of art, very imperfect. There is much in them to admire—sincerity, amusing or moving traits of character, bright flashes of idealistic fervor; but they fatally lack form. They lack that higher dramatic form due to concentration, elimination of the essential; they lack the firmly marching directness of the great plays which grip the imagination and hold it fast. Baldly, they are too often tedious, and tedium in any art is the unpardonable sin." L. W. Dodd

— + Yale R n s 3:597 Ap '14 250w

BLACK, HENRY CAMPBELL. Treatise on the law of income taxation under federal and state laws. $4 Vernon law bk. 13-24835

"A systematic and comprehensive treatise on the law of income taxation, under both the federal statute and the laws of the various states, is now offered to the public by Mr. Black. The applicable authorities have been diligently collected, and the text is supported by an exhaustive citation of the extant decisions, both of the federal and state courts, as well as by references to many English, Scotch, Canadian, and other decisions. . . . An appendix contains the full text of the act of Congress of 1913 and of the present tax laws of Wisconsin, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Oklahoma and Hawaii, as well as the text of the federal income tax acts of 1862 to 1870, that of 1894, and the corporation excise tax law of 1909."—Boston Transcript

Am Econ R 4:175 Mr '14 60w

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 18 '13 500w

"One of the best books called forth by the Federal income tax law."

+ Nation 99:81 Ji 16 '14 270w

N Y Sun p6 N 1 '13 80w

BLACK, REV. HUGH. Open door. *$1 (2½c) Revell 14-19718

"The purpose of this book is to suggest a certain attitude towards the world and life," says the author. We look upon the world as tho it were permanent and on life as tho it were static, and we are disturbed and saddened when we find there is no permanency, only change. The attitude he would have us assume toward this dynamic world is one of expectancy and courage; new experiences are always before us; new conditions always possible. He writes on: The laws of the open door; The shut door [the past]; The magic door [youth]; The doorways of tradition; The door of opportunity; The last open door. The book has none of what the author calls the "slushy optimism" that maintains a hopeful point of view by ignoring all the facts that seem to contradict it.

+ A L A Bkl 11:196 Ja '15

"The book is one to read in as opportunity offers."

+ Dial 57:510 D 16 '14 170w

+ N Y Times 20:53 F 14 '15 200w

"His previous volumes, full of wise counsel and invigoration as to 'Happiness,' 'Comfort,' 'Work,' 'Friendship,' etc., have here a worthy companion. It will put new meaning into life and its opportunities for every one who is privileged to read the book; and one who samples it in the first chapter will find it too good to throw aside till the last leaf is turned."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 450w

BLACKER, J. F. A B C of collecting old continental pottery. il *$2 (3c) Jacobs (Eng ed 14-14435)

This handbook for collectors is one of the useful A B C series. The author says: "My other books have proved acceptable; may this be more so. It does not pretend to be a complete history of old continental pottery, nor a full and entire description of the various wares included in that category; still it will be very useful to those who need it, and more, it may suggest a fresh field to the collector or to the man who requires a hobby." (Preface) The book is well provided with illustrations; a list of alphabetical marks and monograms, and information concerning imitations and sale prices are given in appendices.

A L A Bkl 11:16 S '14

BLACKFORD, KATHERINE M. H., and NEWCOMB, ARTHUR W. Job, the man, the boss. il *$1.50 (2½c) Doubleday 14-9855

A timely book which sets forth the Blackford plan of employment, the theory of which has been in successful operation for fifteen years. It is a plan of employment, based upon scientific principles, which advocates primarily the perfect adjustment of employee to work which comes from selecting for each job in any organization the one person out of all others who by natural aptitude, training and experience, is best fitted to fill all requirements. The matter of salary is determined by the employer's fixing upon the standard requirements in aptitude, training, experience and consequent efficiency for a given service, then finding some one who meets the requirements and paying him enough to secure his best constructive thought. "The purposes in presenting the book are: first, to set forth the advantages of a definite plan and orderly methods of employment; second, to inspire all who work to study themselves with reference to their vocational fitness; third, to add our voices to those of many others in calling for more scientific vocational guidance of the young; fourth, to arouse interest among all thoughtful people, and especially among parents, employers, teachers, and workers, in the possibilities of character analysis by the observational method." (Preface)

"Interesting, suggestive and popular rather than scientifically complete."

+ A L A Bkl 11:13 S '14

"The book will be especially valuable to those interested in scientific vocational fitness for the young and those who are interested in character analysis by the observational method."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 600w

"The volume can be read with profit by every manager of men."

+ Engin Rec 69:743 Je 27 '14 420w

+ Ind 78:324 My 25 '14 20w

"The book is full of practical suggestions not only for the employer, but also for the worker, for the publicist and for the educator."

+ Ind 79:72 Jl 13 '14 570w

"The plan it presents is sufficiently elastic to meet the needs of a large or a small organization."

+ Nation 99:332 S 10 '14 450w

"Its message must eventually be heard by every large industrial employer."

+ R of Rs 49:755 Je '14 190w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Incredible adventures. *$1.35 (1c) Macmillan 14-19167

Five stories—The regeneration of Lord Ernie, The sacrifice, The damned, A descent into Egypt, Wayfarers—make up this collection. The first is the story of a flaccid, spiritless young nobleman who is vitalized and redeemed by contact with a band of pagan fire and wind worshippers in the Jura mountains. The second tells of a man bowed down and crushed under a weight of sorrow and calamity whose strength is renewed by the mere vision of a perilous ascent in the Alps. The damned describes a country house haunted with the terrible theological beliefs and superstitions of its occupants, a line going back to the ancient druids who had worshipped on its site. The descent into Egypt is the story of an archaeologist whose body became but a living shell so wholly did his mind and soul belong to the past, and the final story is one of the continuance of personality thru the ages. "What is the world but thinking and feeling?" asks some one in one of the stories. "An individual's world is entirely what that individual thinks and believes—interpretation. There is no other." In such a world all adventures are credible.

"The five stories in the present volume exert a peculiar charm."

+ — Ath 1914.2:502 N 14 380w

"Equally successful is he in each of the tales in this collection." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '14 950w

"Such stories as 'The damned' and 'A descent into Egypt' are masterpieces of atmosphere, built up by elaborate descriptions and the magic of an unusually rich style. Over-conscious artistry blunts somewhat the desired effect and the reader becomes more interested in the author's style than in the adventures."

+ — Ind 80:506 D 28 '14 80w

"There are whole consecutive pages where the attention wanders, and where eeriness is dissipated through sheer diluteness. Compression is so vital a necessity, in the short story of mystery, as to be atoned for only by complexity of plot. For the rest, the author is as ingenious as ever, as full of poetic fancies, and as refreshingly original in his treatment of the unseen world. Restraint would come to the author with more attention to dramatic outline."

+ — Nation 99:633 N 26 '14 280w

"It is good to read a book by Mr. Blackwood. He certainly has distinction and scholarship."

+ Sat R 119:16 Ja 2 '15 550w

+ Spec 113:675 N 14 '14 700w

"This book will scarcely appeal to the average reader, but it offers food for discussion to those more serious-minded."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 630w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Listener, and other stories. *$1.35 (1½c) Vaughan, D. C.

Eight weirdly mysterious stories by the author of 'John Silence': The listener; Max Hensig—bacteriologist and murderer; The willows; The insanity of Jones; The dance of death; the old man of visions; May day eve; Miss Slumbubble—and Claustrophobia; The woman's ghost story. They are stories with situations that would seem commonplace but for the Blackwood art that lifts them to a place of distinction. They deal chiefly with subjective states of mind, and the incidents show peculiar or abnormal mental tendencies. In "The insanity of Jones" we have the struggle of a mind obsessed with the idea that the manager of an insurance company in which Jones is employed is the reincarnation of an enemy who tortured him in a past existence, and that he must settle the score. Murder thus becomes a sacred obligation. "The willows" is the best study of the psychology of places that Blackwood has given us. The college sophomore would find it as fine an illustration of atmosphere in the short story as "The man who played upon a leaf" is of setting.

"He makes it clear, both in his matter and his manner that the weird, the awful, the horrible, may be made the objects of a genuine art, and the goal of a discriminating artist." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 1300w

"It must be admitted that this present volume scarcely reaches the heights attained by 'John Silence' and 'The lost valley.' There is in it nothing quite so exquisite as 'The man who played upon the leaf,' although the best story in the book, 'The willows,' would certainly have to be included in any selection of its author's finest work."

+ N Y Times 19:568 D 13 '14 1100w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Lost valley, and other stories. il *$1.35 (1c) Vaughan, D. C. A15-41

A group of haunting tales with a touch of the supernatural that readers of "John Silence" and "Jimbo" have grown familiar with. The title story tells of the soul struggle of Mark and Stephen, twins, "who are not so much one soul split in twain, as two souls fashioned in precisely the same mould. Their characters are almost identical—tastes, hopes, fears, desires, everything." The agony of their loving the same girl is the theme of the tale—the struggle of each to renounce his love for the sake of the other. The real distinction of Blackwood's art is nowhere better illustrated thruout the volume than in his portrayal of Perret "Comment-va," and his mongrel, the outcasts of "The man who played upon the leaf." The depths of the Jura pinewoods shelter Perret from whose haunts he pipes forth to the great god Pan on an ivy leaf held to his lips between tightly closed hands the "clean, strong elemental sounds of nature—especially the crying voices of the wind." Man and dog both seem free of the life of the earth, distinct from the life of man.

"His stories are of things unearthly and of beings and events impossible, but he writes of them with such poetry and such illusive power that no one of us can say, during the reading or after the reading of them, that such things cannot be. Mr. Blackwood does not hypnotize us by his verbal magic. He has no sleight of hand with words. He is no mountebank, no charlatan. He convinces us for all time, and therein lies his literary art and his imaginative power." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 29 '14 1600w

"Some of the stories are grotesque, some fanciful, others instinct with horror, but always there is the artistic restraint, the touch of a genuine poetic feeling which lifts even such a bit of hideous superstition as that which forms the keynote of 'The Wendigo' into the realm of beauty."

+ N Y Times 19:347 Ag 16 '14 700w

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON. Ten minute stories. il *$1.35 Dutton A15-27

"The present volume is made up of brief stories or sketches which have dreamland as their place of being, although the people who act and are reacted upon by strange influences are of our own kind, and are sometimes so real as to be almost prosaic, despite their otherworldly experiences."—Outlook

"Mr. Blackwood's new collection of stories and essays is not wholly worthy of his talents, inasmuch as seven of its twenty-nine items are failures. Others of the stories are reminiscent of his previous work, and narrative occasionally degenerates into an exercise in rhetoric. Nevertheless, there is enough that is good in the volume to make it a charming companion, fit to be used as an illustration of Mr. Blackwood's special worth as a novelist."

BLACKWOOD, ALGERNON—Continued.

+ — Ath 1914.1:377 Mr 14 400w

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 29 '14 100w

"This volume shows a ripening of the manner which began with 'The empty house' and an advance in conciseness of expression and power to focus narrative effects."

+ Nation 99:307 S 10 '14 250w

Outlook 107:877 Ag 8 '14 120w

"Perhaps 'Ten minute stories' do not altogether hold the charm of some of Mr. Blackwood's earlier studies, for he has somewhat departed from his older pathway, and there is a touch of the short semi-scientific sketches of Mr. H. G. Wells about them. But they are as many-mooded as their author, and Mr. Blackwood deftly plays upon high all the strings in the artist's gamut—earnestness and quaintness, comedy and tragedy."

+ — Sat R 117:245 F 21 '14 350w

BLAKESLEE, GEORGE HUBBARD. ed. Recent developments in China. $2.50 Stechert 14-9915

A volume containing the addresses delivered at a conference on China held at Clark university. "There are twenty-two addresses in all by representatives of the United States, England, China and Japan. The different callings are well represented, clergymen, business men, physicians, educators, political reformers, newspaper correspondents, civil service employees, editors, and there is one artist. . . . It is plain that the thing uppermost in the minds of the speakers was that China, and especially the recent developments in China, should be understood in America." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bk1 11:21 S '14

"From the volume as a whole one gains a large amount of valuable information in regard to the causes of the Chinese revolution and a clearer insight into the problems now demanding solution."

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:291 My '14 80w

"The book is full of valuable information about China."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 350w

"There is considerable variation in the character and the quality of the chapters." S. K. Hornbeck

+ — J Pol Econ 22:910 N '14 1650w

"Practically all the contributors have succeeded in setting forth a readable and informing consideration of the chosen subject."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 14 '15 450w

BLAKISTON, ALBAN. Bible of to-day. $1 Putnam A14-2570

"The author first gives a brief survey of the whole field of Biblical study, traces in outline the history of different parts of the Old Testament, showing what causes determined their form and contents and how they came to be combined in one volume to which was attached peculiar sanctity. The New Testament is dealt with upon similar lines. . . . The author concludes that whatever may be the history and the arguments for or against the books that have been included in the canon of Scripture, the vital spiritual experience to which they witness and which appears on the surface of their pages justifies and guarantees their claim to be inspired." — N Y Times

+ — Ath 1914.2:38 J1 11 650w

"A book of this kind requires both scholarship and literary skill, as well as a knowledge of the popular mind. Mr. Blakiston seems to possess these qualifications, and his volume is an excellent handbook of introduction to the subject. It is well balanced and has useful bibliographies." James Moffatt

+ Hibbert J 12:911 J1 '14 130w

N Y Times 19:392 S 20 '14 150w

BLANCHARD, AMY ELLA. Elizabeth, Betsy, and Bess—schoolmates. (Girls' dollar bookshelf) il $1 (1½c) Wilde 13-26566

Elizabeth, Betsy and Bess are three little girls who live in a small village and go together to the village school. Elizabeth is the imaginative and adventurous one of the trio and she sometimes leads her two willing followers into escapades that end disastrously. The story is probably the first of a series.

"A nice story of some nice little girls."

+ N Y Times 13:583 O 26 '13 120w

BLANCHARD, ARTHUR HORACE, and DROWNE, HENRY BERNARDIN. Text-book on highway engineering. il $4.50 Wiley 13-19127

"Notwithstanding that an unusually large percentage of the text is made up of abstracted and quoted matter this volume represents a vast amount of industry and labor on the part of the authors. Its 27 chapters purport to and do fairly well cover the whole field of the design, construction and maintenance of highways and their appurtenances, including, incidentally, much relating to street pavements." — Engin N

A L A Bk1 11:13 S '14

"It will be found to be a veritable cyclopedia, not only for the professional engineer, but for the intelligent general reader in search of the latest information and best current practice on the subject of highways. Notwithstanding the great value and many merits of the book there are numerous details that are open to criticism, and the reader is likely to note evidences of hasty composition, careless expression and inaccurate statements." S. Whinery

+ — Engin N 70:993 N 13 '13 1800w

"The chapter on surveying and mapping, is too elementary and out of place for the practicing engineer, and altogether useless for the student who is given a much more comprehensive training in these subjects in his regular courses in plain and railroad surveying and in the various courses in drawing provided in his freshman and sophomore years. Altogether the book is a fair presentation of the engineering and construction features of highways and city pavements brought up to date and is well worth a place in the highway engineer's library."

+ — Engin Rec 69:234 F 21 '14 800w

BLANCHARD, MARY MILES. Basketry book. il $2 Scribner 14-13390

The author gives twelve lessons in reed weaving. These lessons are preceded by three general chapters on Materials, tools, preparation, etc. In the lessons she gives directions for making work baskets, flower baskets, candy baskets, scrap baskets, etc. The book is well supplied with illustrations and diagrams.

"With so explicit and thoro a guide the amateur by herself could certainly make good headway."

+ Ind 80:478 D 21 '14 80w

BLASHFIELD, EDWIN HOWLAND. Mural painting in America. il $2 (3c) Scribner 13-25030

The Scammon lectures, delivered in March 1912, at the Art Institute of Chicago, form the basis for this book, altho much new material has been added. The following are the subjects discussed: The importance of decoration; Harmony between building commissioner and architect; Importance of experience in the mural painter; Harmony between building commissioner and mural painter; Mutuality between architect and mural painter; Mutuality of mural painters; Significance in mural painting; Fundamental education in art; The importance of culture; Have we as yet a style? Evolution of present practice; Influence of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; Modern technic and present tendency.

"Readable and enlightening."

+ A L A Bk1 10:216 F '14

"Here is a volume containing much sound sense and a good deal of vague, well-meaning eloquence."

+ — Ath 1914,1:533 Ap 11 920w

"He has a bright, vivacious style and frequently makes a point by a cleverly-turned witicism or an appropriate anecdote, and he is sufficiently familiar with the works of the old masters to make valid his criticisms and his praise. The book is every way admirable and can only add to Mr. Blashfield's enviable reputation as a leading painter, a charming writer and a modest and gracious gentleman." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 730w

"Just such a book needed to be written for public enlightenment and admonition, and as an authoritative guide for the average good American citizen who at any time may be chosen to serve on a building commission, but who knows very little about art."

+ Ind 76:342 N 20 '13 1050w

"We wish his book a wide reading."

+ Nation 98:68 Ja 15 '14 1050w

"It is all good reading for anybody at all interested in the general subject."

+ N Y Sun p8 D 20 '13 1250w

"His book is well thought out, well written, and inspired by knowledge and sound feeling, and so simple in argument and explanation that it might very well serve as a textbook for the public."

+ N Y Times 10:78 F 15 '14 950w

"The appearance of Mr. Blashfield's book on mural painting is an important event of the season in the art world."

+ Outlook 106:864 Ap 18 '14 1250w

+ R of Rs 49:377 Mr '14 90w

"Mr. Blashfield's message is as much for the general public, as it is for the art student. Throughout the book we feel the author's culture and profound knowledge of the world's best art as well as his modern attitude toward the artist's present problems." J. H.

+ School Arts Magazine 13:550 Mr '14 250w

BLATCHFORD, ROBERT. Germany and England: the war that was foretold, 60c Clode, E. J. 14-21043

A book made up of "a series of articles by an English socialist leader, first published in 1909, vainly warning his countrymen of impending war that has since come and vainly bidding them be prepared to defend Belgium and France as well as themselves, supplemented by an article printed last August on the significance of the war."—Outlook

Ind 80:476 D 21 '14 170w

"A wholesome book for Americans to read."

+ Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 60w

BLEASE, WALTER LYON. Short history of English liberalism. *$3.50 Putnam (Eng ed 13-22306)

"Mr. Blease, who is a prominent suffragist and was formerly on the staff of the Manchester 'Guardian,' traces the history of Liberalism in British politics during the last hundred and fifty years. Writing as a strong Liberal, he will naturally appear to his opponents to be biased and partial; but he is far fairer to his opponents than the average politician, and, appealing as he always does to fundamental principles, his book has a philosophical value which raises it above the ordinary party manifesto. He starts by defining the essential nature of Liberalism, and in doing so insists that its opposite is not Conservatism, but Toryism. That which Liberalism combats is not the desire to preserve existing institutions, but rather the habit of mind which refuses to regard individuals as ends in themselves and as entitled to perfect liberty of self-expression."—Int J Ethics

"I have noticed one or two misprints, a few errors of fact, and occasionally some careless statement or expression, but it would be disproportionate to chronicle them here. The book is well printed, it is written in clear and interesting fashion, and is well worth reading. The index is too scanty to be of much service." E: R. Turner

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:117 F '14 650w

"A courageous criticism of modern Liberalism, no less than an historical survey."

+ Ath 1913,1:618 Je 7 100w

Boston Transcript p8 N 22 '13 570w

"A most skilful tract for the times." Carl Becker

+ — Dial 56:18 Ja 1 '14 1200w

"He has a definite set of principles which he applies as a touchstone to all acts of the Liberal party, sometimes approving, sometimes condemning; and, whether we agree with him or not, we cannot but admire his consistency, and, on the whole, his fairness." J. B. Payne

+ — Int J Ethics 24:245 Ja 14 470w

"Even if Mr. Blease's work does fall short of perfection, he has given us a valuable study, particularly valuable in its wealth of quotation, which lines up for us in black and white the position of nearly all the eminent English statesmen of the nineteenth century." D. A. MacGibbon

+ — J Pol Econ 22:704 Jl '14 780w

"A vigorous and idealistic, but not unbiassed, analysis of English politics."

+ — Nation 98:113 Ja 29 '14 670w

"Such a theme as this can be treated satisfactorily only from the philosophical point of view. Mr. Blease, however, writes as a party man."

— N Y Times 19:95 Mr 1 '14 1050w

R of Rs 49:369 Mr '14 120w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 25 '14 300w

BLEYER, WILLARD GROSVENOR. Newspaper writing and editing. *$1.65 Houghton 13-20836

"As its name implies, it keeps to the treatment of a 'story' in a newspaper office after it has been gleaned by the reporter, and does not say much about the process of gathering it. Thus it discusses that part of newspaper work in which theoretical instruction is most useful."

... Though Dr. Bleyer gives one excellent example of how a complete 'story' is pieced together from a number of different sources, he does not venture on the problems presented by the necessity of tackling men and women of many contrasting positions and temperaments. He does, however, deal at length with the way in which facts once attained may be written up."—N Y Times

"The best up-to-date treatise from a practical standpoint and written from a large experience in teaching journalism."

+ A L A Bkl 10:133 D '13

"Though it is designed as a text-book, and to that extent suffers in attractiveness to the general reader, its pages should prove illuminating to the very many persons whose knowledge of newspaper making is limited and whose conception of its difficulties and achievements is hardly sympathetic."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 14 '14 300w

"The book should serve as an efficient guide for any one entering newspaper work."

+ Ind 78:257 My 11 '14 200w

"Will take rank in its own province as one of the best."

+ N Y Times 18:728 D 7 '13 520w

"Luciferous and sensible volume."

+ Spec 113:599 O 31 '14 50w

BLOEM, WALTER. Iron year: tr. from the German by Stella Bloch. *$1.25 Lane A14-1068

"The 'Iron year' is 1870, and the book presents an exceptionally graphic portrayal of certain parts of the Franco-Prussian war, beginning with the breaking off of diplomatic relations in the quiet village of Ems, and ending with the surrender of Strassburg." (N Y Times) "It is the story of a German general's daughter who falls in love with a French staff officer just as the war breaks out. She becomes a nursing sister at the front; and subsequent interest centres round her work in tending the wounded, her efforts to discover her lover, and the doings in the war of various characters who cross and recross the pages." (Ath)

BLOEM, WALTER—Continued.

A L A Bkl 10:369 My '14 +

"It is a striking book and has been excellently translated."

+ Ath 1914:1:267 F 21 280w

"The book will have a vogue, because, just at present, no matter how reluctantly, we cannot keep war out of our thoughts. 'But in times of peace 'The Iron year' is a book to turn away from, because it is too vivid, too cruel, too openly and insolently rejoicing over the downfall of the enemy." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:170 O '14 600w

Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 280w

"The book, so far as one can judge from what seems to be, on the whole, a fairly good translation, is exceedingly well written. It is vivid, graphic, dramatic. The people in it are flesh-and-blood human beings, and, though the scheme of following first one and then another necessarily makes the narrative a little disconnected, it is none the less absorbingly interesting. And whether or not one agrees with the author's conclusion that 'all this had to be,' it is certain that he has given us a noteworthy book."

+ — N Y Times 19:108 Mr 8 '14 1050w

"This book which outrages all our sympathies would be well nigh intolerable but for its extraordinary naivety."

+ — Sat R 118:351 S 26 '14 800w

"The original German must apparently have been of unusual literary quality, and the translation, in spite of some faults, is to be praised as strikingly good."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ap 16 '14 680w

BLUEMEL, CHARLES SIDNEY. Stammering and cognate defects of speech. 2v *$5 Stechert 13-14756

"The first volume is called 'The psychology of stammering' and the second reviews critically many of the current systems for the treatment of speech defects. The first hundred pages of volume 1 are employed in a popular exposition of such psychological facts and opinions as the author may later need in his description of the etiology of stammering. . . . Volume 2 includes an excellent account of current systems of training, treated under the chapter titles: Respiration, Vocalization, Articulation, Verbal exercises, Mechanical appliances and Psychological methods."—Science

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 18 '14 260w

"A very substantial contribution to mental pathology."

+ Educ R 48:428 N '14 20w

"While the author's positive theory is thus open to doubt, his presentation of the facts of stammering is eminently sane and illuminating; and the same can especially be said of his second volume, in which he summarizes and criticises the numerous devices that are practiced upon the stammerer with the promise of curing him."

+ — Nation 99:50 Jl 9 '14 750w

"Painstaking volumes."

+ N Y Times 18:635 N 16 '13 200w

+ School R 22:704 D '14 400w

Reviewed by Stevenson Smith

+ — Science n s 39:469 Mr 27 '14 350w

BLUNDELL, MARY E. (SWEETMAN) (MRS. FRANCIS BLUNDELL) (M. E. FRANCIS, pseud.). Story of Mary Dunne. *$1.35 Longmans A13-2044

"The story of Mary Dunne may be most quickly and readily defined as the story we might have had in Elizabeth Robins's 'My little sister,' if the little sister had ever come back to tell it." (Bookm) Mary is a simple Irish girl who goes to England to look for work. At Liverpool she is entrapped and sold into white slavery. Escaping from her prison, she attempts suicide, but is rescued and taken to the hospital where kindly friends interest themselves in her. With the return of her lover from America a happy ending is achieved.

"The book is unquestionably a sincere and earnest piece of work, and in spite of its frankness is consistently dignified, and at times poignantly tragic. And yet, the book leaves an unpleasant taste behind it; and one questions the correctness of the psychology of the lover's attitude." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 38:539 Ja '14 600w

"Altogether we do not find it easy to justify the existence of this book, being of opinion that in common with eugenics and their kindred subjects, it is a matter of private and individual handling; and likely to make an impression, and bear fruit for good, only under these conditions. Doubtless the book has been written with the best intentions, but the tale itself is depressing and hopeless, disturbing in its effect on the youthful reader, and even on maturer ones."

+ — Cath World 98:542 Ja '14 300w

"The very ingenuousness of the tale, its touches of frank melodrama, are marks of sincerity. The earlier chapters of the story with their picture of a family of Irish peasants, have a simplicity and charm which are later sacrificed to the exigencies of the painful theme."

+ — Nation 98:11 Ja 1 '14 250w

"It is written with the author's accustomed grace and ease of style, and the portraits of country people (this time Irish people) are charmingly sketched."

+ Spec 111:106 Jl 19 '13 130w

BLUNDELL, PETER. Oh, Mr. Bldgood! *$1.25 (1½c) Lane 14-7633

All the action, and there is much of it, takes place on board the "Susan Dale," a steamer bound from Ceylon to Hong Kong with a cargo of pianos, sewing machines and pickled pork. Against official regulations the ship is carrying an assorted lot of passengers, two of them young women, one the ship's owner, Mr. Bldgood, to whom all the others appeal in time of need, is the chief engineer, and it is with consternation that he learns, shortly after they are well under way, that instead of its supposed cargo of pianos, etc., the ship carries munitions of war, and that she is headed for Port Arthur instead of Hong Kong. Out of the cross purposes of owner, passengers, and crew, many amusing complications arise.

"The book adopts throughout a tone of deliberate facetiousness, and is like a watered solution of Mr. W. W. Jacobs without his spontaneity and rough characterization."

+ — Ath 1914:1:sup465 Mr 28 80w

Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 130w

"The suggested things happen, but after so many and so long approaches have been traversed that only the reader with patience and time can have journeyed over them. And if he tries to skip he will not know when he strikes the exciting places what they are about."

+ N Y Times 19:196 Ap 19 '14 400w

"Humour of a quality which we associate with Mr. W. W. Jacobs's nautical stories is here abundantly present, and is deftly mingled with thrilling adventure."

+ Spec 112:574 Ap 4 '14 25w

"It is more facetious than farcical, the comedy depending on the manner in which the characters express themselves rather than on any inherent humor in the situation. In this particular the author is quite successful. The characters are vivid and respond to the demand of their roles with a nice sense of restraint and never overdo their parts."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 400w

BLUNT, REGINALD. In Cheyne Walk and thereabout. il $3 Lippincott A14-2878

"Mr. Reginald Blunt has made himself an authority on Chelsea, its history and traditions, its greater and lesser celebrities. His latest work on his favorite theme . . . presents to view some of the less familiar characters and old-time haunts of that historic portion of the Thames riverside. . . . Necessarily the great Sir Hans Sloane and the Carlyles and Whistler and others of high renown play some part in the narrative. . . . The author reproduces four unpublished letters from Mrs. Carlyle to her maid Jessie (now Mrs. Broadfoot of Thornhill) and adds details furnished him by Mrs. Broadfoot herself—all illustrating the amiability of maid Jessie's master and mistress, and correcting certain widely prevalent misconceptions. . . . Noteworthy illustrations from scarce old photographs and engravings contribute to the interest of the book."—Dial

- + Ath 1914,1:196 F 7 300w
- + Boston Transcript p9 My 23 '14 700w
- + Dial 57:23 Jl 1 '14 530w

Reviewed by E. L. Pearson
+ Nation 98:692 Je 11 '14 400w

"A delightful bit of literary and historical rumaging."

- + N Y Times 19:303 Jl 5 '14 250w

"Mr. Blunt knows his Chelsea well, and gossips pleasantly about its eminent inhabitants in the past. But we shall do him no injustice if we say that the gem of his book is the chapter which includes some characteristic letters of Mrs. Carlyle to her housemaid, Jessie Heddlestone."

- + Spec 112:398 Mr 7 '14 200w

BLYTHER, SAMUEL GEORGE. Fakers. $1.35 (1½c) Doran 14-18459

The fakery of Mr. Blythe's story are the professional politicians who have the interest of "the people" at heart. Chief of them is T. Marmaduke Hicks who started life as a dyed-in-the-wool Republican, supporter of McKinley and the gold standard, but who has no difficulty in changing his principles at a moment's notice and becoming a "life-long" upholder of Jeffersonian Democracy. He makes the change on the advice of Senator Paxton (Republican) who sees, even before McKinley's second election, that the tide must some time turn, and all through his career as a rising young Democratic leader, Hicks has the advice and counsel of the Republican senator back of him. The aspiring young man marries a faker as clever as himself and rises to dizzy heights, but in the end his trickery is exposed.

"A story which should be read for the story of the inside of seamy politics, as well as for the pure enjoyment to be found in its humorous picture of life."

- + Boston Transcript p25 N 25 '14 380w

"The story is told in an amusing way and with considerable ingenuity. Its characters are cleverly drawn and so are their surroundings. Mr. Blythe, moreover, writes as one who is perfectly familiar with his subjects."

- + N Y Times 19:517 N 22 '14 350w

BLYTHER, SAMUEL GEORGE. Old game; a retrospect after three and a half years on the water-wagon. *50c (7½c) Doran 14-11573

A frank, breezy recital of one man's experience in giving up the drinking game. He says: "When a man first stops drinking he is likely to become censorious. That starts him badly. Also he is likely to become serious. That marks him down fifteen points out of a possible thirty. He flocks by himself. . . . He pins medals all over himself. . . . Then he wakes up. . . . Personally I found the most advantageous course to pursue was to drop the high-falutin air of extreme virtue that oppressed me and depressed my friends for the first few months and consider the whole thing as a joke." The closing chapters estimate the time saved for things that count when one ceases to pay the toll exacted by liquor.

- + A L A Bkl 11:6 S '14 ✦
- + Boston Transcript p7 Ag 1 '14 210w

"Has no literary merit but some value as personal testimony."

- + Cleveland 6:73 S '14 40w
- + N Y Times 19:303 Jl 5 '14 260w

BLYTHER, SAMUEL GEORGE. Price of place. $1.25 (1½c) Doran 13-22286

A study of Washington life and of a man's slow rise in power. James Marsh, from the time of his coming to the capital as an unknown representative, advances steadily toward prominence, and he does not know until, late in his career, he tries to assert his own individuality that his apparent advance has been in reality retrogression, that with every step upward on the political path he has let go some vestige of his manhood. The socially ambitious wife, who thinks she is assisting in his career, is one of the influences that advance his deterioration.

"The writer evidently knows his subject, and the book would serve as a fine warning to an honest man to be wary, if he enters political life and means to keep his moral sense."

- + A L A Bkl 10:285 Mr '14

"It is a strong, manly, straightforward effort to paint some important phases of our American life." J. Marchand

- + Bookm 38:559 Ja '14 730w
- N Y Sun p4 N 15 '13 130w

"This is a political novel of an unusual type. The author has taken for his theme a subject upon which he is thoroughly well versed, and the result is a volume of convincing reality."

- + N Y Times 19:51 F 1 '14 260w

BOLTE, J. WILLARD. Back yard farmer. $1.25 (2c) Forbes 14-3570

The back yard may be made a thing of beauty, says the author, and it may also be utilized as a source of profit. He follows this statement with brief chapters devoted to the garden, flower beds, window boxes, cold frames, fruit trees, hedges, shrubbery, fences, the cow, stable sanitation, pets, poultry yards, fresh eggs, and like practical matters.

"A clear, practical book for the beginner. It is written along conservative lines, so it will not be apt to cause as many disappointments as books which are too sanguine."

- + A L A Bkl 10:301 Ap '14

"The author possesses the ability to write in a clear and entertaining style."

- + Boston Transcript p22 Ja 27 '15 170w

"With the guidance of this book, some will, energy and just a small plot of ground almost any one, whether he live in the city, suburbs or country, could benefit his health and add to his pleasure and the contents of his pocket-book."

- + Chaut 72:574 My 21 '14 200w

"Mr. Bolte's book seems entirely practical, is conversationally written, and shows a rich knowledge evidently bred of experience. It injects into the blood of its readers the most potent of spring fever microbes."

- + Ind 78:212 My 4 '14 280w

"Owing to this extensive aim, no part receives as much attention as it deserves, and the book often surprises both by its inclusions and its exclusions."

- + Nation 98:460 Ap 23 '14 70w
- + N Y Times 19:212 Ap 26 '14 70w
- "Sketchy, readable chapters."
- + Wls Lib Bull 10:37 Ap '14 30w

BOLTON, FLORENCE. Exercises for women. $1 (4½c) Funk 14-2037

Following three very sensible chapters on Underlying facts and principles, Clothes, and Suggestions with regard to exercise, come directions for a series of simple mat exercises which may be taken at home. The directions are clear and definite and the illustrations and diagrams will be an aid in the practice of the exercises.

BOLTON, FLORENCE—Continued.

"A helpful book, fully illustrated."

+ A L A Bkl 10:346 My '14 +

"Miss Bolton is so explicit in her directions and has so fully illustrated her points that it will be impossible not to follow them correctly."

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 11 '14 120w

+ Lit D 49:748 O 17 '14 90w

+ N Y Times 19:336 Ag 2 '14 50w

"A sane, discriminating little volume."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:162 Je '14 30w

BOLTON, HERBERT EUGENE, ed. Athanase de Mézières and the Louisiana-Texas frontier, 1768-1780. (Spain in the West) 2v il $10 Clark, A. H. 14-549

"Professor Bolton has translated and annotated from the original Spanish and French manuscripts, chiefly in the archives of Mexico and Spain, documents relating to the activities of Athanase de Mézières, who was the foremost Indian agent and diplomat of the Louisiana-Texas frontier, 1768-1780. . . . Professor Bolton's primary aim in publishing these documents, however, was not merely to record the activities of de Mézières. In his papers is to be found more historical information relating to the French and Spanish régimes than has ever before been published in the English language."—R of Rs

"In general, however, one cannot speak too highly of the care and scholarship displayed by the editor in his task." I: J. Cox

+ — Am Hist R 20:168 O '14 750w

"To Professor Bolton, too much credit cannot be given for bringing to light a great deal of information concerning the southwest. His long and scholarly introduction to the volumes interprets with masterly skill southwestern Indian history and the Spanish policy. The work is an extension of the 'Spain in the west series,' which will prove of inestimable value to future historians."

+ Boston Transcript p20 JI 8 '14 450w

+ Cath World 100:109 O '14 400w

"These two volumes are a substantial contribution to the history of the southwest."

+ R of Rs 50:120 JI '14 150w

BOLTON, HERBERT EUGENE. Guide to materials for the history of the United States in the principal archives of Mexico. (Pub. no. 163) $3.50 Carnegie inst. 13-25639

This volume follows others in the same series which treat in a similar way of the archives of Spain, Germany, Canada, and other countries. "At the outset the author devotes a few pages to describing the conditions under which he worked and to necessary acknowledgments and explanations. He defines many of the technical terms used, and notes such practical points as working hours and climate conditions. He then divides the archives of the country into two classes, those located in Mexico City and those outside, devoting to the former a little over four times the space given the latter. . . . Such hindrances as the lack of suitable manuscript lists or catalogues for even the best repositories, the frequent transfer of material from one archive to another, and the inaccessibility of portions of certain collections have in a measure been overcome by the author's long and patient personal investigations. The index of seventy-two pages and frequent cross-references will do much to correlate the material treated." (Am Hist R)

"Substantial volume." I: J. Cox

+ Am Hist R 19:638 Ap '14 750w

+ Nation 98:306 Mr 19 '14 370w

BOND, ALEXANDER RUSSELL. Pick, shovel and pluck. (Scientific American boy ser.) il $1.50 (2c) Munn 14-20247

"The present book is a sequel to 'With the men who do things' which told of two boys who spent a summer in New York studying the big engineering undertakings in and about the city. The present volume takes the same boys away from New York, and gives them a wider variety of engineering experiences, reaching from the Panama canal to the Keokuk dam across the Mississippi, and finally, in the last eight chapters of the book, bringing them back to New York."—Preface

N Y Times 19:571 D 13 '14 40w

BOND, ALEXANDER RUSSELL. With the men who do things. (Scientific American boy ser.) il $1.50 (2c) Munn 13-22540

The men who do things are the engineers who put up big buildings, run tunnels underground, and build bridges and aqueducts. Two boys who are sent to New York to see the sights put in their time profitably, finding out how skyscrapers and subways are made, and exploring and investigating other engineering wonders. The book is illustrated with drawings, diagrams and photographs.

"Though presented in the form of a rather artificial story, the engineering data have been verified by experts and most of the incidents are founded on fact."

+ A L A Bkl 10:246 F '14

"Unfortunately, the romance of skyscrapers, of foundation building, of water tunnelling, and other similar activities is marred by an artificial story dealing with two boys who witness the wonders described."

+ — Nation 97:544 D 4 '13 80w

"As a matter of fact the book is a study in engineering in story form. It is really interesting."

+ N Y Times 18:615 N 9 '13 170w

BOND, FRANCIS. Introduction to English church architecture from the eleventh to the sixteenth century. 2v il $14 Oxford (A14-1276)

"The author's aim has been to give 'a plain, straightforward account of mediæval building construction as controlled by mediæval ritual,' and he has written it for the general reader who, with little or no previous knowledge of the subject, is interested in mediæval architecture, rather than for the professional student. Accordingly, technical terms and archaeological history have been avoided as far as possible, and 'the text is subsidiary to the illustrations.'"—Ath

Ath 1913,2:734 D 20 70w

"The distinguishing characteristic of Mr. Bond's work is his well-ordered and distinctly interesting method of arranging and grouping his material."

+ Ath 1914,1:96 Ja 17 1350w

"Were it not for the uncertainty of aim, one might recommend the work without qualification."

+ — Dial 56:304 Ap 1 '14 350w

"The number of books dealing with English church architecture from the standpoint of the non-professional student is legion, but we cannot recall any that treats of the subject so systematically and thoroughly, and is so extensively illustrated as this new work."

+ Int Studio 53:168 Ag '14 300w

"The deficiencies which prevent complete satisfaction in the perusal of this notable work lie implicit in its plan."

+ — Nation 98:386 S 24 '14 1450w

"These volumes will be indispensable to the student, if it were only for the wealth and novelty of illustration. For the ordinary reader just to turn the pages will be an education and pleasure, but if really a beginner he may find the text a little formidably erudite."

+ Sat R 117:345 Mr 14 '14 1450w

BONNET, THEODORE F. Friend of the people; with a prefatory epistle to Asnton Stevens. $1.50 Pacific publication co., San Francisco 14-7491

The hero of this four-act play "is a hypocritical man and corrupt politician, of engaging parts and abilities, who has won his way to the governorship of a great state, and a prospective United States senatorship, by demagogic acts, life service to idealists of all kinds, and secret traffickings with the powers of darkness. His infidelity to his mistress, the wife of one of his best friends, a woman who has believed in him implicitly and who has been of great service to him, is the cause of his final overthrow. Discovering his baseness she allies herself with his enemies, contrives his exposure, and puts him in a position so utterly hopeless that he seeks refuge in suicide. Thus baldly stated, the plot seems extravagant and sensational, but it is elaborated with uncommon skill and in full accordance with the acknowledged laws of dramatics."—Nation

"A work of decided ability, with qualities which seem to fit it eminently for the theatre. It is well made, tells an interesting story, and contains a number of effective situations arising legitimately out of character and circumstances and culminating in a logical catastrophe."

+ Nation 99:723 D 17 '14 580w

"In a friend of the people' Mr. Bonnet has got hold of a real idea, and by the right end. Unfortunately, he has chosen for the medium of his satire a plot so old that the memory of a man runneth not to the contrary, and of a melodrama so crude that the play could never hope for anything beyond a Broadway success."

+ — N Y Times 19:335 Ag 2 '14 400w

BONNEY, REV. THOMAS GEORGE. Present relations of science and religion. (Library of historic theology) *$1.50 Revell (Eng ed A14-186)

"The framework and scope of Professor Bonney's book are shown by the headings of his chapters. His list of contents runs:—Recent advances in physical science, The position of biology, The ideas of religion and their development, The probabilities of a revelation, The possibility and place of miracles, The credibility of Christianity, Representatives of Christianity and Workers in science. . . . Professor Bonney appears to regard psychical research as a hopeless mode of attack on the unknown, so that avenue of approach to supernatural phenomena is closed to him. He rejects 'modernism' and all its ways, so that Christianity is with him literalism or nothing."—Hibbert J

"The first chapters, giving an account of the advance in science and the position of biology, form a useful résumé in spite of their being collections of quotations and of the unnecessarily long account of the well-known coincidence in Darwin's and Wallace's ideas on the origin of species. But scarcely any mention of theology is made, and no refutation supplied of statements, based on scientific facts, made by rationalists."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup249 F 14 400w

"On the whole, the descriptive part of Professor Bonney's work may be said to be well done. It is when we pass to the main theme of the book that it appears to us less adequate. If we have to analyse the feeling of disappointment which grew as we read, we should say that we felt that while Professor Bonney's account of science and of religious origins had been brought up to date, his views of their relations are very little changed from those which would have been appropriate thirty or forty years ago." W. C. D. Whetham

+ Hibbert J 12:950 J1 '14 630w

"If there are any who regard Christian apologetics as necessarily worthless, this book, by a comparatively liberal dignity of the Church, who has also held a professorship of science, is not likely to alter their opinion. The book begins with some information, generally sound if rather scrappy, on recent science, from which the transition is made to a defense of theism and then of Christianity as a revealed religion, with inclusion of the miraculous element. Some of the history even of science might be better." T. Whittaker

+ Int J Ethics 24:223 Ja '14 750w

"He seems to us to be at his best when writing on science; as a theologian, he writes carefully, soberly, and with shrewd commonsense; but he does not show that complete mastery of his subject and of its smallest details which marks him in the treatment of his own special study. Somewhat strangely in his preface he hints that his conclusions will probably be more acceptable to his fellow-workers in science than to the majority of his fellow-clergy; but we have failed to discover anything that is likely to offend the most sensitive orthodoxy."

+ Sat R 116:625 N 15 '13 200w

BONNEY, REV. THOMAS GEORGE. Volcanoes; their structure and significance. (Science ser.) 3d ed il $2 Putnam GS13-655

For its third edition, this work has been both revised and enlarged. "Many minor alterations have been made and several paragraphs inserted dealing with volcanic eruptions which have taken place recently. The chapter on the theories of volcanoes has been considerably modified so as to incorporate the results of research accomplished during the last fourteen years. Some new illustrations also have been added." (Nature)

A L A Bkl 10:167 D '13

"His work in its present revised form may be recommended more confidently than ever, for it treats a rather difficult subject with great ability, and is intelligible to the average reader unversed in scientific technicalities."

+ Ath 1913,1:166 F 8 230w

"The work is a very readable and well-prepared discussion of the subject."

+ — Nation 97:171 Ag 21 '13 250w

Nature 91:30 Mr 13 '13 70w

"His style is eminently readable, his presentation of the subject is attractive and the illustrations are appropriate."

+ N Y Sun p5 Mr 8 '13 60w

"The data are not given with overminuteness, nor yet with the idea of furnishing text-book information, but simply to show the igneous and aqueous connections with phenomena, and in such a way that even the layman may grasp them."

+ N Y Times 18:162 Mr 23 '13 500w

BONSTELLE, JESSIE, and DE FOREST, MARION, comps. Little women letters from the house of Alcott. il $1.25 (4c) Little 14-17126

Extracts from Bronson Alcott's journals, letters written by the father to his little daughters, extracts from the journals of the Alcott girls, letters from the girls to their father and mother and poems written for occasions by Louisa Alcott are linked together by the two editors so that they give a picture of the Alcott family life. The book throws new light on the beautiful character of Bronson Alcott, and is worth the serious consideration of parents and teachers for its exposition of his educational theories.

"For parents, specially those who have been familiar with 'Little women' this should be a book of inspiration."

+ A L A Bkl 11:117 N '14 +

Boston Transcript p7 S 26 '14 550w

+ — Dial 57:306 O 16 '14 60w

+ Ind 80:416 D 14 '14 80w

"The present authors tried hard to spread a false sweetness and light into a household where the sweetness and light were real and true."

+ Lit D 49:1127 D 5 '14 140w

+ N Y Times 19:480 N 1 '14 100w

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 15 '14 950w

BOOK of little houses. (Countryside manuals) il *50c (2½c) Macmillan 14-18433

A little book describing houses that have been built in different parts of the country at costs varying from $1,500 to $10,000. The descriptions of the houses, with the pictures and plans, appeared first in Countryside magazine and suburban life.

BOOK of little houses.—Continued.

"The illustrations are delightful, tho an economical combination misplaces some of them in a most confusing way and the concise list of do's and don'ts, together with the sleeping porch suggestions, are important for the practical homebuilder."

+ — Ind 80:338 N 30 '14 80w

N Y Times 19:499 N 15 '14 60w

BOOTH, MEYRICK. Rudolf Eucken; his philosophy and influence. *$1.25 Scribner 14-30082

"Dr. Booth briefly tells us what Eucken has done and what is his great purpose. 'Eucken has done much—more, perhaps, than any other living man—to render possible to modern people a belief in the reality and supremacy of the spiritual world. And what he finally seeks is nothing less than the reconstruction of our entire life and civilization upon a positive spiritual basis.' . . . This exposition of the philosophy of Eucken differs from those that have preceded it in the attention given to Eucken's relation to social questions."—Boston Transcript

"Clear, simple and definite with enough history to properly place the ideas."

+ A L A Bkl 10:217 F '14

"It is difficult to keep to the right tone in dealing with the work of a living author whom one knows and admires. Mr. Meyrick Booth—more successful than most—drops occasionally into what we may call journalistic eulogy."

+ — Ath 1913,2:312 S 27 200w

"Will be welcome to a large circle of readers, especially for its biographical details and appreciation of the philosopher's personality." H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p11 O 11 '13 220w

"The book is excellent, and will be of great assistance to those who are seeking a good introduction to Eucken."

+ Boston Transcript p24 D 3 '13 400w

"From the point of view of the plain man, he has written a deeply interesting book. Mr. Booth knows what his readers want of him. He goes straight to the root of the matter."

+ Spec 111:1017 D 13 '13 1400w

"The best exposition of Eucken for the average reader."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:85 Ap '14 30w

BORDEAUX, HENRY. Awakening; tr. by Ruth Helen Davis. *$1.35 Dutton 14-19165

"On the same plot as Strindberg's 'The link'—the difficulties of divorce when man and wife are joined by children—Henry Bordeaux has built an exposition of his familiar doctrine of the family as the unit of society, before which individual and state alike must bow. . . . The narrative is simple, and interesting mainly for the minute characterization and careful psychology exhibited in the trilogy of inharmonious figures—Albert Derize, the brilliant author of sociological histories, his neglected wife, Elizabeth Derize, and the Mlle. de Sezery in whom he finds a true intellectual and social companion. . . . The undercurrent of the novel is a defence of the husband, who—outwardly wholly at fault—is in reality the party sinned against."—Nation

"In its original French, the novel must undoubtedly have some charm which it has lost in translation. We feel continually that we are outside the book, being told about the people in it, but not living with them there."

— Boston Transcript p22 Ja 27 '15 280w

+ — Ind 81:176 F 1 '15 50w

+ — Nation 100:113 Ja 28 '15 400w

"The book is extremely interesting, merely as a story. It moves swiftly, and there is a true tension of the emotions. But as a valuable brief against divorce it fails. It is a special case."

+ — N Y Times 20:10 Ja 10 '15 750w

"This story lacks the grace and charm which one expects in the best French fiction; but it is written with clearness and sincerity. The story is instructive as well as interesting."

+ Outlook 109:294 F 3 '15 280w

"Whatever criticism is to be made must be applied to the construction of this novel, and not to what he has to say or to his literary style. Both are beyond censure. It is merely that he is unfortunate in being too didactic."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 F 4 '15 720w

BORDEAUX, HENRY. The house; tr. by Louise Seymour Houghton. *$1.35 (1½c) Duffield 14-14800

The significance of the "house" in this story of French provincial life could perhaps better be expressed in English by the word family. The family is treated as the unit, and in the particular family described all members are taught to put the race and its continuance before the individual and his desires, to subordinate personal interests to the welfare of the "house." The story is told by François, who comes midway between the eldest and the youngest in a family of seven; it has little action and such plot as it has is concerned with the defection of the boy's allegiance to the family under the influence of a grandfather who reads Rousseau and preaches an individualistic philosophy. The death of the father when François is eighteen brings the boy a sense of responsibility and the story leaves him with his mind made up to follow his father's profession and uphold his father's ideals.

"Interesting to quiet readers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:75 O '14

"It is a strong story, upholding the central thesis of all the author's works that it is the race and not the individual that counts."

+ Boston Transcript p22 O 14 '14 680w

+ Nation 99:379 S 24 '14 220w

"The story itself is one of charm and power, and of the uttermost simplicity. A word must be said for the excellence of the translation, for the sympathetic rendition of the author's intentions and the distinction of the English." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:458 O 25 '14 800w

BOSANQUET, ELLEN (HODGKIN) (MRS. ROBERT CARR-BOSANQUET). Days in Attica. il *$2 Macmillan A14-1356

"A friendly guide for the traveler who goes to Athens without much preliminary knowledge of Greece and its history." "It tells in a readable style of a long and leisurely time spent in quiet enjoyment of the beauties of Greece while closely observing both the people of today and the relics of ancient times." (N Y Times)

+ A L A Bkl 11:71 O '14

"To our taste there is too much fanciful writing in the volume before us with a consequent looseness of epithets that seem to a sober reader a defect in style. But for all that the book is very good reading; it contains a great deal of sound information, and brings out all manner of stray learning when one least expects it. Nothing can exceed the clearness and the interest of these concluding chapters of her book."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup427 Mr 21 1300w

"She who guides us through this land, beloved of gods and of heroes, is not only an ideal traveller, but a poet and scholar as well, seeing all things with that clarity of vision given only to imagination-quickened eyes."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '14 580w

+ — Nation 99:48 J1 9 '14 270w

+ N Y Times 19:266 Je 14 '14 120w

+ R of Rs 50:117 J1 '14 60w

"There are too few travellers who take the trouble to know the people and countries they pass through before writing a book upon them, and fewer still perhaps who have that priceless gift, sympathy, which enables them ever to be prospecting for the gold beneath the sometimes uninviting soil. Any place would be a mine, though, for such a seeker, and Attica has yielded Mrs. Bosanquet a rich vein."

+ Sat R 117:573 My 2 '14 850w

Spec 112:488 Mr 21 '14 40w

"Her descriptions are not pretentious and might well be characterized as picture postcards, for they have much of the color of those pleasing little souvenirs of travel."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 400w

BOSE, JAGADIS CHUNDER. Researches on the irritability of plants. *$2.50 Longmans Agr13-2211

"Prof. Bose's attitude toward plants is refreshingly different from that of professional botanists in general. . . . The plant is not for Prof. Bose a passive object to be dissected, diagnosed, and classified; but it is a living complex to be subjected to various tests and operations, and meanwhile to be placed in conjunction with delicate machinery which will record its minute pulsations and responsive movements. . . . The key-note of the book is its successful endeavour to show the similarity of physiological response in both plants and animals."—Ath

+ Ath 1913,1:700 Je 28 600w

"The experimentation described in Bose's new volume is marked by excellence of methods and execution. The presentation is in direct, clear, and in many places elegant English. The findings are rendered quickly available by comprehensive but concise summaries at the end of each chapter and at the end of the volume. One regrets that this excellent work is marred here and there by oldness of viewpoint and lack of knowledge of physiological literature." W: Crocker

+ Bot Gaz 57:532 Je '14 1250w

+ Nature 93:372 Je 11 '14 200w

"Research workers will find this book replete with novel ideas and novel ways of attaining quantitatively comparable measures of plant irritability." B. E. Livingston

+ Science n s 39:511 Ap 3 '14 1250w

BOSHER, MRS. KATE LEE LANGLEY (KATE CAIRNS, pseud.). How it happened, il *$1 (3c) Harper 14-16215

A Christmas story of two parted lovers who are brought together thru the well-directed efforts of a little girl. Carmencita lives in a tenement with her blind father and all the children of the place are her especial charge. Miss Frances Barbour comes to live in the same tenement because she wants to know and help the children and she and Carmencita become fast friends. Then Carmencita makes friends with Mr. Van Landing, and as a result there is a wedding on Christmas day.

A L A Bkl 11:75 O '14

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 130w

+ Dial 57:509 D 16 '14 50w

"The small 'dea ex machina' is quite as lovable and delightfully wicked in spots as the author's well-remembered 'Mary Cary.'"

+ Ind 80:66 O 12 '14 60w

"The part little Carmencita is made to take in the plot of the story is brought about so clumsily as to bare the machinery by which the action moves."

+ N Y Times 19:448 O 18 '14 300w

"There is much kindly feeling and there is also sound common sense in this pleasant and somewhat old-fashioned tale."

+ Outlook 108:440 O 21 '14 50w

BOSTWICK, ARTHUR ELMORE. Earmarks of literature. *90c (3½c) McClurg 14-2052

The papers that make up the contents of this book were first given in the form of addresses to library training classes in Brooklyn, New York and St. Louis. Some representative chapter titles are: The nature of literature; On the reading of poetry aloud; Our two languages; The preservation of literature; The ownership of literature; Some formalities of written speech; The context in literature.

"The subjects have not been treated before in any one place in a style to commend them to the general reader."

+ A L A Bkl 10:384 Je '14

"Possibly when these essays were addressed by Dr. Bostwick as the spoken word they seemed much more practical and original than when they are read from the printed page. In their permanent form, however, they assume too much ignorance on the part of the reader who does not care to be presumed too ignorant of the rudiments of language and literature." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p23 F 25 '14 850w

"A useful and readable little manual. Admirable are the simplicity and directness, the clearness and conciseness, with which Dr. Bostwick presents what he has to say."

+ Dial 56:191 Mr 1 '14 350w

+ Ind 77:280 F 23 '14 50w

"All is in good sense; if there is a little obviousness the author's lively style saves it from banality."

+ Nation 98:472 Ap 23 '14 170w

N Y Times 19:137 Mr 22 '14 60w

"Mr. Bostwick answers many questions in the mind of his readers and puts them in the way of reading with intelligence and discriminating between books that are simply books and books that are literature."

+ Outlook 106:603 Mr 14 '14 140w

"The book is small in actual size but big in wisdom and inspiration."

+ R of Rs 49:630 My '14 100w

BOSTWICK, ARTHUR ELMORE, ed. Relationship between the library and the public schools. (Classics of American librarianship) *$1.35 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 14-20304

A volume of reprints, carefully selected and edited. The editor's definition of the word "Classic" as used in the name of this series explains the basis on which the articles have been selected: "A classic is not necessarily up to date. It is not necessarily interesting reading at the present day. It is something that has marked a stage of progress; that has affected and altered modes of thought and methods of work, or has reflected in some way such alterations, thereby becoming of permanent value." Because the classics of the library profession are scattered, and not always readily accessible, it has seemed advisable to bring them together in one place. The reprints are from library and educational periodicals and some of the authors represented are: Josephine A. Rathbone; Melvil Dewey; Lutie E. Stearns; John Cotton Dana and William Dawson Johnston. The editor furnishes explanatory and biographical notes.

A L A Bkl 11:149 D '14

"This book is certainly not interesting reading. There is perhaps no subject on which librarians contrive to be quite so dreary as this of the relation of libraries and schools."

— Boston Transcript p25 O 7 '14 280w

Boston Transcript p22 N 13 '14 90w

"Such a series of books should be welcome for reference use. The print is a bit too small for comfortable reading, and the book would have looked better in larger type."

+ Bulletin of Bibliography 8:90 O '14 80w

+ Dial 57:443 D 1 '14 120w

BOTTOME, PHYLLIS. "Broken music" (Eng title, Common chord). *$1.35 (1½c) Houghton A14-1726

"This is the story of a delightful young French musician who has a legacy left to him on condition that he settles down in England, and his impressions are bright and amusing. All the characters are typical, from the adorable Judith who owns a studio in Hammersmith to the vulgar Colonel Prendergast and the patient Mrs. Prout."—Sat R

BOTTOMÉ, PHYLLIS—Continued.

"The story is overweighted with the contrast between selfishness and altruism, and the characters are not sufficiently well limned to justify their abnormality."

— Ath 1913,1:591 My 31 59w

"The story is told in a keen, crisp manner, giving a vividly real picture of Parisian life."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 590w

"There is ease here, and cleverness, but only in the use of a formula already well-worked."

Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:54 J1 16 '14 100w

— Nation 99:307 S 10 '14 250w

"The reader regrets that the whole book is not made up of the subsidiary characters."

— + N Y Times 19:282 Je 21 '14 550w

"The author is a clever psychologist, and gives us quick flashes of her own insight into human nature, and her descriptive power is both graphic and vivid."

+ Sat R 116:371 S 20 '13 220w

"The plot of the story is quite slight and not particularly original, but both character-drawing and writing are decidedly accomplished."

+ Spec 111:28 J1 5 '13 140w

BOUCICAULT, RUTH HOLT. Substance of his house. il $1.30 (1c) Little 14-3177

The story of a great love that brought tragedy in its train. Lady Mary Stanhope, married to a man much older than herself, and tranquilly happy, awakes suddenly to find that she loves Philip Carmichael. She is a woman of stern principles, and when her husband, learning of her love, offers magnanimously to allow her to get a divorce, she refuses to accept her freedom. The husband dies, and cutting short her period of mourning she marries her lover. They go to America to begin a new life, but here tragedy awaits them, for a woman claiming to be Philip's common law wife appears to demand that he give her child his rightful name. Mary stands ready to make any sacrifice for the unworthy man she loves, and the story ends with her death.

+ — Bookm 39:340 My '14 450w

"Here we have another novel that weakens an ordinarily good plot and characterization by attempting the extraordinary in the shape of powerful emotion and intense characters. It cannot be denied that such a story stirs the reader, for no one can look unmoved upon great womanly sacrifice for masculine selfishness; but in this novel the impression is so morbid, and the unfolding of the motive so vague and chaotic, as far as real development goes, that one wishes the author had left her herculean task to the diminishing race of the giants."

— + Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 300w

— Ind 78:401 Je 1 '14 60w

Nation 98:529 My 7 '14 300w

N Y Times 19:76 F 15 '14 300w

BOURDON, GEORGES. German enigma; being an inquiry among the Germans as to what they think, what they want, what they can do; tr. by Beatrice Marshall; with introd. by Charles Sarolea. $1.25 Dutton (Eng ed SD14-17)

"Georges Bourdon, editor of the Paris Figaro, made a tour of Germany last year for the purpose of obtaining a first-hand understanding of sentiment in the fatherland toward France and of conveying to Frenchmen that understanding through the Figaro. The results of his tour are contained in 'The German enigma.' . . . M. Bourdon returned to France somewhat puzzled. Everywhere he found evidences that German militarism is bred in the bone of the nation; at the same time every one whom he interviewed declared that Germany did not want war with any one, and with France least of all nations."—N Y Times

Ath 1914,2:347 O 10 350w

"The book is of interest because it was written from a viewpoint seldom assumed in recent years by European publicists." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 58:45 Ja 16 '15 330w

+ — Nation 99:778 D 31 '14 220w

N Y Times 19:498 N 16 '14 350w

Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 30w

+ Spec 113:503 O 10 '14 30w

BOURGEOIS, MAURICE. John Millington Synge and the Irish theatre. il $2.50 Macmillan 14-2199

"Synge has been dead but a very few years, and already his myrmidons are legion. They do not imitate, but estimate him. . . . The result is that people, feeling he has been run to death, are getting tired of Synge, and his reputation is in danger of an eclipse as complete as the radiance of its dawn. M. Bourgeois's monograph should be invaluable from this very point of view—namely, that its treatment is so scholarly and exhaustive that there can be—at any rate for a time—but little else to say about Synge. Nor has M. Bourgeois fallen into the quagmires of the wild idolaters. His volume contains no extravagant claims, fantastic theories, or obsessions. . . . He simply treats his genius in relation to art on the one hand, and to Synge's own uncompromising, concrete, rather Rabelaisian temperament on the other."—Ath

"Scholarly, exhaustive study. The standard criticism, but needed only in large libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 10:261 Mr '14

"With a few exceptions his analysis of Synge is so just and illuminating that his volume should become the standard criticism of a greatly misunderstood dramatist."

+ — Ath 1913,2:667 D 6 1250w

"The biographical and historical parts of M. Bourgeois's work are well done. The critical part of the book is, however, not so satisfactory." J. W. Tupper

+ — Dial 56:178 Mr 1 '14 720w

"It is impossible to exaggerate the completeness of M. Bourgeois's work—in which he maintains throughout a clear-headed sense of proportion."

+ + Ind 78:140 Ap 20 '14 650w

"Here is a subject on the literary 'firing-line,' written up as for a Sunday magazine, yet soberly and judiciously handled, and supplied with the elaborate critical apparatus of a doctor's dissertation."

+ — Nation 98:166 F 12 '14 320w

"The book is an excellent corrective of all the personal stories, and memoirs, autobiographies and impressions of those who were themselves actors in the tale. Here we get perspective into the story and justice. His book will be the starting place for all who write hereafter of Synge and desire a solid base on which to build their conception. But the book is more than that. It is itself full of good criticism and alive with understanding."

+ Sat R 116:786 D 20 '13 220w

BOURNE, HENRY ELDRIDGE. Revolutionary period in Europe (1763-1815). (Century historical ser.) il $2.50 (1c) Century

The period covered by the author extends from 1763 to 1815, from the close of the seven years' war to the fall of Napoleon. In his treatment of his subject matter, the author gives six chapters to the old régime, ten to the revolution, and eleven to the Napoleonic era, and thruout the whole he places emphasis on the economic struggle of the time. The book is provided with eight maps, has fifteen pages devoted to Notes on books, and an index.

BOUTROUX, ÉMILE. Natural law in science and philosophy; auth. tr. by Fred Rothwell. $1.75 Macmillan 14-17263

"M. Boutroux thus states his object in these brief addresses given at the Sorbonne in 1892-3: 'To discover whether the idea of natural law is the same for the scientist as it is for the philosopher.' It is in an ethical interest that he pursues the inquiry through the various types of natural laws as set forth by the sciences. Over against the laws that represent the nature of things is the question, "What becomes of human freedom and responsibility?" Against the assumption of scientists that all things are absolutely determined by natural law, M. Bouteux shows that there is more or less of the indeterminate and contingent in all science from logic and mathematics to sociology."—Outlook

"Although his volume cannot be said to add much to our knowledge, the discussion is not without interest, and the translator has provided a readable version of the original."

+ Ath 1914,1:598 Ap 25 600w

"To all who wish to understand the province of science, this book is to be commended. It will do much to clear the mental atmosphere, which is altogether too hazy in too many quarters today. Some scientists become so absorbed in their special subjects that they forget to examine the fundamental principles and assumptions of science. For such this volume will do much."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 8 '14 450w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

Hibbert J 12:902 Jl '14 200w

Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 50w

Outlook 107:680 Jl 18 '14 150w

"The book is admirably translated, and might be used with good results in the teaching of philosophy in this country, since it sets forth very clearly the questions which philosophy is entitled to ask of the natural sciences. Not the least valuable parts are the historical introductions to each chapter, in which M. Bouteux, after the manner of his countrymen, provides us with illuminating summaries."

+ Spec 112:997 Je 13 '14 1650w

BOWEN, JOHN JOSEPH. Strategy of Robert
" E. Lee. il *$2 Neale 14-9423

"The title of this work expresses a little more and a little less than the subject matter. The book scarcely touches upon the strategy of Gen. Lee outside of Virginia, making no mention of his unsuccessful campaign in West Virginia, of his influence as military adviser of the President, or of his services as general-in-chief of the Confederate forces; on the other hand, it includes operations in which he took no part, directly or indirectly. . . . According to the author, the guiding principle of Lee's strategy was, not to end the war, either by defeating the Federal armies or by taking Washington, but to prolong it by threatening Washington; and his object in thus prolonging it was to wear out the North."—Nation

"One fault of the book is that in quoting authorities the author never gives chapter and verse, so the reader is at a loss to find the exact source of his statements. The inclusion of one or two war maps also would have added to the value of the book, and there should also be an index."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '14 500w

"His comments on the separate campaigns are interesting and suggestive, if not always convincing."

+ — Nation 99:348 S 17 '14 1900w

BOWEN, LOUISE HADDUCK (DE KOVEN).
Safeguards for city youth at work and at play; with a preface by Jane Addams.
$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 14-19852

A book based upon the seven years' experience of the Juvenile protective league of Chicago, of which the author is president. The teaching of this experience is to the effect that adequate protection for youth can only be secured thru civic authority. The efforts of parents, teachers, social organizations and individual employers fail unless the city affords as a basis a well-administered system of civic protection. The chapters of the book take up: Civic protection in recreation; Legal protection in industry; Legal protection for delinquents; Legal safeguards for the dependent; Protection against illegal discrimination; Need of further protection.

Boston Transcript p22 Ja 20 '15 250w

Ind 80:478 D 21 '14 70w

+ Spec 114:23 Ja 2 '15 50w

"Those who are concerned about the moral protection of youth in our big cities will welcome the contribution to the scanty literature on this subject by one whose work has given her the right to speak with authority." M. E. Miner

+ Survey 33:463 Ja 30 '15 580w

BOWEN, MARJORIE, pseud. Governor of England. land. *$1.35 Dutton A14-2539

"Miss Bowen's new novel, which is described as 'a romance of Oliver Cromwell,' is really an elementary history of the civil war in the guise of fiction. The foremost figures of the period—Charles I, Strafford, Rupert, and Falkland on the one side, and Cromwell, Pym, Hampden, and Harrison on the other—reappear in her pages, and they are drawn for the most part with a vivid and discerning touch. Towards the end of the book—to make the picture of the period complete—we get a glimpse of Milton."—Ath

"'The governor of England,' though not wanting in merit, is, indeed, the kind of work which a modern journalist, seeking to give a more domestic and sentimental touch to history, might have written, and its dialogue is too obviously affected by knowledge of subsequent events."

+ — Ath 1913,2:251 S 13 220w

"Miss Bowen's theme has a dignity of style and a grasp and arrangement of historical detail that lifts it even higher in both a literary and historical sense than her previous novels."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 20 '14 180w

"The author has done little toward giving the tale a compact, coherent, and dramatic form. She has simply taken the facts of history, imagined their setting, moved some of them about a little, invented a few others, and supplied conversations, descriptions, and something of color for the narrative."

+ — N Y Times 19:101 Mr 1 '14 210w

"Miss Bowen has not forgotten all that she was taught at school about the Rebellion, and she has evidently given some more recent study to the subject, yet the really impressive thing in her novel is her amazing self-confidence. It is quite possible to say that this book is pleasantly written, and that it follows with accuracy the course of events. We can only hope that to her talents will soon be added the senses of humour and proportion."

+ — Sat R 116:434 O 4 '13 220w

"Written with Miss Bowen's usual brilliancy: at times, as at the death of the King, she shows considerable power, which is occasionally marred by a most unwise choice of words."

+ — Spec 111:468 S 27 '13 40w

BOWER, B. M., pseud. (BERTHA MUZZY SINCLAIR). (MRS. BERTRAND WILLIAM SINCLAIR). Ranch at the Wolverine. il *$1.30 (1c) Little 14-16915

A story of homesteading in Idaho. The heroine, Billy Louise, so named as the result of a compromise between her father and mother, is a plucky girl, possessing some of the characteristics of both names. After her father's death she carries on the ranch and looks after her mother and is a good pal and friend to Ward Warren, a lonely "nester" on a neighboring claim. There is some cattle rustling in the story and some threatened "gun play," but on the whole it is refreshingly free from the usual elements that make up western fiction.

"The characters are very human and the development is interesting."

+ A L A Bkl 11:123 N '14

Ind 80:65 O 12 '14 70w

"A good, wholesome, breezy story, of literary excellence as well as of exciting events and human sympathy."

+ N Y Times 19:463 O 25 '14 130w

BOYD, JAMES HARRINGTON. Workmen's compensation and industrial insurance under modern conditions. 2v *$9 Bobbs

13-35390

These two volumes "contain the text and construction of every workmen's compensation statute in force on the first of last January in the United States, England, and Germany, and the substance of those in other countries." (Outlook) "It is the purpose of the book to point out and distinguish the characteristics of all the different remedial laws proposed for the relief of injured workmen, to show the effects of the operation of these various laws on both the employer and employee, and to discuss the fundamental principles upon which such laws must be based under our constitutional limitations." (R of Rs)

"This work of patient compilation, legal analysis and economic criticism will be found indispensable for the student of social insurance in this country. The progress of public opinion is so rapid, and the legislatures are so busy with the subject that the present laws will soon be out of date; but the discussion of history and principles will remain useful, and the book will be a milestone for future students." C. R. Henderson

+ Am J Soc 19:689 Mr '14 350w

+ Elec World 63:1355 Je 6 '14 220w

"The book has its obvious value to large employers of labor, to libraries and generally to those who wish to be informed regarding these important phases of industrial sociology."

+ Engin N 70:1267 D 18 '13 130w

"One cannot fail to be impressed with the thoroughness and completeness of the volumes. Economists, lawyers, and legislators who are concerned with the topic will find them indispensable."

+ Lit D 47:538 S 27 '13 350w

"These two [volumes] are of great value to every student of labor problems."

+ Outlook 104:344 Je 14 '13 60w

+ R of Rs 47:637 My '13 230w

BOYD, WILLIAM. From Locke to Montessori. *$1.25 (1½c) Holt (Eng ed E14-1104)

The author says in his introduction to this critical account of the Montessori point of view that we "cannot accept any new system, least of all a system that would ultimately revolutionize the organization of the schools, without very definite assurance of its theoretical and practical soundness." His is a critical study of the principles that underlie the much discussed Montessori method. Part one is historical, showing that the Italian educator has originated nothing new, but has only carried forward theories that had their birth in the seventeenth century. Part two is critical, taking up: The Montessori point of view; Individuality; Freedom; The education of the senses; The omission of the humanistic subjects; The children's house.

"A trenchant though judicial criticism of the 'Montessori point of view.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:53 O '14

Ath 1914:1545 Ap 18 290w

"As a critical analysis of the educational processes of three centuries the book possesses undoubted merit; as an argument against the Montessori system it is not of much value." H. T. C.

+ — Boston Transcript p9 My 23 '14 550w

"One of the best of the many books dealing with the educational views of Mme. Montessori that has come to our notice. While his point of view is critical, he errs if at all in over-estimating the value of Mme. Montessori's contribution."

+ — Educ R 48:427 N '14 80w

"In a thoughtful and well-written little book, William Boyd, lecturer at Glasgow, subjects her system to a scholarly criticism. His tone is sober and courteous, with only a touch of irony here and there, but there is little left of Montessori at the end."

+ — Nation 99:320 S 10 '14 200w

R of Rs 50:252 Ag '14 50w

"The book is well written as well as extremely interesting, and it conveys an impression of matured thought and well-based judgment. Nothing much better could have been written on the subject within the compass of an octavo volume."

+ Spec 113:464 O 3 '14 230w

"Excellent as is Mr. Boyd's examination of the Montessori methods, it is in criticizing her philosophy of education that he should be particularly heeded."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 450w

"The book has unusual value for social workers in that it relates the field of the normal to that of the defective." F. A. Manny

+ Survey 33:339 D 26 '14 900w

BOYER, CLARENCE VALENTINE. Villain as hero in Elizabethan tragedy. (Lib. of scholarship and letters) *$2 Dutton 14-16453

"Dr. Boyer's interesting and suggestive essay originated in 'an endeavour to discover whether or not the heroic criminals of Elizabethan tragedy adhered to any particular type.' Investigation led the author to enlarge the scope of his inquiry. He traces back to Seneca the origin of plays in which the villain is hero, demonstrates the influence of Machiavelli on the type in Elizabethan days, and analyses the nature of the emotions aroused by such villain-heroes as Marlowe's Barabas, Webster's Bosola, Shakespeare's Richard III, Iago, and Macbeth."

—Spec

Ath 1913,2:sup436 O 18 110w

"There is a good deal of freshness shown in the treatment of this subject, and a thoroughness which is characteristic of American scholarship."

+ — Ath 1914,1:699 My 16 1000w

"As a summary of a certain aspect of the Elizabethan drama, Dr. Boyer's essay is painstaking and complete, but at the same time it adds little to our knowledge of the subject." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Jl 25 '14 200w

"Aside from distortions due to bad classification, the chief weakness of the book is its tendency to regard poetic justice as essential to good drama." H. E. Woodbridge

+ — Dial 57:103 Ag 16 '14 1350w

+ — Nation 99:478 O 15 '14 400w

"An interesting, though confessedly an incomplete, study."

+ — Sat R 117:577 My 2 '14 200w

+ Spec 112:751 My 2 '14 80w

BOYLAN, MRS. GRACE (DUFFIE). Pipes of Clovis. il *$1 (3c) Little 13-20583

A story woven out of old legend and fairy lore. Clovis with his magic pipes can charm all the animals of the forest. With them he tames the wild horse, "Storm" and on Storm's back leads the horses of the invading Huns away from the castle of his queen, who with her children is unprotected. Later in a fair tourney he wins the famous sword of Roland, and with it the right to claim the hand of the Princess Berthada.

A L A Bkl 10:161 D '14

"'Clovis' is done with a certain genius that removes it utterly from perfunctory books of its type." M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 38:321 N '13 90w

Reviewed by W: S. Braithwaite

Boston Transcript p26 N 26 '13 80w

"The story is interesting to the finish."

+ Lit D 47:1121 D 6 '13 100w

"A very holding story is this, and one above the ordinary."

+ Nation 97:543 D 4 '13 120w

"It is told prettily and with poetic feeling."

+ N Y Sun p8 O 11 '13 40w

N Y Times 18:694 N 30 '13 110w

BOYLES, KATE, and BOYLES, VIRGIL DILLIN. Hoosier volunteer. il *$1.35 (1½c) McClurg 14-5816

The story opens with a picture of boyhood and school days in Indiana in the fifties, and of the loyal friendship between Sammy and Zach. Then comes the outbreak of the war and the enlistment of these two lads in their teens. In the 18th Indiana the two fight their way thru the years of conflict, Zach fighting stubbornly in the ranks, Sam working his way up to a captain's commission. He is wounded at Vicksburg and sent home on furlough, and there the end of the pretty romance that began in his schooldays brings the story to its close.

"All through the pages there are scattered a thousand little touches of revealing truth, tragic or grimly humorous, and all of them thoroughly human. They are so true in their seeming that one guesses the authors to have culled most of them from the reminiscent tales of old soldiers. But the story, unfortunately, does not always keep to this level of quality. The conversations are often stiltly unnatural and some of the characters get quite out of drawing. But the story is worth while in its pictures of the soldier's life on march, in camp, and under fire."

+ — N Y Times 19:208 Ap 26 '14 500w

BOYS' book of battles. il *$2 Houghton 14-19371

"The intention here is to show the development of warfare from the earliest days to the present. To obtain the most effective results the histories of battles are taken either directly from history or from graphic fiction or thrilling poems. . . . Of the two closing chapters the first is entitled 'A memorable retreat,' and is from an official report of the withdrawal of the British army from the Belgian border toward Paris by Sir John French, Commander in Chief of the British forces. The second chapter on the present war is 'Fighting in mid-air,' by Sergt. Werner of the Aviation corps."—N Y Times

"A splendid anthology. Even lovers of peace cannot but thrill over records like these."

+ Ind 80:413 D 14 '14 50w

"This anthology contains some stirring matter in it, and boys will read it eagerly. The illustrations are excellent."

+ Lit D 49:1134 D 5 '14 70w

"An altogether well-made book."

+ Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 40w

N Y Times 19:512 N 22 '14 150w

+ N Y Times 19:524 N 29 '14 60w

BRADFORD, GAMALIEL. Confederate portraits. il *$2.50 (3½c) Houghton 14-7092

A group of eight Confederate leaders has been chosen by the author for treatment in this book similar to that given to Lee in "Lee the American." The men are, Joseph E. Johnston, J. E. B. Stuart, James Longstreet, P. G. T. Beauregard, Judah P. Benjamin, Alexander H. Stephens, Robert Toombs, Raphael Semmes. The book closes with a description of Gettysburg, the climax of act three of the war drama.

"Here is a volume interesting and significant but for which the word 'portraits' in the title claims too much." N. W. Stephenson

+ — Am Hist R 20:177 O '14 700w

+ A L A Bkl 11:27 S '14 +

"Too conversational and a trifle hackneyed as it may be in some instances, Mr. Bradford's style is lastingly and pleasurably impressive, being essentially endowed with that ease which comes from vivid sympathy, original thinking, and intense personal enthusiasm for the subject. He lacks the self-consciousness of the author as much as he lacks the pedantic narrowness of the historian. An invaluable insight into human nature lies behind a still more invaluable sense of humor. It will indeed be a stolid reader whose interest he fails to arouse." M. J. V.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ap 22 '14 1400w

Reviewed by D. Y. Thomas

+ Dial 57:51 Jl 16 '14 1350w

"The author knows how to be critical without being unsympathetic and how to emphasize the essentials by eliminating insignificant details."

+ Ind 78:401 Je 1 '14 50w

+ Lit D 49:898 N 7 '14 210w

"Written with fairness and appreciation."

+ Pittsburgh 19:322 Jl '14 50w

+ R of Rs 49:757 Je '14 170w

"A volume that deserves a prominent place in the literary output of the year."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 27 '14 2600w

"Written from original sources with insight, justice and a graceful, conversational style."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:163 Je '14 40w

"Mr. Bradford is as good a literary craftsman as he is a historian." W. E. Dodd

+ Yale R n s 4:199 O '14 1000w

BRADLEY, ARTHUR GRANVILLE. Clear waters. il *$2 Houghton

"An account of trouting days and trouting ways in Wales, the West of England, and the borders of Scotland. The book is written by a fisherman who has eyes for many things besides his special purpose in seeking the open." —N Y Times

"In charm and intimacy this book may take its place with the 'Compleat angler' and 'Little rivers'; and it has a richness of allusion all its own." Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:420 D '14 200w

"A book which must delight the heart of every lover of angling literature."

+ — Nation 100:54 Ja 14 '15 500w

"Lovers of the outdoors will find in it much to charm and entertain."

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 60w

"This beautiful book will appeal to every fisherman; its graceful ease of style will please his wife and daughter."

+ Outlook 108:732 N 25 '14 130w

BRADLEY, FRANCIS HERBERT. Essays on truth and reality. *$4.15 Oxford 14-10755

"Only about a fifth part of this book is absolutely new. Of the rest, one chapter was published not long ago in 'The philosophical review,' one in the 'Proceedings' of the Aristotelian society, and the others have appeared in 'Mind,' with two or three exceptions, within the last five or six years, and are already known to students of philosophy. Like the new part, they are all illustrations of the author's theory of ultimate reality. Their unity is unity of subject. They show Dr. Bradley elucidating and restating such parts of his earlier works as now appear to himself in some way imperfect, and at the same time replying to the copious criticisms of his opponents. Of substantial change there is very little, though there is some shifting of emphasis."—Ath

"What a pleasure it is to read even his most controversial work! What a relief to turn to its severe concentration and scrupulous honesty from those modern writers who are topical at the expense of thoroughness, and attractive at the expense of truth!"

+ Ath 1914:1:522 Ap 11 500w

"It is a great book, a permanent addition to philosophical literature. Whatever difference of opinion may prevail in regard to the conclusions it is written to support, there can be none in regard to the power and suggestiveness of its argument, and the penetrating keenness of its criticism." G. D. Hicks

+ + Hibbert J 12:679 Ap '14 920w

"Everyone will rejoice in the possession of these most valuable essays not merely collected

BRADLEY, FRANCIS HERBERT—Continued.
in a volume but arranged with the special purpose of developing a continuous argument."
H. W. Carr

+ Hibbert J 12:697 Ap '14 2500w

"Mr. Bradley's statements have always a freshness and an individuality that give them a quite peculiar charm and interest of their own." J. S. Mackenzie

+ Int J Ethics 24:453 J1 '14 1000w

+ Nation 99:502 O 22 '14 300w

"The most important piece of philosophic writing published in England for some years."

+ Spec 112:569 Ap 4 '14 750w

BRADLEY, MRS. MARY (HASTINGS). Palace of darkened windows. il $1.30 Appleton 14-10074

The action begins with the detention of an American girl in the harem of an Egyptian officer. "Her own adventures inside the palace, her scenes with the officer and with the other women of the harem, alternate in the tale with the attempts of a friend or two on the outside to find out where she is and to rescue her from the palace. The chief one of these, a young American engineer, quite after the Richard Harding Davis models, has some highly thrilling adventures of his own as he follows the quest." (N Y Times)

"There is no danger of mistaking this book for a higher type of fiction than it really is, but of its kind it is rather worth while." Norman Bryce

+ Bookm 39:682 Ag '14 200w

"A preposterous story, but diverting withal and with rapidly changing and picturesque scenes."

+ Ind 79:173 Ag 3 '14 60w

"One might go a long way without finding a better constructed or more readably told tale."

+ N Y Times 19:250 My 31 '14 280w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Arizona: a romance of the great Southwest. il $1.25 (1½c) Dodd 14-16922

Mr. Brady has used the scenes and dialog of Augustus Thomas's play filling in gaps with the necessary descriptive matter. "Arizona" is a thrilling melodrama, presenting a picture of army and ranch life in the Southwest in the eighteen nineties. It is alive with action at every moment; its villain meets his just reward; its lovers are united and all ends well. The story is told in four parts, following the four acts of the play.

"'Arizona' is, of course, a very much better play than novel, but in either case it tells an interesting story."

+ N Y Times 19:462 O 25 '14 130w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Britton of the Seventh: a romance of Custer and the great Northwest. il $1.35 (1½c) McClurg 14-18114

A story of Custer's famous Seventh cavalry. Tony Britton, a young lieutenant, had allowed himself to drift into a friendship with a married woman before he met and fell in love with Barbara Manning. Later when he tries to draw out of the first affair, he finds that he is in deeper than he had realized and in trying to extricate himself is involved in complications which impel him to resign from the army. He rejoins his troop, however, just before the fatal last charge, and, as he is sent with Reno rather than with Custer, lives to tell the story of the day and to clear away the misunderstandings in his own affairs.

"A swiftly-moving tale with some rapid-fire love making and much rapid-fire shooting, all of which Dr. Brady describes vividly."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 26 '14 170w

"His tale is as picturesque, as exciting, as full of heroism as his former readers will have imagined. His account of America's Thermopylae will stir to the depths the most phlegmatic."

+ N Y Times 19:557 D 6 '14 200w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Island of the stairs. il $1.35 (1½c) McClurg 13-24793

The finding of Sir Geoffrey's dead body, the revelation of Mistress Lucy's penniless condition, the discovery of the mysterious map, are all preliminary events leading up to the main narrative; for this is a story of the South seas and of buried treasure. John Hampdon, sailor, is the teller of the tale, and he tells, modestly but forcefully, of his own gallant exploits in rescuing Mistress Lucy from the mutinous crew, of their ship wreck, of the finding of the treasure, of the fight for its possession, and of his own rich reward, worth more to him than all the earthly treasure ever hidden or discovered.

"Fairly readable adventure."

+ A L A Bk1 10:285 Mr '14

"All in all it is one of the most stirring and lively tales that has come from the pen of a busy writer." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 20 '13 250w

"The story is in Mr. Brady's best romantic and adventurous style."

+ N Y Times 18:768 D 28 '13 200w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Little angel of Canyon Creek. il $1.25 Revel 14-15746

"Mr. Cyrus Townsend Brady has told again the story of a small boy who redeemed a mining camp populated by unregenerate sons of men. The hero of 'The little angel of Canyon Creek' had, however, the assistance of two adults; this couple came to Canyon Creek to establish a restaurant and remained to start a Sunday-school." (Dial) "Little Olaf, the angel, is an attractive, pathetic little figure, sympathetically drawn." (Boston Transcript)

"Dr. Brady has done much better work; in fact, all his work is better."

+ Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 230w

Dial 57:342 N 1 '14 60w

"There is very little plot to the tale, and page after page of moralizing."

+ N Y Times 19:379 S 13 '14 120w

BRADY, CYRUS TOWNSEND. Sword hand of Napoleon: a romance of Russia and the great retreat. il $1.35 (1½c) Dodd 14-6800

A story of the disastrous campaign of 1812. The hero of the tale is Maurice de Vivonne, serving in Napoleon's army as Lieutenant-colonel Maurice. He alone of his family has cast his lot with the Corsican, and the plot is complicated by the presence on the scene of an elder brother who has given his services to the czar. A strange combination of circumstances force Maurice into a marriage with the Princess Idona, who is betrothed to his brother, and on the outcome of this adventure the development of the story depends.

A L A Bk1 10:412 Je '14

"The book may not be of striking value historically, or as an exact picture of Napoleon, Alexander, and the great marshals, but it is thoroughly readable as a story."

+ Ath 1914.2:178 Ag 8 150w

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 24 '14 220w

"Mr. Brady, always skillful in the construction and development of a plot, has utilized all its opportunities so well that this must be accounted among the best of his many novels."

+ N Y Times 19:188 Ap 12 '14 450w

BRAGDON, CLAUDE FAYETTE. Primer of higher space (the fourth dimension). il $1 Manas press

"The existence of a space of four dimensions can never be disproved by showing that it is absurd or inconsistent, for such is not the case," says the author. "Not only has the higher space hypothesis such validity as the great law of analogy can give, but it solves many of the problems and reconciles many of the contradictions which confront the modern man of science." He defines the fourth dimension in simple terms and takes up in turn such topics as: A broader concept of space; A hypothetical two-dimensional universe; The conquest of space of consciousness etc. About one third of the book is given up to plates and their explanations.

"The subject is here treated so simply, and at the same time so clearly and with such insight, that one gains a comprehension of this mystical 'space' as real as though it were actual. On the whole, the book may be said to be a splendid contribution to an important problem."

+ N Y Times 19:325 J1 26 '14 600w

BRAILSFORD, HENRY NOEL. Shelley, Godwin, and their circle. *50c (1c) Holt 14-3789

In this volume of the "Home university library" the author presents a series of studies of certain men and women who represented the English expression of the spirit of revolt of the late eighteenth century. His attitude toward this group of men and women, too often the subjects of prejudiced criticism, is sympathetic. Contents: The French revolution in England; Thomas Paine; William Godwin and the revolution; "Political justice"; Godwin and the reaction; Godwin and Shelley; Mary Wollstonecraft; Shelley.

"The book is clearly written and might prove valuable to the student of political theory but has little in it to interest the casual reader."

+ A L A Bkl 10:261 Mr '14

"A brilliant book which should attract by the sheer power of its writing. It is a book of great interest, too."

+ Ath 1913:2:490 N 1 150w

"His volume is one of the most notable additions to the 'Home university library of modern knowledge.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 4 '14 900w

+ Ind 80:28 O 5 '14 200w

+ Nation 99:48 J1 9 '14 70w

"Supplements such standard biographies as Prof. Dowden's 'Shelley' in a way that is bound to interest students of the poet."

+ N Y Times 19:98 Mr 1 '14 300w

"The volume contains some interesting comment on the effect of the French revolution in England."

+ Outlook 106:651 Mr 21 '14 33w

+ — Spec 112:sup1062 Je 27 '14 80w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 1150w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY, comp. Anthology of magazine verse for 1913. *$1 W. S. Braithwaite, 27 Ellsworth Av., Cambridge, Mass. A14-1727

In this anthology Mr. Braithwaite presents "the text of the forty-five poems which seem to him, judging by the standard of intention and fulfillment, the best which the magazine year in America has been able to produce. To this he has added, as a valuable record for students and lovers of poetry, a list of all the poems published during the year in the seven magazines that are best from the standpoint of poetry, with a careful indication of such of these poems as seem distinctive by the test of his critical formula."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by W. A. Bradley

+ Bookm 39:196 Ap '14 250w

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 17 '13 700w

Lit D 48:71 Ja 10 '14 280w

+ — Nation 99:249 Ag 27 '14 100w

"No one will deny that the 'Anthology of magazine verse for 1913' is a collection of real value; that its pages hold genuine poetry."

Joyce Kilmer

+ — N Y Times 19:21 Ja 18 '14 700w

+ R of Rs 49:370 Mr '14 200w

BRAITHWAITE, WILLIAM STANLEY, comp. Anthology of magazine verse for 1914, and year book of American poetry. $1.50. W. S. Braithwaite, 27 Ellsworth Av., Cambridge, Mass.

"The poetry in the magazines this year has been of an excellence in the longer pieces beyond the standard of any year in which I have made these estimates," says Mr. Braithwaite in his Introduction. Some of these longer poems which he prints in full are: Bliss Carman's Phi beta kappa poem; Percy MacKaye's Fight; Vachel Lindsay's Firemen's ball; James Oppenheim's We dead, and Conrad Aiken's Romance. Other poets represented are Witter Bynner, Amelia Josephine Burr, Louis Untermeyer, Joyce Kilmer, Olive Tilford Dargan, Mahlon Leonard Fisher, and Richard Le Gallienne. A new feature of this year's anthology is the addition of critical summaries of books of poetry published during the year.

+ Dial 58:73 F 1 '15 230w

"A book which is a distinct event in American poetic annals." D. L. Mann

+ Forum 53:232 F '15 2900w

"Mr. Braithwaite's excellent judgment and unwearying industry make this volume, with its lists, tables, and comparative criticisms, indispensable to the student of contemporary song."

+ Lit D 50:254 F 6 '15 830w

"In compiling this anthology, Mr. Braithwaite has worked arduously in the service of poetry; he has accomplished skillfully the difficult and important task. And on his success all well-wishers of American literature may look with real satisfaction."

+ N Y Times 20:3 Ja 3 '15 500w

"Surely there must be something wrong in William Stanley Braithwaite's estimate of 'the best poems from the distinctive list' in his 'Anthology of magazine verse for 1914.' Here is the way the list of about one hundred and fifty poems sizes up from a numerical standpoint: James Oppenheim is first with ten poems to his credit, John Myers O'Hara second with seven, Witter Bynner third with five, Louis Untermeyer fourth with four, Bliss Carman and Joyce Kilmer fifth with three each, then come a dozen or so with two each, and the remaining hundred or so poets have one each to their credit." Stephen Griscome

— N Y Times 20:3 Ja 3 '15 160w

"Allowing for the element of personal preference that legitimately characterizes every collection of this sort the fact remains that Mr. Braithwaite's book is the most convenient and authoritative assemblage of the best in American verse of the present day, praise that is due it without considering the fact that it is practically the only one."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 630w

BRANDEIS, LOUIS DEMBITZ. Business—a profession, with a foreword by Ernest Poole. Il *$2 (2½c) Small 14-11566

Business not as a trade but as a profession conducted on the basis of social justice is the theme of Mr. Brandeis's monograph. For many years the author has been a selfless champion of right in many an economic and industrial battle whose problems have been found to be involved in the conduct of business. Chapters: Business—a profession; The employer and trades unions; Hours of labor; Organized labor and efficiency; The road to social efficiency; Our new peonage; The incorporation of trades unions; How Boston solved the gas problem; Life insurance; Savings bank insurance; Successes of savings bank life insurance; Trusts and efficiency; Trusts and the export trade; Competition that kills; The New England transportation monopoly; The New Haven—an unregulated monopoly; An aid to railroad efficiency; The opportunity in the law.

A L A Bkl 11:53 O '14

Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 580w

"Clear thinking is the keynote, and expression which shows a sympathetic mental attitude."

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 30w

"Written with convincing logic and an altruistic viewpoint."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:188 J1 '14 40w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

BRANDEIS, LOUIS DEMBITZ. Other people's money, and how the bankers use it. *$1 (2c) Stokes 14-6184

Mr. Brandeis, in the field of economics conceded to have the soundest and most inventive mind of our time, makes clear in this volume how our borrowing system tends toward the concentration of wealth, and how it enables the man at the top to enrich himself without any compensating service to society. Constructive remedial measures are suggested with emphasis upon the potency of publicity. Chapters: Our financial oligarchy; How the combiners combine; Interlocking directorates; Serve one master only! What publicity can do; Where the banker is superfluous; Big men and little business; A curse of bigness; The failure of banker-management; The inefficiency of the oligarchs.

A L A Bkl 11:97 N '14

"To any one who stops for but a moment to think of the matter, the absurdity of Mr. Brandeis's argument will be obvious."

— Boston Transcript p8 Ap 22 '14 370w

"Written with the author's usual force, directness and boldness of statement."

+ Ind 78:454 Je 8 '14 50w

+ Nation 99:610 N 19 '14 250w

"All who are interested in the ways of big business, and interlocking directorates, can find here what they want better than almost anywhere else. On the other hand, the book is merely the revamping of old material, without new scandals, or original thought. To those weary of these subjects it seems that Mr. Brandeis proves too much."

+ — N Y Times 19:424 O 11 '14 750w

Outlook 107:426 Je 20 '14 250w

"The articles are clearly and forcibly written."

+ R of Rs 49:756 Je '14 210w

BRANDES, GEORG MORRIS COHEN. Friedrich Nietzsche. *$1.25 Macmillan A14-2552

"The book consists of four essays upon different aspects of Nietzsche's work written at various intervals from 1889 to 1909. The several essays mark the changes of attitude on the part of the reading public toward Nietzsche, and one of them considers his personal side and tells of Dr. Brandes's friendly relations with him, introducing a series of more than a score of letters hitherto unpublished, which passed between them."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 11:96 N '14

Reviewed by G. B. Donlin

+ Dial 57:297 O 16 '14 2150w

Ind 78:565 Je 29 '14 100w

"The translation is satisfactorily done."

+ Nation 99:257 Ag 27 '14 250w

N Y Times 19:288 Je 21 '14 100w

R of Rs 50:250 Ag '14 100w

"This volume can be heartily recommended to our readers. They will gain a clear idea of the main elements of Nietzsche's philosophy, presented by a critic whose impartiality is unquestioned even while his sympathies may be affected. We call attention particularly to the letters, here reproduced, which passed between Brandes and Nietzsche, letters which reveal the personalities of both men in their intimate and unguarded moments, and consequently tell us more than a shelf of formal biographies."

+ Sat R 118:50 Ji 11 '14 1400w

Spec 113:171 Ag 1 '14 1400w

BRANFORD, VICTOR. Interpretations and forecasts: a study of survivals and tendencies in contemporary society. *$2.50 Kennerley (Eng sd E11-1105)

"A collection of chapters, most of which have done duty as addresses before women's clubs, betterment associations, workmen students and home reading unions. . . . Mr. Branford has evidently adopted, as the basis of his sociological theories, the dictum of Aristotle, that 'man (including woman) is born to be a citizen.' The perfect citizen is 'the one who, arising out of the people, comes into the experience and meaning of day's work, but receives also the heritage of play, of art and culture, of religion and public service from the other civic groups.' For the evolution of this perfect citizen he looks to the eugenicist, the educator and the sociologist."—Ind

"Full of stimulus and suggestion even to those who disagree."

+ A L A Bkl 11:53 O '14

"The style is verbose, but the reader is well repaid for the perusal of the volume."

+ — Ann Am Acad 55:276 S '14 180w

"A large and solid volume in which the reader will find a good deal that is very satisfying and instructive in the field of sociology."

+ Educ R 48:426 N '14 50w

+ Ind 78:256 My 11 '14 30w

"It has the inspiration and the stimulus of the true preacher, and it is richly endowed with hope and high ideals."

+ Ind 78:536 Je 22 '14 150w

"The book is an eloquent example of the practical application of sociological theory."

A. E. Crawley

+ Nature 93:401 Je 18 '14 400w

"It appears to us that Mr. Branford has been in too great a hurry to air his theories. Incidentally he might have thought out a style less turgid, less diffuse, and less woolly than that in which he has clothed his speculations."

— Sat R 117:473 Ap 11 '14 1100w

"When not following his conclusions we are helped by the glow of the writer's idealism."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 420w

"The great, and perhaps the fatal, defect in Mr. Branford's book is that its main thesis, which is not without its value, is so shrouded in the technical language—one is tempted to say the jargon—of the professional sociologist as to make its reading difficult to any but other professional sociologists." P. S. Marden

— + Yale R n s 4:426 Ja '15 1050w

BRAUN, ETHEL. New Tripoli, and what I saw in the Hinterland. *10s 6d Unwin, London

A description of Tripoli under Italian rule. "Mrs. Braun devotes several chapters to a description of the present administration of Tripoli. Tripolitania, she explains, 'has not been annexed to the kingdom of Italy, but has only been put under its dominion. Therefore the natives are not Italian citizens, but merely Italian subjects.' As a consequence of this they remain under their own laws, except in any special particular in which these have been expressly superseded by an Italian law. The chief obstacle to the smooth working of this arrangement is the religious difficulty. . . . The most hopeful feature of Italian administration up to the present time is the improvement of public health in Tripoli itself." (Spec)

"The work is politely, cordially superficial, and all unpleasant references are avoided. The most interesting chapters in her book are those concerned with the Italian projects of administration, exploitation, and reform."

+ — Ath 1914:1:548 Ap 18 750w

"We must regard Mrs. Braun's brief survey as a good preliminary to a more ambitious study of Italy's new colony."

+ — Nation 99:635 N 26 '14 400w

Spec 113:sup615 N 7 '14 470w

BREBNER, PERCY JAMES (CHRISTIAN LYS, pseud.). Christopher Quarles, college professor and master detective. *$1.35 Dutton 14-16921

"The professor of philosophy who gives his name to 'Christopher Quarles,' belongs to the new class of amateur scientific detectives of crime. This interesting pursuit is the occupation of his leisure hours; and he takes only cases that interest him." (Outlook) "The book comprises a series of entertaining criminal problems, stories of strange disappearances, of robberies, of intrigue, and bloodshed. The experiences are those of young Murray Wigan, a clever Scotland Yard man, who, baffled in some of his many cases, visits the professor in his 'empty room' and returns anew to his work to find the facts that fit the philosopher's theory. . . . The love story of Wigan and Zena, the professor's daughter, runs pleasantly through the series." (N Y Times)

"Fairly interesting detective stories."

+ A L A Bkl 11:172 D '14

"The completeness of each story in itself, connected by the personalities of Quarles, his daughter Zena, and the young detective, Murray Wigan, make the book a particularly handy one for the busy man or woman who like the solution of an imaginary mystery but have seldom more than a short half hour or so to indulge their inclination." Cornelia Van Felt

+ Bookm 40:326 N '14 570w

"Told in a crisp, readable fashion that carries the reader swiftly to the conclusion of the volume, and leaves him wondering whether there will not be 'more.'"

+ N Y Times 19:461 O 25 '14 250w

"Of the thirty-six stories which make up this volume, some are good and some are commonplace. It cannot be said that at any point Professor Quarles reaches the level of his great English and French models."

+ Outlook 108:604 N 11 '14 150w

BREBNER, PERCY JAMES. Turbulent duchess. il *$1.30 (1c) Little 14-30979

A story of high and romantic adventure. To the court of the reigning duchess of Podina comes one Bergeolet, a jester. The duchess knows nothing of the youth save he is good to look upon, of quick wit and silvery tongue. He pleases her, and since she is minded not to let the old office of court jester fall into decay, she engages him in her service in spite of the warnings of her counsellors to the effect that he is a spy. For the duchess has many enemies, and more than one great kingdom has cast jealous eyes on the little state. How Bergeolet served his mistress and how the duchess was rewarded for her confidence in a stranger, and even for her folly in falling in love with a jester, is the substance of the story.

+ A L A Bkl 11:219 Ja '15

"It is an unusual love romance, but one that, in its main features, can hardly lay claim to entire novelty of imagination."

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ja 9 '15 270w

+ N Y Times 20:10 Ja 10 '15 450w

"This is not only Mr. Brebner's best story, but is one of the most entertaining tales of the romantic past that has appeared in a long time."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 28 '15 450w

BRENNAN, A. L., Jr. Automobile operation. (Outing handbooks) *70c (3c) Outing pub. 14-19221

The chapters of this useful little handbook for the automobile owner take up the following matters: How to drive and operate a car; Trouble symptoms; The carburetor; The cooling system; Ignition; Self starters; The brakes; The steering gear; The transmission; The proper care of tires; What to do each month; What to do each day; The four-stroke motor explained; Hints to the wise and unwise.

BRERETON, CLOUDESLEY SHOVELL HENRY. Who is responsible? Armageddon and after! 50c (2c) Putnam 14-19684

The author sees in this present conflict a war between two ideals. "In its deepest aspect the struggle is really one between the science and art of things and the science and art of life, between science in a narrow sense and religion in a broad one. . . . This is probably one of the great turning-points in the world's history—and the issue may be a great spiritual renaissance or the return of the Huns." In the four sections of the little book he discusses: The mailed fist; German strength and weaknesses; Our allies and our duties; The settlement. The settlement, he says, should be based on the principle of nationality. "No more Alsace-Lorraines should be permitted in Europe. . . . Oppressed nationalities should be freed or revived, armaments must be drastically reduced." (Preface)

"The English side of it. Better than the average of the new war literature. Hastily written, but well. The author makes an earnest though not altogether successful effort to appreciate the German point of view."

+ Ind 80:242 N 16 '14 35w

Nation 99:778 D 31 '14 100w

N Y Times 19:498 N 15 '14 350w

+ Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 30w

"This is one of the best of the many pamphlets on the war we have received. We rather regret that Mr. Brereton has ended a pamphlet so wise and well-informed upon the note of internationalism. We cannot agree with him that this war will end in a reduction of armaments and in a confederation of nations under a superior Hague tribunal."

+ Sat R 118:446 O 24 '14 350w

BREWSTER, DOROTHY. Aaron Hill, poet, dramatist, projector. il *$1.50 (1½c) Columbia univ. press 13-21690

The author has made a study of one of the minor authors of the early eighteenth century, a study of such a man, she says, entails two advantages: "His relations with great contemporaries may throw light upon them from a new angle; and his activities, whether significant or not in their results, may illustrate the spirit of his age, and enrich the backgrounds of more memorable lives. There is often, too, a psychological problem of much interest involved in a vanished reputation. Why was a writer, whose works our age declines to notice, highly regarded in his own day?" (Preface) The monograph was offered as a doctor's thesis at Columbia and is published as one of the "Studies in English and comparative literature."

"Miss Brewster's careful and exhaustive treatise, though well managed, suffers a little the penalty of its subject. But for one concerned with Pope and his circle the book will have considerable value."

+ Nation 98:87 Ja 22 '14 100w

"The story Miss Brewster tells throws considerable light upon the great literary men of Hill's time with whom he had close relations."

+ N Y Times 18:597 N 2 '13 70w

"If the thing was worth doing at all, it could hardly have been done better."

+ Spec 112:274 F 14 '14 80w

BRIDGER, ADOLPHUS EDWARD. Minds in distress. *$1.25 (3¼c) Luce, J: W.

The sub-title describes the book as "A psychological study of the masculine and feminine mind in health and in disorder." Minds are divided into two types, in one of which the reasoning faculties predominate, in the other the instinctive. The author calls these the masculine and the feminine types of mind, but points out that the line of division is not solely dependent on sex. The chapters take up: The normal mind and mental balance; The masculine type of mind; The feminine type of mind; Neurasthenia; The treatment of neurasthenia; Hysteria (three chapters); Mental formulæ.

"Dr. Bridger gives a common-sense account of the treatment he has found useful. It contains little that is new, but it may be serviceable to those who have not had a large experience in this difficult branch of medicine. His directions verge occasionally on charlatanism, but he frankly recognizes the fact, and excuses himself on the ground that the first and only duty of a physician is to cure his patient."

+ Ath 1913.2:320 S 27 200w

"The execution of Dr. Bridger's task suffers from a doctrinaire attitude, which results in an estrangement of precept and practice or in an aimless issue when they meet. The ingredients of the book are well chosen; but the com-

BRIDGER, ADOLPHUS EDWARD—Continued. posite is hardly a composition, for the ingredients do not compose."

— + Dial 56:390 My 1 '14 170w

Reviewed by Cyril Burt

Nature 93:424 Je 25 '14 230w

"The interest of the volume lies in its frank acceptance of the fact that the doctor of today must be not only something of a psychologist, but he must also be a metaphysician. His book is very readable and suggestive."

+ Sat R 116:372 S 20 '13 250w

BRIDGES, VICTOR. Another man's shoes (Eng title, Man from nowhere). $1.25 Doran 13-15685

"A story of plot and incident, of adventure and peril. . . . A man, who is rather out of luck, meets his exact double, who apparently is in very good financial luck, on the Thames embankment. The double offers to the first man, who is the teller of the story, ten thousands pounds to impersonate him for three weeks. The double, it evolves, is the escaped ex-President of a South American republic, where he had looted and murdered and played the traitor to such an extent that a number of people are bent on having revenge in kind. And they give the young man who steps into his shoes, knowing nothing of all this, a highly exciting time."—N Y Times

"It is not the main improbabilities to which we take exception. It is the constant supply of unlikely behaviour which puts us off."

— Ath 1913:1:671 Je 21 100w

+ Bookm 39:339 My '14 470w

"The plot is ingeniously made, ingeniously planned and ingeniously worked out, the story as a whole being an excellent example of an extremely common and commonplace, though none the less entertaining, form of fiction."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 300w

+ N Y Times 19:39 Ja 25 '14 330w

"Lovers of criminal mystery stories will find this exciting, well planned, and sometimes amusing."

+ Outlook 106:271 Ja 31 '14 50w

BRIERLEY, JONATHAN (J. P., pseud.). Religion and to-day. $1.25 (1½c) Pilgrim press A14-1788

"These pages are written in the belief that religion is the heart of things, and that all the research, all the new light of to-day yields that as its verdict. . . . The chapters deal with varied aspects of the central theme. They are an endeavour to answer some of the questions which the mind of to-day is putting to religion." (Preface) Some of the chapters are: Will science replace religion? Religion and social questions; Our doctrine of sin; Science and prayer; Of religious experience; Intellect and character; Church and theatre; The appreciation of life.

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 13 '13 450w

+ Ind 78:454 Je 8 '14 60w

BRIEUX, EUGÈNE. Blanchette and The escape. $1.25 (2c) Luce, J: W. 13-25911

Readers who may be inclined to shun Brieux because they associate his name only with his much advertised "Damaged goods" and expect of him a morbid treatment of sex problems, will find their impressions modified after a reading of these two three-act plays. The first tells the story of an inn-keeper's daughter who has been educated above her rank. Her family expects her to accomplish wonderful things with her learning, but she fails and comes home, cheerfully content to marry her staunch peasant lover. The second is an exposure of medical charlatany. Two young people have been so influenced by a self-seeking doctor's theories of heredity that they believe themselves hopelessly doomed. When his general insincerity is disclosed, they are freed from his tyranny and make their escape into a more wholesome atmosphere where their fears vanish.

"The escape" is inferior to 'Blanchette' as literature, but is unquestionably, a better stage-play; the art is still rudimentary, but the author has learned to make interest virtually continuous, to give his curtains the crispness of epigrams, and to dash at his point with a brusque precipitance which somehow lands him at his goal at whatever cost of dignity or discretion. The publishers have seen fit to entrust the rendering of M. Brieux's French into our vernacular to a gentleman who is conversant with neither language."

— + Nation 98:275 Mr 21 '14 820w

BRIGGS, REV. CHARLES AUGUSTUS. Theological symbolics. (International theological lib.) $2.50 Scribner 14-3985

"This, Dr. Briggs's latest work, posthumously published, was designed as a means toward the reunion of the divided church. Using 'symbolics' as a synonym of creeds, he takes first the fundamental, constituting 'the common inheritance of historical Christianity'—the ecumenical creeds; then the particular symbolics of the Roman and the Reformed churches; lastly, the comparative, the doctrinal statements of the separated churches, to determine their points of consent and dissent, and their underlying principles."—Outlook

"The weakness of this volume is one of method, and not one of scholarship or high purpose or sincerity of conviction." D: S. Schaaf

+ Am J Theol 18:616 O '14 2850w

"Dr. Briggs gives a very fair and accurate account of the creeds of the various Protestant churches, but while he tries to be fair in dealing with Catholic doctrine, his Protestant prejudice forbids his grasping the divine constitution of the church, or her true teachings on grace, the sacraments, and the like."

+ Cath World 99:546 Jl '14 250w

"Modernism, both Catholic and Protestant, is something Professor Briggs did not at all understand, and since the real problem of Christian unity is the reconciliation of ancient and modern faith, there is a pathetic aspect of this scholarly and conscientious endeavor to promote harmony by harmonizing outgrown and discarded symbols. The student of the creeds will still need other manuals for reference to the exact language of the symbols, but will find in the present work valuable bibliographical material."

+ Nation 99:228 Ag 20 '14 380w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 140w

Outlook 107:426 Je 20 '14 280w

"His book is fair, candid, and uncontroversial."

+ Sat R 118:179 Ag 8 '14 280w

BRIGGS, MARTIN SHAW. Baroque architecture. Il $5 (5c) McBride, Nast & co. (Eng ed 14-21986)

In his first chapter the author discusses the nature and origin of baroque architecture and draws a needed distinction between the terms baroque and rococo. "Baroque architecture," he says, "may be limited to an historical period, varying in date in different countries and cities, but in general beginning as the renaissance spirit declined to pedantry and ending with the return to pedantry in the eighteenth century. Its buildings may be recognized by the general principles which govern their design rather than by the abundance of their ornament." Much space is given to the study of Italy, but chapters are devoted, too, to Germany, France, Spain, England, and other European countries; Latin America also is touched upon.

Ath 1913,2:sup438 O 13 100w

"The Italian chapters are the most successful. Had Mr. Briggs confined himself to Italy he might have learnt less of the subject, but his work would have been even more valuable than it is. It is neither sufficiently condensed for a general summary of the subject, nor sufficiently exhaustive to rank as a standard history of the period; as it is, it will take its place as a useful piece of work, contributing to the better understanding of a much-maligned period in architecture."

+ — Ath 1914.1:169 Ja 10 $50w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley
Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 400w

+ Int Studio 53:169 Ag '14 300w

"Mr. Briggs is a good guide to a better understanding. His work is logical and clear in its plan, his text is reinforced by excellent illustrations, and the broad page affords a clear and restful typographical setting."

+ Outlook 197:316 Je 6 '14 500w

"It is a wide subject. Mr. Briggs tackles it in a discriminating spirit and so thoroughly as to draw in its chief features of excellence and badness."

+ Sat R 117:280 F 28 '14 200w

BRIGHAM, JOHNSON. James Harlan, il $2<sup>1</sup> (2½c) Iowa State hist. soc. 13-33317

James Harlan, the subject of this sketch, represented Iowa in the United States Senate in the years preceding and following the civil war, and was Secretary of the Interior under Lincoln and Johnson. It is with his services to his state that the biographer has been chiefly concerned, and much space is given to his early and to his later years.

"A most worthy number in the series of excellent biographies edited by Professor B. F. Shambaugh of the Iowa State historical society." W: E. Dodd

+ Am Hist R 19:693 Ap '14 600w

"An interesting biography."

+ A L A Bkl 10:177 Ja '14

"Interesting and historically valuable volume." H. S. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p11 N 18 '13 700w

R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 120w

BRINNSTOOL, EARL ALONZO. Trail dust of a maverick; with an introd. by Robert J. Burdette. il $1.25 Dodd 14-7903

It is the passing glory of the great west—the west of the wide range and the long trail—that the author celebrates in these poems. Using freely the dialect of the cowboy, he writes of Sunset on the desert; The mirage; The last drive; A cattle range at night; The short-grass country; The homesteader; The prospector; The new west, etc.

"Here is the man who can do for the cattle country and its inhabitants what has been done for the Hoosier regions by James Whitcomb Riley and for the vast solitudes of the Yukon by Robert W. Service."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 1 '14 200w

BRINK, CLARK MILLS. Making of an oration. $1.50 (1c) McClurg 13-21691

This book, designed for college classes, is the outgrowth of the author's experience as a teacher. His purpose is "to present as clearly and definitely as may be the distinctions between the oration and other forms of discourse, and to set forth concretely and specifically the fundamental methods that must be pursued by him who would attain success in oratorical composition." (Foreword) He treats his subject under four headings: The nature and elements of oratory; The plan of an oration; The composition of an oration; Gifts and habits of the orator. And in a fifth part the text of a dozen or more of the world's famous orations are given for study.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 D 13 '13 250w

"For an incipient orator, it is a fairly complete text book."

+ Ind 78:259 My 11 '14 70w

Nation 98:543 My 7 '14 50w

BRINKMAN, L. H. Breath of the Karroo. $1.35<sup>12</sup> Brentano's

"Under the guise of a loosely constructed tale wherein the author follows for a short time the fortunes of several Boer families, 'The breath of Karroo' gives what seems to be a faithful picture of life on the high interior plains of South Africa during the seventies of the last century. A slender thread of love story helps to create a continuous interest, but the chief service of that sort is given by the murder by Bushmen of two Boer boys, the solemn pact entered into by the men of the neighborhood to kill every Bushman they saw and so drive them from the country, and the consequences of this determination."—N Y Times

"The writer cumbers the narrative with commonplace details and experiences."

+ — Ath 1913.2:525 N 8 30w

"There is a well-defined plot in the story which centres about the two boys, and in addition it is full of incidents which throw light upon pioneer life."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '14 330w

"As an unpretentious chronicle of frontier life in Africa it is interesting both in itself and for comparison with the pioneer conditions that characterized life upon our own frontier."

+ — N Y Times 19:448 O 18 '14 250w

"The novel is well worth reading, though the workmanship, from the point of view of fiction, is not particularly striking."

+ — Spec 112:66 Ja 10 '14 150w

BRINTON, WILLARD COPE. Graphic methods<sup>2</sup> for presenting facts. (Works management lib.) il $4 Eng. mag. 14-18712

"While figures cannot lie, when marshaled in sufficient number and complication they can often present a pretty fair semblance of deception. For this reason it has long been a practice among statisticians to reduce their figures and facts to a graphic concentration that permits of easy and rapid understanding of the data. . . . Mr. Brinton's book is of value to the engineering profession mainly on this account. . . . Briefly, the book is a conscientious effort to give all of the various methods of graphic representation. This necessarily includes the ordinary curves and diagrams and higher cumulative and mass curves, frequency curves, etc., with which the engineer is familiar. In addition it comprises the different photographic and pictorial representations of comparative figures and the various curve forms which are adapted to business enterprises, such things as cost and production records."—Engin N

"In addition to being very interesting, the book should make a valuable reference." R. R. Potter

+ Engin N 72:1284 D 24 '14 200w

"Useful to the business man, the social worker and the legislator."

+ Pittsburgh 19:547 D '14 40w

BRISCO, NORRIS ARTHUR. Economics of efficiency. $1.50 (1c) Macmillan 14-19391

"Efficiency," says the author, "is the watchword of future industrial progress, growth and expansion." And, "the chief aim of this book is to open the eyes of business men to the underlying principles of efficiency, to emphasize the importance of these principles, and to explain their methods and workings in such a way that all business men will profit." The chapters take up: Economic need of efficiency; Efficiency; Management of the plant; Management and labor; Methods; Hiring of labor; Training; Habits; Fatigue; Working environments; Welfare work; Accidents; Fire prevention; Wages; Scientific piece-rate systems; Organized labor and efficiency methods.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 2 '15 250w

"Where he tries to philosophize, as in the chapter on organized labor, we get nothing but pious platitudes. Otherwise the book ought to be helpful to students and business men generally."

+ — Ind 81:214 F 8 '15 110w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

BROMLEY, CHARLES HIRAM and COBLEIGH, HENRY RICE. Mathematics for the practical engineer. il $2 McGraw 14-11816

"This book, which is composed largely of lessons from the engineers' study course printed in 'Power,' is the result of a sincere effort to give the power-plant engineer the mathematical training that he needs in working out the problems of his daily routine. It presupposes that he is able to perform the fundamental operations of addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. From this it leads him through fractions, decimals, percentage, denominate numbers, powers and roots, ratio and proportion, formulas, mensuration, logarithms and trigonometry."—Elec World

"An excellent elementary manual."
+ A L A Bkl 11:102 N '14

"For the greater part, the book covers the ground satisfactorily and well, but the chapter on trigonometry is too extended."
+ — Elec World 64:389 Ag 22 '14 230w

BROMLEY, HENRY ALDOUS. Outline of stationery testing. il $1 Lippincott
(Eng ed Agr13-1757)

"This little manual deals chiefly with the technical examination of paper, though other articles of stationery are included in its scope. It avoids theoretical considerations, and gives in simple language concise instructions for the practical testing of paper, physically, microscopically, and chemically."—Nature

"Though on British practice, will be useful where needed."
+ A L A Bkl 10:262 Mr '14

"Within its limits—those of a collection of notes for use in practically examining stationery—the book will be found useful."
+ Nature 91:503 Jl 17 '13 300w

BRONSON, EDGAR BEECHER. The vanguard. $1.25 (1½c) Doran 14-6191

The author of this book has himself experienced many of the thrilling adventures that fall to the lot of those who join the vanguard of civilization, but the actual events of this story are said to be drawn from the notes of Corporal Stocking, a famous mine and coach guard and sheriff of the early days. The story begins with a record of a boyhood in Michigan and of a journey over the Santa Fé trail. There is an account of the part taken by California in the civil war, and the story is rounded out with the happy consummation of an old romance.

+ Boston Transcript p6 My '14 200w
+ Ind 79:74 Jl 13 '14 50w

"He tells these stories well, without the garbure that frequently makes such yarns bore-some and with a keen instinct for the dramatic in situation and in narrative."

+ N Y Times 19:188 Ap 12 '14 250w

"Entertaining volume."

+ Spec 113:26 Jl 4 '14 80w

BROOKE, GEOFFREY FRANCIS HEREMON. Training young horses to jump; preface by Col. J. Vaughan. il $1.50 Dutton
(Eng ed War13-213)

"As an instructor at the Cavalry school at Netheravon the author has studied his subject thoroughly and in this book he makes public the conclusions to which his experience has led him and the methods which he has found the most useful. While the book deals mainly with the training of young horses in jumping, whether for the hunt, for show, or for military use, there is much in it on the treatment and care of young horses that the ordinary rider and driver will find useful."—N Y Times

+ Ind 77:455 Mr 30 '14 100w

+ N Y Times 18:619 N 9 '13 100w

BROOKS, ALFRED MANSFIELD. Architecture and the allied arts. il $3.50 (6c) Bobbs
14-5515

Architecture, painting and sculpture are treated here as sister arts. The purpose of the book, the author says "is to point out some of the most marked characteristics of the plastic and graphic arts; of the architecture, sculpture and painting of western Europe during the middle ages. . . . The text is intended to be a syllabus of artistic tendencies, illustrated by well-known and famous works of art. It is not a history of art." Contents: The significance of art; Greek and Roman architecture; Greek and Roman sculpture; Christian Roman architecture; Christian Roman sculpture and painting; Byzantine architecture; Romanesque architecture; Romanesque sculpture; Gothic architecture; Gothic sculpture and the minor arts.

"The errors and omissions might be overlooked if the text set forth familiar facts and principles with great originality either of thought or expression, or with striking breadth and masterly grasp of the subject, but in these the book is certainly deficient. The statements of fact are, however, generally correct, and the critical judgments do not stray from the beaten path of the standard reference books." A. D. F. Hamlin

+ — Am Hist R 20:186 O '14 300w

"While for the most part it merely repeats accepted ideas, it presents them in an attractive, non-technical way, which invites to further study."

+ A L A Bkl 11:16 S '14

"The plan of the book does not seem to be very well thought out. Its teaching is rather indefinite. It gives the impression of being the result of lectures meant for immature hearers. Its precise usefulness is not wholly clear, although it contains a considerable amount of suggestive information. The pictures are badly arranged in the book, being without direct relation to the text or placed in numerical sequence. And worst of all, there is no index."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 10 '14 650w

"Professor Brooks has repeated anew in popular form the current dicta on the art of Europe in the middle ages and in classic times. The need for such a repetition is not obvious. Even in elementary matters of fact there are disquieting slips."

+ Dial 56:427 My 16 '14 470w

+ Ind 78:402 Je 1 '14 110w

"He nowhere ventures aside from the well-beaten paths of criticism of the old and standard writers, and there is little suggestion of individual judgment, or of any personal acquaintance with or impressions from the great buildings he describes. The illustrations are generally excellent, but scattered in a confusing way, with neither textual nor numerical sequence."

+ — Nation 99:262 Ag 27 '14 300w

"The merit of this book is chiefly to be found in its lucidity of statement. Pedantry and eloquence alike are absent from the treatment of a subject that is only too prone to provoke both."

+ N Y Times 19:331 Ag 2 '14 400w

"The kind of book which ought to be of real value both to the traveler and to the student."

+ Outlook 107:265 My 30 '14 150w

+ R of Rs 50:252 Ag '14 60w

"From first to last it is captivating. Remarkably free from technicalities, scholarly, unprejudiced, sane in esthetic judgment, it is a book to be read and thoroughly enjoyed by the person who would really like to know something about architecture, and how many such people there are these days! The illustrations are excellent. Unfortunately they are confusingly numbered, and frequently inserted where they are inconvenient for reference." H. T. B.

+ — School Arts Magazine 13:791 Je '14 250w

"It strikes a happy medium between the technical and the simply popular exposition of the subject, and at the same time avoids the frequent fate of those who, in avoiding extremes, prove acceptable to none."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 S 3 '14 1150w

BROOKS, VAN WYCK. John Addington Symonds. il $1.50 (3c) Kennerley 14-12506

Both a biographical study and a critical estimate of Symonds's place in literature. The emphasis in the early part of the study is put upon the mental experiences, skeptical, speculative and analytical in turn, which mark the way to Symonds's finding himself,—the way to "a robust sense of life in its totality." The biographer enlarges upon the peculiar quality of Symonds's mind, his style, method, and choice of literary themes; upon the men who influenced him, notably Plato, Goethe and Walt Whitman; and upon the close interfusing of his life, work, and philosophical and religious beliefs.

+ A L A BkI 11:117 N '14.

"As a piece of critical writing, it surpasses anything of the kind done by a contemporary American critic, and in point of values and critical style it is equal to the best work of a similar kind that has come to us from England during the period above mentioned." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 1150w

"If the reader can allow for the author's bias, he will find the book a useful one. Unfortunately it is not supplied with an index."

+ — Dial 57:109 Ag 16 '14 700w

"Mr. Brooks's essay is an excellent bit of criticism, written with sympathy, discrimination, and distinction."

+ Nation 99:227 Ag 20 '14 600w

+ R of Rs 50:763 D '14 160w

"It is fair to Mr. Brooks to say that he writes well. What the author lacks is a sense of intellectual responsibility."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 J1 2 '14 470w

BROSTER, D. K., and TAYLOR, G. W. Vision splendid. $1.35 Brentano's

In this historical novel the authors "adhere to what may be called the classic principle of inventing the chief personages, and introducing historical characters only in subsidiary rôles. The time chosen is 1830, and the story has two main motives, being concerned with the religious revival which had its centre in the common room of Oriol, and also with the political conflict between the upholders of the dispossessed Legitimist régime and the newly established Orleanist monarchy. These two widely divergent currents of thought and aspiration converge in the personal relations of the hero and heroine."—Spec

"An exceptionally well-written novel."

+ Ath 1913,2:700 D 13 100w

"Correct writing and clear thought are as nothing in a novel unless it is also a good story with dynamic power to lift the reader along. In this lack is the failure of 'The vision splendid.'"

+ — Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 500w

"The 499 pages of the book are almost too comprehensively inclusive. One would be inclined to say that the authors had attempted too much if they had not achieved it so well. In spite of theology and history, even that impatient person, 'the average reader,' must admit that the story goes and takes him with it."

+ — N Y Times 19:270 Je 14 '14 400w

"We have characters cleverly and sympathetically drawn, incidents of unusual interest, and a series of sketches of men whose names have passed into proverbs, yet the novel never holds us for long."

+ — Sat R 116:785 D 20 '13 250w

"An excellent historical romance. One cannot resist the conclusion that the authors have combined the materials for two novels in a single volume, and that what they have gained in variety they have lost in artistic concentration."

+ — Spec 111:986 D 6 '13 620w

"It is a story that repays the reading."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 20 '14 450w

BROWN, ABBIE FARWELL. Lucky stone. il 10 $1.25 (3c) Century 14-16943

A story for children. Little Maggie Price, who lives in a crowded tenement in the city, believes in fairies. And when her good friends at the settlement send her out to the country to spend a happy two weeks she knows at once that the fairies must make their home in Bonnyburn. Bob and Bess are skeptical, but Maggie is not at all surprised when they learn that a real enchanted princess is living in the big white house on the hill, and in the course of the story Maggie realizes her wish that she may help make the princess happy.

+ Ind 80:414 D 14 '14 60w

"A bright and interesting little story."

+ Lit D 49:1127 D 5 '14 160w

N Y Times 19:440 O 11 '14 70w

"This is perhaps the best of the season's books for boys and girls in their early teens."

H. L. Reed

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 150w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:264 N '14 30w

BROWN, ABBIE FARWELL. Songs of sixpence. " il $1.25 Houghton 14-16244

Poems by the author, contributed to "St. Nicholas," "The Youth's Companion," and other magazines, have been collected to make up the contents of this book. Children will enjoy the verses with their attractive illustrations and teachers on the lookout for short recitations for Friday afternoons or special occasions will find here a number that are appropriate.

"Without seeming to stoop to the childish world, Miss Brown has, in the external order, at least, found the art of becoming a child."

+ Cath World 100:390 D '14 380w

+ Ind 80:414 D 14 '14 60w.

"This is a charming collection of poems, unfortunately of unequal value, technique, and sentiment."

+ — Lit D 49:1127 D 5 '14 220w

"A charming volume, with many felicitous expressions of childhood."

+ Nation 99:696 D 10 '14 30w

"Poems of the blowball variety, sometimes clever, sometimes only playful, superlative in good-nature and unimpeachably refined." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 100:13 Ja 7 '15 30w

BROWN, ALICE VAN VECHTEN, and RAN-KIN, WILLIAM. Short history of Italian painting. il $2.25 Dutton 14-11604

"This little book purports to fix attention on the monuments of Italian painting, and to give familiarity with certain modern points of view and with the opinions of a few important critics." (Sat R) "It is the first popular work that does any sort of justice to the great painters before Giotto. Usually the more disputable questions are frankly stated and the views of the authors presented with becoming modesty. There is plentiful citation of relevant literature, abundant illustrations, and supplementary lists of pictures besides those mentioned in the text. The book is admirably fitted for use in college classes, but should appeal as well to the pure amateur." (Nation)

"This popular manual fills a definite need since there is no other adequate brief history of Italian painting."

+ A L A BkI 11:160 D '14

"The book is simply written, well illustrated, and embodies the now generally accepted judgments on the various artists and their schools. The book is well arranged, although the dividing of the Renaissance period into four sections seems unnecessarily academic; and there is an excellent bibliography, as well as a useful index to painters and their works."

+ — Ath 1914,1:832 Je 13 850w

BROWN, A. V. V., and RANKIN, W:

"While it does not claim to be an exhaustive study, the amount of important material introduced by the authors is remarkable."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 5 '14 180w

"Will appeal both to the teacher and to the art amateur."

+ Cleveland 6:75 S '14 20w

"We know of no other book that in such brief compass covers the whole subject so thoroly and satisfactorily."

+ Ind 80:173 N 2 '14 110w

"The printing, especially in the notes, is rather careless, but the errors are seldom of a kind seriously to mislead. Taken as a whole, the little volume, with its admirably chosen cuts, is far the best thing of its sort in the field. Its welcome among art lovers should be assured, while to art lovers who are also teachers, it is a positive boon."

+ — Nation 99:27 JI 2 '14 370w

"While this book is designed primarily for students, it is of special and practical value for amateurs and collectors. While the volume is encyclopaedic and technical in design, it is not at all a dry-as-dust production, but possesses an inspirational quality for those who really want to understand Italian art."

+ Outlook 108:458 N 18 '14 300w

+ — Sat R 117:775 Je 13 '14 350w

BROWN, CALVIN SMITH, ed. Latin songs; classical, medieval, and modern; with music.
$2 Putnam 14-8483

"With the sensible suggestion that singing Latin may lead to attempts to speak it, Prof. Brown has made a compilation of 'classical lyrics, mediæval church hymns, Christmas carols, convivial songs, school songs, lullabies, nursery-rhymes, love lyrics, folk songs, and translations of popular English and German pieces.' . . . The German and English originals are given in all cases where the translations are put or adapted to music. There is a very wide variety in the style of the songs, which in many cases are capital for part-singing. In some cases there are several settings of the same song, Latin, Greek, German and English."—Boston Transcript

"There are a few slight misprints which a second edition (sure to be called for) will undoubtedly correct. It is a book that ought to be in daily use in every preparatory school in the country."

+ — Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 400w

"More good specimens of melodious music are seldom brought between two covers." H: T. Finck

+ Nation 98:612 My 21 '14 100w

"This volume has a distinct pedagogical value. Its editor deserves the thanks of all who regard the study of Latin as a valuable constituent of a well-rounded English education. He has the distinction of having produced the one representative Latin song-book in the world."

+ Outlook 107:561 JI 4 '14 230w

+ Spec 113:175 Ag 1 '14 60w

BROWN, CHARLES REYNOLDS. Quest of life.
$1.25 (2c) Pilgrim press 13-21333

Fifteen inspirational sermons by the Dean of Yale Divinity school. They have been selected for publication as a group because of their common bearing on the subject of personal religion. The titles are: The quest of life; Where do you live? The vision of God; The city that lieth four square; The power of request; The right frontage in life; The man within the man; The highest form of sacrifice; Broken plans; The measure of human responsibility; the high office of sympathy; Greater things ahead; The religious life under changed conditions; The uses of disappointment; The rank and file.

"Simple, straightforward, with a direct appeal to the highest and best in man."

+ A L A Bkl 10:262 Mr '14

"All witness a broad sympathy and tolerance and an understanding of human experience in all its phases which cannot but inspire and hearten."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 13 '13 180w

+ Ind 78:105 Ap 13 '14 40w

"Simple, direct, sympathetic, incisive, in their pointed application of the lessons of experience in the defeated and the successful quest of life, whichever one of these discourses one may read, it is distinctly uplifting, energizing, inspirational."

+ Outlook 105:934 D 27 '13 100w

BROWN, DEMETRA (VAKA) (MRS. KEN-NETH BROWN). Child of the Orient. $1.25
(2c) Houghton 14-9080

Demetra Vaka tells the story of her own childhood in Turkey. She was a little Greek girl, brought up with a reverence for Greek traditions and a hatred for the Turks. But she made friends with a little Turkish girl and was admitted into Turkish households and found that she could love them. The story follows her thru three years' schooling in Paris and describes her arrival in America and her impressions.

"Well written, though too long, and less interesting than 'Haremlik.'"

+ — A L A Bkl 11:24 S '14

+ Ind 1914,2:193 Ag 15 1800w

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 16 '14 600w

"Vivid and real, because it is the author's autobiography told with direct narrative and simple philosophy."

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 30w

+ Ind 79:385 S 14 '14 70w

Lit D 48:1497 Je 20 '14 180w

+ Nation 98:635 My 28 '14 180w

+ — N Y Times 19:234 My 17 '14 1100w

+ Sat R 118:275 S 5 '14 450w

+ Spec 112:1041 Je 20 '14 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:164 Je '14 40w

BROWN, EDNA ADELAIDE. When Max came.
$1.20 (1c) Lothrop 14-6285

A story for high-school boys and girls made up of an account of the holiday doings of a group of young people of their own age. Max, who comes to spend a summer with his cousins in the Maine woods, is an American lad who has grown up abroad. He comes to his American relatives a stranger, but he easily wins a place in the hearts of all of them. Only his cousin Hope holds aloof, and a summer of misunderstandings passes before her prejudices are overcome, and before she learns that Max is the ideal comrade and friend for whom she has longed, one with whom she can share her pet interests.

A L A Bkl 10:416 Je '14 ✦

BROWN, EDWIN A. "Broke," the man without the dime. il $1.50 (1½c) Browne & Howell 13-25037

A book which should supplement the report of the investigations made by the Russell Sage foundation into the condition of homeless men. The series of investigations here reported were undertaken by the author on his own responsibility after a chance incident had called his attention to conditions in his own city, Denver. He visited cities in all parts of the country, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Toledo, Minneapolis, Louisville, and others, and in each put himself in place of the homeless man, who has not the dime to pay for a night's lodging. He is an advocate of municipal emergency homes for every city of the United States.

"Here is a book which should have and doubtless will have an extended circulation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 13 '13 270w

N Y Times 19:25 Ja 18 '14 120w

"The investigations conducted by the author and his judgments and conclusions appear quite uncritical to the person who is familiar with the facts with which he deals." W: M. Leiserson

— Survey 31:808 Mr 28 '14 450w

BROWN, ELIJAH P. ("RAM'S HORN")
<sup>8</sup> BROWN, pseud.). Real Billy Sunday, the life and work of Rev. W: Asbury Sunday, the baseball evangelist. il *$1 Revell 14-5825

"Mr. Brown was closely associated with Mr. Sunday in his evangelistic work, and Mr. Sunday has this to say of the book. "This book has been written by a friend who has known me nearly all my Christian life. He has brought to the task a ripe experience as a Christian, an evangelist and a literary man. The reader will find he has performed his duty well. Other books may purport to give a history of my life and work, but this alone has been prepared with my sanction and permission." (Chaut) "Several of the evangelist's sermons are included in the book, and it is profusely illustrated with photographs of Billy Sunday, his life and work." (R of Rs)

Boston Transcript p10 My 16 '14 330w

"Billy Sunday's life is unique and full of interest, and the simple and direct style used by Mr. Brown makes of it a fascinating story. The narrative, together with the excerpts from the preacher's sermons and the description of his methods of work, charms, instructs and inspires."

+ Chaut 72:637 Ap 11 '14 120w

N Y Times 19:240 My 17 '14 180w

"Whatever the curious would like to know of the whirlwind evangelist and his family is related, even to his neckties and his shaving himself with a poor razor."

+ Outlook 107:563 Jl 4 '14 150w

"A pleasant, readable book."

+ R of Rs 49:632 My '14 300w

BROWN, HARRY GUNNISON. International<sup>2</sup> trade and exchange; a study of the mechanism and advantages of commerce. il *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 14-20139

"In this book I have aimed to cover the theory of international and intranational trade, with due consideration to the exchange mechanism of such trade, and with some reference to the effects of government interferences with trade. The larger emphasis, as the title of the book suggests, is on international trade; but the similarity of principle in intranational trade is not overlooked." (Preface) Part 1 of the book, The exchange mechanism of commerce has two introductory chapters on the Laws of money and The nature of bank credit. The remaining chapters are concerned with foreign exchange. Part 2, The economic advantages of commerce, takes up revenue tariff, protective tariff, bounties, navigation acts, etc. A third part on Transportation expenses of commerce is promised in another volume.

BROWN, HELEN DAWES. Talks to freshman<sup>11</sup> girls. *75c (1c) Houghton 14-17213

The reading of these wise, helpful talks need not be confined to the girls of freshman classes. Older college girls and girls and women outside of college walls may find in them inspiration. The first of the four talks is developed from a text from Bacon: "Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability." The three that follow treat of: Real readers; The use of the pen; Everyday living.

"Such advice, when as well expressed as it is in these brief essays, serves for momentary inspiration to the college girl, but it does not really get at the heart of the most pressing problems of her freshman year."

+ Dial 58:59 Ja 16 '15 170w

Ind 80:66 O 12 '14 32w

"Will give the girls for whom it is written several new and interesting points of view."

+ N Y Times 19:480 N 1 '14 30w

BROWN, JAMES CAMPBELL. History of<sup>1</sup> chemistry from the earliest times till the present day. il *$3.50 Blakiston

(Eng ed 13-13101)

The text of this book has been arranged by the editors from the lecture notes of a course delivered by Dr. Brown annually to senior students at Liverpool university. His sudden death cut short his own plans of amplifying and preparing them for publication. "Following the example of Kopp . . . the author has divided his subject into five sections—the Prehistoric, the Alchemical, the Iatrochemical, the Phlogiston and the Quantitative periods. The lectures upon the first four of these periods cover their ground most minutely, and indicate that the author must have had a particular fondness for ancient chemical lore. . . . The fifth section of the book was not finished by the late author and this part of the volume shows in consequence considerable evidences of incompleteness." (Science)

"The book is eminently readable, and may be recommended to the student who desires only a very general acquaintance with the main lines of the historical development of the science, without too much critical detail. Considering the immensity of the subject, a great amount of information has been packed into the five hundred pages of which the work consists." T.

+ Nature 91:445 Jl 3 '13 420w

"A critical reader might object to several statements in the book for reasons of inaccuracy. After a careful reading of the book, we believe that the publication of Dr. Campbell Brown's lectures upon the history of chemistry was well worth while." C. A. Browne

+ Science n s 38:780 N 28 '13 1250w

BROWN, MRS. MARY ELIZABETH (ADAMS),
<sup>3</sup> comp. Dedications: an anthology of the forms used from earliest days of book-making to the present time. il *$2.50 Putnam 13-24479

"Even the careless reader usually glances at the dedication of a book, for he somehow feels that it brings him closer to the author, and in an interesting way. Here is a whole book of these personal glimpses at author and their works—dedications compiled from literature of all sorts, all languages and all times, and classified according to the nature of their appeal. The various heads include heavenly, royal and church dignitaries, armies and navies, localities, institutions, authors, children, relatives, friends, animals and inanimate things. The dedications under each head are arranged chronologically and although there is no set proportion, there is probably a preponderance of comparatively modern literature."—Boston Transcript

+ Ath 1914,1:225 F 14 900w

"The dedications have been commendably chosen and edited, and the book can assuredly be read for pleasure as well as for instruction."

+ Boston Transcript p13 D 2 '13 200w

Dial 56:193 Mr 1 '14 190w

"Perhaps what will astonish most of those who open the book is the amount of graceful literature, in prose and verse, to be found within its covers; it is a kind of history of men and manners in allusion and epigram and direct eulogy."

+ Nation 98:190 F 19 '14 180w

"The whole makes up a volume of considerable interest, to which Mrs. Brown has occasionally added by her own annotations." Joseph Jacobs

+ N Y Times 19:63 F 8 '14 680w

"The volume is not only an addition to the literature of reference, but the dedications form exceptionally interesting reading."

+ Outlook 106:271 Ja 31 '14 250w

Spec 112:103 Ja 17 '14 150w

BROWN, PHILIP MARSHALL. Foreigners in<sup>11</sup> Turkey; their juridical status. *$1.25 (3¼c) Princeton univ. press 14-15796

Professor Brown of Princeton who was at one time connected with the American embassy in Constantinople has prepared this book setting forth the rights and privileges accorded foreigners within the Turkish empire. Part 1 discusses Origin of the rights of foreigners; part 2, The capitulations; parts 3 and 4, The juridical rights of foreigners; part 5, Immunities of jurisdiction and international law. An appendix gives the Regulations in force in the consular courts of the United States in the Ottoman dominions. A bibliography is provided and an index completes the work.

BROWN, PHILIP MARSHALL—Continued.

Ind 79:449 S 28 '14 20w

N Y Times 19:397 S 27 '14 1400w

"It is not equalled in the qualities of thoroughness and exact legal presentation by anything else that is available to the reader."

+ R of Rs 50:762 D '14 140w

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 17 '14 370w

BROWN, VINCENT. Wonder worker. *$1.35
12 Brentano's

"As in many instances on the stage and in fiction, the wonder-worker is only heard and not seen. His words cause much searching of heart to a dear old couple, whose main sin seems to have been the secrecy in which they have shrouded the fact of their children's illegitimacy. On confession being made, it becomes evident that the parents have failed to transmit such a measure of their own charity to their offspring as will make them attempt to mitigate the world's censure."—Ath

+ Ath 1914,1:sup742 My 23 150w

"Delightfully refreshing. Delightfully surprising, too."

+ Boston Transcript p25 D 2 '14 300w

"The author, while willing that we should be amused by the antics of the respectable children, also wishes us to take the old people very seriously. Here, in failing to realize the limitations of his material, he has gone astray."

— + Nation 99:632 N 26 '14 350w

"It cannot be said that the novel is particularly interesting, though Jacob and Annie are two sweet old people and the warring families well portrayed. Keeping the fifteen grandchildren straight and assigned to the proper parents requires rather more of an effort than it is worth."

— + N Y Times 19:447 O 18 '14 280w

BROWN, WILLIAM GARROTT. New politics,
7 and other papers. il *$1.75 (3½c) Houghton
14-9398

A half dozen papers concerned with the political conditions of the past few years. They are: The new politics; Prophetic voices about America; The white peril; the immediate danger of the negro; The South and the saloon; President Taft's opportunity; Greetings to the presidents. The value of the concluding series of papers, "written for special occasions which have gone by, obviously depends upon the even temper and accuracy with which Mr. Brown passed judgment upon the achievement and the possibilities before the presidents." (Springfield Republican)

"The author's keen insight into politics as well as his originality and felicity of expression give the book more than passing interest, though its fragmentary, disconnected nature makes it unsuited to small libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 11:53 O '14

+ Ann Am Acad 56:173 N '14 220w

"These papers, sound and logical, written with the literary distinction not often possessed by students of political affairs, present not only, in Lord Bryce's words, 'a memorial to a young writer of great promise,' but as well a valuable addition to the literature of contemporary political and social affairs that touch the future." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 1150w

+ Dial 57:58 Jl 16 '14 110w

+ J Pol Econ 22:924 N '14 100w

+ No Am 200:156 Jl '14 550w

"The English of these essays is admirable, and, in general, the writer's political discernment is notably clear and sane. In the editing of the volume it would have been only fair to the author if notes had been inserted explaining the circumstances in which each article was written."

+ — R of Rs 49:755 Je '14 70w

"It would be hard to find another present-day writer on American politics who more nearly than Mr. Brown approached that felicity of style which so distinguishes Mr. Wilson's utterances."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 580w

BROWNE, BELMORE. Conquest of Mount Mc-
1 Kinley; appendix by H. C. Parker. il *$3.50
Putnam 13-23187

"The book contains the full account of the three expeditions for the scaling of Mount McKinley of which Mr. Browne was a member, the first in 1906, the second in 1910, and the last in 1912. On this final one he, Prof. Herschel C. Parker of Columbia university and a companion passed the 20,000-foot level and fought their way through a blizzard that made the day seem, in Mr. Browne's memory, 'like an evil dream,' to a point so near the summit that they could have reached it, in good weather, with a few minutes of easy walking."—N Y Times

+ — A L A Bkl 10:177 Ja '14

"Mr. Browne, is not a practised writer, but he has good powers of description; and his enthusiasm for the mountains and for wilderness-travel will appeal to all who are interested in the literature of exploration. The photographs are remarkably good, and give an excellent idea of the wild scenery of the Range; while Mr. Browne's colour-sketches have a charm of their own, though their scheme of colour is not always convincing. His admirable map makes the scene of his explorations entirely intelligible."

+ — Ath 1914,1:233 F 14 1300w

"An exceedingly interesting narrative."

+ Dial 56:29 Ja 1 '14 300w

"In paper, print, binding, and cover decoration, the publishers have given the story an admirable setting."

+ Nation 98:84 Ja 22 '14 550w

"Only less fascinating than the text are the illustrations, which show the same faculty for seizing upon and presenting the interesting thing."

+ N Y Times 18:680 N 30 '13 320w

+ No Am 200:295 Ag '14 1750w

+ Outlook 105:712 N 29 '13 80w

R of Rs 48:752 D '13 100w

+ Sat R 117:151 Ja 31 '14 130w

"It is a readily written narrative, modest, candid, good-humoured, full of an abiding passion for high places and wild life—the kind of book which is produced in America today better than anywhere else."

+ Spec 112:440 Mr 14 '14 1350w

BROWNE, EDGAR. Phiz and Dickens as they
10 appeared to Edgar Browne. il *$4 (5c) Dodd
(Eng ed A14-1647)

Mr. Browne has written a memoir of his father, Hablot K. Browne, better known as "Phiz," the illustrator of Dickens's novels. "I have endeavoured," he says, "to select from a chaos of youthful memories those facts and circumstances most important and serving to form the picture of early Victorian society. . . . I have taken my father as a central figure, and I have grouped around him such people and incidents as seemed most interesting, and as a man cannot be separated from his times, I have endeavoured to describe the manners and customs and the mode of life of that section of the middle classes among whom I passed my early days." Among the noted figures who appear in these reminiscences are Thackeray, Macready, the Keans, Harrison Ainsworth, and Charles Lever. The illustrations are reproductions from the characteristic work of "Phiz."

"Mr. Browne is discursive, like Mr. Fitzgerald, and tells us much that we know; but he has an excellent judgment, and shows considerable shrewdness in his views of the interesting people he came across."

+ — Ath 1914:1:156 Ja 31 $50w

Boston Transcript p23 S 16 '14 1250w

"His pen has run away; and, although throughout the book he is constantly pulling up and apologising for his waywardness, he has been quite unable to keep to the business in hand. The first part of the book is mainly about himself, and is the most interesting."

— + Sat R 116:786 D 20 '13 230w

"Mr. Edgar Browne has written a very pleasant account of his father."

+ Spec 112:835 My 16 '14 470w

BROWNE, FRANCIS FISHER. Every-day life of Abraham Lincoln; new ed il *$2.50 (1c) Browne & Howell 13-26110

This life of Lincoln was first published over twenty-five years ago, some twenty years after Lincoln's death. The present edition has been revised and shortened. "This book brings Lincoln the man, not Lincoln the tradition, very near to us. Browning asked, 'And did you once see Shelley plain? And did he stop and speak to you?' The men whose narratives make up a large part of this book all saw Lincoln plain, and here tell us what he spoke to them, and how he looked and seemed while saying it. The great events of Lincoln's life, and impressions of his character, are given in the actual words of those who knew him." (Preface to 2d ed)

+ A L A Bkl 10:333 Ap '14

"If Mr. Browne's 'anecdotal' plan is often repetitious or contradictory, sometimes tiresome, and never as coherent as the formal biography, it brings us very close to Lincoln, and so performs an inestimable service to his memory."

+ — Boston Transcript p26 D 10 '13 370w

"As it stands, it is a monument of patient labor, almost as conspicuous for what it rejects as for what it includes, for it is evident that everything has been duly weighed. An analytical index, probably the fullest and most serviceable ever included in a Lincoln biography, will be welcomed by every reader and will give the work a unique reference value in the library." Wallace Rice

+ Dial 55:408 N 16 '13 1300w

+ Nation 100:147 F 4 '15 150w

"It would be hard to name anything in the Lincoln literature which gives in popular form so sound and personal a picture of Lincoln the man."

+ Outlook 106:154 Ja 17 '14 90w

"There need be no hesitation in pronouncing 'The everyday life of Abraham Lincoln,' by the late Francis Fisher Browne, one of the best Lincoln biographies in existence."

+ R of Rs 49:249 F '14 190w

"Few men were better equipped than Francis Fisher Browne for the task of giving to the world this collection of impressions of a great personality."

+ Sat R 118:227 Ag 22 '14 300w

+ Spec 113:94 Jl 18 '14 1450w

BROWNELL, ATHERTON. Unseen empire: a peace play in four acts. *$1.25 (4½c) Harper 14-16926

Friderika Stahl is sole mistress of the Stahl gun works. The gun works prosper and Friderika is known for her charities. With one war scare she has built a hospital, with another she hopes to endow a museum of art. Then to her horror she learns that the latest of the war scares is not mere bluff; it is real; actual conflict is imminent, and her factory is depended upon as the source of the munitions of war. Fully awakened to the true nature of warfare, she refuses to sell a single gun, and when the government is about to take over the works by force, she wrecks the entire plant rather than permit herself longer to serve the god of war. "You have made me think," she says to the American ambassador. "Keep on thinking," he answers. "Make other people think. People who think will never go to war."

Boston Transcript p8 O 17 '14 500w

Reviewed by H. E. Woodbridge

Dial 58:47 Ja 16 '15 600w

+ R of Rs 50:634 N '14 100w

BROWNELL, WILLIAM CRARY. Criticism. *75c (6c) Scribner 14-16938

The author looks upon criticism as a special province of literature with a technic of its own, and protests against the view of it as "a literary adjunct of the special art with which it is variously called upon to concern itself." The true objects of the critic's contemplation, he says are "the multifarious elements of truth, beauty, goodness and their approximations and antipodes, underlying the various phenomena which express them, rather than the laws and rules peculiar to each form of phenomenal expression." He writes on the Field and function, Equipment, Criterion, and Method of criticism.

+ A L A Bkl 11:209 Ja '15

"Himself a critic of authority in literary matters, William C. Brownell is well qualified to become a critic of criticism." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p27 N 25 '14 680w

+ Ind 79:449 S 28 '14 20w

"Mr. Brownell's criticism pursues truth with fine concentration upon its object—and with very notable technique. One wishes for this discourse a wider influence than it is likely, one apprehends, to exert; for it is full of valuable distinctions, wise counsel, and technical hints of which American criticism generally stands in crying need."

+ — Nation 99:777 D 31 '14 680w

BROWNING, OSCAR. General history of the world. il *$1.50 Longmans (Eng ed 13-16898)

The author's "declared desire is to present a history that may usefully serve for English teachers who agree with him that world history, rather than the history of England, should be the basis of instruction. He acknowledges that this is the case 'in every country but our own.' The book is written frankly from the British point of view, and ends abruptly with the death of Edward VII, on May 6, 1910."

—Nation

Ath 1913:1:543 My 17 80w

"The work is well done, and the proportions are good. The book can be commended as a textbook, and also as a manual for the general reader."

+ Boston Transcript p25 N 5 '13 430w

"Mr. Browning's book can scarcely become a general textbook in the United States. On the other hand, it is possible that the book will supply a legitimate demand for collateral reading and reference on topics connected with international relations and militarism, though even in this sphere the lack of illustrations and adequate maps and the presence of unexplained, technical terms will tell against its full utility." Carlton Hayes

+ Educ R 48:317 O '14 620w

"Mr. Browning, eminent in his profession, has kept his proportions well, and perhaps, among the most valuable elements in his book are the maps, genealogical tables, etc., with which it is equipped. As a sort of index to and enumeration of historic events, we commend this work to the attention of students and teachers."

+ Lit D 48:1126 My 9 '14 70w

"Its principal defect is not so much its insular horizon, though that obtrudes, as the fact that in only the narrowest and most conventional sense is it a world history at all. Rather is it a list of royal persons and dynasties and wars."

BROWNING, OSCAR—Continued.

+ Nation 98:548 My 7 '14 250w

"It is a remarkable task that he has undertaken and, considering its enormous difficulties, it has been done remarkably well."

+ N Y Times 19:264 Je 7 '14 250w

BRUCE, HENRY ADDINGTON BAYLEY. Adventures in the psychical. *$1.35 (2c) Little 14-6675

"The author says of this volume that it is somewhat in the nature of a sequel to "The riddle of personality," published six years ago. That book made a study of "the results of modern psychological research in the realm of the abnormal and the seemingly supernatural, with the special purpose of making clear their bearings on the problem of the nature and possibilities of man." The present book is given to a detailed treatment of the phenomena that have been made the subject of scientific investigation. The chapters take up: Ghosts and their meaning; Why I believe in telepathy; Clairvoyance and crystal-gazing; Automatic speaking and writing; Poltergeists and mediums; The subconscious; Dissociation and disease; The singular case of BCA; The larger self.

"Mr. Bruce brings to the average man an important message concerning himself. To repeat, this book will help as much as it interests. It performs a service much more valuable than entertainment. It is a strong contribution to the spread of health." B. K.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 18 '14 1050w

"Mr. Bruce's mind is of that extremely tolerant kind that can entertain antagonistic explanations at the same time. On the whole, books of this type do a considerable harm in spreading the notion that the chief business of psychology is to investigate happenings of this order; and they do further harm in spreading the belief that many men of science are seriously concerned with this type of matter as evidence of the scientific principles that control thought."

— Dial 56:471 Je 1 '14 230w

Ind 78:537 Je 22 '14 150w

"The skill with which Mr. Bruce narrates strange things and leaves the reader to make his own solution of the problems they present is really admirable."

+ Lit D 49:747 O 17 '14 120w

Nation 98:760 Je 25 '14 80w

"All of this is neither very deep nor very comprehensive nor very novel, but Mr. Bruce is neither a psychologist nor a metaphysician nor a scientist; were he one or all of these he would never have allowed himself some of the conclusions which are set down in this book, but neither, for that matter, would he have written so entertaining a book. For while there are many unfounded assumptions, there is no malice aforesought to mislead and no violent prejudice to distort, and there is, moreover, a wealth of good ghost stories, which would lead the most silent dinner party into excited controversy and experience-matching. To accomplish even that is somewhat of a service."

+ N Y Times 19:285 Je 21 '14 1450w

"The author unites an unusually pleasing story-telling ability with a thorough knowledge of psychological research and the latest conclusions of the specialists in this field. A more readable book it would be hard to find, and it is also suggestive of serious inquiry into half-known subjects."

+ Outlook 107:214 My 23 '14 190w

"Mr. Bruce succeeds in producing a narrative of poignant literary texture out of his psychical investigations."

+ R of Rs 50:119 Jl '14 210w

"The net results of 30 years of 'psychic research' are reviewed from a sympathetic but very moderate point of view."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 4 '14 250w

BRUCKER, ÉMILE. Botany. (Thresholds of science ser.) il *50c (1c) Doubleday 14-11237

This volume is the first of a series, translated from the French, and published in this country to meet a double need—"the need of the man who would teach himself the elements of science, and the need of the child who shows himself every day eager to have them taught him." This work on botany begins with a chapter on The life-history of trees, and there are later chapters on The structure of herbs, The microscope, How plants drink, How plants eat, Different kinds of flowers, How to collect plants, etc.

"The book forms a good introduction to the subject for those who would teach themselves its elements."

+ Ath 1913,2:234 S 6 90w

+ Nation 98:550 My 7 '14 80w

+ Nature 93:451 Jl 2 '14 230w

+ N Y Times 19:273 Je 14 '14 100w

BRUCKER, ÉMILE. Zoology. (Thresholds of science ser.) il *50c (½c) Doubleday 14-13785

This book, like the accompanying work on botany, is a popular account, written for those who have had little scientific training. The discussion begins with a description of the simplest forms of life—the "flower-like" animals, the hydras and the sponges—and leads up thru the molluscs, insects, fishes, and birds, to mammals and man.

+ Ath 1913,2:66 Jl 19 60w

+ Nation 98:550 My 7 '14 80w

"The author of this little book is evidently an experienced teacher, and he has been successful in working out the method he has adopted. His avoidance of the unnecessarily technical is most praiseworthy, even if it leads to difficulties of its own." J. A. Thomson

+ Nature 92:340 N 20 '13 250w

+ N Y Times 19:273 Je 14 '14 100w

BRUNTON, DAVID WILLIAM, and DAVIS, JOHN ALLEN. Modern tunneling; with special reference to mine, water-supply and irrigation tunnels. il *$3.50 Wiley 14-14614

"This book is written by men who for years have been connected intimately with tunnel and mining work, and who have been fortunate enough to be given unusual facilities to visit tunnels under construction in various parts of this country." (Engin Rec) "The authors have confined themselves entirely to descriptions of and the discussion of methods, applicable to mine adits and small tunnels, 'where the entire cross-section is excavated in one operation,' and practically entirely to excavation in solid rock. Th's, of course, limits the scope of their work and it would seem that the book might appropriately have been entitled, Modern rock tunneling as applied to mining and small water-supply tunnels." (Engin N)

"Speaking generally, this book is a distinct and quite valuable acquisition to the literature of tunneling." F. Lavis

+ Engin N 72:804 O 15 '14 1550w

"Will undoubtedly be heartily welcomed by tunnel engineers and contractors, mine owners and superintendents. In concluding, the reviewer cannot help pointing out that 'Modern tunneling' is very nearly a copy of Bulletin 57, prepared by the same authors, and published by the U. S. Bureau of mines."

+ Engin Rec 70:362 S 26 '14 1100w

+ Nature 94:476 D 31 '14 370w

"Excellent bibliography."

+ N Y Br Lib News 1:157 N '14 10w

BRYAN, WILHELMUS BOGART. History of the national capital from its foundation through the period of the adoption of the organic act. v 1, 1790-1814. il *$5 (2½c) Macmillan 14-7093

The first part of a two-volume work which aims at a detailed history of the city of Washington. It includes the selection of the site in the District of Columbia, the planning and building of the city, together with its history down to the period of British occupancy and the burning of the capital in 1814. The volume extends to upwards of seven hundred pages and has been prepared with great care from first hand material.

A L A Bkl 11:165 D '14 (Review of v 1)
Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 120w
(Review of v 1)

N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 100w
(Review of v 1)

+ R of Rs 50:120 Jl '14 70w (Review of v 1)

"The work is mainly based on original records, and seems to be as conscientious as it is lengthy."

+ Spec 112:963 Je 6 '14 100w (Review of v 1)

BRYANT, MRS. LORINDA (MUNSON). What sculpture to see in Europe. il $1.35 (3c) Lane 14-10540

The author who had prepared an earlier book on "What pictures to see in Europe in one summer" offers here a concise guide to the best sculpture in European galleries. She says: "My aim is to arouse an interest in masterpieces even if broken by the dispoiler or marred by the restorer. To accomplish this I have given occasionally the historical setting of some pieces and the mythological story of others." The book has over 150 illustrations.

"The text is slight, but will serve admirably for intending travelers unread in sculpture and mythology, or for others who wish to acquire a superficial knowledge of the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 11:52 O '14

"As delightful for home reading as it is valuable as a guide to the best European sculpture."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 150w
Ind 78:491 Je 15 '14 17w

"It is vivaciously written in a sloppy way."

+ Nation 99:203 Ag 13 '14 70w

+ N Y Times 19:266 Je 14 '14 100w

R of Rs 50:252 Ag 14 '20w

"Has the same limitations as the author's 'What pictures to see in Europe in one summer.'"

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:188 Jl '14 40w

BRYANT, MARGUERITE. Dominant passion. 1 $1.35 Duffield 13-24320

In this study of genius there are four characters, each moved by a dominant passion: one is a painter, one a scientist, the third, the painter's son, is a lover of music, the fourth, the scientist's wife, is a writer. "A more fitting title would have been 'Andrea Bradon: egotist and scoundrel,' since among the circle of well-wrought-out dramatist personae Andrea, [the artist] 'with his colossal selfishness, his non-moral code, and his entire irresponsibility,' stands most prominently forward." (Boston Transcript)

"A novel of exceptional interest, very well written."

+ A L A Bkl 10:200 Ja '14 +

"The treatment of the idea is well worked out, and the characters themselves are distinctly interesting. Even the villain is convincing."

+ Ath 1913,2:418 O 18 40w

"There are certain compelling qualities about this volume that make one not only eager to read it but to argue about it afterward. Nevertheless, it leaves the impression of being rather overdrawn and exaggerated." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 38:670 F '14 600w

"Taken as a whole, the novel is of much more than ordinary excellence, as well for its characterizations and descriptions, as for its literary craftsmanship. The main defect in the work is that it is too long."

+ Boston Transcript p12 D 8 '13 170w

"It is a book of striking knowledge of human nature and artistic skill, which would have been much more effective if it had been told with half the words."

+ N Y Times 19:39 Ja 25 '14 420w

"Many readers will find it too long drawn out."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:91 Ap '14 40w

BRYANT, RALPH CLEMENT. Logging. il $3.50 Wiley 13-21871

A book prepared for use in schools of forestry. "A concise review of the forest resources of the country by species of trees, a chapter on the protection of forest property, and a few pages on timber bonds as a means of financing logging operations, serve as a general introduction. Part 2, on preparing logs for transport, deals with labor, camps, tools, felling trees and cutting them into logs, and log measurement. Parts 3 and 4 are devoted to land and water transportation, respectively, each of which is taken up in detail. Part 5 summarizes the logging methods of specific regions and part 6 deals with the production of turpentine and stripping tanbark." (Engin N)

"The best book on the subject, covering all the more important features of operation with special emphasis on methods for moving timber from stump to manufacturing plant and features about which there is not much written material available."

+ A L A Bkl 10:217 F '14

"The well-chosen illustrations add to the interest and value of a book which promises to be not only a standard text for forest schools and forestry courses, but also of use to foresters and lumbermen generally, as well as to engineers who may have to engage or assist in logging operations."

+ Engin N 71:384 F 12 '14 250w

"A very useful addition to the scanty literature on the subject in the English language."

+ Nature 93:82 Mr 26 '14 280w

BRYANT, ROSE CULLEN. Ruth Anne. il $1.25 (2c) Lippincott 13-21016

The story of a young woman's struggle to find herself in the midst of the complicated social problems in which she is involved. Left an orphan at twenty-six, she learns for the first time the nature of some of the property from which her income is derived. One of her illuminating experiences is a night spent in a so-called boarding and rooming house which has brought a phenomenally high rental. Learning with horror the purposes for which the house, once her childhood home, is now used, she takes possession of it herself and establishes a neighborhood settlement. Many other elements enter into the story, including several love affairs of unusual interest.

"It is all dominated by the character of Ruth Anne, whom the author has conceived very clearly and worked out so well that she stands out before the reader a complex, human, and very engaging girl."

+ N Y Times 18:682 N 30 '13 160w

BRYCE, MRS. CHARLES. Mrs. Vanderstein's jewels. $1.25 (1c) Lane 14-11360

Mrs. Vanderstein is a widow who has reached the age when a masseuse is needed. The French attendant who happens to have the contract for rubbing out madame's wrinkles discovers in her patron inordinate vanity and an obsessive worship of royalty. The masseuse schemes to trade upon these weaknesses for the possession of her employer's jewels. An ingenious plot, into which a blundering partner is drawn, ends in a diabolical crime, plenty of detective work, an unusual fate for one of the criminals and quite the ordinary punishment for the other.

"In spite of certain discrepancies in the story it is a good one and worth reading."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 15 '14 110w

"The material in this book might have been condensed into a fairly effective short story."

+ Nation 99:283 S 3 '14 300w

"Mrs. Bryce is a little long in getting under way, and the reader of the first seventy-five pages of 'Mrs. Vanderstein's jewels' may be inclined to lay it aside for a novel that progresses more rapidly. The reader will be too keenly interested, however, to be critical, and it is a pleasure to introduce to those who are avid of tales of crime and its detection (and who are not?) a story so well conceived and so admirably written as 'Mrs. Vanderstein's jewels.'"

BRYCE, MRS. CHARLES—Continued.

+ — N Y Times 19:299 J1 5 '14 180w

"Admirable detective story, the only fault of which is its excessive length."

+ — Spec 113:335 S 5 '14 20w

BRYCE, REV. GEORGE. Short history of the Canadian people. il *$3 Scribner

(Can ed 14-20398)

"In this volume Dr. Bryce, whose name is widely known in Canadian educational circles, has amplified and brought up to date his earlier work bearing the same title. In addition to telling the interesting story of Canada since the days of Jacques Cartier, Dr. Bryce has included features which make the book of increased value. . . . Particular attention has been given by Dr. Bryce to the last twenty-five years, the period which he terms 'by far the greatest and most important part of Canadian history.' He has included many biographical sketches, in numerous fields of activity, of men and women now living."—N Y Times

"A thorough revision of a comprehensive, well-proportioned, brief history of Canada. Useful for reference."

+ A L A Bkl 11:181 D '14

"The amount of genealogical matter is a striking feature of the book. This is a revised edition of Mr. Bryce's work, and yet there are errors in it that revision should have worked out."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 N 7 '14 350w

Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 50w

+ N Y Times 19:576 D 20 '14 180w

BRYCE, JAMES BRYCE, viscount. Ancient Roman empire and the British empire in India. The diffusion of Roman and English law throughout the world. *$2 Oxford

14-3757

The two essays that make up the contents of this volume appeared first in the author's "Studies in history and jurisprudence." "They have proved of such value, especially to students of Indian history, that the author has thoroughly revised them and brought them to date by the insertion of the figures of the latest census of India, and by references to recent legislation. Questions of current Indian or English policies are not touched upon, however, in this revision." (Boston Transcript)

"These two brilliant essays should now have a wider reading than ever."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 22 '14 330w

+ Lit D 49:897 N 7 '14 450w

+ Nation 98:436 Ap 16 '14 270w

"These studies are marked by Bryce's best qualities of style, order, lucidity, seriousness, and animation. The product of his middle years, they have gained by the late revision."

+ N Y Times 19:187 Ap 12 '14 970w

"The historical student will find [the first study] fairly fascinating."

+ Outlook 107:624 J1 11 '14 1000w

BUCHAN, JOHN. Marquis of Montrose. il *$3 Scribner

11-30083

"The life of James Graham, marquis of Montrose, belongs to the time of the civil war in England. Short as that life was—he died at the age of thirty-eight years—it was so crowded with incident and adventure that it seems to have been made rich in ripe experience. The marquis led the royalist forces of Scotland while Charles I was contending with the army of the Parliament under Cromwell. He was the faithful and constant servitor of a faithless and inconstant being. His life is a record of devoted loyalty not only to his master but to the cause which he had espoused. . . . In telling his story the author has dwelt more particularly upon the military campaigns of Montrose."—Boston Transcript

"A useful contribution to the history of Scotland of the period."

+ A L A Bkl 10:217 F '14

"We commend Mr. Buchan's book as a thoroughly sound piece of historical work. We have noted only a few slips."

+ — Ath 1913:2:272 S 20 930w

"To the majority of readers in this country it seems likely that this book will be of interest for the light it will throw upon the relations of church and state during these times of civil and political turbulence."

+ Boston Transcript p24 D 3 '13 430w

"Brief, compact, charmingly illustrated, and very readable, its statements are almost invariably based on the very soundest authorities. Best of all is the author's sense of proportion and perspective."

+ Nation 98:529 My 7 '14 1000w

"To all who know something of Montrose in legend Mr. Buchan's Montrose in history is 'worth while.' The book is well written, without flourish, or the waste of a single word in exclamation. Also it is fair history."

+ Sat R 116:366 S 20 '13 1450w

"His biography will be as useful and instructive to students of military history as it is attractive to all who love a skillful relation of stirring and adventurous deeds."

+ Spec 111:461 S 27 '13 1500w

BUCHANAN, MERIEL. White Witch. *$1.35 Brentano's

(Eng ed A14-1248)

"In the ancient castle of Traunsdorf in Austria there lived with their father and aged grandmother two young and high-born ladies, the Countesses Eileen and Marie Bernadine von Traun. No quieter existence than they led, despite their wealth and aristocratic connections, could well be imagined—until word came one day that Prince Maximilian of Ungarschitz, the greatest parti in Vienna, was about to pay a visit to Traunsdorf, in order that he might see and, if all went well, marry the beautiful Countess Eileen. How a slender girl with gray-green eyes upset the Prince's plans, and a young Englishman, Sir Phillip Marsden, became his rival, the story tells."—N Y Times

"It is rarely our misfortune to encounter a novel as depressing as 'White witch.'"

— Ath 1913:1:494 My 3 100w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 3 '14 110w

"It is a romantic tale of misunderstandings and cross purposes that reminds one a little of those sentimental German novels which, when translated by E. Marlitt, proved so popular twenty years and more ago."

+ — N Y Times 19:13 Ja 11 '14 130w

"There is no little charm about this story and the manner of its telling."

+ — Spec 110:1066 Je 21 '13 200w

BUCK, MITCHELL S. Syrinx: pastels of Hellas. 2 $1.25 Clair Marie

14-12599

"Pastels of Hellas they are in every sense, and if the themes did not make them so, they would none the less in their rendering be worthy of association with Greek poetry. . . . The difficult art of the prose poem is here thoroughly mastered by Mr. Buck, and in reading his pages one might be reading the pages of Lang's 'Theocritus and Bion' in the 'Golden treasury' series."—Boston Transcript

"Quite unexpectedly there comes upon us now and then a piece of work which within its limits is quite perfect and beautiful. Such a work is this little volume of prose poems breathing of Greece."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 16 '15 400w

"Mr. Buck's 'Pastels of Hellas' are highly accomplished and softly undulating prose poems, inducing a luxurious stupor against which the mind eventually rebels. Their Hellenism will be most readily conceded by the unclassical." O. W. Firkins

— + Nation 100:13 Ja 7 '15 33w

BUCK, SOLON JUSTUS. Granger movement: a study of agricultural organization and its political, economic and social manifestations 1870-1880. *$2 Harvard univ. press 13-19662
 This monograph is published as one of the Harvard historical studies. "It is an exhaustive examination of what may well be called the granger movement, although it is not confined to the patrons of husbandry or grangers, dealing as well with the various other organizations known as farmers' clubs, farmers' alliances, etc." (Boston Transcript)

Reviewed by B. H. Hibbard
 + — Am Econ R 4:368 Je '14 620w

"Not only the young social reformer, but the student of contemporary agricultural movements will find this study exceedingly helpful. We are entering a new era of rural improvement, and we need to know the rootage of the present discussion. It will be found in considerable measure in the movement Dr. Buck describes." K. L. Butterfield

+ Am Hist R 19:667 Ap '14 550w

"A well documented, scientific monograph, treating the subject on all sides and with entire impartiality. For large collections."

+ A L A Bkl 10:301 Ap '14

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:671 N '14 110w

"The only book dealing with the subject from the standpoint of the student of economics."

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 10 '13 420w

"This volume has many merits and few defects." J. G. Thompson

+ — J Pol Econ 22:495 My '14 1600w

"Dr. Buck has left no side of the subject untouched, and he has sought minute facts in a multitude of difficult sources. His book is written according to the standards of our best academic schools. It is scholarly and scientific."

+ — Nation 97:619 D 25 '13 730w

+ N Y Times 18:497 S 23 '13 60w

"This book with its thorough and readable treatment, and exhaustive bibliography, is a welcome addition to the social library." J. R. Howard, jr.

+ Survey 31:679 F 28 '14 580w

BUCKROSE, MRS. J. E. Gay morning. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 14-5430

A middle-class Englishman, an egg-importer, suddenly comes into a fortune left him by a brother who had died in South Africa. He buys Summercourt, the object of his dreams since boyhood, and transplants to this place, made fine by centuries of care and culture, his commonplace wife and sprightly daughter Emma. This is Emma's story. She lives thru her gay morning, almost to the end of it, true to a priggish lover, while there grow up in her frank, unaffected nature true admiration and love quite new to her for young Sir Matthew Ford, owner of an adjoining estate. There are disagreeable relatives who cross and recross Emma's path; there is an adorable elderly man whose hens' nests she filled with eggs out of her own basket; there are the father and mother who could never grace Summercourt except in the capacity of retired egg traders; and there are the two lovers as opposite in tastes as Emma and her snobbish, jealous cousin. But dominating every scene is Emma herself, tonic and bracing as a clear, cool breeze.

+ A L A Bkl 11:31 S '14

"Delightful and amusing reading."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 27 '14 400w

"If the whole thing were at once more spontaneous and more restrained, it would be delightful."

+ — Nation 99:135 J1 30 '14 300w

"There is some neat phrasing in this novel, which on the whole is entertaining and pleasantly written."

+ N Y Times 19:282 Je 21 '14 420w

"Has the same sympathetic insight as, but less interest than 'Down our street.'"

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:305 D '14 40w

BUDGE, ERNEST ALFRED THOMPSON WAL-
<sup>12</sup> LIS. Literature of the ancient Egyptians. il *$1 Dutton

This volume, a companion to Dr. Budge's "Short history of the Egyptian people," "gives some examples of literary compositions representative of the great periods of mental activity in Egypt under the Pharaohs, and from it one may derive a good knowledge of the principal features of ancient Egyptian literature." (N Y Times)

+ Ath 1914,2:528 N 21 220w

+ — Dial 57:301 O 16 '14 250w

+ N Y Times 19:441 O 11 '14 100w

+ R of Rs 50:760 D '14 30w

+ Spec 113:534 O 17 '14 20w

BUDGE, ERNEST ALFRED THOMPSON WAL-
<sup>12</sup> LIS. Short history of the Egyptian people. il *$1 Dutton 14-22293

"This volume contains a description of the country of Egypt and the Nile, a condensed survey of Egyptian history for a period of more than four thousand years, and an exposition of the religion and daily life of the Egyptian people, including an account of their worship of the dead."—N Y Times

"Authoritative, but not specially interesting reading."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:212 Ja '15

"In his choice of material Dr. Budge is always moderate and nearly always judicious."

+ — Ath 1914,2:527 N 21 800w

"Dr. Budge has given us two neat and handy, but ill-digested, books."

+ — Dial 57:301 O 16 '14 250w

+ N Y Times 19:441 O 11 '14 100w

+ R of Rs 50:760 D '14 70w

+ Spec 113:534 O 17 '14 20w

BULKLEY, MILDRED EMILY. Feeding of school children; with an introd. note by R. H. Tawney. *$1.25 Macmillan E14-785

"The feeding of school children' is written with English conditions in mind and for English readers and teachers. It gives a good deal of information regarding the practices of other countries in the matter of providing a nutritive diet for children who are not properly fed at home."—Educ R

"Exhaustive, up-to-date account."

+ A L A Bkl 11:153 D '14

+ Educ R 49:99 Ja '15 50w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:917 J1 '14 60w

Reviewed by W. D. Lane

Survey 33:465 Ja 30 '15 170w

BULLARD, FREDERIC LAURISTON. Famous war correspondents. il *$2 (1½c) Little 14-17315

The author has prepared a series of biographical sketches of famous war correspondents and has so arranged his material as to give "practically a history of war correspondence." In a first chapter he discusses The war correspondent: his rise and the problematical future of his profession. Following this come twelve chapters devoted to as many men, among them Sir William Howard Russell, Archibald Forbes; Januarius Aloysius MacGahan; Frederick Villiers, Bennet Burleigh, and Edmond O'Donovan. The two final chapters are devoted to the civil war and the Spanish-American war.

+ A L A Bkl 11:117 N '14 +

Reviewed by A. M. Chase

Bookm 40:318 N '14 1500w

+ Dial 57:305 O 16 '14 300w

+ Ind 81:211 F 8 '15 330w

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 230w

+ N Y Times 19:433 O 11 '14 650w

"The volume seems specially good reading for the young man interested in newspaper work or for the student in a school of journalism; for,

BULLARD, FREDERIC LAURISTON—Cont. besides being interesting, it gives some insight into the methods and personal efficiency of the men who give the world timely news of great battles, and incidentally it adequately emphasizes the dignity of the profession."

+ No Am 200:790 N '14 1000w

+ Outlook 109:106 Ja 13 '15 90w

R of Rs 50:753 D '14 160w

"Excellent volume. It certainly is distinct from that class of books which are hurriedly, carelessly and superficially put together in order to profit by a temporary interest of one sort or another."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 1 '14 1650w

BULLEY, MARGARET H. Short history of ancient and medieval art. il *$1.75 Macmillan

"The history of pre-renaissance art is studied in periods: Paleolithic, Egyptian, Babylonian, Assyrian, Chinese, Mycenaean, Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Arabic and Gothic. The form of study for each period is an elementary lesson in story form, an advanced lesson, a brief history of the country, general characteristics of its art, and a chronological and artistic outline. By this method is clearly shown how 'art is woven out of the fibres of life itself, and that, if we try to sever the two, art dies, just as the plant dies when cut away from the kindly soil from which it draws its nourishment and strength.'"—Boston Transcript

"The illustrations are finely adequate."

+ Boston Transcript p21 J1 29 '14 330w

"The stories are ingenious and instructive, while the compilation is uncommonly well written, accurate, and up to date. In schools and for the home instruction of children this book should prove useful."

+ Nation 99:203 Ag 13 '14 110w

+ R of Rs 50:756 D '14 90w

+ Sat R 119:91 Ja 23 '15 200w

BÜLOW, BERNHARD HEINRICH MARTIN
KARL, fürst von. Imperial Germany; tr. by Marie A. Lewenz. il *$3 (4c) Dodd

14-5975

Prince von Bülow, Bismarck's successor, writes in this volume of the making of modern Germany. About one-third of the book is taken up with a discussion of Foreign policy, in which the relations between Germany and England, Germany and the United States, Germany and Japan, etc., are considered. In the second part, devoted to Home policy, the author frankly states that the history of German home policy, "with a few bright spots, is a history of political mistakes." Naturally the problems presented by the advance of socialism occupy an important place in this part of the volume.

+ A L A Bkl 10:384 Je '14

"There is much in the book that is new and all of it is interesting." H. G. James

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:688 N '14 620w

"It is to be regretted that so valuable a work should have been launched without a preface or anything to say what it is. We believe it is a translation of an introduction which Prince Bülow contributed to a book on Germany published at the end of last year. It is excellently translated, though there are some slips, some weak grammar, and an occasional unnecessary accent."

+ — Ath 1914,1:222 F '14 1850w

Ath 1914,2:297 S 26 170w

Reviewed by E. Fuller

+ Bookm 39:328 My '14 1550w

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 2 '14 570w

Reviewed by F. A. Ogg

Dial 57:138 S 1 '14 1550w

+ Ind 78:493 Je 15 '14 180w

Ind 79:346 S 7 '14 30w

+ Lit D 49:357 Ag 29 '14 330w

+ Nation 98:696 Je 11 '14 2050w

N Y Times 19:311 J1 12 '14 220w

"Prince von Bülow gives a coherent, intelligible account of Germany as a conscious national entity. As his book seems sincerely designed to instruct Germans and arouse their patriotism, it is correspondingly enlightening to the rest of the world."

+ No Am 200:154 J1 '14 1600w

+ Outlook 107:627 J1 11 '14 400w

"Prince Bülow shows an admirably statesmanlike and dispassionate state of mind with regard to the relations between his own country and Great Britain in the matter of naval rivalry."

+ R of Rs 49:623 My '14 200w

Sat R 118:326 S 19 '14 300w

"It is a most characteristic and also a most important work. We have here a very lucid and, it cannot be doubted, a perfectly truthful account of present German aims and policy. To all foreign nations, and to none more than to England, this statement should be of the utmost value." Cromer

+ Spec 112:265 F 14 '14 2000w

"These are intensely interesting papers, for they are written with much urbane frankness, though this is occasionally a virtue more assumed than real."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 300w

Reviewed by C. A. Smith

+ Yale R n s 4:395 Ja '15 2000w

BUMPUS, THOMAS FRANCIS. Guide to Gothic architecture. il *$3 (3c) Dodd 14-21634

This guide is concerned particularly with the development of architecture in England during the five centuries before the coming of the Normans and the reformation. The architecture of France and other countries is brought in for comparison. The terms Norman, Transitional, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular are used to designate the various periods of English architecture. The present volume covers the first four of these, concluding with the Decorated style. We infer that the remaining period will be treated in a second volume. A glossary, an index and over 100 illustrations add to the book's value as a guide.

"This latest of guides to the understanding of Gothic will be of much service alike to student and general reader, for while the style is not too technical for the latter, technicalities are not simplified beyond what is necessary for the purposes of the student." O. F. A.

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 30 '14 1100w

"Is primarily for the Englishman with an architectural hobby, and the number of others to whom it will appeal is limited. The author of 'The cathedrals of England' writes loosely, for a popular audience still swayed by Ruskinian prejudices and undisturbed by the progress of research."

+ — — Dial 57:394 N 16 '14 100w

BUNAU-VARILLA, PHILIPPE. Panama, the creation, destruction, and resurrection. il *$3.50 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-6244

A French story of the building of the canal. The object of the book, says its author, "is to explain how that great conception of French genius, the junction of the Pacific and Atlantic oceans, was snatched from her [France]; and that the solution of the problem of the opening of a free strait between the two oceans was her work and hers alone." He says further that the "adoption of the French Panama canal route by the United States, and their rejection of the American Nicaragua route, has been a conclusive vindication of French science."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:385 Je '14

"His book is so inflated with vain-glory throughout that you finish it with all other feeling put aside except that you have been standing in the presence of the most ridiculous braggart who ever put himself in print."

— Nation 98:336 M 26 '14 380w

Reviewed by R. R. Hill

+ Pol Sci Q 29:327 Je '14 1200w

"Mr. Bunau-Varilla's manner is as absorbing as his material. With epigrammatic animation and Gallic theatricality, he unfolds the history of his connection with the three periods of the life of the canal." Algernon Tassin
+ Pub W 85:1067 Mr 21 '14 1200w

BURGESS, THORNTON WALDO. Boy scouts
1 on Swift River. il $1 Penn 13-13535
The story follows the adventures of three boys who on a canoe trip are given an opportunity to make practical use of their knowledge of woodcraft. It is a sequel to "The boy scouts of Woodcraft camp."

"Thoroughly reliable and essentially readable, this is one of the best things in its field." M. C. Anderson
+ Bookm 38:447 D '13 50w

"He tells a story of exciting incident and picturesque and valuable description of natural history, which also brings in wholesome lessons of character development without these seeming in the least out of place. It is described as a story for boys from 10 to 15, and is an excellent one."
+ Springfield Republican p5 J1 17 '13 530w

BURKE, THOMAS. ed. Children in verse: fifty
10 songs of playful childhood. il $1.60 Little (Eng ed E14-255)

An anthology of child poems and songs with delightful illustrations. The authors represented range from William Blake to E. V. Lucas.

"A collection of verses about children which will appeal, not only to children themselves, but also to their elders."
+ Ath 1913.2:sup475 O 25 70w

"Delightful poems."
+ N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 35w

"This anthology will give pleasure to lovers of children."
+ Spec 111:sup956 D 6 '13 100w

BURKETT, CHARLES WILLIAM, and SWARTZEL, KARL DALE. Farm arithmetic, to be used with any textbook of arithmetic or without. il $1 Judd 13-21760

"'Farm arithmetic' is a most interesting attempt to relate the fundamentals of arithmetic to practical farm problems. The first-named author of the book is editor of an agricultural magazine; the second, a professor of mathematics in a state university. The book is not intended as an introduction to the principles of arithmetic, but as a text for the upper grades in the elementary schools, or as a supplement to any other text which may be used in these grades. It attempts to present the quantitative side of farm life, and to teach many facts of modern agriculture. The nature and arrangement of the topics and problems indicate that the book is designed primarily to teach agriculture by means of arithmetic, rather than to teach arithmetic."—El School T

"Serviceable to many farmers whose school days are past."
+ A L A Bkl 10:179 Ja '14 +

"The book is to be particularly commended for the clearness with which agricultural subject matter is presented, and for the fact that it will help greatly to develop in students a better appreciation of the quantitative aspects of farm life." H. B. Rogers
+ Chaut 72:106 O 4 '13 120w

Educ R 46:530 D '13 70w

"The book is full of most interesting and important information for agricultural communities. The problems would help greatly in fixing this information. As a source of profitable and concrete supplementary problems the book should find a wide use." O. W. C.
+ El School T 14:187 D '13 330w

"Only the chapter on Farm accounting seems slight and inadequate. Apart from this evident lack, which we hope to see remedied in a future edition, few recent textbooks seem better planed to make for a country child the dry facts of farming not merely less repellent, but even attractive."

+ — Nation 98:461 Ap 23 '14 250w

BURNET, JOHN. Greek philosophy. pt. 1, Thales to Plato. $2.50 Macmillan A15-84

"Professor Burnet has given us in his latest work a practical application of the principles of Platonism which he sets forth, for he has achieved that due Mixture in which are order and beauty and goodness, and has abridged for us the gap between the naked Form of the 'pocket philosophy' and the Unlimited of German erudition. . . . Professor Burnet warns the reader at the start that the detailed grounds upon which his discussion is based are not to be looked for in this volume. The opinions expressed in the earlier part are in general the conclusions reached in his 'Early Greek philosophy', those of the later chapters he hopes to support by detailed argument at some future time." (Class J) The book is divided into three parts: The world; Knowledge and conduct; and Plato.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '14 450w

"It is worthy of a scholar who has spent a quarter of a century in studying the texts of the ancient writers on philosophy. The usefulness of the book might, however, have been increased by a freer use of cross-reference and by more frequently stating the essential points of important controversies." G. M. Calhoun
+ Class J 10:90 N '14 430w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

+ Hibbert J 13:423 Ja '15 320w

"If not elegant, the book is one to read and digest, to learn much from, and in part to disagree with sharply. No one interested in philosophy can afford to pass it by. It may seem that much space has been taken to refute a book which the reviewer confesses to have found in many respects admirable. As a matter of fact, Professor Burnet's pages are scattered with keen 'aperçus,' and his scholarship is everywhere in evidence, but the main thesis of his work is at least of a sort that challenges disagreement."

+ — Nation 99:775 D 31 '14 3600w

Reviewed by J. H. Harcastle

+ — Nature 94:223 O 29 '14 730w

BURNHAM, MRS. CLARA LOUISE ROOT.
10 Right track. il $1.25 (1½c) Houghton 14-15181

Mabel Barnes had married her husband only for his money. But it was not luxury and ease that she had craved so much as freedom to enjoy the intellectual delights that she had been denied in her starved girlhood, and after her marriage she devotes herself wholly to reading and study and club life, neglecting her husband and making no attempt to win the affection of the two stepchildren. A discordant and unhappy home life results until little Miss Camilla Lovett comes into the household bringing a new philosophy of happiness. This, as readers of other recent books by the author will know, is the doctrine of Christian Science.

"A most pleasant and agreeable story."

+ Boston Transcript p24 S 30 '14 380w

N Y Times 19:412 O 4 '14 230w

Outlook 108:439 O 21 '14 50w

"A pleasant story."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 160w

BURNS, DANIEL. Safety in coal mines. il $1
1 Van Nostrand (Eng ed 13-843)

This English work "is designed to meet a want created by the Coal mines regulation act (1911), which provides that, after January 1, 1913, every fireman, examiner, or deputy employed as a fireman, with certain exceptions which need not be here specified, must possess a full certificate stating (1) that he can test for gas with a safety-lamp and is able to see a 2 per cent. 'cap,' (2) that he can measure an air-current, (3) that his hearing is good. As a knowledge of the first two requirements cannot be attained by men of this position without tuition, numerous classes have been formed in all the colliery districts for the purpose of instructing them. Prof. Burns's book is intended to serve as a text-book for these classes."—Nature

BURNS, DANIEL—Continued.

"Useful in any mining community."

+ A L A Bkl 10:179 Ja '14

Ath 1913,1:73 Ja 18 40w

"In attempting to make it suitable to the requirements of both teachers and pupils, its author has produced a work which is in some parts too elementary for the former, and in others (indicated by means of asterisks) too abstruse for the latter."

+ — Nature 91:183 Ap 24 '13 350w

BURPEE, LAWRENCE JOHNSTONE. Among the Canadian Alps. il *$3 (7½c) Lane

14-19626

The author uses the term Canadian Alps to cover both the Canadian Rockies and the Selkirk. He writes of The lure of the mountains; The national parks of Canada; In and about Banff; The Canadian Matterhorn; Incomparable Lake Louise; The valley of the Yoho, etc., and adds pictures that speak for themselves of the wonderful beauty of the country he describes. There is a bibliography, and a number of maps are grouped at the end of the volume.

+ A L A Bkl 11:215 Ja '15

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

Bookm 40:432 D '14 200w

Boston Transcript p23 D 26 '14 350w

"Interesting and well-written book."

+ Dial 57:456 D 1 '14 200w

"Altogether, the book is attractive in appearance and in its text it is valuable as a straightforward statement of facts relating to the region, together with some narratives of adventure and mountain-climbing. For the most part it is to be regarded as a book of information."

+ Outlook 108:789 D 2 '14 100w

"Fascinating volume."

+ R of Rs 50:759 D '14 200w

"As for Mr. Burpee's text, it is sincere, enthusiastic and careful, but not exhaustive or otherwise notable; it is the pictures which especially distinguish a book which has the further merit of being handsomely printed."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 200w

BURR, AMELIA JOSEPHINE. In deep places. *$1 Doran

14-18372

In the opening group of poems, Jehane, At Dendera, At Romeo's tomb, Petruccio's wife, and others, the author adopts the form of the dramatic monolog. Love, the beauty of the earth, the lure of the open road, and the child's world furnish the themes of many of the lyrics that follow.

"Miss Burr's lyrical work is still as flamelike in emotional sensibility, her music as poignantly persuasive and singing as ever, but she has developed powerfully in the dramatic monologue which she makes the medium wherewith to sketch some uncommon story of human passion and experience." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '14 100w

"The collection has the added charm so often lacking in collections, of variety in form as well as in substance."

+ Ind 81:138 Ja 25 '15 70w

"There were many lovely things in Miss Burr's 'The roadside fire,' but her new book, 'In deep places' is better than its predecessor."

+ Lit D 49:1083 N 28 '14 550w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

+ — Nation 100:140 F 4 '15 330w

BURR, MRS. ANNA ROBESON (BROWN). Religious confessions and confessants; with a chapter on the history of introspection. *$2.50 (2c) Houghton

14-10467

A monograph which aims to handle in a broad way some of the more intimate aspects of man's knowledge of himself; "to study, by means of induction thru individual examples, the manifestation in human life of that force to which tradition has assigned the name religion." The writer shows of what main elements the first religious confessions were composed and what were the elements introduced by introspection into the religious life and what literary forms it served to produce; she compares various groups of confessants, analyzes data, discusses religious instinct and devotes a chapter to the interpretation of mysticism.

+ Am Hist R 20:219 O '14 60w

"The book shows at every point a clever mind, a remarkable memory, a scientific temper and a prodigious amount of careful labor. The book has marked weaknesses and limitations as well as fine qualities." R. M. Jones

+ — Ann Am Acad 56:177 N '14 320w

"No notice of this book can give an idea of the gentleness with which Mrs. Burr probes the most sensitive prejudices and convictions known to men; hers is the gentleness of the surgeon, which does not suggest irresolution. She states rather than argues. From her own study of confessions and of the cumulative data of anthropology and psychology, she has made a great synthesis. The implications of her study have the widest possible bearing, and they will sink, slowly, it may be, but with transforming permeation, into the religious heart of the age."

+ Nation 99:253 Ag 27 '14 1550w

+ N Y Times 19:392 S 20 '14 100w

"This [author] falls into the not uncommon error of some modern writers who interpret the normal by the abnormal and the reality and nature of present-day experiences by the primitive life out of which they have grown."

— Outlook 107:820 Ag 1 '14 120w

"Her instructive book cannot fail to be read with deep interest."

+ Spec 113:175 Ag 1 '14 60w

"The volume is indicative rather than dogmatic, a reaching after truth rather than an assertion of convictions, and as such it is a valuable contribution to the psychological study of religion."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 620w

BURR, GEORGE LINCOLN, ed. Narratives of the witchcraft cases, 1648-1706. il *$3 (1½c) Scribner

14-9773

Uniform with Dr. J. F. Jameson's "Original narratives of early American history," this volume contains reprinted narratives of witchcraft in New England, and also a few court records for regions outside of New England where no classical narratives of witchcraft exist. The narratives are reprinted chronologically, with some necessary overlapping. When there is connection of theme, and where, as with the Salem witchcraft, the narratives deal with the same event, the introduction and notes make the connection clear and assist in a parallel study. Besides the historical interest of these narratives there is much of psychological value attaching to them.

"Professor Burr's editing is all that could be desired." C. H. Levermore

+ Am Hist R 20:164 O '14 900w

"A valuable collection of documents."

+ A L A Bkl 11:21 S '14

"The book is wisely planned and ideally serves its purpose." Graham Berry

+ Bookm 39:459 Je '14 1400w

"The volume is a rare treasure for those who would see the weird side of the history of the world, and it is especially valuable to New England readers who are near to the scenes of most of the incidents so graphically described." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 800w

"This will be the standard volume on the subject."

+ Ind 79:415 S 21 '14 100w

+ Lit D 50:249 F 6 '15 280w

"It is a model of what such a work should be, combining subject-matter of great human interest with editorial supervision that cannot be improved upon."

+ Nation 99:198 Ag 13 '14 550w

N Y Times 19:300 Jl 5 '14 250w

+ Outlook 107:370 Je 13 '14 90w

R of Rs 49:758 Je '14 100w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 270w

BURRELL, MRS. CAROLINE BENEDICT
 ° (CAROLINE FRENCH BENTON, pseud.).
 Woman's club work and programs; or,
 First aid to club women. $1.25 (2c) Page
 13-16958

An introductory chapter discusses briefly the organization of a club. The chapters that follow outline study programs on the following subjects: The modern drama; Our own country; The home; Myths and folk-lore; A trip through the British Isles; The opera; The world's great painters; Ten American women writers; Town improvement; Holland; The home-like house; Nature; The great English novelists; English novelists of to-day; The age of Louis XIV; Forestry; Shakespeare; The employments of women; Important movements of our times; The study of childhood.

"Will be helpful to those organizing clubs in small towns and arranging the course of study."

+ A L A Bkl 10:134 D '13 +

"Although the programs are very brief and the books cited for them in most cases inadequate, they cover a wide variety of subjects and will be suggestive to clubs in choosing the year's study."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:57 Mr '14 30w

BURROUGHS, EDGAR RICE. Tarzan of the ° apes. $1.30 McClurg 14-11094

"As the result of a mutiny aboardship, an English nobleman and his wife are marooned in a jungle inhabited by anthropoid apes. Here a child is born; a year later the mother dies. A great ape kills the father, but the baby boy is adopted by a female ape whose own child has just been killed by a fall. The subsequent adventures of Tarzan, as the boy is named by the tribe, make a story of many marvels. An ape in his agility and his prowess, heredity asserts itself; the boy tries to clothe himself, and, without ever having heard any save the ape language, without any conception of the sound of English, he teaches himself to read and write from books found in his father's cabin. With adventures and perils the book is replete, nor is a strange love story wanting. It closes with a great renunciation, but with the promise of another Tarzan book, which leads the reader to hope that the renunciation was not final."—N Y Times

"Only persons who like a story in which a maximum of preposterous incident is served up with a minimum of compunction can enjoy these casual pages."

— Nation 99:409 O 1 '14 250w

"Crowded with impossibilities as the tale is, Mr. Burroughs has told it so well, and has so succeeded in carrying his readers with him, that there are few who will not look forward eagerly to the promised sequel."

+ N Y Times 19:299 Jl 5 '14 200w

"It exhibits a fantastic imagination but quite transcends the most elastic probabilities. The writer has a convincing style worthy a better cause."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 9 '14 400w

BURROUGHS, JOHN. Summit of the years. il
 ° $1.15 Houghton 13-22803

A collection of essays, autobiographical, scientific and descriptive. "With the passing of the years Mr. John Burroughs's contributions to the literature of natural history gain in richness and ripeness, showing in each successive volume an increased keenness of observation, an added literary charm, a wiser philosophy of life in its immeasurable wholeness and wonderfulness. That even now, in his eighth decade, his eye is not dim or his natural force abated, is made strikingly evident on every page of his latest book." (Dial)

+ A L A Bkl 10:179 Ja '14

"Its contents are uniformly excellent."

+ Dial 56:27 Ja 1 '14 400w

"His latest book differs little from his first. The new vintage is, all things considered, quite as good as the older ones, for if it leaves one somewhat more solemn, one enjoys nevertheless the old mingled tranquillity and exhilaration."

+ Nation 97:544 D 4 '13 400w

"It is so full of a ripe philosophy drawn from the very roots of this old world of ours, expressed in a style as fluent and harmonious as the curve of running water and the architecture of a tree. But after all it is a volume to be enjoyed in its entirety, to be the companion of many happy hours and the friend of years, and should be left, whole and untouched, with the simple recommendation 'read it.'" Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 18:595 N 2 '13 1000w

"Full of the kindly philosophy that marks all of his work."

+ R of Rs 49:125 Ja '14 20w

BURT, HENRY JACKSON. Steel construction;
 a text and reference book. il $2.75 Am. technical soc. 14-18477

"This book is intended to give students the facts and formulas needed in designing the structural steel frame work for buildings. Since facts and formulas alone would be of little use, they are accompanied by explanations of the underlying principles. . . . The use of the formulas is shown by illustrations of a practical nature which serve not only to teach the proper application, but to illustrate current practice in this form of construction." (Introd.) Contents: Method of manufacture; Steel sections; Quality of material; Unit stresses; Rivets and bolts; Beams; Riveted girders; Compression members; Tension members; Wind bracing; Practical design—a sixteen-story fireproof hotel; Protection of steel; Specifications; Index.

"It contains many useful tables and necessary data, which, together with the clear and amply illustrated exposition of theory, should make the book a valuable adjunct both in the design room of the college and in the office of the practising engineer." F. H. Constant

+ Engin Rec 70:676 D 19 '14 650w

BURT, MAXWELL STRUTHERS. In the high ° hills. $1 Houghton 14-5153

"The verse in Mr. Burt's volume is the kind that has eminent qualities, without eminent distinction. It is full of manliness, yet reticent enough to prevent classification with the 'red-blooded' school which delights to play upon the grand scale of nature, drawing more sound than sense from the enterprise. Though the sympathies and experiences of Mr. Burt familiarly sweep broad horizons and ascend steeply touching the stars, he goes about embodying all he feels and sees with a gentlemanly manner, turning all the wonder and the mystery in upon some inexplicable personal mood."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Burt has both a vision and a voice, as well as a note of maturity both in feeling and reflection not common in American lyric verse." W: A. Bradley

+ Bookm 40:209 O '14 50w

"The earnestness and sincerity of his poetic moods give to his verse those sound and eminent qualities which at least compel attention, if they do not excite the emotions. Where he fails is in not getting his imaginative temperature to a heat sufficient to melt the substances of his thought for reshaping into bold images."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 350w

"The title excites pleasurable anticipations. Nor are these anticipations disappointed. Mr. Burt has put into words the very spirit of man's great ancient friends, the mountains."

+ Lit D 48:991 Ap 25 '14 700w

BURT, MAXWELL STRUTHERS—Continued.

"The chief faults in Mr. Burt's work are those of technique. Here and there a phrase shows an utter carelessness of rhythm." Helen Bullis
+ — N Y Times 19:333 Ag 2 '14 280w

BURTON, MARGARET ERNESTINE. Education of women in Japan. il *$1.25 Revel 14-11289

"An exhaustive study of the needs and the educational opportunity of Japanese women as viewed from an occidental and a Christian point of view. . . . Western civilization contends in its educational institutions with two great obstacles,—the lack of financial support and the lack of governmental recognition of schools that include the teaching of a religion."
—R of Rs

A L A Bkl 11:54 O '14

"An interesting picture of the status of women in Japan—past and present, particularly as regards their education—is here presented."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 20 '14 440w

+ N Y Times 19:393 S 20 '14 270w

R of Rs 50:251 Ag '14 110w

BURTON, MARION LEROY. Our intellectual attitude in an age of criticism. *$1.25 (1½c) Pilgrim press 13-25710

An age of transition and of criticism such as ours is bound to be an age of doubt, and it is to the natural product of such an age, the serious minded doubter, that this book is addressed. An introductory chapter is followed by chapters on: An age of criticism; Present conditions; The significance of doubt; The cause of doubt; Our intellectual attitude; The freedom of the truth; The source of Christian truth; What the modern Christian believes; Why the modern Christian believes; Education and religion.

"It can scarcely be said that Dr. Burton's book will convince; but it surely will be a noble justification of those who doubt, it will set partly right the misconceived notion that education kills religion, and it will clear the doubts of those who have confused theology with religious feeling. Furthermore, it will at least start us to think out our own solution."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 600w

"If one can manage to wade thru many useless pages of verbosity and repetition, he will find much useful and suggestive matter."

+ — Ind 79:175 Ag 3 '14 80w

"President Burton has frequently given lectures both in this country and in Europe upon the subject presented in this volume. It would be difficult to present it more lucidly, simply, and convincingly."

+ Outlook 106:818 Ap 11 '14 270w

"An excellent book designed to help the average thinker in an age of criticism and doubt."

+ Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 600w

BURTON, REGINALD GEORGE. Napoleon's invasion of Russia. (Special campaign ser.) il *$1.60 Macmillan 14-11204

"Except for a brief sketch of the political events which preceded the actual opening of hostilities, Col. Burton's monograph is written entirely from the military standpoint. . . . The general reader will profit by its perusal if he has been suffering from the delusions that Napoleon ceased to be a master of war, and that motives of personal safety led him to abandon his army in its agony. . . . The book does something more, however, than dispel certain popular fallacies concerning Napoleon himself. Its later chapters impress upon us the splendid part played by Ney in the most disastrous hours of retreat."—Ath

"To the student of strategy and tactics it will, we feel confident, prove of capital service by its clearness, accuracy, and the excellence of the accompanying maps. We regret the absence of an index."

+ — Ath 1914,2:208 Ag 22 730w

"The invasion and the retreat are traced by the author with care, but without much imagination."

+ — Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 200w

BURTON, RICHARD. How to see a play. *$1.25 (3c) Macmillan 14-19872

A book for the theater-goer. Dr. Burton assumes that there are three persons concerned in the success of a play, the playwright, the actor, and the spectator. His book is addressed to the third and he gives such attention to the art of the first two as is necessary to the third member's intelligent understanding of his own part. Dr. Burton writes with a thorough historical understanding of the development of the drama and with a wide knowledge of what is going on in the dramatic world today. There are chapters on: The play, a form of story telling; The play, a cultural opportunity; Up to Shakespeare; Nineteenth century growth; The modern school, etc.

"Specially good for a first book for the playgoer."

+ A L A Bkl 11:209 Ja '15 *

"The whole style of the volume is so sane, so simple and direct that it largely disarms criticism." Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:568 Ja '15 70w

Reviewed by Grant Showerman

+ Dial 58:76 F 1 '15 730w

+ — Nation 100:88 Ja 21 '15 420w

BURTON, RICHARD. Little essays in literature and life. *$1.25 (1½c) Century 14-5997

A book of friendly essays. Most of them are reprinted from the pages of "The Bellman," and few of them run to more than two thousand words in length, but in each there is a germ of thought that will occasion reflection. Some of the titles are very inviting, and they are grouped under the headings: Nature; Man and society; Art and letters; Education; Facetiae.

"There is an atmosphere of culture and serenity, and a mellowness about them that is reminiscent of Benson."

+ A L A Bkl 10:346 My '14

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 18 '14 570w

"It is not too much to say that Dr. Burton has attained his ambition in this collection of charming essays, for they are of unusual force, unusual for their grace and charm of style, distinctive for their genial humor, inspiring in their idealism, and instructive on account of their richness of thought." C. E. Rhodes

+ Chaut 72:727 My 16 '14 450w

"Though allowing himself as a rule but a scanty five pages for each theme, the author contrives to say much that is significant and interesting on the matter in hand."

+ Dial 56:390 My 1 '14 230w

"[The essays] are forceful thru lack of the superfluous, and entertaining in their instantaneousness of impression, genial humanness and sparks of humor."

+ Ind 77:421 Mr 23 '14 40w

"The language, indeed is remarkably neat, polished and flexible, and, as a matter of style, the essays are agreeable reading. But they suggest little and stimulate less."

+ — Nation 98:608 My 21 '14 220w

"Here is a book that simply cries for that abused word, charm. It is sane and wise, looking out on life in a hundred directions, coloring its point of view with humor, with tenderness, with a whimsical fancy; but over and above all it possesses charm. Charm of style and thought, charm of personality; one warms to it."

+ N Y Times 19:135 Mr 22 '14 1000w

+ No Am 199:949 Je '14 450w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 150w

BUSHNELL, A. J. DE HAVILLAND. Storied windows. il *$4 Macmillan

"Mr. Bushnell gives just the information wanted by the traveller whose curiosity has been whetted by the beauty of old glass and who desires some knowledge of the conditions of the glazier's art; but who has not the time or the energy to plunge into the exhaustive standard works on the subject. Most of the questions perplexing the layman are answered in these pages, and the reader finds besides that Mr. Bushnell is a complete guide to Gothic glass in France. One could not do better than adopt his itinerary if one wished really to understand French glass. . . . With this book in your hands you would be taken to Rouen and Evreux, to Conches, Sees and Alençon, to Chartres, Vendôme, Angers, Poitiers and Tours, to Bourges, Moulins and Rheims, and to other places by the way. And you would be ready, if you had carefully read the first few chapters, to enter the cathedrals and churches with something of a connoisseur's 'flair' for old glass."—Sat R

"Simple in language and plentifully supplied with illustrations, it forms a valued introduction to the study of old church glass."

+ Ind 78:495 Je 15 '14 70w

Int Studio 53:169 Ag '14 130w

"The present volume is very instructive, but less picturesque than are those by Mr. Sherrill."

+ Outlook 107:820 Ag 1 '14 250w

"Mr. Bushnell, in spite of his encyclopædic knowledge, never forgets he is writing for the 'intelligently ignorant.' He is most patient, and—even better—most lucid, in explaining the various technical terms which are necessary to an understanding of glass."

+ Sat R 118:117 Jl 25 '14 530w

BUTLER, ALFRED MUNSON. Household physics. il *$1.30 Whitcomb & B. 14-14185

The author believes that too much attention in the past has been given to the mathematical side of physics. His purpose in this book is to direct the thought of the pupils to every-day experiences rather than to concentrate it on problems that have no connection with their actual lives. He presents "those phases of physics which enter into the daily household life, introducing each principle by means of some well-known application, then explaining the principle, and finally presenting other applications as a means of clinching the principle; first the known, followed by the unknown, and ended by the known." (Preface) The subject matter of the book is treated in six sections: Heat, Light, Sound, Magnetism and electricity, Mechanics, Plumbing.

BUTLER, JAMES RAMSAY MONTAGU. Passing of the great Reform bill. il *$3.75 Longmans 14-13951

"His book presents a vivid picture of the reform era, and also throws new light, from family papers and other sources, on the inner history of the bill. Mr. Butler does not track its parliamentary course in detail; others have done that in volumes of incredible dullness. He prefers to show how the bill came into being as a Whig measure, how it assumed its final form, and how, after many vicissitudes, it was accepted by the Commons, the Lords, and the Crown."—Ath

"The imperfections of detail are indeed regrettable, because they mar an otherwise excellent book. Mr. Butler's work is not only valuable as a history of the first Reform bill; in the opinion of the reviewer, it would form a most useful introduction to the study of the early Victorian era." C. E. Fryer

+ Am Hist R 20:203 O '14 500w

"Mr. Butler has written a very able and stimulating book."

+ Ath 1914:2:5 Jl 4 1500w

"He has mastered the many authorities, both in print and manuscript, which are necessary for a complete representation of his subject, and has used them in the construction of a work which, though somewhat too lengthy, is pleasant to read, for it is written in a style at once lively and sober." W. Hunt

+ Eng Hist R 29:775 O '14 1550w

"A book of much ability."

+ N Y Times 19:580 D 20 '14 650w

"Mr. Butler will be welcomed to the ranks of historians, and this essay on a great political episode is an excellent piece of work."

+ Sat R 117:676 My 23 '14 1200w

"He is the master of a pure and dignified English style, and the defect of the book—its occasional overweighting with detail—was probably inevitable in a case where so much of the detail is new."

+ Spec 112:1090 Je 27 '14 1750w

BUTLER, SAMUEL. Alps and sanctuaries of Piedmont and the Canton Ticino. il *$2 Dutton 14-30084

"A most satisfactory cheap re-issue of a book which has not been previously available to the public at a low price. Butler's own illustrations, which are an integral part of the work, have, however, been retained, and there has been added an additional chapter, entitled 'Frisco re-visited,' compiled—very ably compiled—from Butler's notebooks by Mr. Festing Jones, the collaborator of Mr. Streatfeild, the present editor. . . . It is a holiday volume written by a man who enjoyed most fervently his holiday-making, and brought his whole self to it. To read is to long to wander, as he did in many succeeding years, on the Italian slopes of the Alps."—Sat R

"Its best feature is its genial and clear descriptions of village and shrine."

+ A L A Bkl 10:251 F '14

"The book is in every way an advance on the original issue, being edited with the care that it deserves."

+ Ath 1913:2:36 Jl 12 220w

"He is a travelling companion of the best sort, wise, witty, human and profound, and he is at the same time a frank critic of life as it confronts him." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 1000w

"A most winning and stimulating classic of the footpath."

+ Nation 98:15 Ja 1 '14 140w

"The book is an excellent introduction to Butler's other works."

+ N Y Sun p5 D 13 '13 90w

"The book as a whole is full of Butler's characteristic charm, the charm of intense vitality, of unexpected humour, and of a brain prone to fantastic terms and unexpected connexions."

+ Sat R 116:212 Ag 16 '13 260w

"It certainly deserves more attention for it is as entertaining a guidebook as has ever been written. It is not only for its 'obiter dicta,' however, that the book is delightful. Butler had a real appreciation of the country he describes, and he would provide a most satisfactory companion for the traveller to North Italy."

+ Spec 110:1066 Je 21 '13 380w

BUTTENWIESER, MOSES. Prophets of Israel, from the eighth to the fifth century. *$2 (2c) Macmillan 14-2222

While fully in harmony with the "historico-critical" method of modern research the author's treatment of the prophets of Israel departs from the chronological order. He contends that the spiritual side of the prophetic movement should be considered first and that it can best be studied by starting at the point of highest development. His first part of the study, therefore, deals with the "Faith of the prophets." The second phase of literary prophecy which he presents is the intellectual. It is treated in the second part under the heading, "The message of the prophets."

"The evidence of historical continuity requires stronger disproof, in our judgment, than the author has advanced. But the book is interesting and valuable from various points of view. It is the work of a modern Jewish scholar whose views on the rise of monotheism, on the ethical temper of the prophets, and their antagonism to the cultus, will receive a sympathetic welcome among students of the Old Testament." W: F: Bade

BUTTENWIESER, MOSES—Continued.

+ — Am J Theol 18:464 J1 '14 730w

"The book contains many original views regarding the literature of the prophets and is, on that account, stimulating. Of interest to ministers and psychologists."

+ A L A Bkl 10:385 Je '14

"The book is not lacking in new opinions and some of them are startlingly new. In the detailed analysis of portions of the prophetic literature which this volume contains, there are many points of interest and suggestiveness which will repay careful consideration. On the whole, however, the work is one for the sifting of scholars, rather than the uncritical acceptance of mere readers."

+ — Bib World 43:351 My '14 600w

"A stimulating and valuable study."

+ Cleveland 6:73 S '14 40w

"The translations are fresh and vigorous, and the whole treatment stimulating."

+ Ind 78:494 Je 15 '14 50w

BUTTERFIELD, WILLIAM HAROLD. Making fences, walls and hedges. (House and garden making books) il *50c (5c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-9844

The author discusses the making of fences, walls, and hedges and their relation to the houses and grounds to which they belong. In the section devoted to Fences and their construction he takes up: Gates; Wire fences; Iron fences; Treillage. Under Walls he considers: Wall gardens; Walls of two or more materials; Concrete; and Cost. The chapters on Hedges deal with: Planting; Pruning; and Varieties.

"A brief, practical work."

+ Cleveland 6:85 O '14 20w

"Gives most useful information. The last chapter, on hedges, is most interesting."

+ Nation 99:414 O 1 '14 120w

BUXTON, GEORGE FREDERICK, and CURRAN, FRED LLEWELLYN. Paper and cardboard construction. 2d ed il *$1.50 Manual arts press 13-19004

"This is a handbook for teachers desiring to give instruction in paper and cardboard work suitable for children in the primary grades, though the work is capable of application as high as the fifth grade. . . . A considerable variety of material is introduced and the problems are presented in the form of finished projects which are grouped under four heads: books, boxes, cards, and envelopes. These four types of problems involve a variety of processes including cutting, measuring, folding, pasting, gluing, sewing, punching, tying, and also the planning and application of suitable decorations. The book also contains valuable chapters on the organization of courses, and on the purchase, distribution, and handling of supplies and equipment. The chapters are both technical and informational and give hints for correlating the work with other school subjects." —El School T

"A very practical book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:251 F '14

"It contains just the kind of information which the grade teacher needs to enable her to carry on the work with pleasure and profit, both to the pupils and to herself. It will be a boon to grade teachers who are required to give instruction in manual training in the grades covered." F. M. Leavitt

+ El School T 14:295 F '14 250w

BUXTON, NOEL, and BUXTON, REV. HAROLD. Travel and politics in Armenia; with an introd. by Viscount Bryce and a contribution on Armenian history and culture, by Aram Iaffi. il *$1.50 Macmillan

(Eng ed 14-16964)

"The politics obscure the travel in this controversial little work, the aim of which is to persuade the British public that, in the interests of humanity, Russia ought to be allowed to occupy the Kurd-Armenian vilayets of Turkey in the same way that she has occupied the Persian province of Azer-baijan."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 11:114 N '14

"The story of the persecution [of the Armenians] has another side, of which the reader gets no glimpse in these pages, and to treat them sentimentally and the Turks cynically, as the authors do, is not to argue, but to beg the question."

+ — Ath 1914,2:230 Ag 29 800w

N Y Times 19:441 O 11 '14 80w

BYNNER, WITTER. Little king. *60c Kennerley 14-20277

The author has built a one-act play about the pathetic figure of the little son of Marie Antoinette. The boy, kept imprisoned in charge of two coarse peasants, is offered a chance of freedom, but refuses to accept, fearing that punishment will be meted out to the boy friend who is to be left as substitute.

"Altogether, it is a very admirable accomplishment." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 23 '15 300w

"In the matter of construction, the piece is uncommonly skilful. The action is compact, swift, and full of illuminative incident, the characterization apt and vivid."

+ Nation 99:722 D 17 '14 650w

"The material, is of course, rich in its sympathy. Mr. Bynner's treatment is sturdy and appreciative and 'The little king' is vividly dramatic."

+ N Y Times 19:499 N 15 '14 110w

"It is a strong and moving drama."

+ R of Rs 51:120 Ja '15 50w

"A one-act play of genuine dramatic and poetic merit. The play is plainly an experiment, and that is its chief weakness. It is not vital, although it has abundant power."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 500w

BYNNER, WITTER. Tiger. *60c Kennerley 13-18203

A one-act play that aims to focus attention on the problem of the social evil by the dramatic presentation of a possible occurrence. A young girl is decoyed into a house of prostitution and kept there a prisoner. Coincidence brings her father to the house as a patron where he is greeted by the child who never doubts that he has come solely to save her. He takes his little daughter home.

"The execution of the entire piece matches the tact shown in its proportions. It is written without comment or sentimentalism, in blank verse which suits both theme and setting."

+ Ind 76:177 O 23 '13 200w

N Y Times 18:740 D 14 '13 70w

"From the dual viewpoint of art and morals 'Tiger' is both offensively unnecessary and unnecessarily offensive."

+ Outlook 105:46 S 6 '13 30w

"If 'Tiger' were not so full of uninteresting vicious types it might be worth while." B. L. Israels

+ Survey 31:808 Mr 28 '14 160w

C

CABELL, JAMES BRANCH. Soul of Melicent. * il *$1.50 (4c) Stokes 13-19937

Another of those stories, purporting to come "from the French of Nicolas de Caen," in which Mr. Cabell contrives so marvelously to create a medieval atmosphere. It is the story of how Melicent loved Perion the outlaw; of how she journeyed overseas to sell herself into slavery for sake of him; of how he in turn fought for her release; and of how, meeting after many years when time had wrought its changes in each of them, they learn that "love may be a power so august as to dwarf consideration of the man and woman whom it sways."

"The illustrations in colour by Mr. Howard Pyle add to a realization of the period."

+ Ath 1914:2:178 Ag 8 220w

"Mr. Cabell is more than a very cunning artificer in lovely words and a student of old chronicles. He knows, one guesses, why God made artists—that high deeds may not be quite forgotten, that high loves may be kept alive, that the way of the flesh may sometimes be shown as a sun-path to us, not always as a dull morass beneath the moon."

+ Atlan 113:496 Ap '14 330w

CABLE, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Amateur garden. il $1.50 (4c) Scribner 14-17878

Six essays on gardens and gardening. The first, My own acre, is personal, describing the author's garden at Northampton with its souvenir trees, Barrie's elm, Felix Adler's hemlock-spruce, etc. The second is on The American garden, and the third tells Where to plant what. The next two tell what can be accomplished in the way of village improvement and the encouragement of home gardens in a community. The last is a descriptive sketch of The mid-winter gardens of New Orleans.

"His book is an inspiration to the lover of nature rather than a practical manual of instruction, and it should do excellent service if supplemented by any one of a numerous list of guides to the gardener."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 30 '14 270w

+ Ind 80:341 N 30 '14 40w

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 200w

"A beautifully illustrated book that will delight all lovers of nature."

+ Outlook 108:733 N 25 '14 90w

CABLE, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Gideon's 10 band. il $1.35 (1c) Scribner 14-16204

Mr. Cable's story is a tale of the Mississippi in the days before the civil war. The story is five hundred pages long and for the first four hundred of those pages the action is wholly confined to the decks of a river boat, the "Votress," making her maiden voyage from New Orleans to Louisville. The Hayles and the Courtenays are rival boat builders. The "Votress" is a Courtenay boat, but Madame Hayle, her daughter and two of her sons have taken passage on her and the custom of the age requires that every courtesy be shown them. The two sons, twin brothers, are fiery and hot-headed, ready at any moment to take up a quarrel in defence of the family honor. On Madame Hayle, a Creole matron of great charm, falls the task of keeping peace, but it is Ramsey Hayle, the daughter, and Hugh Courtenay, who meet and fall in love on this voyage, who finally unite the fortunes of the two families.

"Chief interest is in the local scenes and characters."

+ A L A Bkl 11:121 N '14

Reviewed by F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:307 N '14 750w

"Mr. Cable's first fame was made as a delineator of southern life. Now, after a lapse of some forty years, he still retains all his original skill. But his place is as a writer of sketches; not as a novelist." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 970w

Cath World 100:682 F '15 200w

"It is an ante-bellum story told in an antebellum style, but its leisureliness suits the slumbering river in its long siesta, and achieves a sort of triumph over any less discursive relation."

+ Ind 79:450 S 28 '14 140w

"It is rich in character contrasts. Next to the superfluous complexity of the plot, the chief blemish is the author's ill-success in portraying the heroine."

+ Nation 99:409 O 1 '14 220w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 100w

"The plot is complicated and there are some dramatic scenes, although certain incidents, especially the appearance of Harriet in Ramsey's place, strike one as a little far-fetched."

+ N Y Times 19:385 S 20 '14 880w

+ Outlook 108:844 D 9 '14 300w

Reviewed by Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 86:1290 O 17 '14 400w

CABOT, MRS. ELLA LYMAN. Volunteer help to the schools. (Riverside educational monographs) *60c (2c) Houghton 14-7883

With the spread of the social center idea we have grown used to the conception of the public school as a community-serving institution. This little book presents a new idea and points out how the community may turn about and serve the school. The subjects of discussion as taken up in the chapters are: Sources of outside help to the public schools; Volunteer service in relation to health; Recreation under guidance; The enjoyment of art; Training for work; Training for citizenship; Training for family ties; New demands on the schools; The sphere of volunteer help; The guidance of volunteer helpers.

"Covers much the same ground as Denison's 'Helping school children,' but more concisely and theoretically."

+ A L A Bkl 11:9 S '14 *

Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 80w

El School J 15:17 S '14 280w

CABOT, RICHARD CLARKE. Christian approach to social morality. 50c (3½c) Y. W. C. A. 13-22697

This little book contains three lectures on "The consecration of the affections," delivered by Dr. Cabot before the third biennial conference of the Employed officers association of the Y. W. C. A., at Richmond, Va., in April, 1913. They are in reality three helpful little talks on what is usually called "sex hygiene," altho the author deprecates the use of the term. As a safeguard to youth he looks to the positive influence of what he calls "consecrated affection" rather than to such inhibitions as knowledge and fear of evil consequences.

"We have never seen so much common sense on this delicate and difficult subject compressed into so small a compass as in this book of Dr. Cabot's. We commend it to teachers, parents and clergymen."

+ Outlook 106:322 F 7 '14 30w

Reviewed by M. C. Glenn

+ Survey 31:530 Ja 31 '14 550w

CABOT, RICHARD CLARKE. What men live by. *$1.50 (2c) Houghton 14-3268

Dr. Cabot's own favorite prescription for "broken souls and wounded characters" is work, and he has found by observation that other social experts apply two other remedies: recreation and affection; and that they "also hope rather helplessly that a fourth resource, worship will somehow get into the sufferer's life." It is of these four aids to right and sane living, work, play, love and worship, that he writes in this book. He touches on many vital ethical problems of the day and makes an interesting and valuable contribution to social and ethical literature.

Reviewed by H. A. Miller

+ Am J Soc 20:119 J1 '14 350w

"Decidedly worth while, the book will be an inspiration to many."

+ A L A Bkl 10:346 My '14 *

"It deserves careful attention and will be a constant source of joy and pleasure to him who reads it." Carl Kelsey

+ Ann Am Acad 55:286 S '14 320w

"Dr. Cabot's philosophy will appeal to the average thinking man, whatever his business or profession. The chief merit of his work lies in this rephrasing of old truths in the homely manner that will most strongly appeal to us

CABOT, RICHARD CLARKE—Continued.
 "moderns and reawaken us to their vitality." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 31 '14 1200w

"It is as a contribution to the values of life that this readable volume, aptly phrased and well sustained, deserves a popular career."

+ Dial 56:304 Ap 1 '14 450w

+ Ind 80:65 O 12 '14 80w

"This delightfully written book sets forth many familiar truths in a charming and unfamiliar manner." E. F.

+ Int J Ethics 25:272 Ja '15 110w

+ Lit D 49:522 S 19 '14 250w

"The book practices what it preaches, has the unforced humor, the vigor, the blitheness of mental and bodily and spiritual health. In this day of halting phrases and half-thoughts it has the beneficial quality epitomized in that old phrase of Dr. Cabot's fellow-New Englanders: 'good for sore eyes.'"

+ Nation 98:241 Mr 5 '14 1150w

N Y Times 19:314 J1 19 '14 120w

"An excellent book of practical religion."

+ R of Rs 49:504 Ap '14 180w

CAINE, WILLIAM. But she meant well. $1.30
 Lane 14-18115

Hannah was a very little girl, five or six years old perhaps, and her intentions were always of the best. Her mission in life was to be helpful, and the scene of her operations was the country home of Mr. Reginald Sterne, an epic poet, in which her mother was serving as cook. One of her many deeds of kindness was to kindle a fire in Mr. Sterne's study, using the manuscript of "Walpole—a fragment" of which some twenty-eight thousand lines had already been composed. Mr. Caine tells of Hannah's exploits with philosophical humor and treats a little side love story in a like happy manner.

"Amusing if taken a bit at a time and not all at once."

+ A L A Bkl 11:219 Ja '15

"Provided the reader knows what he is about to receive, and desires that particular food, the book will afford entertainment."

+ — Ath 1914:2:532 N 21 70w

"But she meant well' is first and last an entertainment. It is one of the most thoroughly amusing books to be given to the public since 'Hofman's chance' appeared."

+ N Y Times 19:486 N 8 '14 550w

"Mr. Caine's fresh and buoyant humour will compel laughter even from the most case-hardened. He has a cheerful wit of his own, and out of the slenderest materials has made a capital book."

+ Sat R 118:563 N 28 '14 220w

"A pleasant and truly humorous comedy."

+ Spec 114:120 Ja 23 '15 17w

CAINE, WILLIAM. Irresistible intruder. $1.25
 Lane 14-2276

"This tale is of the leisurely, gently humorous kind suitable for an angler to relate—there is a very great deal of fishing in it—and the plot is of the slightest. . . . But it is Publius who is the main feature of the narrative, and Publius is a freckle-faced, warm-hearted, generous little boy, enthusiastic over trout and plum cake, and his beloved Uncle Bill, as well as over the Kingdom of Farz and a number of other things and places and people—a natural, lovable child, though not altogether irresistible."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 10:412 Je '14

"Mr. Caine has the gift of humour; he contrives also in his latest book to tell a charming love-story."

+ Ath 1913:2:sup643 N 29 80w

"Takes high rank among the countless novels of the present season. It is a study in character which betrays the touch of a really master hand. An atmosphere of unforced and gentle humor pervades Mr. Caine's pages; a delicate sentiment which never becomes mawkish rules all the characters." H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '13 750w

"The love story, or rather the love stories are more or less conventional, but they are sufficiently interesting to afford pleasant reading. The boy is less conventional, and his companionship with the novelist, their fishing expeditions and their talks form the best chapters of the book." E. L. P.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 18 '14 660w

"William Caine is a past master in the art of depicting mischievous children."

+ Ind 80:383 D 7 '14 50w

"Mr. Caine's style is uniformly good, and at certain moments when the vicissitudes of William—usually known as Bill—Fennell's love story are at their height it becomes forceful."

+ — N Y Times 19:364 F 8 '14 310w

"It is all quite readable, and the padding is usually the best part; but it seems very much like an elongated short story."

+ — Sat R 116:561 N 1 '13 50w

CALDWELL, OTIS WILLIAM, and EIKEN-BERRY, WILLIAM LEWIS. Elements of general science. Il $1 (1c) Ginn 14-15048

This book offers a general course in science, to be given in the first year of high school, and to precede any work in any one of the special sciences. The need for such a course has been recognized in many schools and experiments have been going on in different parts of the country "with the purpose of securing an organization of science materials and a method of presentation which shall prove more educative." The course presented in this book has been worked out in the University high school at the University of Chicago. The topics for study are arranged under five major headings: The air; Water and its uses; Work and energy; The earth's crust; Life upon the earth.

"The subject-matter is well selected, and the aim of the authors to unify such heterogeneous material as is offered by the various sciences and to establish coherence and progression in the various parts is successfully carried out." A. H. Bernhard

+ School R 23:62 Ja '15 150w

CALDWELL, WILLIAM. Pragmatism and idealism. $2 Macmillan (Eng ed 14-1356)

"Pragmatism, the author asserts, rests in the main upon the work of three men, Professors James and Dewey in America and Dr. Schiller of Oxford. . . . With these three writers as the main, though not the only exponents of pragmatism, he makes a thoroughly critical examination of the pragmatic philosophy and its influence upon the philosophical writing of today. He finds that pragmatism neither in the hands of these three men, nor of others whom he examines, justifies itself as a coherent and consistent system. To Bergson, 'the greatest of all the pragmatists,' the author gives an entire chapter. He discusses the two important pragmatist elements in the philosophy of Bergson, his 'anti-intellectualism,' and his 'activism.' His conclusion we believe to be fair and even sympathetic. He states the good things brought forth by the pragmatists, and shows how they have forced the idealists to restate their positions."—Boston Transcript

+ — Ath 1914:1:781 Je 6 750w

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ja 7 '14 400w

"All will find it readable and interesting and appreciate his solicitude to hold the balance even between the contending parties, even though it sometimes leads him into apparent contradictions. There are also more serious defects in the plan of the book. It fails to map out clearly the extent of the territories and the issues which are in dispute." F. C. S. Schiller

+ — Hibbert J 12:704 Ap '14 1100w

"The book is simply a panorama view of much of the thinking world, which the author has been regarding chiefly with the purpose of noting its pragmatistical characteristics. The consequent form of the book constitutes at once its merits and its defects." Bernard Muscio

+ — Int J Ethics 24:357 Ap '14 1900w

Reviewed by W: J. Newlin

+ — J Philos 11:385 J1 2 '14 870w

"His book is a reflection and an appreciation, a contribution to current discussion rather than a systematic and well-digested statement of the problem. As such, however, it is timely and suggestive."

+ Nation 98:271 Mr 12 '14 420w

"Prof. Caldwell writes clearly, though without much distinction, and his book presents the current phases of thought in a form likely to instruct the student of philosophy in the best way by the method of contrast."

+ N Y Times 19:217 My 3 '14 400w

"Professor Caldwell is a lucid and well-informed historian of thought, and he has written a book which is of far greater interest than the mere controversial treatise, for it explains the origins and circumstances of a popular mode of thought. His critical work is useful, but his historical orientation is the more valuable part of his task. No more helpful work could be put into the hands of anyone who finds the 'dispersion and distraction' of modern thought a difficult world to move in."

+ Spec 111:1122 D 27 '13 1350w

"An acute and learned book of philosophical criticism."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 16 '14 370w

CALL, ANNIE PAYSON. How to live quietly.
10 $1 (4c) Little 14-16791

The author of "Power through repose" defines peace as "the health of the spirit" and draws a distinction between true peace and the spurious peace which is based on hypocrisy. The nine chapters of the little book discuss: Peace—in general; Family peace; Peace with the children; Peace among friends; Peace in social life; Peace in one's work; Peace in religion; Peace in one's self; What is peace?

CALTHROP, DION CLAYTON. Clay and rain-
10 bows. il *$1.25 (1½c) Stokes 14-15369

Young Sir Timothy Swift, walking home from a fancy-dress ball in the costume of Pierrot, comes upon a fancy-dress fairy, stranded in a broken-down taxicab. They proceed together thru the London streets which to Sir Timothy have become a place of enchantment. And the spell of fascination thrown over him by the night and the adventure never leaves him, even tho he learns later that the girl, Philippina Newberry, called Flip, is only clay after all. He pursues his rainbows to the end.

"Before the tale is completed, not one of the characters has retained the reader's sympathy, being thoroughly committed as lacking in elementary morality, good taste, or common sense."

— Dial 58:86 F 1 '15 110w

"A good deal can be forgiven to Mr. Calthrop because of the brilliance with which he writes and the poetic quality of his imagination. He writes always from the poetic angle of vision, whether he is portraying a scene, a character, or a spiritual condition, and the vigor and beauty of his style—when he does not urge his imagination to unwarranted flights—often redeem pages that would otherwise be sordid."

+ — N Y Times 19:388 S 20 '14 350w

CALTHROP, DION CLAYTON. Susette. *$1.25
2 (1½c) Stokes 13-19081

The author checks his hero's career of dissipation at its very beginning by taking him from Paris to the South seas and casting him up, a shipwreck, on an island inhabited by a courtly old Frenchman and his winsome, unsophisticated daughter, Susette. Here Algernon lives for two years, and much of the story is taken up with the simple but fascinating routine of life on a desert island. The father's death, after confessing to Algernon the true story of his former life, brings the island idyl to a close, and the two who are left go to Paris where Susette is introduced to the world she has known only thru her father's stories.

"Susette" is a relief from novels of introspection and problems. It is just a bright, charmingly written romance which carries the reader along with it and makes him unblushingly demand "more" from the pen of its author.

+ N Y Times 19:39 Ja 25 '14 270w

"There is a decidedly clever touch in handling the rather sensational situations."

+ Outlook 105:$60 D 20 '13 100w

CAMBRIDGE history of English literature; ed. by A. W. Ward and A. R. Waller. 14v v 10
*$2.50 (1½c); v 11 *$2.50 (1c) Putnam (7-40854)

v 10 Age of Johnson.

"To many readers of this volume the outstanding chapter will be that of Prof. W. P. Ker on 'The literary influences of the Middle ages.' Here, and in the studies of some of the poets of the time, we see laid out before us the slow preparation of the Romantic revival that was to come so soon. . . . A chapter devoted to Gray, written by the expert pen of the late Duncan Tovey, may be specially commended as one of the fullest and clearest studies of that poet ever published; while Prof. Saintsbury writes as informally as usual on Young, Collins, and the lesser poets of the time." (Ath) Other chapters are: Johnson and Boswell, by David Nichol Smith; Oliver Goldsmith, by Austin Dobson; The drama and the stage, by George Henry Nettleton.

v 11 Period of the French revolution.

Some of the great names in English poetry appear in the table of contents of this volume. Chapters are devoted to Cowper, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Crabbe, Southey, Blake and Burns. There are other chapters on Edmund Burke; Political writers and speakers; Bentham and the early utilitarians; Prosody of the eighteenth century; The Georgian drama; The growth of the later novel; Book production and distribution, 1625-1800; The bluestockings; Children's book. Bibliographies, a table of dates and the index complete the volume.

A L A Bkl 10:262 Mr '14 (Review of v 10)

"We cannot conclude without offering those concerned our warmest congratulations on the bibliographies in this volume. They are marked by exceptional completeness and accuracy, and will be of the greatest value to students of the period."

+ Ath 1913,2:721 D 20 1300w (Review of v 10)

"Taken as a whole, the volume quite sustains the high reputation of the series, while the value and bulk of the bibliographical studies at the end increase as modern times are approached."

+ Ath 1914,2:526 N 21 1100w (Review of v 11)

Reviewed by Lane Cooper

+ — Dial 56:456 Je 1 '14 2100w (Review of v 8-10)

+ N Y Times 19:589 D 27 '14 1270w (Review of v 11)

+ — Spec 112:1091 Je 27 '14 1500w (Review of v 10)

+ Spec 113:530 O 17 '14 1550w (Review of v 11)

CAMP, WALTER CHAUNCEY. Danny Fists. il
1 *$1.35 Appleton 13-21025

As would be expected, this is a football story. "Danny is a red-haired, freckle-faced boy with a hot temper, a good, clear-cut, clean character, and he is called Danny Fists instead of Danny Phipps, which is his real name, because he can use his fists to such good advantage." (N Y Times)

A L A Bkl 10:204 Ja '14

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 38:446 D '13 40w

"The best story Walter Camp has written yet."

+ N Y Sun p9 O 11 '13 150w

"A first-class football story."

+ N Y Times 18:649 N 23 '13 200w

Figures in parentheses following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CAMPBELL, DAISY RHODES. Fiddling girl. il
*$1.25 Page 14-6193

A boarding school story for girls. It is the coming of a stepmother into her home that opens up a new life for Virginia Hammond, who at fourteen had had to assume the cares of a household. She goes away to school, and later a way is found to give her the musical education she craves.

"The girls of the story are a delightful lot and the heroine, Virginia Hammond, has enough remarkable things happen to her to satisfy the most romantic mind. She is withal a thoroughly delightful and wholesome girl."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 9 '14 200w

"It is pleasant reading for the young girl whose motto is 'I serve.'"

+ Chaut 72:712 My 9 '14 70w

"Altogether a pleasing little tale, well written, and bearing a good lesson. A good example of the type, even if one may question whether the type need be quite as saccharine as it usually is." J. Marchand

+ Pub W $5:1340 Ap 18 '14 470w

CAMPBELL, MATILDA G. Textbook of domestic science for high schools. il *90c
Macmillan 13-26744

The author has written this book "with especial reference to a practical training for the average woman of an average income. This feature makes it a valuable textbook not only for students in various schools but for the housewife who wants to understand the science of food and nutrition. The recipes commend themselves to women who consider food a body builder rather than a table decoration."—Chaut

"We recommend this book to the housekeeper who wants a practical course in domestic science. As a textbook for the school room, it is comprehensive, concise and practical in all particulars."

+ Chaut 72:509 F 28 '14 120w

"The treatment is not scientific in the proper sense, and the few chemical formulæ and statements of fact about chemistry introduced will serve only to confuse the student. Under a different title, and with some omissions, we should have here a good book on practical cookery."

— + Nature 93:5 Mr 5 '14 100w

CAMPBELL, OSCAR JAMES, jr. Comedies of Holberg. *$2.50 (3c) Harvard univ. press
14-4130

Ludvig Holberg, the subject of this study, is variously referred to, the author points out, as the father of Danish history, Danish philosophy, Danish drama, the Danish national theatre. It is in his relation to Danish comedy that he is here considered. "The object of this volume is to consider his comedies in relation to their sources, and to show thereby how the author's distinctive dramatic qualities developed through his imitation of foreign models." (Introduction) The book is published as volume 3 of the "Harvard studies in comparative literature."

"The first book in the English language to deal with this important dramatist."

+ Ath 1914:1:419 Mr 21 620w

"Professor Campbell's work, as far as it goes, is done with scholarly thoroughness."

+ Dial 56:468 Je 1 '14 450w

+ Nation 98:736 Je 18 '14 650w

CAMPBELL, WILLIAM WALLACE. Stellar motions. il *$4 Yale univ. press 13-16800

This volume "contains the substance of the Silliman lectures in Yale university for the academic year 1909-10. The lectures relate to the field of discovery opened up during the past twenty years by the measurement of radial velocities of stars determined by means of the spectroscope."—Ath

"Scholarly, accurate account covering the field in which the author is a master. May be read by any one able to do consecutive thinking on profound matters."

+ A L A Bkl 10:217 F '14

Ath 1913,2:234 S 6 50w

"While Professor Campbell cannot be regarded as the Nestor of stellar spectroscopy, he is nevertheless a pioneer of the first order, and his book is a fairly complete summary of research on stellar motions, especially as determined by the spectrograph. His analytic development of the formulæ and methods of this new research will be found particularly welcome to students and investigators, and as such his 'Stellar motions' is certainly an epoch-making volume."

+ Nation 98:406 Ap 9 '14 2700w

Reviewed by S. A. Mitchell

+ Yale R n s 3:842 Jl '14 650w

CAMPBELL, WILLIAM WILFRED, comp. Oxford book of Canadian verse. *$2 Oxford 14-30432

"The poems cover the century and a half of time between the capture of Quebec and the present day, and several poems included appear for the first time in the pages of an anthology. The verse of French Canada is omitted, as it is written in the French language and is not the offshoot of the Canadian nation proper, which is British. . . . Bliss Carman's fine lyrics are given due prominence; Robert Service has three selections, which include his virile poem, 'The law of the Yukon'; William Drummond relieves the serious selections with the lightness of his 'habitant' verse."—R of Rs

+ — A L A Bkl 10:385 Je '14

"One is a little troubled to reconcile Dr. Campbell's views (as set forth in his preface) of what should and what should not be regarded as Canadian poetry, with the selections included in his anthology. While unquestionably no Canadian anthology would be complete without some of Dr. Campbell's own work, it does seem a little doubtful in taste for the editor to give largest space in the collection to his own verse."

— Dial 56:189 Mr 1 '14 400w

+ Nation 98:504 Ap 30 '14 380w

+ N Y Times 19:52 F 1 '14 380w

"A small and very readable book [of] representative Canadian work in poetry. This volume contains much that would contribute substantially to the poetry of any modern country, much that is American in the large sense of the word."

+ Outlook 106:650 Mr 21 '14 180w

"The collection is a splendid and brilliant gathering of poetic genius. No other anthology recently published will so richly reward the reader."

+ R of Rs 49:371 Mr '14 180w

"As a whole, of little interest to readers outside those specially interested in literary history and development of poetry."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:259 N '14 60w

CANNAN, EDWIN. Wealth: a brief explanation of the causes of economic welfare. *3s 6d P. S. King and son, London

"The book has an appearance of simplicity, but the reader will soon discover that he is being plunged into the depths of the subject where he will need to use all his power of independent thinking to keep his head above water. In fourteen chapters the following subjects are treated in a most original, interesting and effective way: the subject-matter of economics; the fundamental conditions of wealth for isolated man and for society; coöperation, or combination and division of labor; population; the social order; the controlling power of demand; the control or provision for the future; continuous power to demand, or income; the classification of incomes; the division of earnings between owners and workers; incomes from ownership of property; incomes from work; the relation between individual income and individual wealth; and the wealth of nations. In every chapter the discussion centers about fundamentals and there is a conspicuous absence of unessential detail." —Am Econ R

"He has written an admirable book which can be used for academic purposes with good results, especially when supplemented by suitable collateral readings. It is intended for the general reader also, to give him a knowledge of the actual nature and workings of the economic machine, and enable him to detect the fallacies in certain schemes for social reform which appeal strongly to the sympathies of many intelligent people who are not well grounded in economic science." J. E. Le Rossignol

+ — Am Econ R 4:610 S '14 380w

"The book will be found useful both to specialists and to the more thoughtful of the general reading public."

+ Ann Am Acad 54:321 JI '14 180w

"This work has all the merits of the author's 'Elementary economics,' but is upon a larger scale. Prof. Cannan is the possessor of a keen sense of humour."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup181 Ja 31 110w

"Professor Cannan writes, as of old, with strong common sense and in straightforward English, unmistakable in meaning. His criticism is acute and never merely destructive. He writes from a vantage ground of ample learning." J. Bonar

+ Pol Sci Q 29:334 Je '14 700w

"In the present reviewer's opinion, no such notable recasting of the principles of economics has appeared for many a day, whether as regards originality, clear-sighted common-sense, or trenchancy of statement."

+ Spec 112:438 Mr 14 '14 1000w

CANNAN, GILBERT. Old Mole. *$1.35 (1½c)
2 Appleton 14-1419

Herbert Jocelyn Beenham, known to his boys as "Old Mole" was forty-eight years old and had been a master in Thrigsby grammar school for twenty-five of those years when occurred the simple and absurd catastrophe that thrust him out of school into life. In company with the girl, Matilda, who has been the unwitting cause of his downfall, he joins a troupe of strolling players, determined to cut himself off entirely from his old world. Later he marries Matilda and his education is continued. He learns much about life, but never quite grasps it; is always a spectator. Matilda on the other hand, is one of those compounds of "simplicity, sincerity and purity" to whom, according to Mr. Cannan in an earlier book, life yields its rewards of joy. There is much side comment on English character, education, and the theatre.

"With a story of this kind success or failure must obviously depend upon narrative power and characterization, and in both these respects Mr. Cannan leaves us not, indeed, unadmiring, but unsatisfied. His narration, when he condescends to narrate, is always excellent. But he narrates too little; and, unluckily, in his complex analyses of Old Mole's spiritual and passionate experience, he loses his grasp of the character."

+ — Ath 1914,1:11 Ja 3 400w

+ — Atlan 114:529 O '14 280w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:80 Mr '14 350w

"Beginning as a story, it ends as a philosophical treatise on art, morals and other subjects dearest to its writer's heart." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '14 1150w

Reviewed by W. M. Payne

+ Dial 56:248 Mr 16 '14 500w

"Gilbert Cannan writes with vigor and pungency from a viewpoint both unique and arresting."

+ Ind 77:313 Mr 2 '14 80w

"It is clever, even eloquent, certain to hold the attention of the reader; but still it leaves in the mind a vague incompleteness. There is a flavor of Fielding in the tale."

+ — Nation 98:186 F 19 '14 380w

"It is just the sort of story that is fitted for leisurely reading, for picking up when one is at odds with life and prefers sitting on the bank in critical temper to being part of the current that goes sweeping by. The character of Old Mole, not the story, is the book's chief interest—his character, his development, his philosophy, his points of view. And its chief attraction lies in the way all this is presented, dramatically, humanly, with the pulse of real life in it."

+ N Y Times 19:38 Ja 25 '14 430w

"Readable and diverting novel."

+ R of Rs 49:373 Mr '14 470w

"This novel has a definite conclusion, which, read by itself, appears to be perfectly sane and logical; but it is reached by unlikely roads. Towards the close of the book there is a scene where a man watches a play of puppets, and one has a feeling that the author keeps a company of puppets himself."

+ — Sat R 117:149 Ja 31 '14 450w

CANNON, FRANK JENNE, and KNAPP,
3 GEORGE LEONARD. Brigham Young and his Mormon empire. il *$1.50 Revell

13-24816

"A man whose career was stranger and more incredible than any invented by Dumas, Balzac, or Defoe is here portrayed by the writer best qualified to tell us of the rise of Mormonism. Ex-Senator Cannon had a personal acquaintance with the leaders of Mormonism which enables him to give a plain, unvarnished tale of the foundation by a New England puritan of a Mohammedan empire in the far West." (Lit D) "Perhaps the most interesting feature of the book to the average reader is the discussion of polygamy, to which the authors give several chapters." (Boston Transcript)

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 18 '13 400w

"The work is well done, and the illustrations are good."

+ Lit D 48:273 F 7 '14 140w

"It is not a book for one who wishes to gain trustworthy information, and it has the further defect of falling into slovenly and offensive language."

+ — Nation 98:731 Je 18 '14 260w

"Mr. Cannon tells the life history of Mormonism calmly and in detail."

+ R of Rs 48:756 D '13 280w

"In spite, therefore, of the abundant literature which already exists on Mormonism, the book written by Messrs. Cannon and Knapp may be read with interest and instruction." C.

+ Spec 112:611 Ap 11 '14 1750w

CANNON, IDA MAUD. Social work in hospitals.
1 il $1.50 (2½c) Survey associates 13-21911

The author is headworker in the Social service department of the Massachusetts general hospital, the pioneer institution in work of this kind. "Miss Cannon presents to us an actual case of co-operation and makes us see clearly why it is effective. Social work in hospitals implies the voluntary co-operation of three orders of persons; namely, physicians, nurses and trained social workers." (Survey)

Reviewed by E. B. Woods

+ Am J Soc 20:420 N '14 450w

+ A L A Bkl 10:218 F '14

"The volume will be helpful to all who are engaged in this work, and is to be particularly commended to the managers of hospitals, who may have in mind the introduction of this department."

+ Ann Am Acad 52:226 Mr '14 180w

J Pol Econ 22:290 Mr '14 250w

N Y Times 18:764 D 28 '13 70w

"Miss Cannon's book opens up possibilities of real co-operation between skilled workers. It can hardly fail to inspire new efforts on the part of people of good will to acquire the necessary skill." S: M. Crothers

+ Survey 31:363 D 27 '13 530w

CANNON, IDA MAUD — Continued.

"A most valuable contribution to our knowledge of modern social methods." H: P. Fairchild

+ Yale R n s 4:189 O '14 250w

CANTRILL, THOMAS CROSBEE. Coal mining.
" (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c (1c) Putnam 14-13244

This book is primarily concerned with the principles of coal mining. The author gives a brief sketch of the evolution of the industry and introduces only such geological notes as are necessary to an understanding of the subject. Contents: Introduction and historical review; Varieties, geological age, and origin of coal; The coal measures and the coal-seam; Coalfields, folds and faults; Prospecting and boring; Winning the coal; Working the coal; Ventilation, draining and lighting; Underground haulage, winding, and surface-arrangements; Leases and royalties, administration and state regulations; Bibliography; Index.

CAPEN, EDWARD WARREN. Sociological progress in mission lands; introd. by James A. Kelso. *$1.50 Revell 14-11199

"The six lectures included in this volume were delivered in 1912 before the Presbyterian theological seminary of Pittsburgh. All, however, were somewhat changed and enlarged for publication. The first lecture is devoted exclusively to the study of the problem of sociological progress in mission lands—an inquiry into the origins of social institutions and customs, and the causes of social changes and their limitations. Follow in order lectures upon progress in the removal of ignorance, inefficiency and poverty, in the ideals of family life and the position of woman, in ethical ideals and in social reconstruction. The closing lecture is upon the Christianizing tendencies of non-Christian religions." —Boston Transcript

"Throughout the book he frankly admits the force of secular influences operating along with Christian missions for social uplift. And in this candor lies the highest value and suggestion of his study."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 17 '14 400w

"The part that missionaries have played in the social uplift of foreign peoples is ably presented."

+ Ind 79:74 Jl 13 '14 60w

N Y Times 19:383 S 13 '14 100w

CARDUCCI, GIOSUÈ. Carducci, a selection of his poems; with verse translations, notes, and three introductory essays by G. L. Bick-ersth. il *$3.50 Longmans A14-740

An edition of a selected number of the poems of a modern Italian poet who died in 1907. "The contents include three essays on his life, his poetry, and his metrics; a bibliography and some notes, and over two hundred pages of the poems themselves—the original Italian and the English translation facing each other on opposite pages." (Dial)

"The first adequate attempt to make the poet and his verses known to English readers."

+ A L A Bkl 10:301 Ap '14

"Distinguished, scholarly volume. Copious notes are essential to an understanding of such a poet, and Mr. Bickerseth's are all that could be desired."

+ — Ath 1913:2:693 D '13 1050w

"We are extremely grateful for this work, which should do much to make Carducci a reality, rather than a great name merely, to English readers."

+ Dial 56:30 Ja 1 '14 110w

"The truth is that the obsession of rhyme and rhythm is upon the translator, and that he sacrifices thereto, most inauspiciously, the interpretation that he might have made so excellent. The introductory essay on the poetry of Carducci is excellent."

+ — Nation 98:13 Ja 1 '14 650w

"Mr. Bickerseth in the present volume has made a very substantial and valuable addition to the English reader's means of studying the splendid poetic creations of the great Italian. Not only are his translations made with almost too elaborate accuracy of imitation in rhyme and rhythm, but he furnishes his reader with the original Italian on the opposite page, making the book available not only for the enjoyable reading of this excellent translation but for a kind of intimate nearness to the poet himself in seeing his own manner of using his native tongue. It is especially in the longer poems in which epic and lyric and pastoral are so wonderfully combined, making ancient history throb with an intense living passion of regret and of longing, that Mr. Bickerseth, in his faithful and truly masterly devotion to his author's form and spirit, has given the English reader a treasure of inestimable worth." Frank Sewall

+ N Y Times 18:755 D 21 '13 1500w

+ Sat R 116:687 N 29 '13 1450w

"It is in many ways an interesting and a scholarly book: the critical appreciation is temperate and sane; the selection is effective and well chosen; and the essay on the metres of the 'Odi Barbari' is a careful analysis of Carducci's attempts to render ancient classical metres in modern accentual verse. Mr. Bickerseth is less fortunate in his translations, and perhaps only those who have practised the art can appreciate its difficulties. The chief defect of his renderings is an insufficient command of style, a lack of range rather than of purity; but his use of rhyme is often forced and clumsy."

+ — Spec 112:58 Ja 10 '14 1700w

CAREY, ARTHUR ASTOR. New nerves for old; "Behold, I make all things new." *$1 (2½c) Little 14-17888

While recognizing that disease has physical symptoms and that it calls for physical remedies, the author emphasizes the influence of mind over matter in the case of bodily ills, especially those for which "nerves" are responsible. There are chapters on: Body, mind and spirit; The training of the will; Non-resistance; Balance; The power of habit; Appearances and reality; Nerves and civilization, etc.

Reviewed by M. V. O'Shea

Dial 58:50 Ja 16 '15 750w

"Aside, then, from its value to nervous sufferers, the book is a sane and wise statement of fundamental truths—truths that will help us in our general attitude toward life, that will teach us the value of self-understanding and the vitality of a real religious conception."

+ N Y Times 19:552 D 6 '14 470w

CARLTON, FRANK TRACY. Industrial situation: its effect upon the home, the school, the wage earner and the employer. *75c Revell 14-6182

"This book is an attempt to present to the general reader a broad survey of the entire industrial situation. The author succeeds admirably in introducing within the limited space of this volume the elementary concepts of factory legislation, regulation of hours of work, immigration, trade unions, unemployment, industrial education, scientific management, and the problem of woman and child labor. Summaries at the ends of the chapters, and references to more extended discussions, invite the reader to pursue his inquiry further." (J Pol Econ) The book is one of the volumes of a series to be published under the auspices of the Federal council of churches in America.

Am Econ R 4:943 D '14 170w

"Summaries and suggestive questions specially adapt the book for study clubs."

+ A L A Bkl-11:54 O '14 +

"On the one hand, the book contains a maximum of important up-to-date facts. On the other, it is amplified by summaries and questions which throw considerable light upon the fundamental problems involved in the questions under discussion."

+ Ann Am Acad 54:322 Jl '14 130w

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 15 '14 120w

+ J Pol Econ 22:714 Jl '14 80w

"A useful little book."

+ R of Rs 49:637 My '14 130w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:300 D '14 60w

CARNEGIE, DAVID, and GLADWYN, SIDNEY
C. Liquid steel; its manufacture and cost.
il *$7.50 Longmans 13-15593

"This volume, in addition to covering the usual ground embraced in the standard textbooks on the metallurgy of steel, brings out prominently the various items of cost of the different processes. It presents to the steelmaker and to the advanced student, analyses and costs of the different materials used—iron ore, pig iron, refractories, etc.; the make-up of charges for different kinds of steel; details and cost of construction and plant; methods of assembling steel works' cost, value of labor and cost of living. . . . After a section of 50 pages dealing with materials used in steel manufacture, the book is divided into five parts: the Crucible, the Bessemer, the Openhearth and the Electric processes, Costs and labor."—Engin N

A. L. A Bkl 10:134 D '13

"Taken as a whole, the book is a good one, clearly written, well balanced and excellently illustrated. It should be noted, however, that as a textbook, the volume covers but one phase of the subject—the manufacture of steel—and does not touch on the equally important branches, its application to engineering uses by mechanical treatment or foundry practice and the constitution and heat treatment of steel in general. To the American reader it has the further disadvantage of using a foreign system of weights and coinage." W: Campbell
+ — Engin N 70:328 Ag 14 '13 1400w

"This book is written with a knowledge obviously the result of experience, and great care has been exercised in selecting information likely to be of practical importance. It may be unhesitatingly recommended as a work of standard rank." J. O. Arnold
+ Nature 92:681 F 19 '14 950w

CARPENTER, EDWARD CHILDS. Intermediate types among primitive folk: a study in social evolution. *$2 (5c) Kennerley
(Eng ed 14-13507)

This study is built upon the thesis "that between the normal man and the normal woman there exist a great number of intermediate types—types for instance, in which the body may be perfectly feminine, while the mind and feelings are decidedly masculine, or vice versa." It is the part played by these intermediates in social evolution that the author seeks to determine. In primitive societies, he points out, the quite normal men are warriors and hunters; the quite normal women are engaged in domestic work and agriculture; while the men who do not want to fight and the women who do not care for housework must devise new occupations for themselves—hence the development of the arts and the sciences. The study is concerned not only with "intermediate" types. It takes up other types which deviate from the normal—the "super-virile" and the "ultra-feminine."

"The subject is unsavoury, and the book is hardly one for general reading; but it is written with dignity and propriety."

+ — Ath 1914:532 Ap 11 500w

"In my opinion, the scientific part of Mr. Carpenter's thesis is right." T. Whittaker
+ Int J Ethics 25:110 O '14 1050w

"Mr. Carpenter has written a careful study of these people, and many of the inferences he draws seem not unreasonable."

+ Sat R 117:511 Ap 18 '14 200w

CARPENTER, WARWICK STEVENS. Winter camping. (Outing handbooks) il *70c (2½c)
Outing pub. 14-167

In this little book the author describes a "new winter sport." After many years of camp experience he can say that "between the black flies, midgits, and all the pests of summer and the problem of warmth in winter, I would quickly choose the latter if I could have but one." In the chapters he considers: Personal outfit; Party outfit; Food; Packing and transportation; Shelter and beds; Camp fires and stoves; Snowshoes and skis; Hints and helps; Wild life in winter; Diversions of the winter camp.

+ A. L. A Bkl 10:263 Mr '14

"A good addition to this little series."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:139 Jl '14 30w

CARPENTER, RT. REV. WILLIAM BOYD.
Spiritual message of Dante. il *$1.50 Harvard univ. press (Eng ed 14-11511)

"These lectures were originally delivered at Harvard in 1904, in conformity with the Noble trust; they were given without manuscript, and are presented in this volume as compilations from notes, not as written lectures. . . . The bishop states that 'they are not intended as a contribution to the critical study of the "Divina commedia,"' but are 'simply thoughts on religious experience as exemplified' in it. Yet, although there is an occasional touch of the homiletic style, the lectures are by no means homiletic in form; they are a serious, and at times even a brilliant, commentary on the spiritual meaning of the greatest of Christian poems. As such—in spite of the author's modest disclaimer—they are of real value as criticism to the reader who would study it from a religious rather than a literary standpoint."—Ath

"All Dante students should be grateful for this delightful volume, which treats high themes with much discernment, yet with perfect simplicity."

+ Ath 1914:1487 Ap 4 650w

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 27 '14 450w

"The real student of Dante will not profit much by Bishop Carpenter's work. The author's viewpoint is so alien to the Catholic spirit of the middle ages that he is incompetent to interpret either the spiritual or the intellectual message of one of the greatest of mediæval teachers."

— Cath World 100:678 F '15 180w

Dial 57:26 Jl 1 '14 50w

"The impressiveness of the lectures is seriously impaired by their sentimentality."

+ — Nation 99:410 O 1 '14 950w

"This reading of Dante by so eminently qualified an interpreter takes its place among the specially valuable."

+ Outlook 108:52 S 2 '11 220w

CARR, JOSEPH WILLIAM COMYNS. Coasting Bohemia. *$2.50 (3½c) Macmillan

A book made up of sixteen papers, many of them in the nature of reminiscences. In the course of a long life time devoted to literature and the stage the author has known familiarly many famous men. He writes of Millais, Alma-Tadema, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Whistler, George Meredith, Henry Irving and Sir Arthur Sullivan, and there are other pages on: The English school of painting at the Roman exhibition; The legend of Parsifal; A sense of humour; Sitting at a play; and Sex in tragedy, a discussion based upon "Macbeth."

"This book reminds one of an agreeable conversation at some club: a good deal of the talk goes in at one ear and comes out at the other, but one carries away several ingenious arguments and many bright anecdotes. The treatment is marked by inequalities."

+ — Ath 1914:2418 O 24 700w

Reviewed by Calvin Winter

Bookm 40:564 Ja '15 130w

Boston Transcript p25 N 11 '14 770w

"An enticing medley of essays."

+ Nation 100:28 Ja 7 '15 230w

"Thoroughly delightful essays."

+ R of Rs 51:249 F '15 430w

"The papers give an admirable idea of life in the world of art during the latter part of the last century. There are places in Mr. Carr's book where his wit sparkles, but there are others where it seems to have gone to sleep."

+ — Sat R 118:sup6 N 14 '14 230w

+ Spec 113:599 O 31 '11 60w

CARR, MRS. SARAH PRATT (MRS. BYRON O. CARR). Billy To-morrow's chums. il $1.25 (3½c) McClurg 13-24318

This is the fourth of the Billy To-morrow stories, but of it Billy is not the hero. That honor is shared by Sydney Bremmer and Max Ball, two boys of different character who are taken in and sheltered by kind-hearted Mrs. Schmitz. The boys help with the work in her greenhouse and go to high school, where Billy, Bess Carter, and others are numbered among their friends.

CARR, WILLIAM KEARNEY. Matter and some of its dimensions. (Harper's lib. of living thought) il *75c (3½c) Harper 14-961

In this little volume the author gives an exposition of the electrical theory of matter, and moves forward from it to argue the existence of an "Intelligent motive power" behind the movements of physical nature.

"An interesting argument."

+ A L A Bkl 10:263 Mr '14

"After these specimens of the writer's logic, it is needless to point out that his facts, whether drawn from physics, medicine, or from psychology, are for the most part false, or are twisted to mean things which are not germane to them."

— Nation 98:333 Mr 26 '14 950w

"This book will scarcely be appreciated by those who like an author to remain in touch with actual fact when presenting scientific achievement in a popular manner. It abounds with misstatements."

— Nature 92:605 Je 29 '14 200w

"Mr. Carr's suggestive book is well worth consideration."

+ Spec 112:sup681 Ap 25 '14 120w

CARRÉ, HENRY BEACH. Paul's doctrine of redemption. *$1.25 (4c) Macmillan 14-20862

This book represents an attempt to interpret Paul from the standpoint of his world philosophy. The author attempts to show that the redemption of man, as conceived by Paul, "was inseparably connected with the redemption of the cosmos, and that the same principles which underlie the world's redemption are at work in the redemption of mankind. Man's salvation is a chapter of cosmic history, as it unfolded itself to the dualism of Paul." (Preface) The five chapters are devoted to: The world-view of Paul; The necessity and character of cosmic redemption; Cosmic redemption through the death and resurrection of the Redeemer; The cosmic power of the Redeemer manifest in the life of believers; The Redeemer and the consummation of the redemptive program. A selected bibliography and an index to scripture references complete the volume.

CARRITT, E. F. Theory of beauty. *$2 Macmillan

"In 'The theory of beauty' Mr. E. F. Carritt sets out to investigate the cause of pleasure in art and nature, and in the pursuit he patiently analyzes the history of aesthetics from Plato and Aristotle to Nietzsche, Tolstoy, and Croce. His analysis of the Italian author's theory of Expressionism is one of the best and most complete that have appeared in English, and constitutes an important section of his book."

In his analysis of the relationship between art, morality, and religion, Mr. Carritt arrives at a conclusion practically identical with that enunciated by Swinburne in his famous essay on Hugo's 'L'année terrible,' holding that art is the rival of morality and religion, and may be either their ally or their enemy."—Ath

"The value of his monograph is considerable merely in its negative aspect, in its destructive criticism of many widely held, but misleading theories about art; and constructively it is stimulating and suggestive, if not conclusive."

+ Ath 1914,2:402 O 17 450w

"Certainly the writer's winning modesty, his mastery of the original languages of the thinkers criticised, his evident appreciation of the intuitive views of the poets, his catholic temper, will render his lucidly and brightly presented exposition of various aesthetic systems a welcome introduction to the subject."

+ Nation 99:663 D 3 '14 380w

+ Sat R 118:sup6 O 24 '14 750w

Spec 113:534 O 17 '14 80w

CARRUTHERS, DOUGLAS. Unknown Mongolia. 7 2v il *$7 Lippincott (Eng ed 14-2965)

A record of the exploration of the sources of the Yenisei and of a journey thence thru Mongolia to Kumul or Hami, ending with a survey of the Karlik Tagh and Barkul mountains. "Mr. Carruthers confines himself to describing the particular region and relating his own experiences, the scientific results of the expedition having already been published elsewhere. Lord Curzon has written an appreciative foreword, and the work has been supplemented by three chapters on big-game hunting and sport by Mr. J. H. Miller." (Ath)

"A standard work, valuable for its intimate details about the inhabitants as well as the geography of a little known region, but it could have been condensed to advantage."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:385 Je '14

Ath 1913,2:524 N 8 70w

"A thoroughly readable and valuable addition to our knowledge of a very little-known part of the world."

+ Ath 1914,1:189 F 7 300w

"This work is pro-Russian in point of view but it is full of illuminating information and comment on the impending clash of interests in Mongolia."

+ Dial 57:142 S 1 '14 320w

"These volumes are of unusual interest and value to the geographer and cartographer, the ethnologist, and the student of Chinese-Russian affairs as well as to the hunter of such rare game as the wild sheep of central Asia."

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 160w

"Few books of exploration as elaborate as this are so readably written, and the photographs are excellent."

+ Nation 99:139 Jl 30 '14 420w

"A highly important work, whether considered from geographical, ethnographical, social, or political viewpoints."

+ N Y Times 19:251 My 31 '14 170w

"A thoroughly readable book possessing both scientific and literary value."

+ Pittsburgh 19:419 O '14 80w

"Mr. Carruthers is a trained and painstaking observer; he had made ample preparations for his journey; he took plenty of time in its execution; he made the best use of his opportunities, and he has recorded the results in a clear, intelligible and informative style, supplemented by excellent illustrations and maps, the whole forming a remarkable testimony to the value of private initiative and enterprise." Sir Francis Younghusband

+ Sat R 117:9 Ja 3 '14 1300w

"Altogether the work, both from the importance of the journey described and the literary value of the description, deserves to take a leading place in the recent literature of travel."

+ Spec 112:21 Ja 3 '14 1550w

CARSON, WILLIAM ENGLISH. Mexico, the wonderland of the south. il *$2.50 (1½c) Macmillan 14-4204

This book was published first in 1909. Recent developments in Mexico and the rapid making of history there have called forth this revision. One of the new features is a summary of events from the accession of Diaz in 1876 to the administration of Huerta in 1914. "During a recent visit to the republic the author was able to gain an interesting insight into its present condition, and an idea of the general political outlook, the result of which has been embodied in a carefully written supplementary chapter." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 10:333 Ap '14

+ Ann Am Acad 54:322 Jl '14 150w

"A dull and heavy book which contains much small talk and gives no clear view of the Mexico today."

— Ath 1914,1:578 Ap 25 1050w

Reviewed by A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 39:549 Jl '14 800w

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 1250w

"In its new form, this work embodies as entertaining and instructive an account of Mexico as the general reader is likely to want."

+ Dial 56:307 Ap 1 '14 90w

+ Ind 78:54 Ap 6 '14 60w

"The author's personal impressions and observations are usually accurate, but the treatment of such matters as literature in Mexico is quite inadequate. Certain passages, true at the time of the first edition, have been left unrevised in the second."

+ — Nation 98:527 My 7 '14 1050w

N Y Times 18:500 S 28 '13 100w

N Y Times 19:250 My 31 '14 100w

Reviewed by M. A. Hopkins

Pub W 85:1352 Ap 18 '14 370w

"The author describes the land and people fully and graphically."

+ R of Rs 49:506 Ap '14 60w

CARTER, GEORGE REGINALD. Tendency<sup>10</sup> towards industrial combination; a study of the modern movement towards industrial combination in some spheres of British industry. *6s Constable & co., London 14-352

"A comprehensive knowledge of that aspect of the subject with which he deals is shown by Mr. Carter in 'The tendency towards industrial combination,' and signs of much industry in the compilation of detailed instances appear."

... With a few exceptions, Mr. Carter is not dogmatic, and by adopting the historical and comparative method he is able to trace the gradual development of combination in Great Britain. . . . Mr. Carter is evidently of opinion that the existing conditions of production and the wage-system will not give way to different ones; he says, 'Industry in England still is, and must continue to be, dominated by the competitive system.'—Ath

"It is unfortunate that the style of the book is marred by redundancy of expression and needless repetition, for Mr. Carter's work is of signal interest to all students of the development of combinations, especially so with reference to the movement in England." O. W. Knauth

+ — Am Econ R 4:654 S '14 380w

"Capitalists, heads of great industrial organizations, and employers of labour, will here find information of value, and workers' organizations can discover signs to warn them. The bibliography and index are excellent."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup179 Ja 31 600w

"It is curious to find that by combination Mr. Carter merely means combination among employers, and that there is hardly any reference in his book to labour and trade unions, factors which surely cannot be ignored in any penetrating or comprehensive treatment of industrial tendencies." R. P. Farley

+ — Hibbert J 12:693 Ap '14 100w

CARTER, HUNTLY. Theatre of Max Reinhardt. il *$2.50 (3c) Kennerley A14-2852

A survey of the process of Mr. Max Reinhardt's development as it has influenced the theater of to-day. The writer reviews the forces that made for playhouse progress at the time of Reinhardt's appearance on the stage of action, the German influences on Reinhardt's individual development, the effect of his development as shown in his aim, conception of drama, conception of the stage, conception of the player and conception of theater organization. The study makes considerable mention of Mr. Gordon Craig and his volume "On the art of the theatre," showing to what extent Mr. Reinhardt was influenced by Mr. Craig, the character of Craig's ideas and the sources of his inspiration.

Ath 1914,2:59 Jl 11 1350w

"Mr. Carter has written a book which specialists should read and others doubtless will, since it contains first-hand information on a subject on which curiosity is active and knowledge scant. The construction of the work is rather loose. The grasp of principles is feeble."

+ — Nation 99:587 N 12 '14 700w

"The chief value of his work lies in his bringing together of facts concerning the technical experiments undertaken in modern stage work and connecting them with the intention in the mind of the producers. This is a much more difficult task than it may seem to the casual observer and wins a certain interior unity for a book of distracting exterior form."

+ — N Y Times 19:427 O 11 '14 1150w

"Mr. Carter's book in matter is admirable. His views are seldom far astray. His feeling is true. Unfortunately, Mr. Carter has yet to learn how to write. It is maddening to see such excellent sense utterly spoiled in the delivery. The ordinary reader will do one of two things. He will either read him with great respect as one too profound to be understood except by a special dispensation, or he will not read him at all. However, in spite of Mr. Huntly Carter, almost any reader will get at least one thing clearly into his mind from reading this book—namely, that Reinhardt is a very great producer, a genius in his métier, one whose productions are worth studying, at large and in detail."

+ — Sat R 117:743 Je 6 '14 300w

"The sad thing about the present volume is that it fails utterly to fulfil the rational purpose of such a volume. Much of the information is irrelevant and most of the comment is platitudinous."

— Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 650w

CARTON, HUGH, pseud. Grand assize, as reported by a humble clerk. *$1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 14-21754

The author has conceived a great court, presided over by an all-wise judge. Before this court appear representatives of certain modern classes—the plutocrat, the derelict, the philistine, the daughter of joy, the agitator, the parasite, Mrs. Grundy, the party politician, etc. Each states his own case and listens to the sentence pronounced by the judge.

"A Utopian sneer at puppets of the author's own creation, which has some dramatic quality."

— + Ind 80:288 N 23 '14 40w

Nation 100:119 Ja 28 '15 250w

"Mr. 'Carton' has a dignified style, and has evidently thought out his problems with great care before putting them on paper."

+ Spec 113:855 D 12 '14 70w

Spec 114:116 Ja 23 '15 1600w

CARUS, PAUL. Mechanistic principle and the non-mechanical. il *$1 (2½c) Open ct. 13-22222

In the first paper in this book, a comparison between the mechanistic and the teleological conceptions of the universe, the author reaches the conclusion that: "a belief in the divinity of man, in his responsibility and in his freedom, is quite justified, even on the recognition of the mechanistic principle." The papers that follow are: Mark Twain's philosophy; La Mettrie's view of man as a machine; Extracts from Prof. W. B. Smith's article "Push or pull?"; The spirit in the wheels: the mechanism of the universe as seen by a theist.

"It will be interesting to those not already weary of the eternal problems of freedom and futility which it discusses, for the author puts vigor and freshness into his style and has compiled many valuable opinions and quotations."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 15 '13 100w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CARUS, PAUL.—Continued.

Boston Transcript p10 D 22 '13 150w

"It goes without saying that this is a convenient book to have on one's shelves, wherein philosopher, scientist, theologian and layman expound their views. To be sure it is not adequate." H. G. Lord

+ — Educ R 48:402 N '14 160w

Ind 77:385 Mr 16 '14 350w

Reviewed by A. E. Crawley

Nature 94:361 D 3 '14 280w

CARUS, PAUL. Nietzsche and other exponents of individualism. il *$1.25 (3½c) Open ct. 14-1736

A critical study of Nietzsche. The title is somewhat misleading, as it seems to imply a volume made up of a series of studies of Nietzsche and others. It is concerned thruout with Nietzsche himself or with the men who influenced him or who were influenced by him. The author's attitude toward his subject can be indicated by a quotation from his first chapter: "Nietzsche represents a type of most modern date. He was a genius after the heart of Lombroso. He was eccentric and atypical. . . . Nietzsche was most assuredly very ingenious; he was unusually talented but he was not a genius in the full sense of the word. He was abnormal, titanic in his pretensions and aims, and erratic. . . . The mental derangement of Nietzsche may be an unhappy accident but it appears to have come as the natural result of his philosophy."

"Written with clarity and without obscure technicalities, it can be read with profit along with Mencken and other Nietzsche enthusiasts."

+ A L A Bkl 10:346 My '14

+ — Boston Transcript pS My 9 '14 1150w

"The uncompromisingly conservative will welcome it. Originality is interesting, they will say; and to be suggestive is to be helpful, provided the suggestions can be carried out to the ultimate good of the less gifted. But when the suggestions are either unfeasible or dangerous, they should be checkmated, especially if they are clothed in the happy phrase that so easily deceives."

— + Dial 56:188 Mr 1 '14 600w

"Quite worth reading."

+ Educ R 47:421 Ap '14 80w

"The book may be read with profit as a sort of corrective to the writings of Mencken and of other recent Nietzsche enthusiasts."

+ — Nation 98:368 Ap 2 '14 250w

"The reader will get a better idea of the great German individualist, philosopher, originator of the Overman—or, at least, of our conception of him—from Dr. Carus' little book, than from any other book which has recently come to our notice."

+ R of Rs 49:380 Mr '14 70w

CASE, SHIRLEY JACKSON. Evolution of early Christianity. *$2.25 (2c) Univ. of Chicago press 14-17216

The book offers a study of Christianity in the first century with especial reference to the environmental forces that stimulated and directed its growth. The author looks upon Christianity as vital and developmental in nature rather than as static. In the ten chapters of the book he takes up: The developmental nature of Christianity; The importance of environment for Christian origins; The Mediterranean world in New Testament times; The early Christians' Jewish connections; The breach between Christians and Jews; The early Christians' contact with Gentile religions; The religious significance of emperor-worship; The religious significance of philosophical speculation; Hellenistic religions of redemption; The triumph of Christianity.

"A book of this kind is bound to be widely useful to students, and its extensive and well-selected bibliographies give it double value." A. C. McGiffert

+ Am J Theol 19:118 Ja '15 1850w

N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 70w

"An important contribution to a subject needing it."

+ Outlook 108:733 N 25 '14 300w

CASE of Belgium in the present war. pa *25c Macmillan 14-16719

"The case of Belgium in the present war," the work of the Belgian delegates to the United States, is an account of the violation of the neutrality of Belgium and of the laws of war on Belgian territory by Germany. It contains diplomatic correspondence and the findings of the Belgian commission in the form of a number of surprising affidavits and statements of witnesses."—Dial

Cath World 100:397 D '14 70w

Reviewed by E. B. Krehbiel

Dial 57:379 N 16 '14 80w

"An official statement of weight and permanent value."

+ Outlook 108:816 D 9 '14 50w

+ Spec 113:931 D 26 '14 90w

CASSAVETTI, DEMETRIUS JOHN. Hellas and the Balkan wars; with an introd. by W. Pember Reeves. il *$3 Dodd (Eng ed 14-39420)

The author, himself a Greek, has given us "an exhaustive study of Greek history during the past half century, but particularly in its relation to the recent conflicts against Turkey and Bulgaria. There are sympathetic chapters on Premier Venizelos, Greek women, Albania, the future of Greater Greece, the spirit of Hellenism, and 'Græceia Irredenta.'"—R of Rs

+ A L A Bkl 10:386 Je '14

"The work is well done; and the author has related his facts in an interesting, straightforward manner, with an evident intention of being impartial. He has laid himself open to considerable criticism by dogmatic statements upon points—either disputed by the best authorities, or extremely difficult to prove." N. D. Harris

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:685 N '14 1200w

"A comprehensive and somewhat ambitious volume."

+ R of Rs 49:624 My '14 120w

"Mr. Cassavetti has been at great pains to authenticate his facts and give his authorities by name, and his book will be valuable for the later historian, who will have no easy task to discriminate amongst the mass of conflicting literature about the Balkan fighting."

+ — Sat R 117:277 F 28 '14 800w

"Mr. Cassavetti offers us the Greek point of view in this excellent survey of the events that led up to the Balkan war, of the war itself so far as it concerned the Greeks, and of the prospects of the Hellenic Kingdom. The Greek case could hardly have a better advocate than this author. Mr. Cassavetti is a candid critic of certain failings of the Greeks in education and discipline, but when it comes to judging between them and the Bulgarians on their territorial claims and on their conduct in the war he has no good word to say of the Bulgarians."

+ — Spec 112:188 Ja 31 '14 1500w

CASSELL, RALPH JOSEPH. Art of collecting. 1 il $2 Ronald press 13-22441

The author says that the average man is "too busy with the selling or producing end of his business to give the necessary time and thought to the collection department." Inefficient methods are used, and this book has been prepared in the belief that the practical working plans which it has to present will bring better results. The chapters cover the following subjects: The collection manager and his work; Credit and collection information; A study of debtors; Collection systems; Collection system for instalment business; Collecting city accounts; Collecting outside accounts; Credit and collection problems of the small dealer; Collection letters [six chapters]; The collector and his work; Legal phases of collecting; Mercantile and collection agencies; Unusual collection methods.

CASTLE, MRS. AGNES (SWEETMAN), and CASTLE, EGERTON. Our sentimental garden. il $1.75 Lippincott A14-3058

"The names of the authors of this winning quarto have been associated for the most part with romantic stories; and this volume, although it deals with a real garden in a real country, has the atmosphere of romance, not only in its text, but in its illustration, which consists of head and tail pieces, and page pictures in color. The garden is in Surrey, one of the garden counties of England; and the book is a calendar of the seasons, emotionally or poetically presented."—Outlook

"The book is, as a whole, well worth reading, and still more worth possessing for its charming appearance."—Ath 1914.2:sup604 D 5 530w

"It is practically a romance, a nature study, a gift-book all in one." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 5 '14 700w

+ Dial 57:510 D 16 '14 150w

"Sentimental truly, but full of the delights of an almost human comradeship found with the birds, and animals, the flowers and the bees which the authors have learned to know in the garden of their English home. The illustrations, however, in many places, mar rather than add to the volume's attractiveness."

+ Ind 80:412 D 14 '14 50w

"The books offers a pleasant retreat to those whose experience with gardens in winter must be vicarious."

+ Nation 99:662 D 3 '14 40w

+ N Y Times 19:529 N 29 '14 110w

"It supplements the many garden books which tell people how and when to plant; this tells them rather how and when to enjoy growing things."

+ Outlook 108:901 D 16 '14 120w

Sat R 118:sup6 D 5 '14 190w

CASTLE, MRS. CORA (SUTTON). Statistical study of eminent women. (Archives of psychology, no. 27) il $1.05; pa 80c Science press 13-21688

"Mrs. Castle, in 'A statistical study of eminent women,' calls attention to the 'relative variability of the sexes,' and the question of psychical sex differences as factors of prime importance in the formation of a theory of education for women. She gives a thorough examination of a group of 368 women who attained varying degrees of eminence. The majority of these were educated women; 38.8 per cent. were writers; 107 contemporary women of distinction. America, although only two centuries old, stands fourth in the production of eminent women. . . . Mrs. Castle aims to discover whether 'innate inferiority has been the reason for the small number of eminent women, or has civilization never yet allowed them opportunity to develop their innate powers and possibilities.'"—R of Rs

N Y Times 19:249 My 31 '14 280w

R of Rs 50:114 Jl '14 250w

CASTLE, VERNON, and CASTLE, IRENE. Modern dancing. il $1.25 (5½c) Harper 14-6197

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle, the foremost exponents in America of the new dances, write of them here, giving simple directions for dancing the one-step, hesitation waltz, maxixe, tango, etc. Their book, they think, should serve a double purpose. "In the first place, it aims to explain in a clear and simple manner the fundamentals of modern dancing. In the second place, it shows that dancing, properly executed, is neither vulgar nor immodest, but, on the contrary, the personification of refinement, grace, and modesty." (Foreword) The book is fully illustrated; Elizabeth Marbury writes an introduction, and Dr. J. Ralph Jacoby adds a chapter at the close on dancing and health.

A L A Bkl 10:386 Je '14

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 2 '14 250w

+ Nation 99:438 O 8 '14 80w

"The little volume ought to have a wholesome influence upon both the tendency to carry dancing to exaggerated and vulgar extremes and the tendency to condemn all modern dancing as wrong and debasing. For it is sane, intelligent, and discriminating, and its authors are desirous of showing the public how to get all that is beneficial and wholesomely pleasurable out of the dance and to discard and discredit whatever is otherwise."

+ N Y Times 19:239 My 17 '14 550w

+ Pub W 85:1071 Mr 21 '14 80w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 23 '14 800w

CASTLE, WILLIAM RICHARDS, jr. Pillar of sand. $1.30 (1½c) Dodd 14-4308

The woman social climber is a common figure in fiction; this is the story of a man who seeks to establish himself in a stratum of society to which he was not born. Francis Evans, president of the Botoolph trust company at the age of thirty, has made a remarkable business success, but his ambition is not satisfied for he still lingers on the outskirts of Boston's exclusive society. He looks to his marriage with Louise Atwood to admit him to the inner circle, but one mis-move destroys all the superstructure he has so carefully built up. Contrasted with Evans is Hugh Brandon, improvident and impractical, but possessing the heritage of birth and breeding that the other man lacks.

"The author has given us a dainty satire on Boston's amiable provincialism, and also a good deal of very sympathetic humanity in the characters he has introduced to us." J. Marchand

+ Bookm 39:219 Ap '14 400w

"In itself the plot is commonplace, and is made childishly futile by Evans's conduct." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 28 '14 700w

"The book is a queer survival; it belongs to the age of Sandford and Merton. We doubt if Boston society will be deeply stirred by it."

+ Nation 98:332 Mr 26 '14 180w

"There is an excellently worded protest against familiarity with vice as a necessary means of reform, and many epigrammatic flashes of truth one would like to remember; but none of these things clog the movement of a well-told tale which never suffers the reader's interest to flag."

+ N Y Times 19:113 Mr 8 '14 350w

"The only interest of the story is that of the 'penny dreadful'—finding out who really was the thief."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 23 '14 350w

CATLIN, GEORGE. North American Indians; manners, customs, languages, history and conditions. 2v il $7.50 Leary, Stuart & co. 14-30895

"This is a reprint of a work which was published in 1846, and, altho perhaps forgotten by the present generation, was famous in its day and received high praise from the American and English reviews of the period. It was then described as the most valuable record of Indian life in existence. . . . When Catlin published his book, painted savages were still roaming the western plains, and the smoke of the wigwam ascended from places now occupied by thriving cities. Sky-scrappers may now be seen where the red man pitched his tent. The extermination of Indian life has been so ruthless and thorough that his very history is in danger of falling into oblivion. The author of the present work saw this clearly and deliberately devoted himself to the task of saving from oblivion the Indian story and tradition."—Lit D

+ A L A Bkl 11:81 O '14

"Undoubtedly the most widely read and in many respects the most valuable book devoted to our American aborigines. With this new edition available, there is now no reason why

CATLIN, GEORGE—Continued.

Catlin's 'Indians' should not be in every public library of the country, however small."

+ Dial 56:391 My 1 '14 250w

+ Lit D 49:25 J1 4 '14 670w

CAVE, EDWARD. Boy's camp book. il *50c
(1½c) Doubleday 14-9845

This book is a companion to "Boy scout's hike book." It tells the young scout all he will need to know about camping, and the many pictures and diagrams will show him how to pitch his tent, build an ice box or cellar, make a stretcher bed, a sectional stove, and other camp necessities.

"Written in a popular, enthusiastic style, but full of sound directions and wholesome advice as to conduct."

+ A L A Bkl 11:34 S '14

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 270w

"Concise and practical."

+ Ind 80:416 D 14 '14 50w

"This little book should save the novice much preliminary trouble."

+ Lit D 49:1134 D 5 '14 50w

"All one wishes to know about health, equipment, discipline, cooking, and fun is contained in this handy little volume."

+ Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 50w

"An excellent manual."

+ N Y Times 19:367 Ag 30 '14 60w

R of Rs 49:765 Je '14 70w

CAWEIN, MADISON JULIUS. Minions of the moon. il *$1.25 Stewart & Kidd 13-22452

A volume of nature and fairy lore in verse. "We are familiar with faeries from over the water—Irish and German and Norse elf-spirits. Mr. Cawein brings to us our own elemental nature-spirits—the Gray sisters who are the daughters of Autumn—faeries of the beeches, of the waterfall and of the sea." (R of Rs)

"It is Mr. Cawein's landscape feeling for nature which constitutes the most abiding contribution of his art to American poetry. In 'Minions of the moon' we have been given a work of delicate beauty which communicates pleasure, and for this we are duly grateful."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '14 630w

"This charming book is by far the best that Mr. Cawein has ever written."

+ Chaut 72:301 D 13 '13 250w

"Other poets may voice the spiritual issues of our national life with richer expression and greater authority, but none of them can surpass Mr. Cawein as an interpreter of the beauty that lies at the heart of natural things." W: M. Payne

+ Dial 56:68 Ja 16 '14 550w

"He is in love with trees and flowers and birds, and he records his love in songs that are fresh and graceful and charming."

+ Lit D 47:1283 D 27 '13 250w

Reviewed by Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 19:319 J1 19 '14 200w

R of Rs 48:755 D '13 90w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 430w

CELLIER, FRANÇOIS, and BRIDGEMAN, CUNNINGHAM. Gilbert and Sullivan, and their operas. il *$3.50 (3c) Little A15-14

This work, begun by Mr. Cellier, who was for many years musical director of the D'Oyly Carte opera company, and left about half completed at the time of his death, has been finished by Mr. Bridgeman. Part 1, Gilbert and Sullivan, is the work of Mr. Cellier; part 2, Gilbert, Sullivan, D'Oyly Carte, and Cellier, of Mr. Bridgeman. It is a book of reminiscences with accounts of the first performances of the well-known operas by the two composers, anecdotes of the singers and others connected with the Savoy theater, with many illustrations from photographs, facsimiles of letters, etc.

A L A Bkl 11:108 N '14

Reviewed by L: M. Isaacs

+ Bookm 40:468 D '14 620w

"For some time to come this volume will remain the formal and authentic history of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. It is not free from blemish—an extravagant adulation is its worst offence—but it will remain a sourceful book of fact concerning the originators of a new form of dramatic musical entertainment. The book will be a necessity to the library of every dramatic collector."

+ Boston Transcript p24 S 30 '14 250w

"Altogether, the book is an admirable record of an important period in the history of English comic opera." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 57:291 O 16 '14 1750w

Ind 80:26 O 5 '14 23w

"A readable rather than a remarkable volume."

+ Spec 113:396 S 19 '14 1950w

CESCINSKY, HERBERT, and WEBSTER, MALCOLM, R. English domestic clocks. il *$10 Dutton (Eng ed A13-2506)

"In their preface the authors, one of whom is a 'practical clockmaker,' tell us that 'this book was written primarily, to supplement another work, 'English furniture of the eighteenth century' . . . in which . . . clocks were considered in the usual progression of English furniture types of the period.' . . . The first chapter is concerned with 'The problem of the measurement of time'; 'The law of the pendulum' and the regulation and mechanism of clocks are then discussed in detail, and elucidated by full-sized diagrams. Brass lantern, or 'birdcage' clocks are then described. . . . Dials and hands are also described in detail, and we can follow the development of the long-case from its rise to its decline, in infinite variety of plain, inlaid, or lacquered woods. A chapter is devoted to Chippendale and Sheraton cases, and another to 'Bracket clocks from 1670-1800.' . . . The book ends with a list of the makers whose work is here illustrated, and an index. The illustrations are a striking feature of this interesting book, and are from drawings and photographs by the authors."—Spec

Dial 56:511 Je 16 '14 50w

"To collectors and students of American furniture this book is valuable; to those whose range is international, indispensable."

+ Nation 18:509 Ap 30 '14 650w

"One of England's ancient and interesting handicrafts is treated with fullness and marked intelligence."

+ N Y Times 19:136 Mr 22 '14 70w

+ Spec 111:827 N 15 '13 420w

CHADWICK, ESTHER ALICE (MRS. ELLIS H. CHADWICK). In the footsteps of the Brontës. il *$3.75 Brentano's (Eng ed A14-1352)

"Here we may read about the Irish origin of the Brontës, of Patrick Brontë's removal to England and his training for the ministry, of their life at Haworth and of the first literary attempts of his three daughters, of Charlotte's offers of marriage and her life in Brussels, and of a thousand-and-one other details, important and unimportant. Mrs. Chadwick has gathered her information from here, there and everywhere. She is a Brontë enthusiast, as is every one who has entered upon a study of the family; and she makes certain that every fact and inference has a place in her story without regard to its relevance or importance."—Boston Transcript

"While the work has no interpretative value and does not compare in literary merit with the biographies by Mrs. Gaskell and Shorter, it has a place in large libraries as the most complete collection of facts, some important, some merely gossip or irrelevant, about the external affairs of the Brontës, which the author has gone to great pains to collect."

+ A L A Bkl 11:217 Ja '15

"We could have wished Mrs. Chadwick's work in many respects different from what it is; but that she has furnished material for further study of a fascinating subject is undeniable, and we must be grateful to her."

+ Ath 1914.1:154 Ja 31 500w

"From so ill-arranged a biography it is almost impossible to have the mind set at rest regarding any of the controversial questions that have raged around the Brontës for many years, and the reader must therefore be willing to accept it as an addendum to the vast amount of Brontëana already in print or as a sort of scrap book into whose pages have been gathered all sorts of material of varying importance." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 Jl 1 '14 1100w

"Her knowledge of the literature, a confused mass, is minute, and she has been able to correct Mr. Shorter and Miss Sinclair, to name the two most exalted Brontëists, in many less important details, and has brought a saner judgment to bear on the important matter of interpreting human nature. Possibly Mrs. Chadwick goes a little too far in her own thesis."

+ — Nation 99:412 O 1 '14 500w

"The book is monumental and yet, in its ineffectualness, hugely pathetic. There are a thousand points of inadequacy, but what makes itself felt at every turn of the 487 solid pages is the complete lack of selective literary judgment."

— N Y Times 19:331 Ag 2 '14 950w

Reviewed by G. A. B. Dewar

Sat R 117:170 F 7 '14 1350w

CHAMBERLAIN, MRS. ANNA CONTENT (CHASE). Bailey twins and the rest of the family. il $1 (3c) Lothrop 14-14799

The twins, Eliza and Nell, seven years old, were members of a big family. There were Willis and Herbert and Aline and Fred who were quite grown up, and Eleanor and Aleck who were less so, and Edgar the baby. And most of the naughtiness and perverseness of the family seemed to have cropped out in the twins, who could think of more mischief in an hour than all the other well-behaved members of the family could counteract in a day. They are a pair of very amusing and human little girls, and the book as a whole gives a pleasant picture of family life.

"Grown-ups will get as much, if not more, amusement than will their youngsters out of the adventures of this pair of seven-year-old girls. There is many a hearty laugh in the book, which shows furthermore a lovable picture of happy home life." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:447 D '14 270w

CHAMBERLAIN, ARTHUR BENSLEY. Hans Holbein the Younger. 2v il $16 Dodd 14-4980

"Hans Holbein the Younger is one of those artists who are known to us almost entirely through the medium of their works. History has recorded only the barest outlines of his life, and although we have a clear idea of Holbein the artist, we can hardly form any conception of Holbein the man. . . . All that can be gleaned of his personality from the pages of history or the study of his pictures can be found in the book before us. . . . Mr. Chamberlain tells us also, wherever ascertainable, the circumstances of the composition of each individual picture, and its subsequent history, and adds biographical notes connected with the sitters. These notes, together with the pictures and drawings, which they may be said to complete, throw valuable side-lights on the history of the times."—Ath

Ath 1913.2:sup438 O 18 70w

"The book is extremely well put together. It is so fully illustrated that we may be pardoned for regretting the absence of some important pictures."

+ — Ath 1913.2:629 N 29 1400w

"A most satisfactory biography and study." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 14 '14 1800w

"Mr. Chamberlain has spared no pains to bring our knowledge of Holbein up to date. His book takes advantage of the many revisions of judgment on the painter's work recently made but not incorporated in any standard work."

+ Int Studio 51:331 F '14 330w

"Mr. Chamberlain's book immediately becomes the standard source of reference."

+ Nation 98:93 Ja 22 '14 330w

"A book that is sound in form, accurate, so far as we can discern, in statement, and singularly free from bias."

+ N Y Times 18:761 D 28 '13 1850w

"Even if, as is unlikely, much more should be learnt concerning Holbein, there can be very little if any of this present book that would be displaced. Though its author stresses his intention of providing a complete biography, we must not think that his critical estimate of Holbein's art is not always reasonable and perceptive. His summing up of Holbein's qualities is a good instance. To carry through a work of this magnitude and diversity with such completeness is enviable."

+ Sat R 116:685 N 29 '13 600w

"What we miss in Mr. Chamberlain's book is any serious consideration of the art of Holbein. How it was possible in a book of this kind to debase the work of the master by the terrible colour reproductions passes belief."

+ — Spec 112:528 Mr 28 '14 480w

CHAMBERLAIN, GEORGE AGNEW. Home. il $1.30 (1½c) Century 14-2135

Home, to the group of people who make up the characters of this story, is represented by "Red hill" where three country houses, Elm house, Maple house, and the Firs, cluster closely together. The lives of the three families, the Lansings, the Eltons, and the Waynes, are closely interwoven, but it is with Gerry Lansing and Allen Wayne that the story deals most intimately. Allen is of the prodigal type that wanders inevitably from home and breaks with family traditions. Gerry is stable, immovable, a true product of his race and environment; yet after a crisis, he too turns prodigal and wanders far, in strange lands and strange ways. In the end, Red hill—home—calls both back and reclaims them.

"A book of very uneven accomplishments."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:287 Mr '14

+ — Ath 1914.1:sup874 Je 20 180w

+ Atlant 114:520 O '14 600w

"'Home' is eminently worth reading, whether you are acquainted with Jokai's novel or not. But the chance resemblance is interesting." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 38:672 F '14 450w

"'Home' is such a hodge-podge that it might be attributed to many writers of novels were we so inconsiderate as to lay the burden of its anonymity upon their shoulders." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p8 Ja 17 '14 750w

"It is a human novel, compactly and beautifully put together, and in all the varied phases of its interest entirely free from dullness." W. M. Payne

+ Dial 56:251 Mr 16 '14 550w

"The important characters are all colorless, and more or less interchangeable."

+ — Ind 77:242 F 16 '14 300w

"It is a book not to be missed, as much for its failure as for its success. It succeeds in telling an excellent story, and telling it well, which, after all, is a good deal. And even where it fails it lays a grip on the heart and starts a chord vibrating."

+ — N Y Times 19:18 Ja 18 '14 1550w

"As a whole, the book has promise, but is far from being an unqualified success."

+ — Outlook 106:504 F 28 '14 100w

CHAMBERLAIN, HOUSTON STEWART. Immanuel Kant; tr. by Lord Redesdale. 2v il $7.50 (2½c) Lane 14-15445

This work, by a man of English birth who lives in Germany and who chooses to write in the German language, represents an attempt to "survey Kant's personality from the purely human standpoint." It will present a new view of the man and his philosophy to many readers, for the author holds that Kant's books "however dry and stiff they may appear at first sight, are living creations. In him there is no flat, faultless exposition of a neatly chiselled system which on a given day is laid before the world as a finished whole; but the passionate work of a genius whose life's task is the inmost organisation of his philosophy." In carrying out his plan of making Kant's personality the central point of his exposition the author compares him with other great thinkers—with Goethe, Leonardo da Vinci, Descartes, Bruno, and Plato.

CHAMBERLAIN, HOUSTON S.—Continued.

"The author is an independent, original thinker, and a persuasive writer. He has accomplished the improbable by furnishing a popular, human approach to Kant in two stout, closely packed volumes. But besides driving home his main arguments, Mr. Chamberlain gives the reader abundant intellectual stimulus of the incidental sort." W. K. Stewart
+ — Dial 57:333 N 1 '14 1450w

"The volumes will be interesting to the student in philosophy, but the author is not one who can be followed blindly."

+ — Outlook 108:283 S 30 '14 150w

"Kant's scholarship and enormous brain power, his engaging personality,—these are presented to us in a way to make us understand and love the subject."

+ R of Rs 50:380 S '14 300w

"A word as to the translation. If Lord Redesdale were not both a keen Kantian and an admirer of Mr. Chamberlain, he would not have undertaken so arduous a task. The book radiates the vigour, and fervour, and eloquence of its author. This could only be because Lord Redesdale is so thoroughly in sympathy with Mr. Chamberlain and can write animated English as well as understand German."

+ Sat R 118:17 J1 4 '14 1206w

"Both casual reader and serious student will be wrong if they disregard Mr. Chamberlain. His book may be of the nature of a haggis, a 'mass of fine confused feeding,' but it is a rich nourishment for the man who does not fear strange dishes. The author has complete sincerity, great learning, a vigorous and independent if occasionally fantastic intellect, and a gift of rhetoric which is not far sometimes from poetry. Lord Redesdale's translation is easy and graceful, and if now and then we find a sentence which is simply unintelligible the fault is probably in ourselves or Mr. Chamberlain and not in the translator."

+ — Spec 113:269 Ag 22 '14 1800w

CHAMBERS, GEORGE FREDERICK. Astronomy. il $1.50 Van Nostrand A14-1080

"A compact little volume, not intended so much as a class text as to meet the demands of the general reader who has perhaps a telescope of two inch aperture and wants to understand what he sees with it."—Ind

"It is the very thing for boys interested in the stars."

+ Ath 1912,2:sup708 D 7 70w

"It would be a useful book for the small public library."

+ Ind 75:345 Ag 7 '13 50w

"The beginner should find little to confuse, and much that will enlighten him. The book is very well and profusely illustrated, some of the plates being in colour, and can be recommended as an excellent work for the serious beginner." W: E. Rolston

+ — Nature 92:420 D 11 '13 230w

N Y Times 18:416 J1 27 '13 70w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Anne's Bridge. il $1 Appleton 14-20779

"'Anne's Bridge' tells the story of a young man who goes to an out of the way, dilapidated hamlet for some weeks of trout fishing, and finds his landlady, cook, and forest guide all in the person of a young woman of beauty and intelligence. She lives alone in an old, tumble-down house, and, although she owns hundreds of acres of land, she has been driven to advertising for boarders for the trout fishing in order to earn even a little money. He sets on foot a scheme to have a game preserve made out of her worthless land, and much other in the neighborhood, and incidentally uncovers the history of the mysterious young woman, with whom, of course, he has fallen in love." (N Y Times) This book and "Between friends" are bound separately but the two are boxed together and are sold for $2.00.

"A pretty little love story."

+ Boston Transcript p20 D 23 '14 100w

"While neither story carries any more convincingness of its reality than one is accustomed to find in Mr. Chambers's romances, they are both written with all his gift for vivid picturing of scenes and people and for the deft and persuasive use of sentiment."

+ — N Y Times 19:590 D 27 '14 230w

Reviewed by Doris Webb

+ — Pub W 86:2012 D 12 '14 290w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Between friends. il $1 Appleton 14-20780

"'Between friends' hinges on the diabolical scheme of a great artist, Drene, to strike at Graylock, who stole his wife from him, through the girl whom Graylock has later learned to love and who herself loves Drene. Graylock's agreement with Drene to kill himself on Christmas night if Drene will then marry the girl brings about a strange situation—one that is straightened by a half-mystic experience of Drene's and Graylock's eleventh hour reprieve." (Pub W) This book and "Anne's Bridge" are bound separately but the two are boxed together and are sold for $2.00.

Boston Transcript p20 D 28 '14 100w

+ — N Y Times 19:590 D 27 '14 230w

"If the girl is too clever and cultured to be quite natural, and a bit inconsistently saucy, the story is neatly told—and rings true in its idealism." Doris Webb

+ — Pub W 86:2012 D 12 '14 290w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Hidden children. il $1.40 (1c) Appleton 14-14920

This his latest story is linked in theme to those earlier novels, "Cardigan," "The maid at arms" and others for which the American revolution provided a background, which Mr. Chambers wrote before he discovered modern frivolous society as a field for exploitation. It is a story of the border warfare between American troops and the English and Indian allies in western New York state. The hero is Euan Loskiel of Morgan's rifles, a young ensign who finds himself interested in a ragged and tattered gypsy girl who follows his regiment. Altho she seems quite alone, the girl is found to be under the protection of a mysterious Indian, and in the course of its development, many strange Indian customs are woven into the action of the narrative.

"A fairly interesting romance."

+ A L A Bkl 11:75 O '14

+ — Ath 1914,2:502 N 14 160w

"Read 'The hidden children': it is quite likely you will set Mr. Chambers a little higher in the scale than you have previously. But, of course, it all depends on what kind of a book you like." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:309 N 11 530w

"All the graces of imagery are his, but they scarcely make for the simplicity of his tale, while at the same time they certainly detract from its dramatic interest. Mr. Chambers in his vast liberality of words is extremely parsimonious in the strong and powerful events and the critical incidents that should be an integral part of such a story as this." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 1000w

Ind 80:30 O 5 '14 50w

"A brisk story of adventure."

+ Nation 99:409 O 1 '14 220w

"A very good tale of its kind." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 50w

+ — Ath 1914,2:502 N 14 160w

"All the historical part of the book is exceedingly interesting. Mr. Chambers is a born storyteller, and his descriptions of the customs and rites of the Indians, culminating in the poetic White Bridal, are related vividly and with due regard for their picturesqueness. The romance part of the book is decidedly its poorest, but after all it is of small account beside the rest, so much of which is excellent." L. M. F.

+ — N Y Times 13:26J S 6 '14 900w

CHAMBERS, ROBERT WILLIAM. Quick action. il $1.30 Appleton 14-5428

"The successive stories which make up the volume are told by one of Mr. Chambers's characteristic divinities, who reclines languorously on a couch and reads them out of a crystal to a small and adoring audience of evening-clothed young men who make comments between stories. . . . The 'quick action' of the title refers to the marvelous celerity with which Cupid, in all the stories, takes up his archery practice."—N Y Times

+ Ath 1914,1:sup875 Je 20 220w

"We are grateful to him that he has repeated the success of his 'Iole' stories with others of the same delightful phantasy and the same gay humor." R. T. Pearl

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '14 1000w

"On the whole, 'Quick action' is a clever and readable apologia."

+ Nation 18:52J My 7 '14 280w

"Mr. Chambers has amused himself, and perhaps taken some revenge upon his audience, by writing the stories which make up the spring novel this year with his tongue in his cheek. In all of the stories Mr. Chambers has carried the romantic formula a little over the edge of even its utmost limit and introduced the element of caricature."

— N Y Times 19:133 Mr 22 '14 450w

"There is nothing scientific in the book itself, it is light and fluffy and entertaining." F. M. Holly

+ Pub W 86:810 S 19 '14 330w

CHAMBRUN, CLARA (LONGWORTH), com- tesse de. Sonnets of William Shakespeare;
new light and old evidence. il $1.75 Putnam
13-26472

"The author endorses the 'personal theory' of the sonnets and divides them into three series, and these series into groups according to their subjects. Rowe's Life of Shakespeare is included in the volume."—R of Rs

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 28 '14 330w

+ Cath World 99:115 Ap '14 550w

"It is quite evident that very little reliance can be placed in the Countess's statements in matters pertaining to Shakespeare, and that she lacks the fundamental prerequisite of sound scholarship—accuracy of detail—without which all the superstructure topples to the ground." S: A. Tannenbaum

— Dial 56:497 Je 16 '14 2300w

"The subject is a tempting one and not now approached for the first time, but the scholarly and widely read woman who has undertaken this treatment of it has been markedly successful."

+ Educ R 48:211 S '14 50w

"Altogether, the reprint 'in extenso' of Rowe's 'Life of Shakespeare' seems to us the only valuable part of this work."

— + Nation 99:49 J1 9 '14 480w

"A fascinating discussion."

+ R of Rs 49:381 Mr '14 60w

"This is an admirable, cool summary of old evidence, with thoughtful suggestions added, and some original prying into new sources. The author's imagination is held strictly in leash. The grouping of the sonnets is admirable. There is no better book in print for the new adventurer into these mysteries."

+ Sat R 117:347 Mr 14 '14 100w

CHANDLER, FRANK WADLEIGH. Aspects of modern drama. *$2 (1c) Macmillan 14-22316

The first and last chapters of this work are devoted to individual dramatists, Ibsen as the exponent of the drama of ideas, Shaw of the drama of satire. Two chapters are given up to the Irish movement. The remainder of the work, something like a dozen chapters, is given to a consideration of different types of plays: The drama of symbolism; The eternal triangle; Wayward woman; Scenes from married life; The problem of divorce; Family studies, etc. A bibliographical appendix contains a list of representative plays and their English translations, and a list of critical aids for the study of modern drama.

"His method is clarity itself. He presents his topic, explaining it briefly and simply, and then analyzes the work of its foremost exemplars. The result is a comprehensive statement of each topic as a dramatic unit. Practically the only serious topical omission which can be charged against Prof. Chandler is his disregard of what may be called the drama of enjoyment. The text itself is admirably complete, with the possible exception noted."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 700w

CHANNING, EDWARD. Students' history of the United States. 3d rev ed il $1.40 Macmillan 13-22480

This edition has been thoroly revised and brought down to date. The portion dealing with our history since the civil war has been wholly rewritten. Space in the final chapter is given to discussions of woman suffrage, direct primaries, initiative and referendum, the commission plan of city government, etc.

A L A Bkl 10:167 D '13 *

"The style is interesting, and the publishers have given the volume a compact and convenient form. An occasional error is noticeable."

+ — Boston Transcript p15 D 5 '13 200w

"It is surely no mark of brotherhood or of fairness for a history published a half century after the war to be written in terms distinctly unacceptable to a large part of our now united nation."

+ — Chaut 72:382 Ja 10 '14 90w

"Some of the questions and topics seem to us very unhappily framed."

+ — Educ R 47:97 Ja '14 100w

"It is a marvel of true perspective, compactness and breadth of knowledge."

+ Ind 79:250 Ag 17 '14 50w

"It might well contain more social matter even at the expense of some contraction of the political part."

+ — Nation 98:549 My 7 '14 100w

CHAPIN, FRANCIS STUART. Introduction to the study of social evolution; the prehistoric period. il $2 Century 13-22828

"Into this book the author has collected the most generally accepted evidences and theory of social evolution, and stated them in popular language. There was no single elementary treatise which covered the ground which he has traversed in this volume. Hence the need of the book. He does not touch the matter of social evolution as it has gone on in the historic period; but confines himself to the prehistoric stages. The work is divided into two parts. In part one he examines the explanations that have been brought forward by naturalists for the origin of man's physical being. . . . The second part of the book, which is much the larger, sets forth the factors which have caused the growth and development of man's spiritual, mental, and moral nature."—Boston Transcript

"The style is generally simple and interesting, the pages are not overloaded with details, and the main lines of development are clearly set forth." Hutton Webster

+ Am Hist R 19:677 Ap '14 600w

CHAPIN, FRANCIS STUART—Continued.

"The chief weakness is a lack of coherence, and of a critical estimation of the various topics and their interrelation." A. B. Lewis

+ — Am J Soc 19:849 My '14 500w

"No other single elementary work covers the same field."

+ A L A Bkl 10:347 My '14

"The material is well selected and presented. The order is logical and scientific. We believe the author has done a real service not only in emphasizing the need for the constructive study of developing society but also in rendering the material for such study more available." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 52:242 Mr '14 330w

+ — Boston Transcript p24 N 19 '13 370w

"On the whole, the book is an attractive presentation of man's social progress from the beast that has just arrived at human level to man who begins to make history. Its accuracy is all that could be expected in a book dealing with such unsettled matters." E. R. D.

+ — El School T 14:244 Ja '14 470w

CHAPMAN, JOHN JAY, comp. Deutschland über alles; or, Germany speaks. *75c (3c) Putnam 14-22659

The author allows Germany to speak for herself, selecting a number of representative quotations from her statesmen, military leaders, scholars and poets, and adding to these some comment of his own. One of his aims in preparing the book was to preserve a portion of that body of ephemeral literature "without which the present epoch cannot be understood by posterity." His own contributions to the explanation of Germany's action is interesting. The mental state of Germany at the present time is a dual state brought about by race-madness and fear, fear that the fatherland will go under. Also, Germans of every class have been overworked and overtrained. Much about them that seems to us perverse is due to mental fatigue.

Nation 100:175 F 11 '15 130w

N Y Times 19:586 D 27 '14 30w

CHARLES, ROBERT HENRY. Religious development between the Old and the New Testaments. *50c (1c) Holt 14-18109

In this volume of the "Home university library" the author treats of religious development during the last two centuries B. C. Of this period, long looked upon as a "period of silence" in the production of religious literature, he says "we are now in a position to prove that these two centuries were in many respects centuries of greater spiritual progress than any two that had preceded them in Israel." Contents: Prophecy and apocalyptic; The kingdom of God in apocalyptic literature; The messiah in prophecy and apocalyptic; The rise and development in Israel of the doctrine of a blessed future life; Man's forgiveness of his neighbor; Reinterpretation and comprehension; The Old Testament apocrypha; The pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament.

+ A L A Bkl 11:150 D '14

"We were pleased to note that on some debatable points the author adopts a less dogmatic attitude than in his previous publications."

+ Ath 1914,2:304 S 26 300w

"Not often is 'multum in parvo' rendered so inviting as in this booklet."

+ Bib World 44:365 N '14 200w

Reviewed by E. S. Ames

+ Int J Ethics 25:274 Ja '15 250w

"The Canon of Westminster mars his well-informed little volume by setting forth his opinions upon current religious questions, particularly by his surprising advocacy of a reunion of church and state."

+ — Nation 99:611 N 19 '14 70w

+ N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 120w

CHARLES, ROBERT HENRY. Studies in the "Apocalypse." *$1.75 Scribner

"Dr. Charles has in preparation a commentary on the New Testament Book of Revelation, to which his lectures delivered before the University of London may be regarded as preliminary. . . . The first two deal with the history of interpretation of this enigmatical book, especially the views of scholars in the past forty years, during which period more progress has been made in sane criticism of the Apocalypse than in all preceding centuries. The three remaining chapters are a fresh and important contribution to the subject. In discussing 'The Hebraic style of the Apocalypse' Dr. Charles argues against the view represented in this country by Professor Moulton, according to which the book was written in a vernacular Greek, its solecisms being merely the blunders common to uneducated persons of its period."—Nation

Ath 1913,2:414 O 18 110w

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 7 '14 400w

"The mere reading of the volume would add materially to every clergyman's power to deal reasonably with a difficult Biblical book, the ignorant distortion of which has always worked, and is still working, incalculable harm."

+ Ind 80:172 N 2 '14 150w

+ Nation 99:354 S 17 '14 370w

+ — Spec 111:sup693 N 1 '13 400w

CHARLOTTE AMÉLIE, PRINCESS DE LA TREMOÏLLE; PRINCESS OF ALDENBURG. Autobiography of Charlotte Amélie, princess of Aldenburgh, née princess de la Tremoille, 1652-1732. il *$4 (3½c) McBride, Nast & co. A14-3044

Princess Charlotte began the writing of this autobiography in 1682, the year of the birth of her son, Count Anthony II of Aldenburg. It is addressed to her son, and is written in the fear that she may not live until he is old enough to understand the story of his father's death, of her own hardships, and of the plots to deprive him of his rightful inheritance. The story is continued up to the year 1720. The work is translated and edited by a descendant of the princess, Mrs. Aubrey Le Blond, who writes an introduction in which the story is told of the loss of the original manuscript and of its reappearance.

"A document whose unique value and charm are considerable." Graham Berry

+ Bookm 39:211 Ap '14 1150w

"This is the first complete translation, one that evidently reproduces the spirit as well as the letter of the original. We are given a new portrait, more vivid because of the unconsciousness of its drawings, that of a woman, high-minded, pure-hearted, unaffectedly religious; in the world, but unspotted of it; a womanly woman—incidentally a princess—whose sweet and strong character neither good nor evil fortune could impair."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 18 '14 750w

"A book which throws so much light on the life and manners of the time should have been published with a view to its use by historians, to whom it will provide valuable collateral reading. It lacks dates and chapter heads. The annotation is scant, and the index incomplete."

+ — Nation 99:440 O 8 '14 500w

N Y Times 19:323 Jl 26 '14 100w

CHASE, HENRY. Game protection and propagation in America: a handbook of practical information for officials and others interested in the cause of conservation of wild life. *$1.25 Lippincott 13-21349

This handbook covers "all important phases of a subject that is fortunately attracting more and more attention. The economic as well as the sentimental reasons for game conservation are stated, the necessity for education of the public opinion emphasized, the state, national, and international phases of the matter severally considered, the legal phases of property in game discussed, and many practical suggestions given on such subjects as the field-work of game-wardens, the restocking of game covers, the propagation of game fishes, and the fighting of forest fires. An appendix gives a model constitution and code of by-laws for the formation of game clubs, organized, of course, for purposes of conservation."—Nation

A L A Bkl 10:91 N '13 +

"A useful handbook."

+ Nation 99:167 Ag 6 '14 120w

"Officials and others who are interested in the organized effort that is being made for the conservation of wild life will find valuable information and practical advice. The author handles his subject in very thorough fashion."

+ N Y Times 19:320 Jl 19 '14 50w

R of Rs 50:253 Ag '14 90w

CHATER, MELVILLE. Bubble ballads. il $1.50
Century 14-17312

A book of poems that may be, not unfittingly, compared with those of the "Child's garden of verses," for they are written from the child's point of view and reflect the child's impressions of the life that goes on about him. The book is made up with full-page illustrations in black and white and marginal drawings.

CHATFIELD-TAYLOR, HOBART CHATFIELD.
Goldoni: a biography. il $4 Duffield 13-25912

This book is "a companion in its dress as well as in its quality of the same author's interesting 'Molière.' It is illustrated with many reproductions of paintings by Pietro and Alessandro Longhi, appropriate to the subject, and it includes not only a sympathetic story of the career of the Venetian dramatist but a complete catalogue of his plays and an analysis of every considerable work he wrote."—N Y Times

"An excellent, scholarly piece of work, well written, interestingly illustrated, and attractive in make-up."

+ A L A Bkl 10:218 F '14

"His book is easy reading, because its author has not only assimilated his materials, but also digested them." Brander Matthews

+ Bookm 38:544 Ja '14 1350w

"Altogether the book is a model of a literary biography and reflects the greatest credit on its author."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My '13 14 500w

"It is cause for gratification that in this case an American has forestalled English scholarship in producing a biography of the foremost Italian comic author which should find a place in every library." W. W. Comfort

+ Dial 56:138 F 16 '14 1800w

"The reviewer does not share all of Mr. Chatfield-Taylor's likings. The chapter on the Commedia dell'arte is distinctly inferior to the rest of the book. The general impression it conveys is fairly correct, but it is faulty in detail."

+ Nation 98:273 Mr 12 '14 2700w

"There is no more complete book about Goldoni in English, and it will likely be a long while before another biography is attempted."

+ N Y Times 18:740 D 14 '13 230w

"We have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Chatfield-Taylor's is the best general book, covering Goldoni's whole career, that is now available in any language." Kenneth McKenzie

+ Yale R n s 4:204 O '14 1250w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Romance of piracy. il $1.50 Lippincott A15-29

"Beginning with the Vikings, the author tells of the Turkish and Moorish corsairs, and relates in considerable detail some notable instances of English sailors who escaped after being made prisoners. Chapters are devoted to famous buccaniers and privateers such as Sir Henry Morgan, Capt. Kidd, and Paul Jones; and the pirates of the Persian Gulf, Borneo, and China are not overlooked."—Ath

+ Ath 1914,2:503 N 14 80w

"The style thruout is thoroly interesting."

+ Ind 80:340 N 30 '14 60w

"Very interesting."

+ N Y Times 19:480 N 1 '14 50w

"We can cordially recommend Mr. Chatterton's history of the celebrated pirates."

+ Sat R 118:sup14 D 5 '14 200w

"Told in Mr. Chatterton's most vivid style."

+ Spec 113:sup781 D 5 '14 50w

CHATTERTON, EDWARD KEBLE. Ships and ways of other days. il $4 Lippincott
(Eng ed A13-2412)

This book is a companion volume to two earlier books by the author, "Sailing ships and their story" and "Fore and aft." "In addition to the interesting text, there are 130 excellent illustrations, many diagrams and drawings of all sorts, all having important bearings upon the fascinating subject which Mr. Chatterton knows so well. He begins three thousand years ago with the primitive craft that sailed the Aegean sea and proceeds to show that men built, launched and equipped vessels in all ages." (Boston Transcript)

"Will be absorbing reading for every lover of the sea. Rather cumbersome to handle."

+ A L A Bkl 10:180 Ja '14

"The narrative makes absorbing reading, and is full of information of a varied and valuable nature."

+ Ath 1913,2:151 Ag 16 630w

"Surely no one who ships with Mr. Chatterton will care to go ashore until the last port is reached." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 14 '13 750w

"In his chosen field he writes with full knowledge and with experienced pen."

+ Dial 55:486 D 1 '13 130w

"Mr. Chatterton has written a very interesting and informing book, although he has at times been much too prolix in his manner of telling the story."

+ N Y Times 19:53 F 1 '14 580w

"Much that is not ordinarily understood by the general reader is explained, and the illustrations are not only often curious in themselves, but make clear the points touched on by the writer."

+ Sat R 116:212 Ag 16 '13 150w

CHAUCER, GEOFFREY. College Chaucer; ed.
by H: Noble MacCracken. $1.50 Yale univ.
press 13-22359

An edition of Chaucer that is inviting to the eye. "The editorial apparatus has been compressed within the smallest possible compass, while a glossary of greater than average fullness supplies the place of the usual notes. The appendix contains only such additional matter as the beginner absolutely needs before attempting to read Middle English." (Preface) The selections chosen are the Canterbury tales, with the Prologue, and a group of minor poems.

"Complete enough and the best edition for all ordinary purposes."

+ A L A Bkl 10:333 Ap '14

Dial 56:255 Mr 16 '14 50w

+ Nation 98:543 My 7 '14 120w

CHELEY, FRANK HOBART. Three Rivers
kids. il $1 (2c) West. Meth. bk. 14-8698

A story of a boys' camp with snap-shots taken in a real camp used as illustrations. The three Botting boys come into camp after it is well organized and under way. There is a welcome for Leonard the oldest, but the two younger brothers, twins, are looked upon as "kids" by the other campers, who are afraid the place is being turned into a nursery and that drop-the-handkerchief will begin to take the place of baseball. But the twins, tho small, are valiant, and they prove equal to all the tests to which they are put.

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CHELEY, FRANK HOBART. Told by the camp fire. (Boy life ser.) il *75c (1½c) Assn. press 14-9283

Seven stories, all told by the camp fire of boys' camps, make up the contents of this book. Jed, who tells the stories, seems to be just an older boy with a number of years of camp experience, and his tales are of the out-of-door world and of situations in which manliness is put to the test.

"There is no preaching in Jed's stories, but the boy who reads them will observe that he likes big things in nature and big qualities in boys. A wholesome book, that the real boy will like and his father as well." R. D. Moore
+ Pub W 87:78 Ja 16 '15 400w

CHENEY, SHELTON. New movement in the theatre. il *$2 (5c) Kennerley 15-2292

In writing of the new movement in the theatre the author takes into consideration both the new ideals of stage setting and the new manner of play writing. He gives attention on the one hand to Max Reinhardt and Gordon Craig, and on the other to Galsworthy and Brieux. The essays, all but three of which have been published as magazine articles, are: The new movement in the theatre; The æsthetic theatre movement; The new English dramatists; The American playwright and the drama of sincerity; The new stage-craft; The failure of the American producer; The real progress of the American theatre; Some thoughts on theatre architecture; On applause in the theatre; A new theory of the theatre; Gordon Craig's service to the theatre. There are interesting illustrations showing types of stage settings.

"The book cannot help forwarding the good cause."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 13 '15 400w

"The authority of Mr. Cheney's otherwise excellent book is impaired by repetition and careless expression." Grant Showerman

+ Dial 58:76 F 1 '15 730w

"The volume serves excellently to give student or general reader a glimpse of the 'high-lights' of literary history, and contains a valuable selected bibliography of periodical literature."

+ Ind 81:254 F 15 '15 100w

"His point of view is at least fresh and his convictions sincere. Some confusion results in this mingling of the two aspects of the modern theater—æsthetic and intensive—in a single book of a dozen fairly independent essay-chapters."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 350w

CHESTER, GEORGE RANDOLPH. Cordelia Blossom. il *$1.35 (1½c) Hearst's int. lib. 14-7689

A story in which social politics as practiced by women are shown to be superior to politics as practiced by men. Cordelia Blossom is a woman with "influence." She begins her public career as president of a "City beautiful" association, and proceeds by purely feminine tactics to make her husband successively mayor, governor, and senator from his state.

+ Ath 1914,2:562 N 28 200w

"While not taking her at all seriously, we are frankly reluctant, when the time comes, to bid good-by to Cordelia Blossom." Norman Bryce
+ Bookm 39:685 Ag '14 220w

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 17 '14 350w

"The book expresses a cheap and vulgar attitude toward life in an appropriate style. Two or three of the characters, however, and notably the old colonel, are vigorously sketched."

+ Nation 98:728 Je 18 '14 190w

+ N Y Times 19:238 My 17 '14 270w

"Readers need anticipate no dull moments in this, the best Chester tale that has appeared in a long time."

+ Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 300w

CHESTER, GEORGE RANDOLPH. Tale of red roses. *50c (½c) Bobbs 14-17983

Ben Sledge, Mr. Chester's hero, is a middle-aged big-business man who knows exactly what he wants and gets it, whether his end be financial, political or matrimonial. When he falls in love with Molly Marley, the young daughter of one of his business associates, he sets out at once to win her, beginning his siege "with the same care and vigor that he would have exercised in conducting a most important political campaign." His gifts to her take the form of roses by the wagon-load, and by virtue of either his prodigality or his determination he wins her.

— Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '14 430w

"The tale has something of Mr. Chester's old-time dashing good humor, but it lacks much in the plausibility and the human nature that formerly marked his stories."

+ — N Y Times 19:475 N 1 '14 250w

CHESTER, GEORGE RANDOLPH, and CHESTER, LILLIAN. Ball of fire. il *$1.35 Hearst's int. lib. 14-16916

"It is a long step from the Wallfording and other early novels of George Randolph Chester to this story of a New York rector and his church. . . . The Market square church has a prominent place in the foreground all through the story. It is an old and famous New York city church, possessing among other properties a certain Vedder court, which, although the church is its landlord, is a noisome hole, a nest of filth and poverty and vice. The rector, young, handsome, and gifted, wants to build a $50,000,000 cathedral and the vestry is considering the proposition of selling Vedder court to raise the necessary money. . . . Through all the complications and the turmoil a young woman from the west, niece of a New York business man prominent in the Market street church, wends her way, one of the most disturbing factors in the whole affair. She has much more intelligence than is usually accorded to fiction heroines by their creators; she has thought much about religion and the morals, or immorals, of business and she is able to voice her ideas with force and efficiency."—N Y Times

"The book is the best one Mr. Chester has written."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 21 '14 350w

N Y Times 19:447 O 18 '14 350w

"The story pursues a lengthy course and shows in many places the unsatisfactory effect of joint authorship."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 5 '14 450w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Flying inn. 2 *$1.30 Lane 14-2211

"The story, which is described as 'a farcical romance,' concerns the adventures of one Captain Patrick Dalroy, an Irishman of superhuman strength and courage, who, after various exploits in the eastern Mediterranean, where he has figured as the King of Ithaca, returns to England to find the country had been conquered by the Turk. He arrives just as his old friend, Humphrey Pump, the last innkeeper in England, is on the point of eviction. For the Moslem doctrine of abstinence from wine was in force. . . . Dalroy uproots the sign of the Old Ship, and bearing with him a keg of rum and a huge cheese sallies forth with Pump, with a view to defying authority in general and Lord Ivywood, the main upholder of the new order of things, in particular. The greater part of the book is taken up with accounts of how Dalroy and Pump appear in unexpected places, and, planting their sign in the ground, proceed to administer rum and cheese to a delighted populace."—Sat R

"Admirable fooling but not needed in most small collections."

+ A L A Bk 10:286 Mr '14

"The book runs to only 300 pages, and half as many would have contained all that is worth remembering, though that better half is really memorable."

+ Ath 1914,1:130 Ja 24 850w

"Delicious diatribe."

+ Atlan 114:525 O '14 420w

"There is much admirable fooling in the 'Flying inn,' and much human and divine wisdom; but of this last there is nothing that Mr. Chesterton has not already told us." Brian Hooker

+ — Bookm 39:87 Mr '14 1500w

"Those who will take the book in the spirit in which it is written will find in it much capital fooling, compounded of wit, humor, and shrewd wisdom 'set forth with an irresistible zest in the telling.'" R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 21 '14 1200w

"Chesterton is at his best in this tale of wild and rollicking humor."

+ Cath World 99:834 S '14 90w

"Chesterton really seems uncertain that he aimed to write a prose novel at all, for the book is plentifully interspersed with verses, serious, comic, ironical, militant, in good meter and in bad, till the novel takes on the not unpleasant appearance of a Chesterton anthology of songs."

+ — Ind 77:169 D 2 '14 280w

+ Lit D 48:625 Mr 21 '14 220w

"There is an astonishing deal of rollicking good stuff in the book, wit, satire, drollery, philosophy, and an amazing trick of character-drawing in a style that mingles realism, the fantastic, even the passionate and fanatic."

+ Nation 98:185 F 19 '14 900w

"The book tells the triumph of the simple, the honest, the human and natural over the whole mad futurism that has threatened to engulf England. It is all a great, grim lark. It's Mr. Chesterton at his amazing best." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:29 Ja 25 '14 1200w

"Although the book is marked by a strong desire to make fun, it betrays some indecision as to what actually is to be made fun of. It is as if he had got himself into high spirits in a great hurry and without finding a suitable object on which to let them go. The nonsense rhymes are the best part of it." F. M. Colby

+ — No Am 199:459 Mr '14 2500w

"Mr. Chesterton has never written a more piquant, whimsical tale."

+ R of Rs 49:372 Mr '14 370w

"Mr. Chesterton knows that he is expected, to be unexpected, and so he is unexpected on almost every page. But the result is deplorable. When everything is grotesque nothing is grotesque, and even situations which have in them the elements of genuine fun cease to be amusing when they are so obviously expected to be."

— Sat R 117:117 Ja 24 '14 750w

+ Spec 112:708 Ap 25 '14 200w

CHESTERTON, GILBERT KEITH. Magic: a fantastic comedy. il *$1 Putnam 13-25909

This is Mr. Chesterton's first play. It "is intended as a defense of the unfashionable doctrine of the permanent possibility of miracles and of the still less fashionable belief in the real existence of the devil and his angels. The center of the plot is a conjurer who has the power of black magic which he uses to disconcert a blatant young Irish-American who has a fixed idea that all the miracles in the Bible were only conjuring tricks." (Ind)

A L A Bkl 11:19 S '14

"It is quite good enough to hold and reward the attention of an audience by purely dramatic means." Brian Hooker

+ Bookm 38:546 Ja '14 1300w

Ind 77:105 Ja 19 '14 270w

"The framework of the plot is fresh and ingenious and the dialogue full of point and sparkle. The arguments, pro and con, if containing nothing new, are exceedingly well put. Mr. Chesterton evidently found himself confronted with a dramatic crux, of his own invention, beyond his ingenuity to solve."

+ — Nation 97:624 D 25 '13 500w

CHEYNEY, EDWARD G., and WENTLING, JOHN P. Farm woodlot. il *$1.50 (2c) Macmillan 14-11515

A handbook of forestry for the farmer and the student in agriculture, uniform with the "Rural science series." Its purpose is "to aid the farmer in the establishment, care, and utilization of such small patches or plantations of timber as may be maintained in connection with the farm." It is in a brief and popular style, yet offers full information and describes accurately the actual operations necessary to conduct these timbered portions. Preliminary chapters are devoted to the history and significance of forests with the idea of providing a background for the specific data furnished.

"In attempting to cover the whole field the authors have not been able to go into much detail in the several branches, and have fallen into the error of slighting some subjects and overdoing others. In general, though, the book is a good one for use with general readers or students."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:59 O '14 +

"If every farmer in the land could have the knowledge which this book gives and would apply it to the best of his ability, this world would soon be a very different place to live in."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 150w

+ Ind 79:136 Jl 27 '14 80w

+ Nation 99:330 S 10 '14 300w

"This is an excellent handbook of elementary forestry."

+ Nature 94:88 S 24 '14 200w

"Farmers who are responsible for the care and use of small patches of timber can receive substantial aid from the volume."

+ R of Rs 50:253 Ag '14 90w

"As a technical handbook for practical use it is full of information of the right kind, and the general reader might do worse than skim its pages for a superficial knowledge of such facts of forestry as every citizen ought to know. The last few pages are devoted to tables and rules, in which the proofreader has not always been alert."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Jl 30 '14 270w

CHEYNEY, EDWARD POTTS. History of England, from the defeat of the Armada to the death of Elizabeth. 2v v 1 *$3.50 Longmans 14-2959

v 1 "These fifteen closing years of Elizabeth's reign have received comparatively little attention from historians, yet to the student of the exploration era in American history those years were crowded with incidents of great interest. Professor Cheyney gives much space to his account of the search for the Northwest passage and the discoveries of Newfoundland and Virginia. Only the first volume of his work has yet appeared. In the second volume we are promised an account of English institutions during the later sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries."—R of Rs

"American historical scholarship has every reason to be proud of Professor Cheyney's work, which bids fair to remain for a long time the standard book on the period with which it deals." R. B. Merriman

+ — Am Hist R 19:883 Jl '14 1300w (Review of v 1)

+ A L A Bkl 10:386 Je '14 (Review of v 1)

"The book is worthy of a high place in English historical literature." W. E. Lunt

+ Ann Am Acad 56:178 N '14 650w (Review of v 1)

"Professor Cheyney's style is flowing and attractive, his selection of his materials judicious, and his history when completed will be a distinct addition to the story of English history." E. J. C.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 950w (Review of v 1)

+ Ind 77:387 Mr 16 '14 90w (Review of v 1)

CHEYNEY, EDWARD POTTS—Continued.

"He is too modest to say that it will fill the gap which has long existed between the histories of Froude and Gardiner. Yet this is essentially what it does, and it does it successfully so far as we can judge by the first volume."

+ Nation 99:381 S 24 '14 1100w (Review of v 1)

Reviewed by Joseph Jacobs

+ N Y Times 19:309 J1 12 '14 650w (Review of v 1)

+ R of Rs 49:507 Ap '14 150w (Review of v 1)

"Professor Cheyney knows his subject thoroughly, and he treats it with system and method."

+ Spec 113:531 O 17 '14 750w (Review of v 1)

CHILD, CLEMENT DEXTER. Electric arcs. il
* $2 Van Nostrand 13-9137

"In this book Prof. Child makes a full and clear exposition of what has been learned through experiments upon arcs between different electrodes in various environments. The author gives especial attention to the experimentation subsequent to that covered in a book by Mrs. Hertha Ayrton, called 'The electric arc,' which was published in 1898."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 10:180 Ja '14

+ Elec World 62:99 J1 12 '13 120w

"A rather useful book."

+ Nation 97:236 S 11 '13 40w

+ N Y Times 18:454 Ag 31 '13 60w

CHILD, MRS. GEORGIE BOYNTON. Efficient kitchen; definite directions for the planning, arranging and equipping of the modern labor-saving kitchen—a practical book for the home-maker; ed. and arr. by Louise Boynton. il. *$1.25 (2c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-5486

The first principle enunciated by the author is this: Do not try to do efficient work in an inefficient house. First transform your conditions. The subject of her book, then, is the transformation of the old-fashioned kitchen into a modern scientific work-shop. Some of the chapters consider: Planning the kitchen; Built-in conveniences; Choice of fuel for cooking; Lists of necessary equipment; Time and labor-saving equipment; Dish-washing and daily care of the kitchen; The laundry problem; The business side of the kitchen.

+ A L A Bkl 10:386 Je '14 *

+ Ind 78:106 Ap 13 '14 40w

"Special attention should be called to the section on cooking by steam. Were it only for the timely hints regarding this labor-saving process, Miss Child's book ought to be in the hands of every progressive housewife."

+ Nation 98:610 My 21 '14 330w

+ N Y Times 19:92 F 22 '14 80w

+ N Y Times 19:328 J1 26 '14 70w

CHISHOLM, ADAM STUART MUIR. Recreations of a physician. *$2 (2c) Putnam 14-15199

A collection of essays by a man who has avoided the narrowing influences of specialization in his profession by the pursuit of cultural interests outside it. His tastes, like those of other physicians, Sir Thomas Browne, Oliver Wendell Holmes, and S. Weir Mitchell, have led him to literature. He writes on: Specialization; Physicians as men of letters; Banquo; The symbolism of names; Royal authors; The inherent spirit of medicine; On some translations of Horace; Some features of the science of medicine in the seventeenth century; The picaro in fiction; On the prevention of disease.

"These studies (for they are rather studies than essays in anything like the Elian sense) show their author to be a man of varied interest and scholarly tastes."

+ — Dial 57:258 O 1 '14 480w

"Scholarly and entertaining essays."

+ N Y Times 19:546 N 29 '14 140w

CHRISTIE, DUGALD. Thirty years in the Manchou capital; in and around Moukden in peace and war; ed. by his wife. il *$2.75 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. SD14-1

Dr. Christie went out to Manchuria as a medical missionary in 1882, and in the thirty year period of his service there he has seen the awakening of a nation from its age-long slumber and has lived thru famine and pestilence and war. The Chino-Japanese war, the Boxer uprising, the Russo-Japanese conflict (he was in Moukden during the battle), and the recent revolution are incidents in the course of his narrative, but he says of the book that it is neither a history nor a biography; it "only attempts to deal with personal impressions, and to give a picture of life amid the changeless East of the olden days, and amid the rapid march of events which have brought us to the changed East of to-day."

"It is readable and interesting all through, and tells a wonderful story of progress in Christian medical work in a land which the fortunes of the last twenty years have made notorious in more than one respect."

+ Ath 1914,2:225 Ag 29 1350w

"Dr. Christie's many adventures have given him material for thirty chapters of interesting sketches of men, places and things in and around Moukden that are either new to American readers or presented from a new viewpoint." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 950w

"A work of unusual merit." O. D. Wannamaker

+ Dial 58:20 Ja 1 '15 140w

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 90w

+ Sat R 117:711 My 30 '14 400w

"As a transcription of events that the whole world paused to notice, in most cases with anxiety, Dr. Christie's recollections are distinctly worth while for their presentation of details in those events which, in the mass, are of genuine historical importance."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 780w

CHRISTIE, WILLIAM WALLACE. Water; its purification and use in the industries. il *$2 Van Nostrand 13-1226

"This book deals largely with the purification of water for industrial purposes. Some parts of it, however, are devoted to purification of water for domestic purposes and to other general water-supply questions. . . . About half of the book is devoted to water softening, describing various methods in use and going into some detail as to the apparatus involved. One chapter is devoted to definitions of various terms used in water analysis and of the impurities contained in water. Three chapters deal with filtration, ozone treatment, sterilization and other subjects relating to the general question of water supply. Other chapters take up the matter of oil filters, boiler water and the measurement of water."—Engin Rec

+ A L A Bkl 9:422 Je '13

"It is an interesting compilation of various commercial methods that are now available. In some respects the book is quite unsatisfactory and the reviewer would not be doing his duty if he failed to point out some of the defects. The most unsatisfactory chapter in the book is the first one, which treats of the impurities found in water." G. C. Whipple

+ — Engin N 69:545 Mr 13 '13 370w

"Many of the conclusions drawn are not in accord with the best practice among water-works engineers. The book gives evidence of carelessness in compiling. Many subjects are taken up which are treated in a superficial manner." W. E. Fuller

— Engin Rec 68:588 N 22 '13 220w

"It is to be commended more particularly for its treatment of the use of water in various branches of industry. Indeed, the treatment of the sources of water, its analysis and standards of purity, is fragmentary and unsatisfactory."

+ -- Nature 13:133 Ap 9 14 200w

CHRISTMAS, WALTER. King George of Greece. il *$4 (1c) McBride, Nast & co. SD14-8

When the author was a boy of fourteen, serving as a cadet in the Danish navy, he was invited with a boy friend to visit at the Royal palace in Athens. The pleasant incidents of this visit, when the two young Danish lads roller skated about the palace with the little princes and the princess, are related in the first chapter. Following this comes the story of King George's reign from the time of the election of the young northern prince to the throne of Greece to the time of his death. During this period Captain Christmas made frequent visits to Greece on naval duty, and he served as a volunteer in the war with Turkey. Fully half of the book is given up to a discussion of the war and the Balkan situation generally.

+ Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 60w

"A vivid portrait of the monarch as he appeared in Greece."

+ Outlook 109:106 Ja 13 '15 120w

CHUBB, EDWIN WATTS. Masters of English literature. *$1.50 (1c) McClurg 14-20269

The author has chosen twenty of the masters of English literature for treatment in this book, believing "that it is better to dwell upon the few great names than to hasten over the many." An introductory chapter gives a brief summary of the periods of English literature; then come chapters devoted to the following: Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden, Swift, Pope, Johnson, Burns, Byron, Shelley, Keats, Wordsworth, Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, Carlyle, Ruskin, Tennyson and Browning.

"We fear that Professor Chubb's book will be read more as a stimulus to opposition than as a guide along the strait and narrow path of literary approval." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p8 Ja 16 '15 1250w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER. Continental 7 drama. of to-day: outlines for its study. *$1.35 (2c) Holt 14-11003

A compact manual of suggestions, questions, biographies and bibliographies for use in connection with the study of the more important plays of Ibsen, Björnson, Strindberg, Tolstoy, Gorky, Tchekoff, Andrejeff, Hauptmann, Sudermann, Wedekind, Schnitzler, Von Hoffmannsthal, Becque, Maeterlinck, Rostand, Brieux, Hervieu, Giacosa, Donnay, Lemaître, Lavedan, D'Annunzio, Echegaray and Galdós. The author in a few preliminary paragraphs for each play analyzes it, reveals the purpose of the dramatist in writing it, and calls attention to the dramatic effects. The conciseness of this work recommends it to clubs and colleges also to the general reader who wishes to broaden out in dramatic study and interpretation.

"A close, concise and very intelligent study of the subject from the construction side."

+ A L A Bkl 11:19 S '14 +

+ Cath World 100:692 F '15 150w

"This is a useful book which Mr. Clark has put together with great patience, care, and industry. It will prove valuable to the student as a brief reference-bibliography; to the club member who is following a course in the modern drama it will prove invaluable. One cannot restrain a sense of mild amusement, from time to time, however, over the little sketches of the dramatists—especially those obviously manufactured from secondary sources."

+ — Dial 57:392 N 16 '14 460w

N Y Times 19:306 J1 12 '14 450w

CLARK, BARRETT HARPER, tr. Four plays of the Free theater; with a preface by Brieux. *$1.50 (3c) Stewart & Kidd 14-21621

In an introduction on Antoine and the Free theater, Mr. Clark says: "The 'Free theater' was to the French drama of the past quarter century what the reformation was to Christianity;

André Antoine was its Martin Luther." He tells the story of the founding of the Théâtre libre and writes of its influence on the art of acting and on dramatic art generally. Then comes his translation of four of the plays from its repertoire. They are: The fossils, by François de Curel; The serenade, by Jean Jullien; Françoise's luck, by Georges de Porto-Riche; and The dupe, by Georges Ancey.

"Mr. Clark has prepared a lengthy introduction to the volume, which is a gem of condensed information."

+ R of Rs 51:246 F '15 600w

Springfield Republican p5 Ja 21 '15 130w

CLARK, CHARLES HEBER (MAX ADELER, pseud.). By the bend of the river: tales of Connock old and new. il *$1.20 (1½c) Winston 14-17807

A group of humorous—some of them farcical—stories. The author is fond of incongruities and finds them either in the personal peculiarities of his characters—as in the case of the prim old lady who wanted to go over Niagara in a barrel—or the contrasts between manners and customs of different generations. In one of the stories a Pennsylvania professor and his daughter are ship-wrecked on an island on which the civilization of King Arthur's days still prevails; in another a grandfather who looks back longingly to the good old times is transported to those happy days of candles and open fireplaces and frozen water pitchers. In other stories supernatural and hypnotic influences are introduced.

"The writer has called this a group of 'frivolous' stories. They are scarcely more—extravagant, absurd, often funny, frequently illuminating, yet deserving, on the whole, the book form which gives permanence to eleven stories written at various times during the author's long life."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 14 '14 300w

CLARK, FRANCIS EDWARD. Holy land of Asia Minor; the seven cities of the book of Revelation; their present appearance, their history, their significance, and their message to the church of to-day. il *$1 Scribner 14-13887

"Dr. Clark has embodied in this volume his impressions of the cities of western Asia Minor, gathered in a journey made among them in 1912. A running homiletical comment on the letters to the seven churches in Rev., chaps. 1-3, is interwoven with these impressions."—Bib World

"Dr. Clark writes informally and agreeably. At some points his statements occasion wonder."

+ Bib World 44:429 D '14 100w

"It is quite within traditional lines. A few sentences here and there are amusing, as claiming continuity for protestantism with these ancient churches, but the whole is reverent in treatment."

+ — Cath World 100:267 N '14 110w

"A good book on a region about which little has been written."

+ Cleveland 6:88 O '14 40w

N Y Times 19:407 S 27 '14 80w

CLARK, FRANCIS EDWARD, and CLARK, SYDNEY AYLMEY. Charm of Scandinavia. il *$2.50 (3c) Little 14-13589

In writing this travel book the two authors entered on a task of friendly rivalry, one of them upholding the charms of Norway and Denmark, the other declaring for the superior attractions of Sweden and Finland. Their impressions of the countries of their choice were sent home in the form of letters to one Judicia who was to act as judge. No decision is given and the reader is left free to decide for himself, if any decision is needed where attractions so many and varied can be offered on both sides. Many well selected illustrations add to the book's beauty, and an index to its usefulness.

"It will serve those who want an abundance of guidebook information readably presented."

+ A L A Bkl 11:114 N '14

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CLARK, F. E. and S. A.—Continued.

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin
+ Bookm 40:422 D '14 480w

"The style of the narrative is in admirable concord with its pleasing plan."

+ — Dial 57:458 D 1 '14 250w

+ Ind 50:413 D 14 '14 100w

+ — Lit D 50:156 Ja 23 '15 250w

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 100w

R of Rs 50:757 D '14 60w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 28 '15 430w

"Not noteworthy in any way, but very pleasant reading for those who have a special interest in the country."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:304 D '14 40w

CLARK, GEORGE LARKIN. History of Connecticut; its people and institutions. il *$3.50 (2c) Putnam 14-10888

An interesting narrative of the development of Connecticut from the earliest times to the present. Political history is given due space, as is the brilliant record of the state in time of war, but other activities are given equal attention, and there are interesting chapters devoted to: Education; The colleges; Philanthropic institutions; Literature; Art; Music; Agriculture, etc., with a final chapter on The old Connecticut and the new.

+ A L A Bk 11:69 O '14

+ Dial 57:261 O 1 '14 60w

"Few local chronicles read as interestingly as 'A history of Connecticut.'"

+ Ind 78:566 Je 29 '14 70w

"His book is clearly thought out, and presented with a charm of style and an appreciation of the humors of his forebears that make it thoroughly readable."

+ Nation 99:353 S 17 '14 250w

"A comprehensive, authoritative and admirably constructed account."

+ N Y Times 19:393 S 20 '14 70w

"He has done his work well and produced a history that is creditable not merely in its careful assembling of facts, but in that mature and philosophical comment upon them without which history is little more interesting and little more valuable than the out-dated records of a cash register."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 27 '14 600w

CLARK, HARRIET PICKERT. Royal auction book up-to-date; including nullos. *60c (3c) Dodd 14-4506

A hundred and fifty-six page manual of concise, condensed auction bridge information. Its brevity and clearness will appeal to readers who want to get hold of the principles of the game quickly.

"The concise good sense of this guide to good playing makes it a welcome addition to the many publications on the subject."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Mr 4 '14 100w

CLARK, JOHN BATES. Social justice without socialism. (Barbara Weinstock lectures on the morals of trade) *50c (7½c) Houghton 14-9126

A suggestive essay discussing social and economic reform that can be brought about by non-socialistic methods. In order to have the government's full power exerted for the people the author's program of reform includes the initiative, the referendum, the recall, the short ballot, direct primaries and proportional representation. He advocates the shortening of the working day, more measures for safeguarding employees, strengthening of sanitary regulation and pure food laws, prohibition of child labor, the regulation of monopoly, change in the mode of adjusting wages, the revision of the protective tariff and the reform of the banking and currency system.

"Stimulating lecture."

+ Ann Am Acad 55:277 S '14 150w

"A brilliant plea."

+ Ind 78:454 Je 8 '14 18w

"A succinct statement of the creed and program of the agglutinative reformers."

+ Ind 78:493 Je 15 '14 60w

J Pol Econ 22:715 Jl '14 250w

CLARK, KEITH. Spell of Spain. il *$2.50 (2½c) Page 14-20659

The two travelers who took the journey described in this book were truly under the spell of Spain. Only one name appears on the title page, but the "Doña" of the narrative should be given some credit as a collaborator for her point of view and her spicy comments on things seen add much to the book's charm. The book is provided with attractive illustrations, a folding map and an index.

"If we may hazard a pun of our own, the orthography of foreign words is not all that might be expected of 'The spell series.'"

— Nation 99:751 D 24 '14 350w

"The author has a happy knack of observation and description, and comments in readable fashion on what he sees."

+ Outlook 108:347 D 9 '14 40w

CLARKE, CHARLES, and GILBERT, MOT-TRAM. Common-sense golf. il *75c (3c) McBride, Nagt & co.

The authors say that "this book is not intended for the benefit of the advanced golfer, and the finer points of the game receive but little notice. After all the second division men are in a large majority in most golf clubs, and it is to them—and especially to those who find themselves unprogressive—that we are making an attempt to lend a helping hand." (Preface) An introductory chapter is followed by two devoted to the "full swing," and then come chapters on: The use of the driver and the brassie; The cleveland and the iron; Approaching with the mashie and the niblock; Recovery work with the mashie and the niblick; On the green; As to the cure for hook and slice; Clubs and shots for courses; Miscellaneous hints.

CLARKE, ISABEL CONSTANCE. By the blue river. *$1.35 (1c) Benziger 13-22814

The blue river is in Algeria, where the scene of the greater part of this story is laid. Frances Amory, after her husband, a defaulting financier, has evaded arrest and trial and has disappeared, returns with her little son to North Africa where her childhood had been spent and where she owns an estate. The boy, David, is a quiet, meditative little fellow deeply religious, and much of the story is concerned with his spiritual development. Aside from this, interest centers in the mother's love story. She comes to Africa believing herself still devoted to the husband who had deceived her. Every night she keeps a light burning ready for his return, yet when at last she hears that he is really on his way to her, she awakens to a realization of her love for another, loyal Jean de Vernay who manages her estates. Circumstances prevent the husband's return, and later the story comes to a quiet, happy ending.

"The author writes with some skill of the French colony, and the heroine's love-story, if a little long, is not without charm; while an extra interest is provided by her little son and his adventure with Arabs."

+ Ath 1913,1:307 Mr 15 70w

"We heartily recommend the book to those seeking a good interesting novel."

+ Cath World 98:830 Mr '14 140w

CLAUDEL, PAUL. East I know. *$1.25 Yale univ. press 14-22601

"Essayist, dramatist, poet, religious mystic, serving France in consular offices thruout the East, Paul Claudel wrote for twenty years unknown except to a handful of French literary artists. 'The East I know,' translated by Teresa Frances and William Rose Benét, the first of his work to appear in English, is a collection of delicately phrased sketches, moods set to words, cameos cut from Oriental landscapes, half-mystic reflections on life and death."—Ind

+ Dial 58:71 F 1 '15 400w

+ Ind 81:139 Ja 25 '15 70w

"In his wanderings through town and countryside the poet has absorbed and assimilated this East, and converted all these unrelated impressions into the color and contour of his own mystic soul. But always there is the sense that his own soul is much more real than the things he mirrors."

+ New Republic 1:26 D 19 '14 800w

"It is unfortunate that to M. Claudel's sensitiveness to the grotesque is not linked an awareness of the incongruous. This would give the touch of humor without which these careful descriptions become in time a little oppressive."

+ N Y Times 20:35 Ja 31 '15 1250w

"In the less than 200 small pages we get necessarily but a sample of Claudel, though a fascinating one which leaves an eagerness for more. Most concisely described the brief sketches which form the book are prose poems, almost, if not quite entirely descriptive of scenes in the East. These descriptions, however, are distinctive not merely because of their vividness and beauty, but because they are instinct with a rich philosophy. In the simplicity of their literary manner they are not a little suggestive of the prose poems of Tagore."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 1500w

CLAUDY, CARL HARRY. Tell-me-why stories "about animals. il $1.25 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-17661

A group of stories about animals told by a father in answer to the questions of his little son. There are stories about the wolf, the beaver, the cat, the horse, and so on, and in many of them the taming and domestication of the wild animal is the theme.

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:445 D '14 130w

Nation 99:695 D 10 '14 50w

+ School Arts Magazine 14:443 F '15 40w

CLEMENTS, FREDERIC EDWARD, and CLEMENTS, EDITH SCHWARTZ. Rocky mountain flowers; an illustrated guide for plant-lovers and plant-users. il $3 (3¼c) Wilson, H. W. 14-10964

A description of Rocky mountain flowers grouped by families. The authors say of the book that it is "an endeavor to present the materials for the Rocky mountain flora in preliminary form from the standpoint of the experimental ecologist, [who is] concerned primarily with the relationships of 'species' and their subdivisions as an organic expression or measure of habitat differences, and of the competitive relations of the various formations." (Preface) The book is illustrated with forty-seven plates, twenty-five of them in color. It is provided with a glossary and an index.

"Tourists in the Rocky mountains have waited long for such a book as this, and we hazard the guess that it will be eagerly accepted by them as the manual which will enable them to recognize and name the flowers they find on the high plains and in the mountain canyons. But aside from tourists and other summer residents of the Rocky mountains there is a still larger class of people who will welcome this attractive book. We cannot imagine a better book for the high school libraries of the west, or for that matter for the libraries of the western colleges and universities. The authors are to be congratulated upon the successful completion of this notable work." C: E. Bessey

+ Science n s 39:909 Je 19 '14 680w

CLERK, DUGALD, and BURLS, G. A. Gas, petrol, and oil engine. v 2 new rev ed il $7.50 Wiley (10-443)

v 2 Gas, petrol and oil engine in practice. "This treatise is divided into twelve chapters, which take up in considerable detail the various items of importance in large and small engines of different types, including, for illustration, discussions of ignition systems, speed regulation, methods of governing, composition and behavior of fuels, vaporizers, tests, possibilities, etc." (Engin Rec) Volume 1 was published in 1909.

A L A Bkl 10:167 D '13

"Notwithstanding the above minor criticisms with reference to scope, arrangement and treatment, the book represents an enormous amount of labor in collection and compilation; and it will continue to rank as a standard work on internal combustion engines."

+ Engin N 69:811 Ap 17 '13 600w

"Volume 2 is in all respects the broader treatment and is without doubt a valuable asset in a library of reference."

+ Engin Rec 67:562 My 17 '13 430w

"For the book as a whole we have only praise."

+ Nature 91:210 My 1 '13 820w

CLEVELAND, FREDERICK ALBERT. Organized democracy. (Am. citizen ser.) $2.50 Longmans 13-17147

"This book is in part a revision of an earlier and less pretentious study entitled 'The growth of democracy in the United States'; but a large amount of additional material has been introduced, and the entire subject has been treated with new vigor and, perhaps it may also be said, with new vision." (Pol Sci Q) "The first part traces the evolution of the various types of democracy which had their manifestation in the American colonies and in the beginnings of our constitutional forms. In the remainder of the work the author analyzes and describes the provisions adopted for making citizenship effective." (R of Rs)

"The volume is remarkable for its historical perspective, its keen analysis, its utter freedom from cant and dogma, and the sanity and common-sense which characterize it throughout. While the statements of fact contain occasional errors, there are few conclusions which one can oppose with scientific evidence. It is unfortunate, however, that the bibliography, which is given considerable prominence in the volume, is several years out of date." A. B. Hall

+ Am J Soc 19:681 Mr '14 1000w

+ A L A Bkl 10:135 D '13 +

Reviewed by J. M. Mathews

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:307 My '14 630w

Reviewed by C. L. King

+ Ann Am Acad 53:320 My '14 420w

"The book suffers somewhat from a certain positiveness of thought and expression, but it should not be overlooked."

+ Educ R 47:423 Ap '14 80w

"As a clue to the maze of our politics it may be doubted whether any other has been produced with a wider appeal, or with less ground for reasonable opposition."

+ N Y Times 18:433 Ag 17 '13 1450w

"It is both historical and theoretical, and bears on its face, and in the very elaborate bibliographies which accompany it, the evidence of thorough scholarship and also of original thinking. It is a book which should find its place in the library of the political editor."

+ Outlook 105:859 D 20 '13 60w

"One can but regret that a book which contains here and there so much of real interest and of value, shows evidence of so little judgment in respect to arrangement and sequence of topics and devotes so many pages to commonplace discussion of comparatively unrelated matters with which any fairly well-informed reader is already familiar." H. L. McBain

+ Pol Sci Q 28:655 D '13 1300w

+ R of Rs 49:123 Ja '14 140w

"The summaries are very good, the chapter references well chosen and the index full, making it a useful reference work."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:86 Ap '14 50w

CLODD, EDWARD. Childhood of the world: a simple account of man's origin and early history. il *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 14-6816

A revised and expanded edition of a brief story of primitive man written forty years ago. It tells the story of man's origin from lower forms of animal life, of his early wanderings, of his first wants and the tools and weapons he invented to supply them, so leading up to the stage of "Man the worker." Under the general heading "Man the thinker" the author traces the beginnings of intellectual development that were apparent in man's beginning to think of the world about him and the sky above him, and to shape his ideas and ask questions about them. Finally, the stage of "man the discoverer and inventor" is reached showing the application of civilized man's thought to the world's activities.

A L A Bkl 10:421 Je '14

Boston Transcript p8 Ap 18 '14 250w

+ Dial 56:507 Je 16 '14 250w

"The present revision of the book is, on the whole, satisfactory. On the whole, this veteran anthropologist is to be congratulated on a book which, in its revised form, is certain to secure a new lease of popularity."

+ — Nature 93:426 Je 25 '14 330w

"Writing in a simple and attractive literary style, amply illustrating his story, and not omitting to point the moral of thoughts and acts that shape life for good or evil, Mr. Clodd has produced an admirable book."

+ Outlook 107:213 My 23 '14 150w

"Practically the only elementary book on the subject; for older children and adults."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:192 Jl '14 30w

CLOUGH, JOHN EVERETT. Social Christianity in the Orient. il *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 14-17889

This book contains the autobiography of the late John E. Clough, for many years a missionary in India, written down, as he told it, by his wife, Emma Rauschenbusch Clough, for ten years his companion in the mission field. He was stationed at Ongole in southern India, and one of the sensational incidents of his service there, known as the "Pentecostal baptism," was the conversion of over 9,000 natives within a period of a few weeks. His own explanation of his phenomenal success was this: "I loved the people. And when I told them in the simplest words that I could use about Jesus Christ and his love for them, they somehow believed me."

N Y Times 20:14 Ja 10 '15 90w

+ Outlook 109:349 F 10 '15 300w

"It is one of the great missionary biographies of the first century of missions."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 24 '14 1100w

CLUTTON-BROCK, ARTHUR. William Morris; his work and influence. 50c (1c) Holt 14-13556

A life of Morris for the "Home university library." It is a carefully prepared biography whose aim is to explain the importance of the man not so much to his own time as to ours. Chapters: Childhood and youth; The influence of Rossetti; The founding of the firm; Morris as a romantic poet; The revival of arts and crafts; The sagas and "Sigurd"; Morris as a socialist; The prose romances and later poems; Last years and character; The ideas of William Morris.

+ A L A Bkl 11:117 N '14

"An excellent little biography."

+ Cleveland 6:79 S '14 30w

+ Ind 80:27 O 5 '14 130w

"Is a defence rather an impartial account. The volume has a tendency to discursiveness, which is especially out of place in this series, but is well informed, and marked by a crispness of style that is occasionally epigrammatic."

+ — Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 170w

"Excellent and astonishingly cheap little book." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times 19:329 Ag 2 '14 1300w

"It is eminently readable and no doubt accurate."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 1 '14 400w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Escape of Mr. W. Trimm. *$1.25 (2c) Doran 13-22283

Mr. Cobb is known as a humorist but these are not humorous stories. They are grim tales of real life, told as only a newspaper man could tell them. The first is the story of Mr. Hobart W. Trimm's journey toward the federal prison and of his escape, and of the tenacity of a pair of "Bean's latest model little giant handcuffs." The stories that follow, many of them stories of newspaper life or of criminal courts, are: The belled buzzard; An occurrence up a side street; Another of those cub reporter stories; Smoke of battle; The exit of Anne Dugmore; To the editor of The Sun; Fish-head; Guilty as charged.

"Interesting often absorbing short stories, although their plots and vivid descriptions are so gruesome as to be almost revolting at times. Readers who like mystery tales and detective stories will enjoy these."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:242 F '14

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '13 200w

+ Ind 79:29 Jl 6 '14 120w

"They are stories well worth reading."

+ N Y Sun p4 O 25 '13 120w

"The whole volume maintains a high level of excellence, but despite their dramatic force, their admirable psychology, and the very clever way in which their climaxes are reached, it is principally this human quality which distinguishes these tales from others equally fine in technique."

+ N Y Times 19:776 Ja 4 '14 450w

"An entertaining volume."

+ R of Rs 49:376 Mr '14 23w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Europe revised. 12 il *$1.50 (1½c) Doran 14-18588

Mr. Cobb writes of Europe with an irreverent pen; one by one he riddles its most sacrosanct traditions. For he followed the path of the regular tourist on what proved to be a journey of disillusionment, and he came back home at the end of it, filled with an enthusiasm for his own country, her cookery, her dentistry, and her porcelain bath-tubs. Yet he did find something to admire abroad after all, and that was London, "a man-sized town," and another, the London hobby, and still another, English time-tables which are "written by realists, not by gifted fiction writers of the impressionistic school as is frequently the case in America."

"Humor that finds its basis in common sense."

+ Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 30w

"Whimsical, humorous, entertaining, lively."

+ N Y Times 20:48 F 7 '15 550w

"Ream after ream of clever puns and whimsical phrasing gets across to you, and by the end of the book your laughter has become a continuous gurgle of glee. Take the book off to the big leather chair before the fire and start in. . . The family will be standing in line waiting to read it as soon as you have finished." Robert Lynd

+ Pub W 86:1294 O 17 '14 850w

R of Rs 50:759 D '14 70w

COBB, IRVIN SHREWSBURY. Roughing it de luxe. il *$1 (3c) Doran 14-11507

Mr. Cobb traveled to California by the southern route and stopped off by the way to see the Grand cañon. He writes about it here, and adds later chapters on the California climate, San Francisco, and the vanishing Indian. John T. McCutcheon furnishes pictures in keeping with the text.

"The peculiarly readable quality of Mr. Cobb's book lies in the fact that, while he saw the same things that very many people are seeing every day on trips to the Pacific coast, he always manages to see each thing a little differently from anyone else and to impart a readability and charm to it."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 190w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"The chapters devoted to the Grand cañon are particularly good, with their mixture of awesome appreciation and grotesquery, even though the latter does sometimes in its impudent wording overstep the limits of good taste."

+ — N Y Times 19:303 J1 5 '14 250w

COBB, STANWOOD. Real Turk. il *$1.50 (3c)
u Pilgrim press 14-15729

The author who spent three years in Turkey during the period that was marked by the rise of the Young Turk party, writes this book in defence of a people to whom he feels justice has not been done. In answer to the possible criticism that he presents too favorable a picture of the Turk he says: "That there are many evils to deplore in the institutions, government and religion of Turkey, I would be the last to deny; but so much has been written of these more unfavorable aspects that I prefer to present the good side of the Turk, believing that the best way of helping a people, as is the case with an individual, is by seeing their good qualities rather than their bad." The Turk as a citizen, as a business man, the position of women, home life, and education are some of the matters discussed.

"This book has a very pleasant temper and its material is most interesting." Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:429 D '14 500w

"As a contribution to the study of the country and people it is authoritative."

+ Boston Transcript p22 O 14 '14 700w

"Mr. Cobb gives a very sympathetic picture of Turkish life and customs, and much valuable information about business, educational, and religious institutions and tendencies."

+ Ind 81:28 Ja 4 '15 310w

N Y Times 19:531 N 29 '14 110w

"A book which every one interested either in ethnology or in religious propaganda should read."

+ Outlook 109:235 Ja 27 '15 500w

COBB, REV. WILLIAM FREDERICK. Mysticism<sup>12</sup> and the creed. $3 Macmillan 14-22010

"For Cobb, mystical experience is the essential thing in religion—this is 'life,' while doctrinal postulates and ecclesiastical rites are 'form.' He does not wish to reject the form but to make it effective by translating it into terms of the individual's inner experience. From this standpoint he proceeds to estimate the Apostles' creed: 'At the back of this creed and of every creed, at the back of every utterance in the Bible, at the back of all philosophies, and of all religious practices, there reposes a revelation given at first-hand to him who in the last analysis is responsible for the creed or parable or philosophy or ceremony.' But the essence of the 'revelation' is the experience, of which the 'form' may be a very imperfect or, indeed, a wholly inadequate, expression."—Am J Theol

"He has taken a wholly uncritical attitude toward the problems of the psychology of religious experience; by a process of liberal allegorizing he has read into the thinking of the first-century Christians ideas entirely foreign to their age; and he has affirmed the universality of a type of religious experience and thinking which is by no means universal." S. J. Case

— Am J Theol 18:614 O '14 630w

"Frankly, we do not see what purpose such a book as Dr. Cobb's serves. It is not theology, it is not philosophy; it is not a statement of orthodox doctrine, being, in fact, barely compatible with orthodoxy; neither is it an attack upon this. Neither in literary style nor in the matter of accurate and detailed scholarship is there anything much to make amends for defects."

— Ath 1914,2:303 S 26 550w

"The book is an interesting combination of elaborate scholarship, both historical and exegetical, with that mystical temper which has always given significance to Christian thought."

+ Bib World 44:364 N '14 470w

"It seems unlikely that Dr. Cobb's method of apologetics will satisfy many of those who are feeling their way towards the Christianity of the future. Nevertheless it is a heroic attempt that he has made, and the book is full of deep, if occasionally fanciful, thought, tempered with a real piety and moral enthusiasm. It explains Mysticism better than any formal treatise on the subject, because it is the spiritual autobiography of a mystic." J. M. Thompson

+ — Hibbert J 13:223 O '14 1800w

+ — Sat R 118:658 D 26 '14 370w

COCHRAN, JEROME. Treatise on the inspection of concrete construction, containing practical hints for concrete inspectors, superintendents, and others engaged in the construction of public and private works. il $4 Clark, M. C. 13-15270

Some of the subjects taken up in the chapters are: cement testing and inspection; the inspection of sand, stone and other concrete materials; steel reinforcement; surface finish; water proofing; concrete sidewalks; building blocks; concrete piles, etc. "The work is virtually a descriptive treatise in the field covered by the chapter captions. Except in the introduction, which bears more particularly upon the nature and scope of concrete inspection and the specific duties of the inspector, the book is general in its scope." (Engin Rec)

"Considering the type of man usually appointed to inspect concrete work this book is valueless as a guide for inspection. Few inspectors are readers and this is a book for a student." Ernest McCullough

— Engin N 71:1163 My 21 '14 200w

"There is much repetition and statement of trite or obvious facts which might safely be left to the plain common sense of the reader. While the book covers no new ground in concrete literature it contains a vast amount of useful reference information upon concrete construction, and will be of interest to all workers in this field." F. H. Constant

+ — Engin Rec 69:712 Je 20 '14 430w

CODY, HIRAM ALFRED. Chief of the ranges.<sup>1</sup> *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 13-22285

A story of the Yukon district before the days of the coming of the white man. The long-standing feud between the Chilcat and the Ayana tribes, which forms the basis of the plot, grows more bitter with the frustration of the attempt of the son of a Chilcat chief to carry away Owindia, daughter of Klitonda, chief of the Ayana. The arrival of a band of white fur traders brings additional complications, for they, too, are drawn into the fight. Ranger Dan, the leader of the traders has come into the country looking for traces of his lost daughter; she proves of course to have been Owindia's mother, and after the death of Klitonda the girl is taken to the white man's country. The lover of the story is a member of the company of traders, who like Owindia, is a half-breed.

"The story is somewhat fragmentary and lacking in dramatic interest, yet the author displays an intimate acquaintance with Indian life and character."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup470 Mr 28 80w

"Sincere and strong, this story of one of the feuds between the Chilcat and the Ayana tribes of the Canadian Northwest brings with it the invigoration of the winds blowing through the wilderness of frozen mountains and river in which this drama of primitive emotions is placed."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 20 '13 350w

"The interest in the story dwindles as it progresses and its artificiality is revealed."

— N Y Sun p4 D 6 '13 100w

+ N Y Times 19:333 Ag 2 '14 270w

COE, FANNY E. Makers of the nation. il *56c<sup>11</sup> (½c) Am. bk. 14-11502

A history reader for intermediate grade pupils, prepared in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee of eight of the American historical association. The period covered is from 1765 to 1865. The biographical element is made prominent and the moral element has been especially emphasized.

COE, FANNY E.—Continued.

COFFEY, DIARMID. O'Neill & Ormond, a chapter in Irish history. il *$2 (3c) Norman, Remington co. A15-1

The author confines his book to the history of Ireland from 1641 to 1653. During this period Owen Roe O'Neill was leader of the Irish, engaged in "a desperate struggle against overwhelming odds," and the Earl of Ormond was the governor, "the great upholder of the English power in Ireland." The author says: "In the body of this book I have practically confined myself to stating the facts of Irish history during the period, in what I consider to be their proper perspective. The conclusion to be drawn seems to me inevitable, namely, that so long as the government of Ireland is conducted on un-Irish lines, so long will it lead to disaster."

+ — Ath 1914:2:10 J1 4 1150w

"Although he has written within his scope honestly and commendably, he has neglected several possibilities for making his work more varied and interesting."

+ — Boston Transcript p24 N 11 '14 300w

"It cannot be said that anything of importance is added to what was already known, but Mr. Coffey has shown industry in putting his materials together. His sympathies are with O'Neill, but he tries to be fair all round, and the book is free from extreme partisanship. His final judgements are somewhat crude." G. H. O.

+ — Eng Hist R 29:794 O '14 180w

N Y Times 19:523 N 29 '14 130w

+ — Sat R 118:119 J1 25 '14 280w

"His book is worth reading. There are here and there, and especially in the preface, statements to which exception can be taken."

+ — Spec 113:532 O 17 '14 630w

COFFIN, HENRY SLOANE. University sermons. 12 *$1.50 (3c) Yale univ. press 14-7288

A series of sermons delivered before the students of various colleges and universities thruout the country by the minister of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church of New York City. The sermons take the form of helpful talks addressed to young people. Some of the titles are: Three stages in religious experience; The finality of Jesus; Abilities suicidally used; The claims of the church upon Christians; Faith and growing knowledge; The reality of God.

"In the sermons Christianity has been made vital, forceful, and has been presented in simple direct language, understandable by all."

+ A L A Bk1 II:50 O '14

+ Nation 99:76 J1 16 '14 500w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 110w

COFFIN, JOSEPH HERSCHEL. Socialized conscience. $1.25 Warwick & York 14-2285

"The author bases his ethical theory upon two factors, personality and the moral situations which arise in connection with the institutional life of society. Personality is given a technical meaning, is distinguished from individuality, and is ascribed only to those creatures who are endowed with a highly developed capacity of reason. Personality is developed through the social institutions—the home, the school, the vocation, the state and the church. It is therefore only half a truth to say that morality is a personal affair; the other half is that personality is a social affair. . . . The practical conclusion in substance is that every one should not only be personally honest, but he should strive for justice in the state and the highest possible degree of perfection in all social institutions."—Boston Transcript

"His writing is somewhat heavy."

— Ath 1914:5:19 Ap 11 100w

Bib World 45:119 F '15 50w

"There is a real demand for just such a book as this claims to be. It is well that books of such strict but rational and comprehensive morality should be used in our schools and colleges."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 18 '14 250w

"The book is on the whole well done."

+ — Educ R 47:309 Mr '14 80w

+ Ind 79:33 J1 6 '14 40w

"Excellent is the author's programme and quite in the contemporary current; the accomplishment, alas, is disappointing. There is nothing new in the book, nothing simplified or co-ordinated, nothing better said than others have said it." Durant Drake

— + J Philos 11:418 J1 16 '14 780w

"His chapters are stimulating and thought-impelling."

+ Nature 93:134 Ap 9 '14 60w

Reviewed by E. L. Talbert

Psychol Bull 11:469 D 15 '14 80w

Reviewed by Graham Taylor

+ Survey 32:436 J1 25 '14 140w

COHEN, ISRAEL. Jewish life in modern times. il 12 *$3 (2½c) Dodd

"The purpose of this volume is, in the first place, to depict the variegated life of the Jewish people, at the present day in all its intimacy and intensity, and secondly, to trace the evolution that is being produced by modern forces, or, in other words, to describe the static conditions of Jewry and then to analyse the effects of the dynamic forces to which they are exposed." (Preface) A general survey of the problem is followed by discussions of its social, political, economic, intellectual, religious and national aspects. Appendices give information concerning the world's Jewish population and immigration to North America. A bibliography and indexes to subjects and to names complete the book. The illustrations are reproductions from paintings by Josef Israels, Samuel Hirszenberg and others who have pictured the life of their people.

"It will be welcomed by the general reader no less than the student of the Jewish question. Less purely literary and less stimulating than M. Leroy Beaulieu's, it has yet a value all its own. For it is the work of a publicist impelled to a labour of love."

+ — Ath 1914:2:419 O 24 1250w

"The book is valuable thruout."

+ Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 50w

"He has done his work well, and we venture to bespeak for his book a creditable place in the contemporary literature of Israel."

+ Lit D 49:1186 D 12 '14 220w

"Taking it as a whole, Mr. Israel Cohen's book is an admirable piece of work, which almost completely answers any question on the Jewish race of the present day which an intelligent reader could fairly demand from him." Joseph Jacobs

+ N Y Times 20:19 Ja 17 '15 1200w

"A highly interesting, instructive, and valuable work."

+ Outlook 109:349 F 10 '15 170w

Sat R 118:466 O 31 '14 1300w

COHU, REV. J. R. Vital problems of religion; 12 with an introd. by the Lord Bishop of S. Asaph. *$2 Scribner

"In the author's words, his aim is 'to examine, in the light of the best available modern thought, from whatever quarter it may come, the vital problems underlying our spiritual experience, and to see how far such thought helps us to their answer.' In an introductory chapter the present state of theological speculation and controversy is reviewed. . . . By way of illustration, we are reminded that such household words as the reign of law, evolution, Bible criticism, were terrors to the religious-minded of past days; and we are comforted by a quotation of Westcott's words: 'Let us thank God that He has called us to unfold a growing message, not to rehearse a stereotyped tradition.'"—Ath

"The discussions vary considerably in value, as might be expected. 'Through nature to nature's God' or 'The evolutionary story,' 'Personality in man,' 'Religion and theology' are of special interest."

+ Am J Theol 18:644 O '14 $50w

"We note at times considerable reiteration and repetition, but the volume is distinctly useful as a summary in lucid form of the idealist faith in philosophy and religion."

+ — Ath 1914.1:513 Ap 11 680w

"This is a fascinating book, not because it contains much that is new, but because it rings true."

+ Bib World 45:54 Ja '15 80w

"In his new volume Rev. J. R. Cohn discusses with sound logic and orthodox zeal some 'Vital problems of religion.' It cannot be said that he has thrown much new light on these problems, but his style and treatment are fresh and vigorous and his conclusions support idealism and faith."

+ Ind 79:33 Jl 6 '14 70w

"A good deal of Mr. Cohn's heterodoxy of statement we take to be due only to looseness of thought. He never sees what is involved in his positions. He has some quite fresh pages on the freedom of the will, rightly distinguishing from the will and affections the personality lying behind them."

+ — Sat R 117:479 Ap 11 '14 400w

"His arguments are not only sound, but lucid; and no person of ordinary education could fail to follow them. We should find it hard to mention another book which is aimed so directly at the difficulties of the modern man, and which handles them so clearly and sanely. The chapters on 'Will' and 'Conscience' are specially well worked out."

+ Spec 112:998 Je 13 '14 330w

COIT, STANTON, comp. Social worship: for use in families, schools and churches. 2v il *$12.50 Macmillan

A work issued on behalf of the West London Ethical society as a memorial of its twenty-first anniversary. "The first volume contains an elaborate introduction that explains the ideals of the Ethical society, and states why it should be looked upon as a religion just as we look upon Christianity. Then the volume is divided into two parts. The first part is 'sentences introductory and dismissory.' There are 274 of these sentences from a large number of authors from different lands, and from all periods of history. Part two is composed of 290 meditations, the authors of which represent all shades of religious belief. . . . The second volume is given to the music for public worship." (Boston Transcript)

Boston Transcript p22 Mr 4 '14 400w

"Such a work has long been needed, and it is certain to fill a large place and to exercise a very great influence in an age when religious creeds of every sort are shaping themselves more and more to the insistent human demand for social brotherhood and righteousness. We predict, too, that a wide circle of individual readers will be grateful for such a splendid body of inspirational, humanistic literature, presented in so beautiful a typographical setting."

+ Dial 56:305 Ap 1 '14 450w

"The present work is rich in ethical, literary, and musical value, and deserves place especially in the libraries of the theological seminaries, as well as in many others."

+ Outlook 107:759 Jl 25 '14 300w

COIT, STANTON. Soul of America. *$2 (1½c) 7 Macmillan 14-9875

From the objective point of view of an Englishman studying America fundamentally and exhaustively here is presented a scheme for conserving and developing our spiritual resources,—our "sense of reality, the potency, the pressure and power of those principles and ideals which have emerged in the history of the American people as manifestations of its essential and unique moral genius." The study finds its origin in the conviction that the ultimate dynamic of all thoro reform in domestic life, in economics and politics is to be found in the sense of reality and urgency with which moral principles and social ideals are invested. The author believes that the moral efficiency which must result from organizing spiritual potencies and lifting them into self-consciousness would sweep away rapidly and forever national defects and wrongs and causes of suffering and disease.

A L A Bkl 11:36 N '14

Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 220w

"A brilliant study."

+ Ind 78:451 Je 15 '14 36w

"Apart from his evisceration of the Christian significance of the cardinal terms of spiritual life Dr. Coit's discussion of the essentials of American manhood and womanhood and of the moral mission of our country to the world is both stimulating and instructive."

+ — Outlook 107:943 Ag 15 '14 150w

"Stirring and prophetic book." J. H. L.

+ Psychol Bull 11:476 D 15 '14 300w

R of Rs 50:249 Ag '14 80w

"His book is interesting and inspiring whether read fragmentarily or serially, and there is a vast deal of common sense in it which ministers and laymen may well lay to heart for the improvement of religious conditions in any community and in the nation at large. But Mr. Coit will find it hard to persuade the church people of this country to go with him to the end of his program."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 O 29 '14 600w

COKE, DESMOND. Art of silhouette. il *10s 6d 7 Martin Secker, London

"It is always pleasant to listen to a collector discoursing of his treasures. . . . Mr. Desmond Coke collects silhouette pictures, and in an entertaining volume he talks of the characteristics of the different artists, and gives reproductions of his favourite possessions. He makes no attempt to write a learned book, acknowledging gracefully the claims of Mrs. Nevill Jackson's authoritative work, and is content to appear before us as a cultivated dilettante."—Ath

"His unpretentious attitude enlists our sympathy from the outset, and as Mr. Coke writes easily and with enthusiasm, we soon find ourselves sharing his admiration for Miers and Mrs. Beetham, Rosenberg and Charles."

+ Ath 1913.2:532 N 8 530w

"Mr. Desmond Coke is gifted evidently with the true collector's spirit and has no inconsiderable knowledge of the art of silhouette as it was practised in its various forms, and his book affords interesting reading."

+ Int Studio 51:247 Ja '14 120w

"Mr. Coke knows his subject, and a many years' mania, self-confessed, for collecting has sharpened his critical sense."

+ Sat R 116:sup12 O 11 '13 140w

"Charming new book."

+ Spec 111:749 N 8 '13 1650w

COKER, FRANCIS WILLIAM. Readings in political philosophy. *$2.25 (1c) Macmillan 15-181

"The aim of this volume is to furnish a handy collection of readings from the foremost political philosophers. In furtherance of this design it has seemed wise to include substantial parts of a few preëminent works rather than to cover a wide range of writings with brief passages from each." (Preface) The selection of readings begins with Plato and ends with Bentham. No writer later than Bentham is included. Others who are represented in the volume are: Aristotle, Thomas Aquinas, Dante, Machiavelli, Calvin, Hooker, Grotius, Milton, Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, and Thomas Paine. Selected references are appended to each chapter, and there is a general bibliography and an index.

"These readings seem excellently fitted to their mission. The book is admirably indexed.

COKER, FRANCIS WILLIAM—Continued.

has a most satisfactory bibliography and a series of excellent introductory sketches of the authors quoted."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 27 '15 550w

COLCORD, LINCOLN (ROSS). Game of life and death. Il $1.25 (1½c) Macmillan 14-16217

Eleven stories of the sea. In the first of them, which gives title to the book, the chief part is played by Lee Fu Chang, a character taken from Mr. Colcord's novel "The drifting diamond." A number of the stories have the south Pacific and the Far East for their setting and are touched with the mysticism of the Orient. The titles are: The game of life and death; The measure of a man; The leak; The voice of the dead; De Long; a story of Sunda straits; Carrying sail; Thirst; an incident of the Pacific; The moths; The final score; The captain's son; Home.

+ A L A Bkl 11:219 Ja '15

"All the stories are of high merit."

+ Ath 1914,2:502 N 14 149w

+ Bookm 40:684 F '15 200w

"Each of the dozen tales making up this volume is dramatic and poignant; told, too, with a subtle art which leaves not a little to be read between the lines. It is a book that will linger in the memory long after its lids are closed."

+ N Y Times 19:476 N 1 '14 190w

"This book is of exceptional interest."

+ Outlook 108:604 N 11 '14 80w

"Some of these stories of the sea are humorous, some highly technical, some horrible, but all are clever."

+ Spec 113:755 N 28 '14 18w

"The whole group of stories are so rich in interest that to analyze one is to slight the others. They are colorful and intimate, and arouse a variety of emotion rarely possible in present-day fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 15 '14 370w

COLE, ARTHUR CHARLES. Whig party in the South. Il $1.50 Am. hist. assn. 14-9894

A monograph which was awarded the Justin Winsor prize in American history in 1912. The author "seems to have left no detail unturned to make material for his comprehensive essay, and many bits of debate of long ago which he has included are of rare interest. The purpose was to sketch the history of the Whig party in the South, with reference to its relations to the slavery controversy; but he has gone beyond and, therefore, has made the work of more general character. The author is a northerner, but there is nothing of prejudice in his essay, which obviously is as he intended, 'entirely objective and scientific.'" (Boston Transcript)

"An important contribution to American history. Good maps, a long bibliography and a comprehensive index are included in the volume."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 500w

+ N Y Times 19:351 Ag 16 '14 130w

COLE, GEORGE DOUGLAS HOWARD. World of labour: a discussion of the present and future of trade unionism. Il $1.60 Macmillan (Eng ed 14-1114)

"Mr. Cole's book is an argument for a new form of industrial organization; it contains other matter, but that is incidental. His plan of economic reorganization may be very briefly stated; the trade unions are to take over the actual conduct of industry, while the means of production are to be owned by the state. The author is at one with the syndicalists in committing the conduct of industry to the unions, but he disagrees with them as to the future of the state. The increased powers of the unions, in his opinion, will not make the state superfluous, for the state must represent the consumers as against the unions of producers. An elaborate plan for the joint control of industry by the representatives of the state and by the representatives of the unions is, therefore, presented."—Am Econ R

"Even more serious than lack of information is Mr. Cole's propensity to decide every question entirely with reference to how far a proposed solution fits into his own scheme of industrial reorganization." G: E. Barnett

— Am Econ R 4:396 Je '14 630w

"Some inaccuracies, but in the main reliable."

+ A L A Bkl 11:54 O '14

"We do not discover an essential philosophy behind the discursiveness, and outside the realm of trade-unionism the work does not add to previous knowledge; but it forms a valuable addition to the literature of that subject."

+ Atn 1914,1:sup178 Ja 31 1450w

"An extraordinarily brilliant, original, and well-informed survey."

+ Hibbert J 12:443 Ja '14 40w

Nation 99:350 S 17 '14 200w

"When Mr. Cole gets away from his intellectual contempt he is very well worth reading. His summary of the labour movement and wars in the United States, although suffering from compression, is quite admirably done; his analysis of the changed attitude of labour towards its work is both penetrating and true. In that respect he has written one of the books that count and will not easily be superseded."

+ Sat R 117:56 Ja 10 '14 250w

COLE, GRENVILLE ARTHUR JAMES. Growth of Europe. (Home univ. lib.) Il $50c (1c) Holt 14-14271

It is not of political or of social, but of actual physical growth that this book treats. The author is a geologist and his purpose is to show that the surface features of Europe "are the results of comparatively recent changes, in which the wearing away of the rocks and the deposition of continental waste have played a far smaller part than the actual upheaval and depression of the land." In his treatment of so large a subject in so small a compass, he has been forced to hold closely to his theme, but his little book will suggest new lines of thought concerning the relation of environmental features and human history.

A L A Bkl 11:59 O '14

Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 170w

"The volume is a bit technical for the ordinary reader, whose interests are usually consulted with more care in this series."

+ Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 70w

+ N Y Times 19:338 Ag 9 '14 100w

COLEMAN, CHRISTOPHER BUSH. Constantine the Great and Christianity. (Columbia univ. studies in history, economics, and public law) $2.50 Longmans 14-18492

"The problem of the real attitude of the first nominally Christian emperor towards religion in general and towards the Christian religion in particular is one of perennial interest to students of history. . . . Dr. Coleman's purpose is not to offer new material or even to propose novel interpretations of familiar texts, but to summarize and to comment independently upon the views already brought out in the discussions of a generation past. . . . He divides his treatment under three heads: the Constantine of history, the Constantine of legend, and the Constantine of fiction. Of these divisions the first is the largest and the most important."—Nation

"A very interesting and valuable study. Much of his material is quite new."

+ Educ R 48:536 D '14 80w

"It is a very distinct service which Dr. Coleman has rendered in this new study of a subject already treated from almost every conceivable point of view. Dr. Coleman writes as an historian, without prejudices and with a laudable desire to present all sides of a very complicated situation; but he does not succeed, after all, in disentangling the skein. He has read his material, but he cannot get away from it into the perspective needed to command it."

+ — Nation 99:777 D 31 '14 700w

"Learned monograph."

+ Spec 114:57 Ja 9 '15 40w

COLIN, J. France and the next war; a French view of modern war; tr. by Major L. H. R. Pope-Hennessy. il *$1 (1c) Doran

"Commandant Colin, who is a professor of the Ecole de guerre of France, corresponding to the Staff college of Great Britain, discusses in 'France and the next war' some of the lessons to be learned by modern generals from the campaigns of the past, and particularly from the battles of Napoleon. The present volume is a portion of Commandant Colin's longer work, 'The changes in war,' published in French a few years ago. . . . There is none of the Jingoism of Bernhardt, the French authority writing in a calmly scientific way." (N Y Times) The book is made up in three parts. Part 1 treats of The combat; part 2 of The battle; part 3 of Operations.

Boston Transcript p24 F 10 '15 320w

"It is a calmly scientific work, historical in its treatment, and especially interesting from its analysis of Napoleon's conception of what successful war exacted of a general."

+ Nation 99:748 D 24 '14 900w

N Y Times 19:563 D 13 '14 330w

Spec 113:718 N 21 '14 170w

COLLES, HENRY COPE. Growth of music. 2pts 1st pt 1 *$1.35; pt 2 *90c Oxford 13-35389

Part 1 "is a book of only 160 pages, and no attempt is made to include all of even the great names of men and works. A small selection has been made of a few of the salient works by a few of the greatest men, and the author tries to trace the growth of musical technique by means of them. Except in the early chapters, those works chiefly are discussed which people are likely to hear at concerts, in church, or at home." (Nation) "In part 2 Mr. Colles deals with the Age of the sonata, from P. E. Bach to and including Beethoven. One of his aims is to show how composers influenced one another, and this is well exhibited in Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, for the simple reason that they all worked on the same lines." (Ath)

"A useful work for the individual student."

+ A L A Bkl 9:423 Je '13 (Review of pt 1)

A L A Bkl 11:63 O '14 (Review of pt 2)

Ath 1912,2:387 O 5 150w (Review of pt 1)

"The book is carefully written in a clear, simple style."

+ Ath 1913,2:602 N 22 220w (Review of pt 2)

"The book as a whole is suggestive, and not difficult to read."

+ Nation 96:483 My 8 '13 150w (Review of pt 1)

"It is a scholarly book, which makes its appeal to serious students." H: T. Finck

+ Nation 99:614 N 19 '14 200w (Review of pt 2)

COLLINS, ARTHUR H. Symbolism of animals and birds represented in English church architecture. il *$1.75 (5c) McBride, Nast & co. (Eng ed 13-9500)

Mr. Collins's study is an attempt to explain the very common use made of animal and bird forms in English architectural designs. Among such forms are the ape, ass, beaver, bear, lion, lamb, dove, eagle, etc., and the griffin, unicorn, phoenix, and other mythical creatures. Each, the author explains, has, or originally had, a symbolic meaning.

"For the student traveler or for art departments in large libraries this work gives suggestions with exceptionally good illustrations."

+ A L A Bkl 10:135 D '13

N Y Times 18:509 O 5 '13 380w

Sat R 116:55 Jl 12 '13 200w

COLLINS, VARNUM LANSING. Princeton. 10 (Am. college and university ser.) il *$1.50 Oxford 14-10895

The second volume in a series devoted to the histories of American colleges. "The tale is told with a wealth of particulars that saves the narrative from any effect as of mere annals. From the origin of the project to the present day we are made to see the institution in its various activities, formal and informal. For the most part, the plan of the book is chronological, thus differing, and to advantage, from the first volume of this series, the one on Columbia. This plan is interrupted at the beginning of the civil war period for a timely survey of a century of college life, and there are concluding chapters on the History of the curriculum and Entrance requirements, Buildings and equipment, and the College seasons." (Nation)

"The peculiar merits of this series, if we may judge from the two books already at hand, are charm and accuracy. The books are not only informative but interestingly written."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 15 '14 110w

"Mr. Collins has told the story of his alma mater without the slightest taint of the chauvinist or the malcontent, and with an unwavering adherence to the human side of his theme. It is a rare specimen of objective narration."

+ Dial 57:259 O 1 '14 480w

"Mr. Collins has produced a capital book which while perhaps not quite so readable or appealing to so wide a circle as Dean Keppel's is, nevertheless excellent." N. M. B.

+ Educ R 48:530 D '14 750w

"Although the book runs to four hundred pages, there are few that even a non-Princetonian will care to skip. There is rather more of detail regarding the history of the curriculum at Princeton than most readers will care for."

+ — Nation 99:258 Ag 27 '14 280w

"He has been quite successful in his attempts to bring out the characteristics of the life at Princeton and to make clear the Princetonian ideals. His book is well illustrated."

+ N Y Times 19:405 S 27 '14 50w

"Admirable history."

+ Spec 113:400 S 19 '14 130w

COLLYER, ROBERT. Clear grit: a collection of lectures, addresses and poems; ed. by J: Haynes Holmes. il *$1.50 (1½c) Am. Unitar. 14-336

"The contents of this volume comprise a selection of Dr. Collyer's best known lectures, and a small group of ballads and hymns. The poems, with the exception of the one entitled 'Lucretia Mott,' have been printed many times . . . but the lectures, with the exception of 'Clear grit,' although delivered again and again from pulpit and platform, have never before been published." (Introduction) Many of the lectures deal with great personalities, among them, George Washington, Martin Luther, William Ellery Channing, Robert Burns, Charles and Mary Lamb, Hawthorne, Whittier, and Thoreau.

+ A L A Bkl 10:348 My '14

"All bear witness to Dr. Collyer's greatness of heart and of mind, and to that 'matchless' English style—written and spoken—of which he was the master. A study of the six poems in the book—all that Dr. Collyer ever published—wakens regret that he did not more often express in verse his high and helpful thoughts."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 500w

+ — Dial 56:254 Mr 16 '14 250w

+ Ind 78:401 Je 1 '14 130w

N Y Times 19:212 Ap 26 '14 70w

"This is one of the rare books that entertains us and at the same time gives cheer to our souls."

+ R of Rs 49:504 Ap '14 130w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 350w

"An inspiring volume."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:189 Jl '14 40w

COLQUHOUN, ETHEL MAUD (COOKSON)
 * (MRS. ARCHIBALD ROSS COLQUHOUN).
 Vocation of woman. *$1.50 Macmillan
 14-4528

"Mrs. Colquhoun offers an extensive discussion of the mental and physical differences of men and women, and takes the ground that women, though not inferior to men, are different, and should therefore have a different education and different occupations. Viewing the sex problem from the standpoint of conditions in England, Mrs. Colquhoun finds it to be created by the fact that, while marriage is monogamous, there are many more women than men. Under these conditions she holds that feminism, with its demand for the economic independence of women, single or married, is a game in which women have everything to lose and nothing to gain. . . . The chiefly problematic question, then, is what to do with the surplus women. Here Mrs. Colquhoun advises an emigration of women to the colonies, where there is a surplus of men."—Nation

+ — A L A Bkl 10:348 My '14

"The book avowedly deals with 'educated' women of the upper middle class, and shows a lamentable lack of comprehension of working-women's needs. Yet Mrs. Colquhoun's aim, limited though it be, is good, for she wishes women to retain the essentially feminine occupations of wifehood, motherhood, and house-keeping. The book as a whole may form an antidote to the extreme individualist, man-hating feminists, who, if they can read beyond the marriage chapters, may glean some good."

+ — Ath 1913:2:551 N 15 1050w

"The book is an able presentation of the anti-feminist side."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 6 '13 350w

+ — Cath World 99:691 Ag '14 300w

"Ablest and most temperate statement in English of the anti-feminist position." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:693 Ap '14 30w

"One need not share the strongly conservative views of Mrs. Archibald Colquhoun's 'The vocation of woman' to say that scarcely anything so thoughtful, and at the same time so attractive and genial in style and spirit, has appeared in the literature of the subject."

+ Nation 98:272 Mr 12 '14 320w

"Thoughtful and acutely analytical work. Those who wish to be armed with replies to the flimsy arguments of the feminists cannot do better than study the dispassionate but thoroughly convincing analysis to which Mrs. Colquhoun has subjected their fallacious reasoning." C.

+ Spec 111:1028 D 13 '13 1050w

"A helpful addition to literature on this question."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:126 My '14 30w

COLUM, PADRAIC. Boy in Eirinn. (Little school-mate ser.) il *$1 Dutton 13-26565

"This is the third volume in a series which attempts to interpret for children the customs, surroundings, and ideals of child life in the more important of the countries represented in our own cosmopolitan nation. . . . There are several fairy tales and a true Irish play; there are songs here and there with the good Irish lilt to them; and there are plenty of amusing and kindly folk."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 10:289 Mr '14 +

"His narrative of the adventures of Finn, a lad in the time of the land war in Ireland, holds much that should interest grown-ups even more than the youngsters. At times the sugar coating wears rather thin, and one feels that here and there may be a child who will reject the offering of information in disguise, just as he will feel somewhat irritated by a too-playful prefacer who has made a decided mistake about his age and intelligence. Moreover, he will hotly resent the footnotes that disturb his page quite as much as an occasional suspicious-looking date, and, if he is especially observant, he will deplore the typographical slip which is too frequent to be unnoticed even by those younger than the reviewer."

+ — N Y Times 19:307 Jl 12 '14 220w

COMFORT, WILL LEVINGTON. Midstream.
 *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 14-10288

An autobiographical chronicle which tells the story of life up to the halfway. The aim is to show the progress of life in the "child and boy and man known as Comfort" thru struggles, often sordid at the lower rungs of the ladder and made harder by harmful hereditary leanings, and thru regeneration to self conquest. "This narrative is punctuated with descriptions of utter giving way to drink, and brightened with an account of marriage to a valiant, ever hopeful wife, and, in the later chapters, an account of the struggle against poverty for wife and children and the repeated effort to write the 'big' story. And toward the end of the narrative comes the breaking away from drunkenness, after that the author's moralizings and homilies upon life, from the point of view of a serene faith." (Springfield Republican)

"The author, at the 'halfway house' of life, cannot refrain from telling the reader what a wonderful youth he was."

— Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 40w

"There is little in these pages which the plain man can take to heart. The writer is not normal; he is too sincere and too sickly. His life now is determined by two obsessions: the necessity to write and the determination to philosophize."

— Nation 99:18 Jl 2 '14 300w

"As a book it is too long and wearisomely repetitious, which is, of course, the reformer's method of impressing truth. Above all, 'Midstream' is valuable, not at all as literature, not even as the record of a man who had subdued certain definite evils, but as the story of one who is struggling upward through life and its experiences, as a man struggles out of a quicksand, and because it is less the story of the struggle than a part of it."

+ — N Y Times 19:243 My 24 '14 870w

"To some degree Mr. Comfort seems the most likely of our younger novelists to go on where the late Frank Norris left off when death took him. And it would be hard to suggest a novelist whose successes and failures Mr. Comfort might more profitably study."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 1100w

COMMONS, JOHN ROGERS. Labor and administration. *$1.60 (1½c) Macmillan 13-23866

The attention of labor leaders and economists, the author points out in his introduction, is shifting "from laws to the means of enforcing them—from strikes to the unions that safeguard the gains—from the rights of labor to the protection of its rights." The problem with which they are now concerned is "not so much the law and its abstract rights, as administration and its concrete results—not so much the struggle of a class to dominate others, as a working partnership of classes in government and industry—not so much the spectacular wage-bargaining of strikes, as the continuous organization of capital and labor for dealing justly with the millions of little wage-bargains that begin and end every day." It is with this class of problems that his book deals.

Am Econ R 4:166 Mr '14 170w

"Of interest to those alive to vital current questions and of value to those who need awakening."

+ A L A Bkl 10:263 Mr '14

"No person interested in economic or in labor history can afford to be without this volume." Alexander Fleisher

+ Ann Am Acad 52:244 Mr '14 300w

+ Ath 1914:1:sup183 Ja 31 300w

"This book is an unemotional study of things which people wish and need to know." L. P.
 + Boston Transcript p9 F 7 '14 1000w
 + Dial 56:192 Mr 1 '14 120w

"Professor Commons writes quite without perspective or sound historical knowledge, but entertainingly."

— + Educ R 47:208 F '14 80w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:692 Ap '14 50w

+ Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 300w

J Pol Econ 22:285 Mr '14 470w

"It is in his dealings with the concrete facts concerning labor matters that he is at his best; his philosophic and more abstract disquisitions are the least satisfactory portions of his book."

+ — Nation 98:40 Ja 8 '14 300w

N Y Times 19:9 Ja 11 '14 1750w

+ R of Rs 49:379 Mr '14 180w

COMSTOCK, MRS. HARRIET THERESA. Place
 12 beyond the winds. il *$1.25 (1c) Doubleday
 14-16759

A little settlement in Canada known sometimes as "the place beyond the winds," and sometimes as the "In-Place" is the scene of the greater part of this story. Here Priscilla Glenn grows to young womanhood taught by the village schoolmaster, a piece of driftwood from the world cast into this little backwater. But Priscilla feels the "lure of the States," as the natives of the place say when their young men go across the border to try for fame and fortune, and she goes to New York to learn about life. As a nurse in a great hospital she learns much of it, and the test of her mettle comes when she faces the wall of "professional honor" which holds doctors and nurses silent where certain questions are concerned. She defies this time-honored tradition to save a friend, and the young doctor who is her lover stands by her, tho doing so costs him a brilliant career.

"This is another of those hectic, ill-balanced, over-crowded volumes in which the author's purpose is lost to sight through sheer excess of themes and superfluity of episode."

— Bookm 40:685 F '15 270w

+ Dial 58:85 F 1 '15 150w

"It seems a pity that Mrs. Comstock has permitted a subject so painful and perplexed to intrude itself into her story of that winsome child of nature, Priscilla Glenn."

+ — N Y Times 19:463 O 25 '14 270w

"A plot full of romance, venture, and modern social teaching."

+ Outlook 108:439 O 21 '14 120w

COMSTOCK, MRS. HARRIET THERESA. Son
 1 of the hills. il *$1.25 (1c) Doubleday
 13-23215

"When the book begins Sandy Morley, its hero, is a boy; ragged, neglected, half starved, he yet holds tenaciously to his one great purpose—to get away from Lost Hollow and go somewhere where he can acquire money and knowledge. Marcia Lowe, the little woman doctor from Massachusetts, tells him about the great educational institutions of her native state until Massachusetts seems to him a sort of Promised Land. For he is a throw-back to the finer type represented by his forefathers, inheriting the qualities which in past times had made them notable, and he wants above all things to return some day to the hills, able to help his people. There is a girl, of course; Cynthia Walden, who urges him on and whom he never forgets. How he finally redeems his promise both to himself and to her forms the main portion of the book."
 —N Y Times

"Without excelling in the finer points of literary excellence, the author makes her book very much alive and full of good motives with which we like to come in contact."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 29 '13 350w

"Mrs. Comstock's story has rare merit. It conveys sympathetically a message from the 'poor whites' of the southern hills."

+ Nation 98:12 Ja 1 '14 180w

"The scheme for betterment becomes involved with various unpleasant transactions designed to exhibit the transmission of hereditary characteristics. Their repulsiveness is hardly offset by a moral victory at the end."

— + N Y Sun p4 N 15 '13 70w

"Mrs. Comstock's new novel will please a goodly variety of readers; those who care principally for 'a story' will find in it an entertaining plot, with plenty of complications; others will like it because it presents an interesting picture of the southern mountaineers—the poor whites; while to a third order the portraits of Sandy Morley and Marcia Lowe will prove its strongest attraction."

+ N Y Times 18:768 D 28 '13 300w

CONCANNON, HELENA (MRS. THOMAS CONCANNON). Garden of girls; or, Famous schoolgirls of former days. il *$1 Longmans
 E14-1954

"We think the title of this book is a very happy one for stories of girlhood, and these blossoms are culled from various gardens: England, Ireland, Scotland, France, Italy, and our own United States."—Cath World

"In these days when the types frequently set before the eyes of the young are not uplifting, it is well for our young girls to revert to these examples, excellently and attractively presented, of true womanhood in the making."

+ Cath World 100:268 N '14 90w

"Charming sketches."

+ Spec 113:209 Ag 8 '14 50w

CONDIT, ELIZABETH, and LONG, JESSIE A.
 11 How to cook and why. il *$1 (2c) Harper
 14-17107

This book is the first volume in a new series to be known as "Harper's home economics" series, edited by Isabel Ely Lord. In her introduction the editor says that the authors have prepared the book to meet two sets of needs, those of the girl of high-school age and those of the average housekeeper. In addition to the chapters on different classes of foods, vegetables, meats, etc., there are discussions on: Why we eat food; What food is; Why flavor counts; What to eat together and how to serve it; How to keep food; Some useful utensils.

Reviewed by H: T. Finck

+ — Nation 99:504 O 22 '14 520w

N Y Times 19:481 N 1 '14 90w

CONLEY, EMMA. Principles of cooking. il
 11 *$2c (1c) Am. bk. 14-11559

A textbook in domestic science designed for classes in secondary and vocational schools. It is not a cook book altho many useful recipes are given. Contents: General directions for work; Classes of foods; Methods of cooking; Fruits and green vegetables; Roots and tubers; Cereals and leavening agents; Beverages; Legumes and frying lessons; Eggs; Planning a luncheon; Milk and its products; Meats and fish; Gelatin and ices. These chapters are followed by tables showing the chemical composition of foods, and a section on Teaching cooking in rural schools.

"Material is well organized, directions plain and recipes easy to follow."

+ A L A Bk 11:158 D '14

"Excellent little book intended for schools."
 H: T. Finck

+ Nation 99:384 S 24 '14 200w

"An admirable handbook."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:218 N '14 50w

"Although a text for secondary and vocational schools, helpful to any one who is a beginner in kitchen mysteries."

+ Ws Lib Bull 10:302 D '14 30w

CONN, HERBERT WILLIAM. Social heredity and social evolution; the other side of eugenics. *$1.50 Abingdon press 14-21138

"Dr. Conn, like Drs. Thomson and Geddes, claims that organic evolution and organic heredity may account for plants and the animals, and much that is in man, but there is much in man that cannot be accounted for by these things. These peculiarly human qualities are the result of social heredity. And it is this force which is the other side of eugenics; and eugenics must take account of it, or it must fail to help man in any but a one-sided way. And this volume is not written to condemn eugenics, but to complete the work of eugenics by supplying the side which the writers on eugenics have neglected. Dr. Conn's method is first to show the essential difference between human and animal evolution, and then to describe the forces of social heredity as they are seen in the history of man. In doing this he describes the forces by which man has created and developed civilization."—Boston Transcript

"The subject has long needed just such a clear and able treatment from one who has given much time to the study of organic evolution."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 28 '14 700w
N Y Times 19:481 N 1 '14 250w

"Lucid and masterly sketch."

+ Outlook 10:653 N 18 '14 300w

CONNELLEY, WILLIAM ELSEY. Life of Preston B. Plumb, 1837-1891. il *$3.50 (2 1/2c) Browne & Howell 13-26226

The subject of this biography was United States senator from 1877 to 1891. He is described on the title page as "a pioneer of the progressive movement in America." "Readers old enough to have any remembrance of the anti-slavery struggle, or cherishing even the memory of their elders' reminiscences of that conflict, will take the keenest interest in the story of Plumb's hastening from his home in Ohio to the help of bleeding Kansas, the active part he took in the shaping of the new commonwealth as a free state, and his highly creditable record as a soldier in the civil war." (Dial)

Boston Transcript p11 D 6 '13 470w

"It has been said that the life of Preston B. Plumb is the history of Kansas. It is decidedly a life worth reading as related by Mr. Connelley."

+ Dial 56:148 F 16 '14 380w

"The biography is well written and contains interesting matter relating to the developments of the important period Mr. Plumb's life spanned."

+ N Y Times 19:32 Ja 25 '14 80w
R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 120w

CONNOLLY, JAMES BRENDAN (BENNETT). Trawler. *50c (5c) Scribner 14-19619

This story, a prize winner in one of the Collier contests, is one of the short stories deemed by the publishers worthy of a permanent and independent form. It is a story of the Gloucester fishing fleet and of the inner heart of Hugh Glynn who was looked upon as a law-breaker and a hard and reckless man.

"It is a big short story of the sea, human, heroic, gripping. It is as remarkable for the things it does not say but makes the reader feel, as for the skill with which it says the rest."

+ Ind 80:213 N 16 '14 60w

CONNOR, RALPH, pseud. (CHARLES WILLIAM GORDON). Patrol of the Sun Dance trail. *$1.25 (1c) Doran 14-18453

Allan Cameron, once of the Northwest mounted police, is married and settled when this story opens. He thinks he has left the service forever but when the matter of outwitting and capturing Copperhead, an Indian outlaw, comes up Cameron is picked as the one man fitted for the task. He expects to accomplish it in a few days but the wily Indian leads him a six-months chase. In the meantime Cameron's sister Moira has come out from Scotland to turn the head of Dr. Martin of the new Canadian Pacific hospital and give the story its needed sentimental interest.

+ A L A Bkl 11:221 Ja '15

+ Ath 1914,2:532 N 21 220w

"One would suppose that an ample supply of such fiction could be found on dusty library shelves." F. T. Cooper

— Bookm 40:674 F '15 450w

"It can hardly fail to hold the interest of the reader to the end, and is, therefore, doubtless a successful story of adventure. If Mr. Connor had been willing, however, to sacrifice some of the incident to the larger possibilities of character and theme which his latest tale discloses, he might have written something more than a story of adventure." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 11 '14 900w

+ Ind 80:479 D 21 '14 70w

"It at times approaches the tensely of an exaggerated school of western fiction. The ethical and religious teaching, overt or implied, with which the author was once wont to weight his fiction, is, however, banished by open-air quality and variety of incident."

+ Nation 99:607 N 19 '14 180w

"The tale moves at a fairly lively pace, despite an occasional odd stiffness in the dialogue, and it holds the reader's interest. It gives, too, a tolerably vivid picture of early days in the great northwest."

+ N Y Times 19:519 N 22 '14 300w

"Mr. Connor has the knack of seeming always to be interested himself. And where the author is interested, it is safe to predict that he will be able to carry his reader with him. The chief fault of the present tale is that it is a thought too leisurely which gives it the effect of being a little 'thin.'" H. Dick

+ Pub W 86:1289 O 17 '14 600w

+ Spec 114:23 Ja 2 '15 280w

CONRAD, JOSEPH. Chance. *$1.35 (1c) Doubleday 13-21354

The story is primarily a study of a woman who all thru her life was a victim of fate. "We are invited to look upon the helpless struggles of Flora de Barral in the remorseless grip of chance, first through her period of passive despair, later in an environment of unsympathetic 'feminism,' and finally as the wife of a quixotic sea-captain whose chivalry is accompanied by a total lack of perception and understanding. The story unfolds inevitably. As from stage to stage she tries to extricate herself from the talons of pursuing fate, Flora only succeeds further in enmeshing herself. . . . There is rare pitifulness in the telling of the story, as of one who has faced life unflinchingly, learnt its lessons, and come out with sympathies quickened. Mr. Conrad sees that many people are born captives of the meanest conceivable fate, and his book breathes the spirit of a very fine charity." (Sat R)

"A remarkable book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:369 My '14 +

"The craftsmanship of Mr. Conrad's new novel is somewhat marred by the curious device he has employed in the telling of it. Hurried writing is evident here and there, but, when all is said, 'Chance' remains a powerful and fascinating study in psychology."

+ Ath 1914,1:88 Ja 17 450w

+ Atlan 114:530 O '14 280w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:323 My '14 2000w

Reviewed by H. C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p9 Ja 31 '14 440w

"Once we accustom ourselves to Mr. Conrad's manner, to his frequent variations of style, compact, verbose, apt, hap-hazard, as the case may be, the reading of his novels is plain sailing." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 21 '14 1250w

"'Chance' is literature. It is an inspiration to the light-fiction-soaked contemporary reader who longs for something real. And it deserves to be permanent."

+ Ind 78:173 Ap 27 '14 500w

"A Conrad story always stands for the best in contemporary literature."

+ Lit D 48:1119 My 9 '14 230w

"It is decidedly the best of the Conrad stories which are not exclusively stories of the sea." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 98:396 Ap 9 '14 280w

Reviewed by Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 19:129 Mr 22 '14 1600w

"Apart from Mr. Conrad's preternatural solemnity in creating and analyzing characters, his workmanship is of the finest."

+ — Outlook 107:45 My 2 '14 370w

"Mr. Conrad has given signs in late years of a diminution of power, but in 'Chance' he has risen to greater heights than in any previous volume, with the exceptions of 'Nostromo' and 'Lord Jim.'" F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 85:1335 Ap 18 '14 500w

"Mr. Joseph Conrad, the eminent English novelist, is a master of his craft."

+ R of Rs 49:373 Mr '14 250w

"Mr. Joseph Conrad's method of telling his story is at first a little bewildering. Utterly regardless of the unities, following no chronological order, he now hurries forward with his tale, now leisurely retraces his steps to pick up the threads, taking us hither and thither as seems good to him. But he knows what he is doing, even though the reader, especially in the early stages of the story, may not realise it. His way is a direct challenge to the reader's careful attention. The cumulative effect is extraordinarily vivid, and readers are rewarded for some trials of patience by the realisation of a fine story finely told."

+ — Sat R 117:117 Ja 24 '14 770w

"Though he takes us into the depths and does not shirk the elemental problems of humanity, his pages are void of offence and unsullied by unnecessary squalors."

+ Spec 112:101 Ja 17 '14 2000w

"It is a remarkable achievement in psychological analysis, in the establishment of baffling and almost impalpable manifestations of character, and it quickly suggests both by similarity and dissimilarity the art of Henry James."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 16 '14 250w

CONWAY, SIR MARTIN. Sport of collecting. il *$2 Stokes

"In this book Sir Martin Conway gives an account of the way in which one imbued with the true spirit of collecting stalks and marks down his quarry and with care and patience brings it finally to earth. As one who has travelled far and wide, and whose knowledge would seem to be as extensive as have been his travels, Sir Martin has tales to tell of rare treasures acquired in many lands. . . . Lastly, after account of treasures unearthed and purchased in Italy, in Egypt, India, and Peru, of the Carpaccios discovered at St. Jean-de-Luz, of old furniture picked up in Switzerland, the author concludes with a chapter about the beautiful old ruined castle near Maidstone which he found, and having repaired and preserved has now made his home, and the repository of all those artistic treasures he has gathered together as the result of his devotion to the sport of collecting."—Int Studio

"Those who are attracted by the picture of a leisured and cultivated gentleman discoursing on his favourite possessions will read the book with pleasure. In spite, however, of its readable character, we should have preferred a more straightforward catalogue of the pictures and 'objets d'art,' some of which are of considerable interest."

+ — Ath 1914:2:23 Jl 4 550w

Int Studio 54:79 N '14 200w

"A book that every collector will take to his heart, a book that should interest also those strangely dispassionate persons of taste who love without coveting the things that are collected."

+ Nation 100:34 Ja 7 '15 270w

CONWAY, THOMAS, Jr., and PATTERSON, ERNEST MINOR. Operation of the new bank act. *$2 (1c) Lippincott 14-3932

An analysis of the new Federal reserve act. The authors realize that at this early date no complete estimate of the workings and effects of the new law can be made. The purpose of their book is "to give whatever assistance may be within their power to the formulation of public opinion through the dissemination of such information as is now available. . . . The Federal reserve act marks such a pronounced departure in American banking methods that every bit of light shed upon the new conditions will be helpful." (Preface)

Reviewed by W. A. Scott

+ — Am Econ R 4:495 Je '14 1000w

+ A L A Bkl 10:387 Je '14

"There is much internal evidence that the writers have drawn very heavily from correspondence and conversation with the banking fraternity—an admirable method for the problem at hand." H. G. Moulton

+ — J Pol Econ 22:311 O '14 1100w

"It forms a convenient manual for those interested in the new law whether as bankers, officials, or students; and its statements are generally accurate and temperate."

+ — Nation 98:469 Ap 23 '14 2800w

"The style is clear and moderate, showing both open-mindedness toward change and a conservative tone of comment, with a marked tendency toward hopefulness of view. Many of the subjects are contentious, about which minds will disagree, and on such the conclusions are left open, as they should be."

+ N Y Times 19:43 Mr 1 '14 2400w

"After a somewhat hurried reading of Mr. Conway's book, it may be said that it supplies what many men want. This is high praise. The book gives every evidence of careful and intelligent study and evokes admiration because of the short time in which it has been produced. It is, moreover, readable, and makes a somewhat dry subject interesting." T. H. Price

+ Outlook 106:559 Mr 7 '14 1050w

"With [some] necessary limitations, however, the book is highly to be recommended as a convenient, accurate, and sensible commentary on the new law."

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:561 S '14 150w

"Certainly a book could not well be more timely than this; or a statement more orderly and moderate" Algernon Tassin

+ Pub W 85:1068 Mr 21 '14 850w

CONYBEARE, FREDERICK CORNWALLIS. <sup>10</sup> Historical Christ. *$1.50 (2c) Open ct. 14-20134

A volume intended, says its author, "as a plea for moderation and good sense in dealing with the writings of early Christianity." More specifically it is an investigation of the views of Mr. J. M. Robertson, Dr. A. Drews, and Prof. W. B. Smith, each of whom has thrown doubt on the historicity of Jesus. The contents of the book is as follows: Historical method; Pagan mystery plays; The argument from silence; The epistles of Paul; External evidence; The art of criticism; Dr. Jensen; Epilogue.

Reviewed by S. J. Case

Am J Theol 18:611 O '14 120w

"He is well worth the reading."

+ Ind 80:29 O 5 '14 110w

Nation 99:286 S 3 '14 600w

N Y Times 19:392 S 20 '14 80w

Outlook 108:105 S 9 '14 80w

COOK, SIR EDWARD TYAS. Life of Florence Nightingale. 2v il *$7.50 Macmillan 13-35965

One purpose of the author of this two volume work seems to have been to demolish the

COOK, SIR EDWARD TYAS—Continued.
popular sentimentalized picture of Florence Nightingale as the ministering angel who laid cool and soothing fingers on fevered brows and passed on into legend and history, and to put into its place the picture of the real woman, big brained as well as big hearted, who won her victories in the Crimea thru magnificent organizing ability and administrative skill. "The record shows that her Crimean experience was in a sense the beginning of her active life—a spectacular episode which served as a starting-point for more valuable achievement. The whole problem of the health of the British soldier had been opened up to her; the foundation of her later work as hospital reformer and pioneer in modern nursing methods had been laid." (Nation)

"An able and authoritative work."

+ A L A Bkl 10:181 Ja '14

+ Ath 1913,2:sup395 O 11 70w

"Brilliant, convincing biography."

+ Ath 1913,2:549 N 15 2300w

Reviewed by Fola La Follette

+ Bookm 38:684 F '14 2100w

Reviewed by H. C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '13 530w

"It takes its place among the more notable biographies of modern times." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 1100w

"It is in every respect an excellent and unusually important work." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 56:54 Ja 16 '14 1750w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 12:443 Ja '14 80w

"Sir Edward Cook has given us another notable biography as scholarly and sympathetic as his 'Life of Ruskin.' To all who love what is truly great in human nature, this book will remain invaluable."

+ Ind 77:136 Ja 26 '14 920w

Lit D 48:265 F 7 '14 470w

+ Nation 98:36 Ja 8 '14 1000w

+ N Y Times 19:37 Ja 25 '14 1300w

"The book in all its voluminous detail repays the most careful reading." F. M. Colby

+ No Am 199:302 F '14 1000w

"We cannot speak too highly of the work of her biographer."

+ Outlook 107:45 My 2 '14 500w

+ R of Rs 49:46 Ja 14 1250w

"He gives us a great personal biography of a great subject, and he gives also what will be the authoritative history of the great external movements of which Florence Nightingale was the inspirer and initiator."

+ Sat R 116:750 D 13 '13 1800w

"Sir Edward Cook knows what a biography ought to be, and has given here a capital example of the art. It is written to the scale of the importance of the various events in Florence Nightingale's life, and never wanders into historical matters not strictly relevant to her career."

+ Spec 111:823 N 15 '13 2700w

Reviewed by Belle Sherwin

+ Survey 31:805 Mr 28 '14 800w

COOK, SIR EDWARD TYAS. Why Britain is at war: the causes and the issues. *10c Macmillan SD14-9

A pamphlet setting forth in brief form by means of extracts from diplomatic correspondence and the speeches of ministers the British position in regard to the present European conflict. It is prepared by the Victoria League for the benefit of those who have not time to read or to digest the "White Paper" with its more than 150 documents.

Reviewed by E. B. Krehbiel

Dial 57:379 N 16 '14 50w

"Clear and admirable statement of 'the causes and the issues' of the present war."

+ Spec 113:335 S 5 '14 250w

COOK, MELVILLE THURSTON. Diseases of tropical plants. il $2.75 Macmillan Agr14-460

"The purpose of Dr. Cook's work is to direct attention to some of the most common and most destructive diseases of tropical plants; to give as practical a knowledge as possible of plant diseases in general and their causes; and to give the most common remedies and methods of prevention. Since the eastern and western tropics have each their own peculiar problems, the writer notes that his own experiences have been restricted entirely to the American tropics."—Nature

"Cook has published a timely volume which introduces us in a compact way to the diseases of the tropics." J. M. C.

+ Bot Gaz 57:334 Ap '14 180w

+ Nature 93:426 Je 25 '14 220w

COOK, THEODORE ANDREA. Curves of life. 2 il $5 (2c) Holt

The author has made a study of the spiral in nature and in art. He draws examples from astronomy, botany, zoology, human anatomy, architecture, the art of Dürer and da Vinci, to show how universal is the spiral formation. There are chapters on shells, horns, climbing plants and spiral staircases, all fully illustrated. There is an interesting chapter on Right- and left-handedness, and it is interesting to note that Leonardo da Vinci was left-handed, a fact made apparent, the author points out, in his drawings.

"Fascinating book. It is Mr. Cook's great merit to have brought together and illustrated beautifully prominent specimens of these harmonious variations in nature."

+ Ath 1914,2:620 D 12 800w

"Mr. Cook's book especially appeals to artists and men of science but the general reader will find in it very much of curious interest."

+ Boston Transcript p24 D 2 '14 400w

Sat R 118:655 D 26 '14 820w

COOK, WILLIAM ADELBERT, and O'SHEA, MICHAEL VINCENT. Child and his spelling. (Childhood and youth ser.) *$1 Bobbs 14-13545

The school subject of chief interest to laymen, if one can judge by the magazines and newspapers, say the authors, is spelling, and the charge most often brought against the public school is that it does not teach its pupils to spell. If the charge be true, this book ought to be given a careful reading by all interested in elementary education, for it is a report of a series of investigations into the problems connected with peculiarities of English spelling and attempts to teach it as a school subject. Part 1, on Learning to spell, takes up such matters as: Rules for spelling; Sources and causes of errors; The life history of certain spellings; etc. Part 2, on The spelling vocabulary, has chapters on: Popular views of spelling needs; Determining the written vocabulary of typical Americans; Sources and character of data; Word lists derived from correspondence; Spelling texts and spelling needs.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 20 '15 100w

El School J 15:16 S '14 160w

COOKE, MRS. GRACE (MACGOWAN), and MORRISON, CAROLINE WOOD. William and Bill. *$1.25 (1½c) Century 14-1769

This is a story of two boys and two mothers. One is a foolish woman who brings her son up as a "sissy," the other is a wise one who understands boy nature. Bill is the real hero of the story, and we follow him from his early boyhood up to his young manhood and leave him happily mated.

+ A L A Bkl 10:286 Mr '14 *

"The two boys are cousins; each is drawn with a slight exaggeration; William is rather too 'sissyish,' and Bill rather too rough, to be wholly credible. But the contrast is amusing."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '14 220w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"It was worth the effort of collaboration to create a new hero for the boy-world."

+ Nation 98:211 F 26 '14 130w

"It is a book that one cannot read without a clearer understanding of boys and a warmer sympathy with them."

+ N Y Times 19:19 Ja 18 '14 620w

"A wholesome, amusing story."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:91 Ap '14 40w

COOKE, MARJORIE BENTON. Bambi. il $*1.25
10 (1½c) Doubleday 14-16478

First we are asked to believe that Bambi succeeded in marrying the handsome, impractical Jarvis without his knowledge. Having achieved that state of credulity, we are ready for what follows. Bambi, aged nineteen, writes a short story so "true to life" that a magazine editor rewards her with a five hundred dollar prize. At the editor's further request she expands the story into a novel which immediately becomes a best seller. Charles Frohman humbly begs permission to dramatize it. Bambi consents on condition that Jarvis, hitherto an earnest but unsuccessful playwright, be given the task of dramatization. The secret of the book's authorship is kept until the night of production when Bambi, in a brilliant little speech before the footlights reveals the truth. Jarvis's feelings remain hurt for one week, then with his ego sufficiently chastened, he returns home to make it up with Bambi and to look forward hopefully to future successes in which he is to be allowed to collaborate.

+ A L A Bkl 11:121 N '14

"A refreshing, spontaneous little instalment of entertainment, clever, vivacious, essentially feminine, in that it has a whole lot of hidden strength beneath a soft and unaggressive exterior." F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:311 N '14 220w

"To few novels is given an opening chapter of such allurements and fascinating interest as is here seen."

+ Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 550w

"The story is brightly written." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:256 O 1 '14 330w

"If one can shut his eyes to the absurdity of its opening situation 'Bambi' is an entertaining tale. The most absurd and delightful heroine in a thousand."

+ Ind 80:27 O 5 '14 130w

"In a bubble over Bambi. That is where even the most satiated reader will quickly be. He cannot resist farther than page 152 at most."

+ Nation 99:582 N 12 '14 180w

"The trouble with all this is not that it is fantastic, but that it has neither the originality nor the imagination that might give its utter impossibility the grace of fantasy. Its characters are wooden and uninteresting. And yet it is not impossible to enjoy 'Bambi.' If one is very tired and wants a very light and cheerful bit of amusement, with a story that 'turns out well,' there may be some charm in 'Bambi.'"

+ N Y Times 19:400 S 27 '14 360w

"'Bambi' is a delicious bit of fiction, full of humor as well as farce." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 86:806 S 19 '14 580w

COOLEY, MAXWELL STEPHENS. Vacuum cleaning systems: a treatise on the principles and practice of mechanical cleaning. il $3 Heating and ventilating magazine co., 1123 Broadway, New York 14-970

"Mr. Cooley's seven years of experience in the preparation of specifications for, and the testing of, complete vacuum-cleaning plants in the buildings under the control of the Federal treasury department furnished the groundwork for this pioneer volume. The first chapter, beginning with the carpet sweeper, follows the history of mechanical cleaning through the use of compressed air and the piston pump to the development of stationary multi-stage turbine blowers. . . . succeeding chapters deal with the carpet renovator and other types, stems and handles, hose, pipe and fittings, separators, vacuum producers, control, scrubbing systems, selection of cleaning plant, tests, specifications, and portable vacuum cleaners."—Engin Rec

"A useful and practical book on a subject which, as yet, has had little or no treatment."

+ A L A Bkl 11:13 S '14

Engin N 71:647 Mr 19 '14 300w

Engin Rec 69:234 F 21 '14 200w

COOLIDGE, DANE. Bat Wing Bowles. il $*1.25
4 (1½c) Stokes 14-4587

Three primary ingredients are called for in the recipe for a good western story: Eastern hero, Western heroine, a group of merry and sportive cowboys. All three are present in this novel. The eastern hero meets the heroine in New York and follows her to her home in Arizona where the sportive cowboys wait ready to do their part in initiating him into western ways. He is a very frank and engaging youth, and he succeeds in riding the wild horse that is provided for him, struggles manfully to improve his accent, and, persists in his wooing of the heroine, altho for a long time she insists on treating him as a stranger.

"Life at the Bat Wing ranch in Arizona is depicted here with such a minute attention to detail as to tempt the reader to skip now and then in the hope of getting forward to something in the nature of action. In the three or four concluding chapters, drooping interest revives, and there is a spirited if not original situation wherein the hero proves his mastery over a man-killing broncho and completes his mastery over the cowgirl's heart."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 18 '14 150w

"The author has made a lively story, with plenty of humor and plenty of exciting events. And his cowboys are entirely all right."

+ N Y Times 19:112 Mr 8 '14 330w

COONEY, PERCIVAL JOHN. Dons of the old pueblo. il $*1.35 (1c) Rand 14-15173

A story of California in the year following the American occupation. Lieutenant Carroll entering Los Angeles with the American troops falls readily a victim to the sweetness and charm of Loreto Arillo, daughter of one of the old dons. His love is returned and the parents of the girl yield to the suit of one who is an officer, a Catholic and a gentleman. Then comes misunderstanding between Americans and the Spanish-Californians, due to lack of judgment and tact on the part of some of the American officers. Uprisings and rebellion follow, and a long bitter period of war and sorrow before the lovers are united and peace restored.

"A stirring tale of California." F. M. Holly

+ Pub W 86:1292 O 17 '14 320w

"It is a wholesomely exciting tale that is always entertaining."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 190w

COOPER, CLAYTON SEDGWICK. Man of Egypt. il $*1.25 Doran

"It is Egypt, with its face to the rising sun, Egypt, the coming nation, that Mr. Cooper makes the theme of his study of the land of the Sphinx and the pyramid. He is interested in neither mummies nor temples, nor excavations, but he has tried earnestly to discover just what the Egypt of to-day means and what the Egypt of to-morrow will mean. He has been especially interested in the new education that is gaining a foothold in Egypt. . . . Mr. Cooper finds also, among the significant features of Egypt's renaissance, the birth of a national spirit, a reviving national self-consciousness, which leads to the occasional outbreak of unrest under English rule."—N Y Times

"Mr. Cooper has studied the results and tendencies of Egyptian education under British rule as deeply as is possible in a short time for one who knows no Arabic—that is to say, his work, while statistically and superficially accurate, is not profound. He has depended for his premises upon the information furnished him by persons more or less responsible for the

COOPER, CLAYTON SEDGWICK.—Continued.... said education, and the conclusions he arrives at are but half-truths, as appears on close inspection. Mr. Cooper's book, slight as it is, may help to stimulate public opinion on a question of some moment to the world at large."

+ — Ath 1913.2:527 N 8 330w

+ Ind 81:28 Ja 4 '15 140w

+ — N Y Sun p8 D 20 '13 1750w

"The view he gives is a new one of that much written about land."

+ N Y Times 18:625 N 16 '13 630w

+ N Y Times 19:28 Ja 18 '14 30w

"It is a very readable volume."

+ R of Rs 49:120 Ja '14 90w

COOPER, CLAYTON SEDGWICK. Modernizing of the Orient. il *$2 (2c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-20351

The influence of Western methods of industry and education upon Eastern lands is the author's subject. Observations made upon two journeys around the world have furnished him with material for the book. He writes of: The hillmen of North Africa; Reforms in Egyptian education; Changing social order in India; China in the crucible; Modernizing the Filipinos; In the real Japan, etc. His general conclusion, summed up in his closing sentences is that "the Orient, in self preservation must be modernized, even Westernized to a degree at least," and that "the Occident can help, though she can never truly modernize the Orient—but the Orient can and will modernize herself."

"Vivid and intimate pictures of the conflict between the old cultural and religious institutions and these new utilitarian forces."

+ Ind 80:210 N 9 '14 40w

+ Ind 81:136 Ja 25 '15 220w

"It is a pity that his publishers have inflicted upon his interesting record so many typographical errors, and upon his photographs so many inane legends."

+ — Nation 100:171 F 11 '15 100w

+ N Y Times 20:3 Ja 3 '15 260w

COOPER, ELIZABETH (BEAVER). My lady of the Chinese courtyard. il *$1.50 (3) Stokes 14-6830

Elizabeth Cooper, translator, editor, or author, as the case may be, says of the letters that make up this book, that they were shown her by the writer's husband many years after they were written. "They were written by Kweili, the wife of a very high Chinese official, to her husband when he accompanied his master, Prince Chung, on his trip around the world." This refers to the first series; the letters of the second series were written by the same woman twenty-five years later, when the "new" education had crept in, when the old China trembled on the eve of revolution, when daughters were going with feet unbound, and sons were choosing their own wives. The two series afford an interesting contrast between the old China and the new.

+ A L A Bkl 11:31 S '14

"This book may be safely commended to all readers capable of appreciating a most unusually sympathetic and penetrating interpretation of an alien race." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:327 My '14 550w

"The second part has more relating to the political affairs of the country, and it may prove of the greater interest to the general reader, although it lacks somewhat of the quaintness of the earlier writing."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 15 '14 650w

+ Nation 98:575 My 14 '14 270w

"There is a deep vein of poetry in the thoughts of the writer, and the translator has not only recognised and preserved it; she has also clothed it in rhythmic English, so that not a little of the volume might be called a prose poem. The book is good for mere entertainment, but it is vastly more than that."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 29 '14 1000w

COOPER, ELIZABETH (BEAVER). Women of Egypt. il *$1.50 (2½c) Stokes (Eng ed 14-16468)

That quickening of aspiration among women, called by its critics "unrest," has touched the women of Egypt, too, as the author of this book shows. And she shows, also, that, as in other countries, it is sometimes the women themselves, with their conservatism and their clinging to old customs, who most impede their own progress. In some of her interesting chapters she writes of: Life along the Nile; Keeping house in Cairo; Egyptian women at school; The Egyptian harem; Marriage; Divorce and polygamy; The Egyptian woman and her children; The Egyptian question and the Egyptian woman.

"Not for the student, but a readable and informing book for the general public."

+ A L A Bkl 11:114 N '14

"The book, although of little value to the student, may be recommended as attractive to the general reader."

+ — Ath 1914.2:45 J1 11 430w

"Such a book as Mrs. Cooper's has a present interest and value and will have in time to come a historic importance, for it is quite unique." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p23 D 26 '14 720w

+ Dial 57:304 O 16 '14 450w

+ Ind 80:102 O 19 '14 26w

+ N Y Times 19:415 O 4 '14 110w

"Her judgment is sane, and her breadth of view is not weakened by the too frequent sacrifice of the principles rightly held among Western peoples. No better book could be found to give to those who are beginning to wake up from their provincial attitude towards the people of the East."

+ Outlook 108:441 O 21 '14 150w

+ R of Rs 50:761 D '14 50w

+ Spec 112:962 Je 6 '14 80w

COOPER, HOMER H., ed. Right living. *$1 (1½c) McClurg 14-8214

A book made up of brief essays, messages of ethical import to young people from men and women who have succeeded. Many of them were written especially for the students of Spiceland academy of which the editor is superintendent, others have been selected from lectures and books. "The articles have been written or selected by our most eminent men regardless of creed or denomination," says the Introduction.

"Wise counsel to the young, especially to young students of the male sex, is offered in short, persuasive, often unusually readable and richly suggestive form."

+ Dial 56:431 My 16 '14 170w

"The book, unlike many of its ilk, will interest young people—and older ones too."

+ Ind 79:415 S 21 '14 100w

CORBETT, LEE CLEVELAND. Garden farming. (Country life education ser.) il $2 Ginn 13-23334

This treatise on gardening and garden vegetables is designed for the market gardener and truck farmer. The chapters of part one are devoted to: Vegetable gardening, or olericulture; The soil as a factor in the work of the market gardener; Principles of planting and cultivation; Forcing and forcing structures; Root cellars and storage houses; Transportation of truck crops; Precooling and cold storage of vegetables; The home vegetable garden. Part two is wholly given up to detailed descriptions of the various vegetable crops and their culture. The volume is well indexed.

"Valuable to market gardeners, truck farmers, home gardeners, and students."

+ A L A Bkl 10:263 Mr '14 *

"It is clearly understandably written and abounds in useful and practical opinions."

+ Educ R 47:101 Ja '14 40w

"The book is a veritable encyclopedia of the subject and is well illustrated with photographs and diagrams."

+ Ind 78:212 My 4 '14 190w

"It is a book that the American grower is not likely to be able to dispense with, and so far as one can judge, the information seems to be very sound; it is certainly well put together and illustrated with plenty of good photographs."

E. J. R.

+ Nature 93:554 J1 30 '14 330w

CORBETT, LEE CLEVELAND. Intensive farming. (Outing handbooks) il *70c (2½c) Outing pub. 13-21759

"Intensive farming," says the author, "has for its object the most complete utilization of the soil and the production of maximum yields." It is, therefore, the most highly scientific type of farming. To show how its principles may be applied to the raising of various farm and garden crops is the object of this little book. There are a number of illustrations and a good index.

+ Nation 98:461 Ap 23 '14 300w

CORBIN, THOMAS W. Aircraft; aeroplanes, airships. il 75c (3c) McKay

The author has tried to compress within the brief limits of this book the fundamental facts about flying and flying machines. Contents: The present state of the flying art; How man can fly; How an aeroplane keeps its pose; British aeroplanes (biplanes); British monoplanes; Some famous machines; Flying in gusty weather; Airships and balloons; Notable airships; Aerial engines; Simple experiments. The book is illustrated and provided with an index.

CORELLI, MARIE (MINNIE MACKAY). Innocent: her fancy and his fact. *$1.35 (1c) Doran 14-18339

Innocent, the heroine of this story, is eighteen years old when she learns that she is a nameless foundling whom Hugo Jocelyn had taken into his home. It is her foster father's wish that she marry his nephew and heir and continue to live at Briar farm after his death, but she does not love Robin Clifford, and leaving the home to which she has no right, she goes to London to make her own way. Here she wins fame as a novelist; meets her mother, a brilliant, worldly woman who refuses to recognize her openly but offers to adopt her; has an unhappy love affair, and goes back to Briar farm to die. And when it is too late her father, who has just learned that the famous young writer is his child, comes back to England ready to acknowledge her as his own.

"All this seems hardly worth while, but for one purpose,—it may perhaps save a few readers from the waste of time involved in reading the original." F. T. Cooper

— Bookm 40:677 F '15 900w

"The sickly sweetness of luscious sentimentality is infused into the length and breadth of this story. In her 'L'Envoi' Miss Corelli avers that this story is true. If it be, then she possesses an extraordinary skill at making the true seem untrue, the real seem unreal, the possible seem impossible." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p24 N 11 '14 1100w
Ind 80:288 N 23 '14 32w

"Miss Corelli's new novel is the kind of book once beloved by the romantic and unsophisticated schoolgirl. The novel is written in Miss Corelli's usual style and has some rather pretty descriptive passages. Her admirers will probably enjoy it."

— + N Y Times 19:516 N 22 '14 350w

CORNFORD, FRANCIS MACDONALD. Origin of Attic comedy. *$2.40 Longmans

(Eng ed 14-21935)

"The comedies of Aristophanes are the beginning, and they are almost the end, of Mr. Cornford's evidence. What is the origin of Attic comedy? If we cannot answer that question from reading Aristophanes we are likely to ask it in vain. Mr. Cornford's theory is based, first to last, upon a close reading of the comedies themselves, interpreted with hints from Greek religion and folklore. . . . Mr. Cornford's theory as to their derivation—his explanation of their form—helps us to understand why the comedies of Aristophanes are in the shape we find them better than any theory or explanation yet put forward. It accounts better for all the facts, and must therefore be accepted as the truly scientific hypothesis till someone is able to turn up with a theory that accounts for them even more thoroughly."—Sat R

"On all these difficult literary questions the author shows his usual acuteness and resource, and he does well in supplying constant quotations from the Greek texts in his foot-notes. His book is excellent reading, the more so as the reader is often tempted to quarrel with him."

— Ath 1914.1:803 Je 6 1350w

"The book is good reading. It will interest the scholar who sees through its sophisms, but is amused by any fresh handling of the familiar facts."

— Nation 100:172 F 11 '15 1500w

"This is a bold and brilliant study. To follow Mr. Cornford through the details of his thesis is a rare delight. He is a scholar without pedantry. He can spend himself upon the small points that make his theory logical and tight without losing his sense of proportion, or exaggerating the importance of his pursuit. Moreover, he can come out of his study into the world and talk wisely of things which are forever fresh."

+ Sat R 117:404 Mr 28 '14 850w

Spec 113:sup445 O 3 '14 300w

CORNILL, CARL HEINRICH. Culture of ancient Israel. il *$1 (2½c) Open ct. 14-11258

Dr. Cornill, who is a professor of Old Testament history in the University of Halle, recognizes the legendary character of much of the Biblical narrative, but points out that legend must by its very nature have an historical substratum. It is his purpose, he says in the first essay, "to sketch in brief outline the character of the historical substratum underlying the oldest traditions of the people of Israel, and to show how upon this basis may be erected the true course of the early history of this remarkable people." This first essay, on The rise of the people of Israel, is followed by four others: Moses, the founder of monotheistic religion; The education of children in ancient Israel; Music in the Old Testament; The psalms in universal literature.

"The book is likely to be of great value to teachers and ministers."

+ Bib World 44:365 N '14 110w

"The book is small in size but great in contents."

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 18 '14 480w

+ Educ R 49:100 Ja '15 30w

Int J Ethics 25:273 Ja '15 160w

"A series of interesting lectures." J. H. L.

+ Psychol Bull 11:477 D 15 '14 40w

CORNISH, VAUGHAN. Waves of sand and snow, and the eddies which make them. il *$2.50 Open ct. (Eng ed GS14-654)

"Nearly twenty years ago Dr. Cornish was led to take up the study of waves with the view of comparing and co-ordinating the various types of wave that may be formed in air, and water, and earth; in the atmosphere, the hydrosphere, and lithosphere of our planet. . . . In 'Waves of sand and snow, and the eddies which make them' he sets forth in detail his researches, so far as they relate to undulations formed on the surface of sand and snow. In order to extend his knowledge of these superficial corrugations, the author has visited the desert dunes of Egypt, and the snow-drifts of Canada in winter."—Ath

"Probably the most characteristic feature of these researches is their quantitative accuracy, wherever measurement is possible. It is this feature that shows Dr. Cornish to be an observer imbued with a truly scientific spirit."

+ Ath 1914.1:597 Ap 25 500w

CORNISH, VAUGHAN—Continued.

"Dr. Cornish is his own photographer at every stage, and the pictures he has secured of different types of waves are unique among the illustrations of modern science." H: C. Shelley
+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 300w

"The book is to be recommended as the most interesting collection of observations concerning the whole subject which has yet appeared." A. Mallock

+ Nature 93:191 Ap 23 '14 1050w

"Interesting book, with some remarkable illustrations."

+ Pittsburgh 19:302 Jl '14 90w

"It is a difficult book in some ways, more for scientific minds than any other, yet it is a fascinating one for those generally who know and care for the sea and its shore. We doubt whether the subject has ever been treated so thoroughly before."

+ Sat R 117:376 Mr 21 '14 250w

"The admirable illustrations add charm to a most valuable and instructive piece of patient labour."

+ Spec 112:707 Ap 25 '14 600w

CORSAN, GEORGE HEBDEN. At home in the water. rev ed il $1 (4c) Assn. press

14-12295

This is an enlarged edition of a book described in the Book Review Digest in 1910. The author was employed by the International committee of the Y. M. C. A. to give his entire time for several months in instructing on a whole-sale plan, in order to forward the campaign which aims to make every man and boy in America a swimmer.

"The sins of omission are slight flaws in an otherwise remarkably complete and unquestionably authoritative book. No water lover should overlook it." Fremont Rider

+ Pub W 86:544 Ag 22 '14 600w

CORWIN, EDWARD SAMUEL. Doctrine of judicial review. $1.50 (3c) Princeton univ. press

14-19188

A book dealing with certain controversial problems that arise in the study of American constitutional history. "In the principal essay," says the author, "I have endeavored to present judicial review as the outcome of a view of legislative power which arose in consequence of the astonishing abuse of their powers by the early state legislatures." The papers that follow are: "We, the people," a consideration of the controversy over secession and nullification; The Pelatiah Webster myth; The Dred Scott decision; Some possibilities in the way of treaty-making.

"Students of government and of public affairs will read with unusual interest the volume entitled 'The doctrine of judicial review.' The author is not very profound in his grasp on political philosophy, but he is widely read in the literature of this particular topic."

+ Educ R 49:97 Ja '15 50w

CORY, GEORGE EDWARD. Rise of South Africa. 4v v 2 il $5.50 Longmans (10-23232)

"This is the second volume of an elaborate work, to be completed in four volumes, tracing the history of South Africa from the earliest times to 1857. The present volume begins the story of the new epoch which began in 1820." (Boston Transcript) "The account here given traces the life of the colony through the troublous period from 1820 to 1834. It is largely a record of heroic pioneer work, struggles with hostile natives and an inhospitable soil. There is the usual dreary tale of jealousy, inefficiency, mismanagement, corruption and petty local bickering, that abounds in pioneer ventures but the story as a whole is one which shows the indomitable determination which has made British colonization the world over a success." (Ann Am Acad)

"In general the temptations of the annalist are increasing; and his method and style are not as calm and clear as in the earlier volume. But the result is still an admirable contribution both to South African literature and to the history of the British empire." A. L. P. Dennis

+ Am Hist R 19:904 Jl '14 750w

"The second volume of Mr. Cory's 'Rise of South Africa' fully maintains the high standard set in the first." C. L. Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 53:323 My '14 500w

"South Africa is fortunate to have such a magnificent and elaborate work devoted to her history."

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 25 '14 450w

"The only criticism that can be made is that in a work of this kind authorities might have been more freely cited." H. E. E.

+ Eng Hist R 29:410 Ap '14 270w

COTES, SARA JEANNETTE (DUNCAN)
" (MRS. EVERARD COTES). His Royal Happiness. il $1.35 (1½c) Appleton

14-16756

The time of the story is an indefinite future administration when a certain James Phipps is president of the United States and a King John rules England. It is in this administration that Prince Alfred, third in line from the English throne, visits America and falls in love with Hilary Lanchester, daughter of an ex-president. He is a young man in delicate health and when the strenuous routine of his visit proves too much for him, he is sent to the Adirondacks where a famous American doctor effects a cure that makes a new man of him. Here he sees more of Hilary, and having made up his mind to remain in America and take up ranching in Colorado, he persuades her to marry him secretly. The day after the wedding he receives word that a wreck at sea has made him king. Five years of separation follow and then diplomatic relations are so arranged that an American girl is permitted to ascend a throne.

A L A Bkl 11:172 D '14

"Told with a convincing air of probability."

+ Cleveland 6:88 O '14 50w

"Light in manner to the verge of flippancy."

— Dial 57:391 N 16 '14 100w

"The story is written with humor and humaneness and it makes an entertaining trifle."

+ N Y Times 19:516 N 22 '14 620w

"The story is amusing and well invented until the prince becomes king, when the strain on probabilities becomes too strong and the interest drops."

+ Outlook 108:846 D 9 '14 50w

COULTER, JOHN GAYLORD. Plant life and plant uses. il $1.20 Am. bk. 13-19065

This high school text book is designed as an introduction to the further study of agriculture, domestic science and college botany. Plants are treated in their relation to man.

"The intimate style and helpful suggestions for study will tend to arouse the student, in school or out, to an interest in the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 10:264 Mr '14

"Professor Coulter possesses three characteristics which go far towards making a good textbook; a sense of perspective, good judgment in the choice of illustrations, and power of simple statement."

+ Nation 98:550 My 7 '14 120w

"The facts presented in the book are up to date and well chosen. For a class whose purpose is to learn of the activities and relations of plants, this is a very commendable text." C. E. Montgomery

+ School R 22:423 Je '14 260w

COULTER, JOHN MERLE. Elementary studies in botany. (Twentieth century text-bks.) il $1.30 Appleton 13-14376

A text book for high school students. "Chapters 1 to 14, inclusive, deal with what may be called 'pure' botany, and in these the pupil is taken step by step from the simpler to the more complex plants and their principal functions. . . . In the second part, which is entitled 'Plants in cultivation' one finds also not a little of pure botany. . . . There is a little concession to the 'practical' in the chapters on 'Seeds,' 'Other methods of propagation' and 'Plant breeding,' and considerably more in those on 'Cereals and forage plants,' 'Vegetables,' 'Fruits,' etc., and yet in even the most 'practical' of these one sees that the presentation is by one who is primarily a botanist." (Science)

"Useful for those who do not pursue the subject further."

+ A L A Bkl 10:264 Mr '14

"The volume is not only useful, but is readable and interesting."

+ Nation 97:236 S 11 '13 150w

"Dr. Coulter's book is a demonstration of the possibility of presenting much of applied botany in a scientific manner." C: E. Bessey

+ Science n s 39:358 Mr 6 '14 700w

COULTER, JOHN MERLE. Fundamentals of plant-breeding. il $1.50 (2c) Appleton

14-21039

A book addressed "to those who wish a simple statement of evolution and heredity; who wish information concerning the revolution in plant-breeding; or who wish a general introduction to the fundamental principles underlying agriculture." (Preface) There are chapters on: Variation in plants; The theory of natural selection; The theory of mutation; Reproduction; Mass culture; Pedigree culture; Mendel's law; Recent work in genetics; Combination of characters; The rôle of hybrids; How to secure drought-resistance; Forestry; The search for new plants; What the government is doing; The work of foreign stations; The soil.

COUNCILMAN, WILLIAM THOMAS. Disease and its causes. (Home univ. lib.) il $50c (1c) Holt 13-22808

The author defines disease as "a change produced in living things in consequence of which they are no longer in harmony with their environment." "Five chapters of the twelve which make up the volume are given to infectious diseases. One chapter discusses inheritance as a factor in disease. Here the problems of heredity and eugenics present themselves, but the author cannot say very much that is decisive. Chronic diseases claim one chapter, and the book closes with a chapter on the rapid development of medicine in the last fifty years." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 10:302 Ap '14

Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 200w

"Dr. Councilman writes of 'Disease and its causes' in a way to be of great practical value to any intelligent reader."

+ Nation 97:486 N 20 '13 80w

+ N Y Times 19:263 Je 7 '14 230w

"A brief, concise and practical study."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:126 My '14 20w

COUPERUS, LOUIS MARIE ANNE. Small souls; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. $1.35 (1c) Dodd 14-5312

This story, translated from the Dutch, is the first of four novels all dealing with the fortunes of a single family, the Van Lowes. The story opens with the return to the Hague of Constance, one of the daughters, after an absence of twenty years. For five of those years she had lived an honored life as the wife of an elderly ambassador. For fifteen she had lived in exile following a scandal, divorce and marriage with her lover, an under secretary of the legation. She returns full of simple affection for her family, moved by a longing to be near her mother, to renew relations with her many brothers and sisters and to become acquainted with their children. The mother, "Mamma" van Lowe, a fine old matriarch, welcomes her with love; for her the old scandal has ceased to exist, as it has for Constance, but for the others of the family, little souls, all, it is as fresh as tho the fifteen years had been but a day, and they think only of their own interests and the possible effect of Constance's return on their positions in society. The most interesting character in the story is Adrian, Constance's thirteen year old son, and as the last of the four books bears his name, one gathers that he will be of more importance in the stories that are yet to be translated.

+ A L A Bkl 11:220 Ja '15

"Before the end of the first chapter is reached, you feel, thanks to this conscientious minuteness, this carefully planned detail, that you are in the presence of a work of unusual distinction, wrought by a forceful personality." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:304 N '14 1900w

"Mr. Couperus is not a tractarian in novelist's clothes; he is an exceptional artist in prose fiction." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:300 O 16 '14 450w

"This is fiction of a high order, and ought, in its new dress, to find favor with a sufficient audience to justify the translator's hopes." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:461 O 15 '14 850w

"In the beginning, while we are being introduced to the numerous characters, the novel seems just a trifle tedious; but when the last page is reached we are sorry, and want very much to be informed as to what happened next."

+ N Y Times 19:410 O 4 '14 950w

"It is a serious and strong story overloaded with detail."

+ Outlook 108:603 N 11 '14 210w

"There is no doubt that Couperus's story of small-minded people, with all their little bickerings, their empty frittered lives, their stupid conventions, their boring narrow personalities, palls and often grows tedious to the reader. But regarded as a piece of psychology it is masterly work."

+ Sat R 117:346 Mr 14 '14 330w

+ Spec 112:272 F 14 '14 1400w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 28 '15 780w

COUSSENS, PENRHYN WINGFIELD, comp. 12 Diamond story book. il $1.50 (1c) Duffield 14-17092

A companion volume to "A child's book of stories." Mr. Coussens has selected over sixty tales drawn from many sources. Among them are the stories of Alfred the Great, William Tell, and Sigurd, a group of Robin Hood stories, and fairy and folk tales of many lands.

"A commendable collection of old and newer tales." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:446 D '14 140w

"An admirable compilation."

+ Ind 80:414 D '14 160w

Lit D 49:1134 D 5 '14 80w

Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 40w

"The young people who like wonder tales will be delighted to find all this new material and old matter in a strange dress."

+ N Y Times 19:480 N 1 '14 100w

COUTTS, HENRY T. Library jokes and jottings: a collection of stories partly wise and mostly otherwise. 65c (2½c) Wilson, H. W.

One librarian's triple service to humanity, that of guide, philosopher and friend, has netted him some amusing anecdotes along the way. He uses the man of the street's idea that "e'es got a easy crib, reg'lar wages and no worry," as an illustration of the general opinion that librarianship is a "bed of roses." He says, "The simile is not unappropriate, for there is no bed of roses without thorns, and the librarian certainly does experience many pricks." In one chapter are illustrated some book borrowing types of the genus homo; in another he introduces cranks with "bees in their bonnets." There are chapters on twisted titles, humors of the catalog, ten commandments for borrowers of books, the juvenile reader, reformed library signs, advertising up-to-date, librarian's correspondence, etc.

"We are grateful to the author for this little volume, and its clever arrangement of 'smiles,' but oh, why did his publisher put such an atrocious cover on the book!"

+ Bulletin of Bibliography 8:58 Jl '14 130w (Review of Eng ed)

COUTTS, HENRY T.—Continued.

"We are glad to record that this English book, under the American agency of the H. W. Wilson Co., has appeared in a more appropriate and dignified cover."

+ Bulletin of Bibliography 8:118 Ja '15 30w
(Review of Am ed)

"The Islington librarian tells many library stories, old and new, English and American, funny and moderately funny." E. L. Pearson

+ — Nation 98:750 Je 25 '14 1000w

COVERT, REV. WILLIAM CHALMERS. Wild woods and waterways. il *$1.35 (3c) Presbyterian bd.

The little essays that make up this book are the field notes of an out-door lover and fisherman, of one who is equally at home in the Adirondacks, the Rockies, or in the woods north of the Great Lakes. Some of his subjects are: The wild woods; Solitude and companionship; "I go a fishing"; The Au Sable river; Tent life and campfire; The Adirondack woods; On northern shores; The dunes; The last frontier.

COWARD, HENRY. Choral technique and interpretation. (Handbooks for musicians) $2.50 Gray, H. W.

"This, by far the most important and valuable book published on the management and training of choral societies, has been, says the author, 'written to assist choral conductors and choir-masters, though the scope is not limited to these, as many of the principles embodied in the text are applicable to soloists as well as to orchestral and military conductors. It will certainly be useful to these, but to directors of choral societies it will prove invaluable. . . . Mr. Coward has set down for the benefit of the rising generation of singers and conductors the results of his long experience.'—Sat R

"An account which must be fascinating as well as helpful, not only to conductors of choirs, but of bands and orchestras likewise—in fact, to all students of music who wish to keep abreast of the times." H. T. Finck

+ Nation 98:632 My 21 '14 570

"His directions as to voice-production, tempo, pronunciation, and the rest are beyond all praise; his appendices, dealing with the most minute details, are marvellous in their exhaustiveness. Nothing that he has remarked during his distinguished career seems to be omitted. Of course, such a master as Mr. Coward possesses a personal secret which he cannot convey; but every young conductor who buys this book and applies its teaching will be in a fair way to discovering the secret for himself."

+ Sat R 117:148 Ja 31 '14 530w

COWEN, SIR FREDERIC HYMEN. My art and my friends. il *$3 Longmans (Eng ed A14-140)

"Sir Frederic H. Cowen, one of the best known and popular of living English composers, fills this large volume with entertaining gossip of his long career as a musician. Not much of it can be called important. He does not discuss many questions of artistic significance, and the numerous anecdotes he has to tell about musicians he has known are much more frequently about amusing personal experiences than they are about the real personalities of those friends or their qualities as musicians."—N Y Times

+ Sat R 117:148 Ja 31 '14 530w

"There are details and stories in this volume which, though they may be interesting to the author's friends, seem rather small beer. The book, however, contains much that is readable."

+ — Ath 1913:2:534 N 8 230w

"Throughout his book Mr. Cowen's main object is the entertainment rather than the instruction of the reader. There are many pages of anecdotes and jokes, some of them rather stale."

+ — Nation 98:276 Mr 12 '14 800w

"Has few of the qualities of the pot-boiler."

+ N Y Times 18:644 N 23 '13 250w

"While some might wish Sir Frederic's book had a little more definite connection and a little more serious purpose, which would have made it not less, but more, interesting, no doubt most of its readers will find it worth while."

+ — N Y Times 19:317 Jl 19 '14 750w

"Sir Frederic Cowen has not had a very adventurous life, but he has led a sufficiently interesting one to justify a volume of reminiscences. He has met many distinguished men and women in his time, and he has pleasant anecdotes to tell of them. Unlike most modern biographers, he has nothing unpleasant to say of his friends."

+ Sat R 116:531 O 25 '13 200w

COWL, R. P. Theory of poetry in England, its development in doctrines and ideas from the sixteenth century to the nineteenth century. *$1.25 Macmillan 14-14136

"The question, What literary theories underlie the general mass of English work in poetry? if not absolutely novel, is yet pleasingly un-hackneyed. Prof. Cowl has chosen to deal with it by means of a series of illustrative passages taken from the works of the chief writers of nearly four centuries—to make a 'source-book' about it, in fact—rather than summarize and interpret their utterances in paragraphs of his own. . . . The subject of the book as a whole is divided up into a dozen sections, several of which have subsections; and within each division the sequence of authors is chronological. One may thus trace through four centuries or so the changes among us of idea and principle with regard to such matters as imitation of nature, translation, style and diction, functions and principles of criticism."—Ath

"Our author has produced not merely a compendium which cannot fail to be instructive and stimulating to any student who will use it attentively, but also a work which is in itself singular and charming. Not many books inspire a reviewer with curiosity as to their future fortunes. We do, however, feel curiosity as to the influence which this unique and scholarly piece of work many exercise both on the individual student of English literature, and on the method of handling literary theory in teaching. We should expect it to start something of a tradition and that a valuable one."

+ Ath 1914:2:244 S 5 1150w

"An admirable idea is carried out by Mr. Cowl, in the compilation of this volume."

+ Boston Transcript p25 D 2 '14 350w

Sat R 118:443 O 24 '14 1600w

"This book should be very helpful to students of English poetry and criticism."

+ Spec 113:62 Jl 11 '14 80w

COWLES, JULIA DARROW. Art of story-telling. *$1 (2c) McClurg 14-5055

This little book for the story-teller has chapters on: Story-telling in the home; Why tell stories in school? How to choose stories for telling; The telling of the story; Use of the story in primary grades; Jingles, fables, and folk-lore; Myth and hero tales; Holiday and vacation stories; Bible stories; Systematic story-telling; The joy of story-telling, and Story-telling as an art. These chapters make up Part 1; in Part 2, a number of stories suitable for young children are provided.

"Miss Cowles writes persuasively, and her book will do good."

+ Dial 56:391 My 1 '14 120w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:301 D '14 50w

COX, GEORGE J. Pottery, for artists, craftsmen and teachers. (Technical art ser.) il *$1.25 (4½c) Macmillan 14-19861

A handbook for the craftsman. A Historical summary is followed by chapters on: Clays and pastes; Built shapes; Moulding, casting, and pressing; Jigger and jolley work; Thrown shapes; Turning or shaving; Tile-making; Drying; Firing biscuit; Glost firing; Glazes and lustres; Decoration; Figurines; Kilns; The educational value of pottery. In an appendix the author discusses the Equipment for a small pottery or a school. A glossary and general information concerning materials, etc. are given in a second appendix. The illustrations consist of diagrams and working drawings.

"A very complete and adequate guide for the student or teacher of pottery."

+ A L A Bkl 11:206 Ja '15

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 3 '15 230w

"Into this short book, unique in makeup and illustration, he has compressed a deal of exact direction, important alike to student and teacher."

+ Ind 80:179 D 21 '14 50w

"A thoroughly practical manual."

+ Int Studio 54:sup98 Ja '15 90w

+ School Arts Magazine 14:444 F '15 130w

COX, HENRY JOSEPH, and ARMINGTON, JOHN H. Weather and climate of Chicago. (Geographic soc. of Chicago) il *$3 Univ. of Chicago press 11-13648

The authors present a detailed study of the variations of weather and climate in one locality during a period of over forty years, beginning with the establishment of the local weather bureau in Chicago in 1870. Temperature, precipitation, atmospheric moisture, cloudiness and sunshine, wind direction and velocity, barometric pressure, and storm movements are taken account of.

Reviewed by Alexander McAdie

Science n s 40:525 O 9 '14 750w

COX, JOHN. Beyond the atom. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c Putnam 13-15715

"'Beyond the atom,' by Prof. John Cox, who worked for nine years with Professor Rutherford in the physics laboratories of McGill university, is a sketch of the discoveries in radio-activity described more fully for the specialist in the works of Rutherford and Mme. Curie. Among the results achieved in this field, according to the author, is a removal of the quarrel between the physicist, who would have the earth a molten mass 100,000,000 years ago, and the geologist, to whom this allowance is all too short for the deposition of the stratified material on its surface."—Nation

A L A Bkl 10:264 Mr '14

"I know of no better short treatment of the subject for the non-technical reader. It is both reliable and interesting. The only defect is a certain lack of up-to-dateness shown in the inclusion of some old values of constants and in the omission, though published in 1913, of the epoch-making work of Laue and his co-workers, published in 1912." R. A. Millikan

+ — Astrophys J 40:585 D 14 200w

Nation 97:516 N 27 '13 150w

"He not only explains clearly the manner in which the new rays and the new substances have been discovered but enables the reader to comprehend easily the effect of the discoveries on previous theories."

+ N Y Sun p7 N 8 '13 60w

+ N Y Times 19:185 Ap 12 '14 80w

Spec 110:980 Je 7 '13 70w

COX, KENYON. Artist and public, and other essays on art subjects. il *$1.50 (1c) Scribner 14-18044

The seven essays that make up the contents of this book are: Artist and public; Jean François Millet; The illusion of progress; Raphael; Two ways of painting; The American school; Augustus Saint-Gaudens. The author says of them that they may be considered as the application of the principles outlined in his earlier work, "The classic point of view," to particular artists or to whole schools and epochs. "The essay on Raphael, for instance, is little else than an illustration of the chapter on 'Design.'" The essays are held together by another bond, as he points out further; each of them has a bearing on the subject of the first, the relation between artist and public.

"They are all interesting and suggestive, the one on St. Gaudens specially so, a tribute, to a loved friend as well as to a master."

+ A L A Bkl 11:109 N '14 *

"Agreeable and discriminating essays." A. de Vivier

+ Bookm 40:323 N '14 500w

"When Mr. Kenyon Cox, dropping for a while the painter's brush, takes up the critic's pen the resultant product is always something valuable and delightful."

+ Ind 80:141 O 26 '14 140w

+ Nation 100:89 Ja 21 '15 400w

"His criticism invariably contributes to a better understanding of the past."

+ N Y Times 19:546 N 29 '14 1050w

+ R of Rs 50:755 D '14 370w

"A notable volume."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 29 '14 400w

COXON, MURIEL (HINE) (MRS. SIDNEY COXON). Man with the double heart. il *$1.30 (1c) Lane 14-14912

Peter McTaggart, half Scotch, half Italian, is told by a famous specialist, that he is the possessor of a "double heart." When Peter's alarm has been allayed and he learns that no serious physical consequences are to be feared, he is rather pleased than otherwise, for the phenomenon seems to offer an explanation for the divided state of his affections. The story thereafter is taken up with his philanderings between the two ladies in the case, calm, English Cydonia, and vivacious, French Fantine. But in the end it is everyday, little Jill who claims all his heart—or both of them.

"We do not wish to deny that the author shows smartness in her writing, that she has produced a really readable tale, or that her views may be acceptable to many, if not to us."

+ — Ath 1914.2:353 O 10 270w

"There is an abundance of adventure in the story and plenty of excitement which carries it to an unlooked-for climax."

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 90w

"The story is written with much spirit and liveliness and is particularly to be commended for the swift, graphic lines of its character portrayal."

+ N Y Times 19:363 Ag 30 '14 300w

CRADDOCK, CHARLES EGBERT, pseud. (MARY NOAILLES MURFREE). Story of Duclehurst. *$1.35 (1c) Macmillan 14-12285

An old Mississippi mansion that passed out of the hands of its rightful owners at the close of the great civil conflict is the scene of part of this story's action and the point about which its plot centers. Only two of the Ducle heirs are living at the time the story opens, the twin brothers, Adrian and Randal, and the house itself has just passed into the possession of Edward Floyd-Rosney, the man who had been the successful rival of Randal Ducle in an earlier love affair. By the blind leading of fate it is Mr. Floyd-Rosney who finds the papers that establish the Ducle right to the estate, but before the claim can be settled a more impersonal force enters; the great river itself takes a hand, and, breaking its bounds, it sweeps away all traces of the historic house.

"The story is told with a well-controlled sobriety of style that makes even its wildest happenings quite plausible." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:95 S '14 420w

"A story, which, if not remarkable for originality, at least has all the necessary requisites for popularity."

+ — Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 300w

Ind 79:450 S 28 '14 70w

"The author has not quite succeeded in keeping firm hold on all the threads of her complicated plot, and some of the characters are introduced with rather more impressiveness than their subsequent importance altogether warrants. Mr. Floyd-Rosney is a little too much like Mr. Dombey to be entirely credible."

+ — N Y Times 19:306 Jl 12 '14 770w

"It abounds in incident, has a plot which is exciting and complicated, and both its dialogue and its descriptions are crisp and sharp."

+ Outlook 107:1017 Ag 22 '14 200w

CRADDOCK, C. E., pseud.—Continued.

"This novel is slow and difficult, but original in subject, and well written."

+ — Spec 113:854 D 12 '14 30w

CRAM, RALPH ADAMS. Ministry of art. *$1.50
(1½c) Houghton 14-10384

Seven essays upon the function of art as an agency working toward the redemption of human character. They are: Art the revealer; The philosophy of the Gothic restoration; The place of the fine arts in public education; The artist and the world; The craftsman and the architect; American university architecture; The ministry of art.

"Suggestive, optimistic, and often charming, they reveal the author's knowledge in his own special field of art, that of architecture, as well as his wide reading in history and philosophy. Only for large libraries."

+ A L A Bkl 11:63 O '14

+ Cath World 100:388 D '14 920w

+ Dial 57:112 Ag 16 '14 250w

"When we read the book with care we find it a congeries of mystical rhapsodies, of violent attacks upon all with which he is not in sympathy, and of exaggerated praise of all that fires his own highly inflammable imagination. But we must not allow the reader of this review to suppose that Mr. Cram's book is without its interesting presentations of truth."

+ — Nation 93:261 Ag 27 '14 900w

+ R of Rs 50:763 D '14 180w

"The book is crowded with thoughts that should be pondered by those engaged in Art education."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:146 O '14 300w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 S 3 '14 950w

CRAMB, JOHN ADAM. Germany and England; with an introd. by the Hon. Joseph
H. Choate. *$1 (2½c) Dutton 14-18396

The book is compiled from a series of lectures delivered by the late Professor Cramb in 1913 at Queen's college in London. The author's aim was to bring about on the part of England a better understanding of Germany and of German ideals. This understanding is necessary, he holds, whether the two countries are to be friends or enemies, but his personal belief seems to be that the two are to be enemies, for, in a remarkable way, the book looks forward to an inevitable conflict. To a large extent it is an analysis of Treitschke's philosophy. The four sections of the book deal with: The problem; Peace and war; Treitschke and young Germany; Past and future.

"An absorbing and illuminating book, the result of a wide knowledge of both German and English affairs and characteristics."

+ A L A Bkl 11:98 N '14+

"There are in the book some preconceptions to which a Catholic simply cannot give assent."

+ — Cath World 100:544 Ja '15 600w

Reviewed by T. D. A. Cockerell

+ Dial 57:293 O 16 '14 1650w

"A valuable commentary on General von Bernhardi's book." E. B. Krehbiel

+ Dial 57:382 N 16 '14 100w

"We fear that Professor Cramb has studied his subject too much. Not only does he tend to overestimate Treitschke's influence, but he is deplorably imbued with his spirit."

+ — Ind 80:102 O 19 '14 670w

+ N Y Times 19:409 O 4 '14 1850w

"Lord Roberts declared that the book should be read by every one who wishes to get a thorough understanding of the forces which led to the war."

+ N Y Times 19:522 N 29 '14 100w

"With the exception of a few exaggerations, especially in the footnotes, it is a creditable presentation of the views of the Prussian school of historians." Carlton Hayes

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:706 D '14 500w

+ R of Rs 50:633 N '14 120w

"Those who would begin to realize what the 'German idea' really means in Germany should begin with the lectures of Professor Cramb."

+ Sat R 118:298 S 12 '14 2050w

"Let our readers buy this little book and see for themselves what the nature of the inspiration is at the back of the German 'Weltpolitik.' They will learn, in the smallest possible space, what Germany is fighting for, and what Britain is resisting."

+ Spec 113:267 Ag 22 '14 3000w

"Unquestionably the single book to be read if one can be imagined too busy to read any other [war book]."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 950w

CRANDALL, LATHAN AUGUSTUS. Days in the open. il *$1.50 Revell 14-16455

"The author has been an enthusiastic angler all his life and has vivid recollections of his achievements with the rod and line in this country and abroad. His best stories are those which date back to his early boyhood." (N Y Times) "His titles are happy and indicate the contents—thus, The boy and the brook, The town meeting (of fishes), Among the northern pines, The bully of the Oswegatchie, are a few. Mr. Crandall is minister, fisherman, essayist, and observer all in one." (Outlook)

"The delightful record of peaceful adventure."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 220w

"Some very pleasing fish stories are told."

+ N Y Times 19:373 S 6 '14 100w

"His book will give much pleasure to many readers."

+ Outlook 108:104 S 9 '14 80w

CRANE, FRANK. Footnotes to life. *$1 (2c)
Lane 14-20667

A book made up of brief paragraphs reprinted from various newspapers for which they were first written. The author says: "This book is desultory; because it is about life, and life is desultory. Here life is not interpreted by a system. Events are rather given their marginal significance. I have always loved footnotes, little paragraphs at the bottom of the page, explaining things. There is no beginning nor end to this volume. You may open it in the middle as well as at the first page, and if you do not like one place you may try another." (Preface)

Reviewed by Calvin Winter

Bookm 40:567 Ja '15 110w

"The disconnected paragraphs made into a book show the general trend of the writer's thought, and make for kindness and all brotherliness."

+ Outlook 108:789 D 2 '14 80w

CRAPSEY, ALGERNON SIDNEY. Rise of the working-class. *$1.30 (1½c) Century 14-14355

The author considers the two most significant of the social changes of our day, the destruction of the family as the industrial unit and the rise of the working-class. We are even now, he says, tho we do not fully realize it, in the grip of a mighty revolution; the civilization which was built upon the family as the industrial and political and social unit and of the servility of the laboring class must fall and a new order must take its place. Some of the most interesting of the chapters take up: The downfall of the father; Responsibility of the mother; The emancipation of the children; The revolt of the parasites; The revolt of the workers; Working-class religion; Working-class morality, etc.

"Despite its somewhat radical treatment and occasional logical lapses, interesting and stimulating."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:153 D '14

"Although the author is guilty of several logical lapses, as, for example, in chapters seven and eleven, the book is, on the whole, interesting, stimulating, and for the average reader well worth a careful perusal."

+ — Ann Am Acad 56:174 N '14 90w

Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 600w

"Is little more than a translation of Marxian socialism into that fervid language which enshrines so much of the modern product of uplift and 'new thought,' although it is but fair to say that this particular specimen is above the average so far as style is concerned."

— Nation 99:694 D 10 '14 170w

"The view of society presented harmonizes quite well with what one hears who listens at the street corner to the remarks of the socialistic labor reformers."

— N Y Times 19:510 N 22 '14 300w

"The book is on the whole valuable for the boldness and comprehensiveness of its statement of the position of the social revolutionist."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ja 28 '15 1250w

CRAVEN, ELIZABETH (BERKELEY), BAR-<sup>1</sup>ONESS CRAVEN. Beautiful Lady Craven; ed. with notes and a biographical and historical introduction containing much unpublished matter, by A. M. Broadley and Lewis Melville. 2v il $7.50 Lane 13-25628

In her old age Lady Craven, then the Margravine of Ansbach wrote her autobiography. This work, first published in 1826, is reprinted here with a filling in by the editors of the gaps deliberately left in the original.

Ath 1913,2:sup396 O 11 100w

"The beautiful Lady Craven—who had, in fact, no very convincing claims to the adjective—is so tawdry a personality that not even the experienced pens of Mr. Broadley and Mr. Melville can impart much interest to her story."

— Ath 1913,2:523 N 8 180w

"In spite of the fact that she knew everybody in one of the most brilliant periods of history, the introduction to her memoirs is much more diverting. Besides being of interest, this introduction, which takes up over half of the first volume, is very necessary to one's enjoyment of the reminiscences." Graham Berry

+ — Bookm 38:550 Ja '14 1500w

"Messrs. Broadley and Melville may be heartily congratulated on this definitive edition of a remarkable autobiography." H. C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 15 '13 300w

"One certainly can obtain from the two handsome volumes a sufficiently adequate notion of the life of a century ago." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 1050w

Lit D 48:842 Ap 11 '14 170w

"She was herself not an ill writer though without brilliance, and her memoirs have a certain historical value in their presentation of men and places of the day, for her chief instrument of falsification was the simple expedient of leaving things out. The editors have added footnotes which considerably enhance the value of the work."

+ Nation 97:621 D 25 '13 300w

"But the memoirs are extremely entertaining, even though they are not of a confessional sort. Cleverly written by a brilliant and versatile woman, they touch on men and matters of historic interest and give intimate views that greatly exceed in vividness the descriptions and comments of the non-contemporaneous historian."

+ N Y Times 19:87 F 22 '14 450w

"Many new facts are included in these volumes, and the editors use them with skill, giving us a lively impression of England and the English from the time of George II to the close of the reign of George IV."

+ Outlook 106:425 F 21 '14 180w

"Her wonderful vitality gives an interest to her memoirs, and her stories of friends and foes often entertain us."

+ Sat R 116:717 D 6 '13 570w

CRAWFORD, DANIEL. Thinking black. il *$2
Doran 13-22104

"The Rev. D. Crawford is a Scotch missionary who entered Africa in 1889, at Benguela, on the west coast. For more than twenty-two years he did not leave the great field of his endeavor, which lay north of British and German South Africa, and was for the most part confined to Portuguese West Africa and those parts of the Belgian Congo that lie just north of Rhodesia. Mr. Crawford's book is as unexpected and original in its method as the title is striking and unforgettable. 'As a man thinketh, so is he,' And as the negroes in Central Africa think through hundreds and thousands of miles of what Mr. Crawford calls the 'long-grass country,' so is their way of life. Mr. Crawford has tried to make us realize what are some of the processes of the negro mind, as it works habitually in its native environment, as things now are."—R of Rs

"A man of reflection and scholarship, he writes brilliantly, strangely, with pithy interjections and striking phrases."

+ A L A Bkl 10:348 My '14 +

"A book of exceptional quality that endeavors to help us realize something of the negroes themselves, as they live and think and act in the vast stretches of the dark continent."

+ R of Rs 49:366 Mr '14 800w

"His book is a strange and, in some ways, a brilliant production. He is obviously a man of scholarship and wide and careful reading, and his wayward fancy bears along on its full flood allegory, metaphysical reflection, and psychology, which convey to the reader flashes of illumination as to the character of the negro."

+ — Spec 110:60 Ja 11 '13 2500w

CRAWFORD, MARY CAROLINE. Social life in old New England. il $2.50 (2c) Little 14-18566

By diligent searching thru old records and letters and diaries the author has gathered together a great amount of interesting matter relating to the social life and customs of our Puritan forefathers and mothers. In the little red schoolhouse; Going to college; Choosing a profession; Getting married; Setting up house-keeping; Having a picture taken; Reading books; The occasional journey, are some of the chapter titles. Other chapters have to do with amusements, funerals and holidays, including a chapter on Christmas. There are a number of interesting illustrations from photographs and old prints.

"Interesting in connection with Alice Morse Earle's 'Home life in colonial days' which gives more domestic details."

+ A L A Bkl 11:168 D '14

"Miss Crawford has again winnowed documents with fascinating results." Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:432 D '14 670w

"Very successful has Miss Crawford been in imparting an early Yankee flavor to the pages of her 'Social life in New England.'"

+ Dial 57:461 D 1 '14 250w

"Drawn from many sources, much of the material is new and all interesting and skillfully used."

+ Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 40w

"Such a book, naturally, abounds in detail, but it is full of information valuable in itself."

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 170w

"Is of no marked novelty in theme or treatment, but a pleasant addition to the steadily growing series of gossiping commentaries upon the manners and conditions of early New England life."

+ Nation 99:750 D 24 '14 400w

+ N Y Times 20:46 F 7 '15 130w

"An interesting popular addition to national history."

+ Outlook 108:789 D 2 '14 130w

"It is the more romantic side of the question which appeals to her, and which she is able to make appealing to her readers."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 880w

CRAWFURD, RAYMOND. Plague and pestilence in literature and art. il *$4.15 Oxford

"In these pages Dr. Raymond Crawford deals with the artistic and literary associations of the pestilence from the earliest times until the end of the eighteenth century: from the plague which smote the Philistines in Ashdod to the plague which devastated Moscow in 1771. He has added a learned appendix in which he states his reasons for diagnosing the plague of Athens, in 430 B. C., as typhus fever rather than as Oriental plague; but, with this exception, he only impinges on the fields of medical science and of history so far as is necessary to give coherence to his narrative." (Nation) "The book is the direct outcome of the FitzPatrick lectures which he delivered in 1913 at the Royal college of physicians in London." (Ath)

CRAWFURD, RAYMOND—Continued.

"Few of the books on the plague have dealt with the subject so pleasantly as this one. Dr. Crawford has many qualifications for the task he has undertaken of depicting plague and pestilence as occurring in literature and art. He is a good classic, a practising physician, and a traveller of artistic temperament, who has seen and appreciated most of the pictures he describes, and he adds to these qualities the gift of a critical mind and the art of clear writing."

+ Ath 1914.2:121 J1 25 650w

"A work of quite unusual interest. Indeed, the serious fault we have to find with it lies in the fact that it contains no index, table of contents, expository page-headings, or titles of chapters."

+ — Nation 99:173 Ag 6 '14 800w

"A wise and very interesting book." E. H. Martin

+ Nature 94:480 D 31 '14 1200w

CRIBB, WILLIAM LLANWARNE. Greylake of Mallerby. il *$1.35 (1c) Holt 14-14916

A story of English village life written with small regard to plot but with careful attention to details of character drawing. At his father's death Martin Greylake chooses to return for a time to Mallerby, the village home of his forefathers, in which he had spent one summer as a small boy. He lives as a farm-hand and makes friends with all the countryside, saying nothing of the large fortune which he has just inherited. The heroine of the story is Sybilla Easting, whose father is Jonas Easting the shepherd. Sybilla is the odd member of the Easting family, and Jesse Sinson, the village philosopher, who has lived long and who has made a study of heredity in sheep and in men has a theory which explains her. Somewhere back in the Easting family history, he says, there was a notable woman and her strain comes out once in each generation. Legend has it that these unusual women of each generation have met tragic ends, and one is glad that Sybilla meets a happier fate.

"There is a multiplicity of characters in the story that makes it difficult to follow at first."

+ — Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 250w

"That he has failed to achieve the desired result is not at all surprising, for it is only the rarely gifted author who can succeed in making his people interesting simply in themselves, apart from any especial happenings, either exterior or psychological, and though Mr. Cribb is not without a feeling for character, he lacks the ability to take a dozen or twenty villagers and render each a personality."

+ — N Y Times 19:370 S 6 '14 220w

"In character and humor the story is unusual; for structure and plot the author cares nothing and the reader little. The quality of the writing is choice, and one prefers it to the too numerous would-be melodramatic tales which strive for 'punch' and 'red-blooded' plot."

+ Outlook 108:392 O 14 '14 70w

"It is a story that leaves a deep impression because of what it conveys of human charity, human baseness and the beauty of a perfect love."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 28 '15 500w

CRIPPEN, L. W. Clay and fire. *$1.25 Holt

"Mr. Crippen discusses the doctrine of evolution and its malefic effect on the world, and subjects such scientists as Haeckel and Sir E. Ray Lankester to searching criticism. No bigotry of religion, he says, has ever had such a miasmatic effect as the theory of the non-divinity of man's origin. He considers the literature of the day, the painting, the sculpture, the architecture, the moral and social ideas, and shows their inferiority to those of the days when mankind was simpler and trusted in powers beyond his control. . . . Mankind has descended from the spiritual into the material, and after reaching the uttermost depths of materialism will return to the spiritual, carrying with him the experience gained from matter."—N Y Times

"We cannot say that Mr. Crippen has contributed in any great degree either to the progress of humanity or to the record of its past glories. His account of these is now and again picturesque, and, for that reason, of some interest. Indeed, the book would have been far more valuable if the author had filled it with descriptions of these things, and confined his remarks thereon and his personal opinions to a preface—or perhaps an afterword."

+ — Ath 1914.1:786 Je 6 950w

N Y Times 19:264 Je 7 '14 100w

"Clay and fire" is significant chiefly as a strong and sincere protest against the world's dangerous infatuation with material progress. But it is valuable also as a work of art. Mr. Crippen knows that an argument may be beautiful as well as strong, and there are passages in his book that suggest the verbal felicities of Walter Pater." Joyce Kilmer

+ — N Y Times 19:299 J1 5 '14 630w

"Agreeable discursive and well-written essay."

+ Spec 112:sup1070 Je 27 '14 70w

CRISPI, FRANCESCO. Memoirs of Francesco Crispi; tr. by Mary Prichard-Agnetti from the documents coll. and ed. by T. Palamenghi-Crispi. 3v v 3 *$3.50 Doran (13-2589)

v 3 "Volume 1, it will be remembered, covers the days of Garibaldi, volume 2 the Triple alliance, while the third volume brings the story of European diplomacy down through Italy's Tripolitan adventure and the beginning of the first Balkan war. Germany's relations to France, Italy's ambitions in North Africa and the common jealousy of all the great powers over the fate of Turkey—all these are spoken of with amazing frankness in the correspondence here given, which, of course, was never intended for publication."—R of Rs

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 28 '14 1000w

+ Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 70w

"This volume contains many interesting letters, or reports of conversations, which the expert will know how to use profitably. But all the material lies under the suspicion of having been manipulated for a definite purpose, and no cautious historian would trust solely to it as his source of information."

+ — Nation 99:747 D 24 '14 830w

R of Rs 50:760 D '14 150w

Spec 113:674 N 14 '14 870w

CROCE, BENEDETTO. Philosophy of Giam-battista Vico; tr. by R. G. Collingwood. *$2.60 Macmillan 14-4977

"Vico was an Italian philosopher who lived in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and nearly the entire half of the eighteenth. He wrote profound and original treatises on the theory of knowledge, on ethics, on aesthetics, on law and on religion; but the author of this volume complains that enough attention has not been paid him. . . . He attempts to explain this neglect of one whom he considers a great philosopher. But his best defense of his philosopher is the exposition he gives of his philosophy in this volume. Our expositor is especially impressed with Vico's contribution to the theory of knowledge, giving five chapters to its exposition in its different phases.

Then he tries to show what Vico has done in ethics, law and religion, and how he explains their relations to each other."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 11:6 S '14

Ann Am Acad 53:309 My '14 180w

"The author has done his work well, and it was an excellent idea to give English readers a full exposition of Vico's philosophy. In many ways it is a philosophy that this age needs, and its terminology is superior to that of much of our best philosophy of the present day."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 7 '14 450w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

+ Hibbert J 12:684 Ap '14 40w

Reviewed by B. Bosanquet

+ Hibbert J 13:217 O '14 1850w

"It will probably long remain the most authoritative treatment of the subject. In nearly all respects the book is an admirable example of the way in which the history of philosophy should be written."

+ Nation 99:46 J1 9 '14 1200w

R of Rs 49:380 Mr '14 50w

"Croce's study of the old Neapolitan thinker, which has been admirably translated by Mr. R. G. Collingwood, is valuable not only as a fine piece of philosophical biography, but for its wealth of historical illustration and for the light which it casts upon the biographer's own thought."

+ Spec 112:62 Ja 10 '14 470w

CROCE, BENEDETTO. Philosophy of the practical, economic and ethic; tr. from the Italian by Douglas Ainslie. *$3.25 Macmillan 13-26729

This is the third volume of Croce's work on "The philosophy of the spirit." A translation of volume one, on the Aesthetic, was published in 1910, volume two, on Logic, has not yet appeared in English. "Croce postulates two activities in human life, the theoretic and the practical. The theoretic has two grades—the aesthetic, which is intuitive knowledge and deals with the phenomenon, and the logical, which is conceptual knowledge and deals with the noumenon. So with the practical activity, which has for its first grade the useful or economic activity, which wills the phenomenon, and for its second grade the moral activity, which wills the noumenon. In the 'Aesthetic' Croce laid down the doctrine that there could be no distinction between matter and form; the aesthetic intuition when fully realized in the soul of the artist was complete also in expression, and all that remained was to communicate it to the external world. In the same way he holds that volition and action are indivisible, that the one is inconceivable without the other, and that a will which is not realized in deed is an imperfect will, not an imperfect execution." (Spec)

"Lucid, picturesque, vigorous reading for the student of philosophy."

+ A L A Bkl 10:302 Ap '14

"We may express the opinion that any one who loves philosophy should read this book, and that no one who begins it will turn back. The translation is full of little blemishes which might easily have been avoided. Surely there is enough philosophic jargon ready to hand without inventing variants for the common terms."

+ Ath 1914:187 Ja 17 1400w

"It will not be surprising if, in the near future, 'The philosophy of the practical' takes a place among the best-known idealistic treatises." Bernard Musc

+ Int J Ethics 24:455 J1 '14 830w

"The reader who masters the first three or four chapters of the 'Philosophy of the practical' will find Croce always stimulating, if not always satisfying, refreshingly direct, if somewhat dogmatic, graceful and informal amidst a wealth of learning."

+ Nation 98:268 Mr 12 '14 1900w

"A philosopher who proclaims, for example, that error is always the result of willing to err, and that we can never be obliged to do anything against our will, can hardly hope to obtain a wide influence among sensible people."

— Outlook 106:272 Ja 31 '14 200w

"Mr. Ainslie describes the Italian writer, not untruly, as one of a brilliant host of philosophers and critics who are letting in a flood of light upon the dim and dismal forest in which the nineteenth century was content to be led by the materialists."

+ Sat R 117:178 F 7 '14 500w

"It is too early yet to try to estimate Croce's contribution to thought, for he is still contributing; but his work, so far as it has gone, is a most stimulating mental discipline. Mr. Douglas Ainslie is to be warmly congratulated on his translation which is marked by singular clearness and force. Croce's English dress is as well-fitting and appropriate as Bergson's, which is to say a good deal."

+ Spec 112:62 Ja 10 '14 1050w

CROCKETT, SAMUEL RUTHERFORD. Sandy.
2 (Eng title, Sandy's love affair). ii *$1.35
(1c) Macmillan 14-2212

Sandy is the typical canny Scotch lad who, with his university degree from Edinburgh, goes forth to see and conquer London. It seems at first thought a little unfortunate that Sandy, strict Presbyterian that he is, should begin his career by deliberately falling in love with a music hall singer; but V. V. (Vivian Vivid on the bill-boards, V. V. Jones in private life) isn't at all the conventional music hall star, and she succeeds in winning over not only Sandy himself but his stern elder brother, his Scotch father and mother, and even the elders and deacons of the Presbyterian kirk. There is another heroine in the story too, the irresistible McComie.

"The Scotch characters are well done and their talk is delicious. Amusing and never dull."

+ A L A Bkl 10:324 Ap '14

"The three leading characters are all attractive in their different ways."

+ Ath 1913:2:110 Ag 2 80w

"Whatever the faults of the story in the way of improbabilities and of mixture of plots, there is an undeniable charm about it which comes both from the loveliness of the pictures of Scotch life and from the charm of the two heroines."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 29 '14 380w

"Along its flower-strewn way this book strolls to a conclusion which leaves all the virtuous people prosperous and happy, in the good old-fashioned manner. It is impossible to help having a sort of suppressed disbelief in Sandy's almost miraculous capabilities."

+ N Y Times 19:58 F 8 '14 750w

"It makes agreeable reading."

+ Outlook 106:819 Ap 11 '14 100w

"A new character which many readers will admit is as captivating as the 'Patsy' of a former novel."

+ R of Rs 49:376 Mr '14 36w

"Sympathetic interpretation of Scotch types gives the story the customary charm of Crockett's novels."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:91 Ap '14 40w

CROCKETT, SAMUEL RUTHERFORD. Silver
19 Sand; a romance of old Galloway. *$1.25
(1½c) Revel 14-15748

"In this, his last book, published in England only a few days after his death, Mr. Crockett has returned to Galloway and tells of what happened to John Faa, Lord of Little Egypt and gypsy Earl in the days of Graham of Claverhouse and the great persecution, when those who refused to obey the King's commands in the matter of religion were hunted and harried like so many wild beasts, when all over the land there was a Sabbath stillness." . . . But besides these public troubles John Faa had an abundance of private ones of his own. For he had been educated in France, and so

CROCKETT, S: RUTHERFORD—Continued.
was neither all gypsy nor all 'Gorgio,' but a man of two natures which warred with each other."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 11:173 D '14

"This book, the last from Mr. Crockett's pen, shows happily the gift he undoubtedly possessed of telling a good Scots story. The style, especially in matter of simile, is apt to become florid and unreal, and the character-drawing is open to similar reproach. But, on the whole, the characterization of the different persons is clear, reasonably shrewd, and lifelike. On small points Mr. Crockett was careless."

+ Ath 1914.1:sup737 My 23 270w

"Mr. Crockett excels in giving us good Scottish characters and some of those in this novel are worthy to be classed among his very best. The style, with its mixture of dialect and English, its atmosphere of heather-scented moors, and the old Scottish romance are characteristically his own."

+ Boston Transcript p24 S 30 '14 200w

"It is an interesting story, this of John Faa's romance and youthful adventures, told in Mr. Crockett's well-known style, with just enough of the Scottish dialect to give it flavor but not enough to weary the reader."

+ N Y Times 19:370 S 6 '14 500w

"The tale has spirit and lively movement, and is an excellent example of its class of fiction."

+ Outlook 108:104 S 9 '14 150w

"Lovers of Mr. Crockett's work will find in this, his last novel, all the heroism and history and keen freshness of style that they admired in his early tales."

+ Spec 113:25 J1 4 '14 29w

CROFT, TERRELL WILLIAMS, comp. American electricians' handbook. il $3 McGraw-Hill 14-1

A reference book for practical electrical workers. "The aim has been to collect such information as will enable practical electrical men—wiremen, contractors, linesmen, small plant superintendents, operators and construction engineers—to select and install commercial electrical apparatus and materials intelligently for the performance of given services, and to qualify them for operating the equipment after it has been installed." (Preface)

A L A Bkl 10:302 Ap '14

"The first requirements of a good handbook on any subject are that it shall give abundant information in practical form upon the subject it is supposed to cover and that the arrangement of the material and the indexing shall be such that the information may be readily referred to. This book fulfils both of these requirements to a remarkable degree."

+ Elec World 64:532 S 12 '14 250w

"One of the most pleasing features is the illustrating; no 'trade cuts' have been admitted and everything is executed with the same technique. A certain appearance of unity is thereby fostered and this has been increased by the way in which the single compiler has handled his material."

+ Engin N 71:1393 Je 18 '14 530w

CROKER, MRS. BITHIA MARY (SHEPPARD)
"11 (MRS. JOHN CROKER). Lismoye: an experiment in Ireland. *$1.35 Brentano's (Eng ed 14-9281)

"Mrs. Croker is this book makes no pretence of writing anything more than a simple, straightforward account of the visit of an English society heiress to poor relations in Ireland whom she had never seen, and about whom she knew nothing. She presents herself in the character of a poor relation, and eventually decides to reside altogether in her mother's country." (Ath) "The picture of the mortgage, down-at-the-heel estate and of the struggles of 'The Conroy' to ward off disaster and save the home of his ancestors is realistic and is told engagingly." (N Y Times)

"The story as a whole is interesting for its clear and lifelike character-drawing. The writing is occasionally loose, and we think French phrases are overused."

+ Ath 1914.1:sup739 My 23 100w

"The author has treated the old, old story with freshness and vivacity and has made out of it an hour of light entertainment."

+ N Y Times 19:449 O 18 '14 230w

"This is one of those pleasant, straightforward stories made according to Mrs. Croker's well-known recipe."

+ Sat R 117:710 My 30 '14 200w

"With some reservations, and a passing grumble at Mrs. Croker's exasperating use of unnecessary commas, we have nothing but praise for her latest novel."

+ Spec 112:708 Ap 25 '14 1100w

CROLY, HERBERT DAVID. Progressive democracy. *$2 (1½c) Macmillan 14-18928

In his introduction Mr. Croly offers an interesting analysis of the evolution of democracy since the beginning of the present century. "When Mark Hanna died, early in 1904," he says, "the traditional political system appeared to be unassailable in the fortified strength of its position." But "during the intervening ten years the complexion, and to a certain extent even the features of the American political countenance have profoundly altered." In particular, however, he is concerned with the phase of development entered on in 1912, of which the Progressive party is the expression. It is as a Progressive that Mr. Croly writes and the two questions which he puts as to "whether any substitute is needed for the traditional system and whether progressivism offers any prospect of living up to the requirements of the part" are answered in the affirmative. His study begins with an examination of the origin of the American political system.

A L A Bkl 11:198 Ja '15

"When he leaves metaphysics to treat of concrete reforms, the reader will often come across a page vigorous, incisive and altogether delightful."

+ Ind 80:504 D 28 '14 650w

"It is not easy within the limits of a review to do justice to this book. Mr. Croly's style is at times a little abstruse and often seems needlessly dry, but it is generally fairly clear. His spirit is admirably candid, and though his criticism is intended to be destructive and his ideal unquestionably revolutionary, he is usually impartial, and his ultimate purpose is in the broadest sense constructive and humane."

+ N Y Times 19:515 N 22 '14 920w

"The value of his book, although it consists partly in the working out of the definite conclusions he reaches, consists even more in the spirit in which he has attempted to reach these conclusions." Theodore Roosevelt

+ Outlook 108:648 N 18 '14 1300w

CROMER, EVELYN BARING, 1st earl of,
"6 Political and literary essays, 1908-1913. *$3.25 Macmillan 14-30274

"Lord Cromer . . . has gathered together a series of essays written by him since 1898, appearing at different times in the 'Edinburgh review,' the 'Quarterly review,' the 'Nineteenth century,' and the 'Spectator.'" (R of Rs) "The bulk of Lord Cromer's volume is devoted to variants of his old themes. British imperialism, the policies of colonial government, the treatment of subject races—with all these he deals. Out of his own long experience and reflection he has evolved certain rules of administration, and these he would apply, with the necessary local adjustments, whether in Egypt or India, China or South Africa." (Nation)

A L A Bkl 10:303 Ap '14

"Lord Cromer deals, in most pleasant fashion, with many matters . . . and under his guidance we often get a peep at a what goes on behind the scenes on the political stage. There are many good stories in the book."

+ Ath 1913.2:654 D 6 500w

"Such a book is as interesting for its revelation of the varied equipment of a great consul as for its actual contents." H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '13 350w

"The reader renews acquaintance with an intellect of singular poise and sagacity."

+ Nation 98:190 F 19 '14 310w

+ No Am 199:782 My '14 500w

+ Outlook 107:317 Je 6 '14 360w

+ R of Rs 49:376 Mr '14 70w

+ Sat R 116:783 D 20 '13 1650w

"These political chapters are well worthy of serious consideration, and the whole book, with its sanity, its maturity of judgment, and its wide interests, is a contribution to the entertainment as well as to the edification of the writer's countrymen."

+ Spec 111:1024 D 13 '13 1400w

CROOKER, REV. JOSEPH HENRY. Shall I drink? il *$1 (1½c) Pilgrim press 14-13537

The author holds a brief for total abstinence. He points out the fallaciousness of the term stimulants as applied to alcoholic liquors; alcohol is a depressant, a paralyzer; and he calls on science, vital statistics and the testimony of men and women in many walks of life to bear out his statements. Contents: The drink superstition; ancient origin and present operation; A question of proportion; The roots of crime and poverty; A business proposition; Parental responsibilities; Applied psychology; The discipline that destroys: The cure that kills; The function of law; Signs of promise.

"As a handbook of up-to-date facts on the liquor problem, and as a historical and philosophical discussion in popular language of the drinking of alcoholic beverages this is the best work published." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 29 '14 670w

"Well sustained plea for total abstinence."

+ Pittsburgh 20:10 Ja '15 50w

"The book is a thoughtful, nonspacious, exhaustive treatment of a great question." Elizabeth Tilton

+ Survey 33:91 O 24 '14 450w

CROSS, ARTHUR LYON. History of England<sup>11</sup> and Greater Britain. il *$2.50 (1c) Macmillan 14-14481

A history of England tracing in one volume the development of the English people from the earliest times to the present day. It has been necessary, the author says, to exclude much interesting, and even important, detail; on the other hand he has attempted to treat as fully as possible all subjects selected for mention. He has made an especial effort to treat those features of England's history that are of interest to Americans; for example, the development of English common law, and the causes of the American revolution. The volume closes with a chapter on the reign of Edward VII and the early years of George V. There are a dozen maps, but illustrations have been omitted, thereby gaining space in a volume where it is valuable. The index, taking up some seventy three-column pages, seems to be very complete. Reading references are provided at the ends of the chapters.

A L A Bkl 11:165 D '14

"It may be doubted whether there is at present available another general introduction to English history which is at the same time so carefully and attractively written, and so obviously the product of a sound historian."

+ Ath 1914.2:452 O 31 480w

"As a reference book of English history this is not surpassed."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 21 '14 270w

"Fulfills the demand for a long and broad treatment of the subject brought down to the present year."

+ Ind 80:64 O 12 '14 120w

"Professor Cross's volume approaches, on the whole, in arrangement, fulness of information, matter-of-factness, accuracy, and emphasis on purely political history, more nearly than any other textbook we happen to know, to S. R. Gardiner's justly famous 'Student's history'—which is high praise."

+ Nation 99:327 S 10 '14 530w

"It is an admirable volume for any one who wants a straightforward recital, complete yet reasonably brief, of the story of England."

+ N Y Times 19:499 N 15 '14 900w

R of Rs 50:760 D '14 120w

"Brightly written and closely packed volume."

+ Spec 113:503 O 10 '14 50w

CROSS, ETHAN ALLEN. Short story, a technical and literary study. *$1.50 (1c) McClurg 14-18907

A book on the technic of the short story prepared with the reader of stories in mind rather than the writer, for whom a number of manuals already exist. The author believes that the reader who understands something of the construction will derive more enjoyment from his reading of the short story. Brief chapters on: The history of the short story; The materials from which stories are made; The short story is an impression from life; Plot; The characters; The remaining means used in developing a theme; The management of materials, and a plan for the study of any short story, precede the selection of stories. The latter includes examples from Poe, Hawthorne, Stevenson, Jack London, Joseph Conrad, and others.

"There is, of course, nothing new in the reprinted stories; and since there is practically nothing new in the introduction, what is the volume's reason for existence?" Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:568 Ja '15 70w

+ Dial 58:89 F 1 '15 70w

+ Ind 81:213 F 8 '15 150w

+ Nation 100:174 F 11 '15 150w

CROTHERS, REV. SAMUEL MCCORD. Meditations on votes for women; together with animadversions on the closely related subject of votes for men. *$1 (9½c) Houghton 14-19186

Mr. Crothers points out the advantage of meditation over discussion. In discussion we are limited and forced to take one side or the other. "We cannot look at the facts as they go about their ordinary business in the actual workaday world. They must be mobilized. . . . When we review them, we think of nothing but their fighting value." In meditation, on the other hand, we are free. We can consider one side and then the other without embarrassment, and if we change our opinion there is no one to exult over us and make us ashamed. The subject on which he chooses to meditate is the woman suffrage question, about which there has been a great amount of discussion, with very little meditation. He dwells on its broad aspects and calls attention to some obvious conclusions often overlooked, for instance, "that a voter does not vote all the time, but is allowed a number of days off in order to attend to his private business."

"Delightful, of course, with wisdom and humor which combine to make the reader 'give pause' at least to think over the question."

+ A L A Bkl 11:153 D '14 *

"Whichever side we may happen to take on that most rampant of modern questions, we cannot fail to be pleased by the book as it meets the eye from every page and entertained and enlightened by the most genial of our cultured American humorists." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 4 '14 1200w

"Calm cogency, sweet reasonableness, propitiatory gentleness, anger-dispelling humor, and playful nimbleness of wit are the agreeable characteristics."

+ Dial 57:510 D 16 '14 220w

"There is much wit as well as sound sense in the volume; the gentle answer to many objections that ought to turn away wrath."

+ Ind 80:382 D 7 '14 110w

CROTHERS, REV. SAMUEL MCCORD. Three lords of destiny. (Raymond F. West memorial lectures, no. 2) *$1 Houghton 13-25902

This little book contains the lectures delivered by Dr. Crothers last year at Stanford university. The lords of destiny of which he writes are Courage, Skill, and Love.

"The three lectures are full of moral spur and stimulus but, in the nature of the subject, lack much of the author's rich allusiveness and genial humor."

+ A L A Bkl 10:219 F '14

Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 350w

"Inspiring little book."

+ N Y Times 19:31 Ja 25 '14 140w

"In this little book, which may be read in two hours, Dr. Crothers brings into clear light one of the greatest and most wholesome truths, a truth the acceptance of which means both ripeness of spirit and that unshakable peace which rests on knowledge and faith."

+ Outlook 105:785 D 13 '13 970w

Reviewed by Alexander Johnson

+ Survey 32:98 Ap 25 '14 700w

"Stimulating lectures."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:85 Ap '14 50w

CROUSE, MARY ELIZABETH. Out of Egypt. il *$1.50 (3c) Badger, R: G. 14-5359

"This book is neither a guide book nor a history, but a series of essays combining the description incident to the Nile journey, with historical sequence and religious significance in an endeavor to progressively reveal the development of Egypt and its place in the development of the world." (Introduction) Contents: The desert; On the threshold; Egypt, the dawn; The river; From the love story of Egypt; Before the temple; The house of Amon; The valley of the shadow; The city of the king; Israel in Egypt; The evening and the morning; A message from holy places; The haunt of Horus; The gift of Egypt; Light.

"While the author doesn't claim that her volume is either a guide book or a history it is nevertheless a combination of both. The book accomplishes for the reader the purpose the author had in mind. It is written in simple, direct language, and it holds the interest of the reader throughout."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 8 '14 120w

"A book which will command more than one reading."

+ Chaut 72:744 My 23 '14 90w

+ Ind 81:29 Ja 4 '15 100w

- R of Rs 49:635 My '14 40w

CROW, CARL. America and the Philippines. il *$2 (2½c) Doubleday 14-7083

The author's purpose in writing this book on the Philippines has been "to present a study of American administration, good and bad, such as will aid in an understanding of what many are pleased to term 'The Philippine problem.'" After a descriptive chapter on the islands and their people he takes up: America's discovery and conquest; The amateur colonists; The building of a nation; A country of invalids; A fool-proof government; Pesos and centavos; Developing Philippine industries; Linking the islands; American and Filipino; The "mutually hostile tribes"; Philippine independence. Mr. Crow sees no prospect of immediate independence; America's work in the Philippines is only begun.

Reviewed by C. L. Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 57:338 Ja '15 350w

"Deserves careful reading, for it appears to be not the work of an office-holder, past or present, but the conclusions of an American who is proud of what we have been able to do toward elevating a strange and distant people, and who believes that this people can be brought within a reasonable time to complete autonomy." Wallace Rice

+ Dial 56:465 Je 1 '14 1200w

"Mr. Crow seems to have written his work while complacently listening to the placeholders and exploiters in the Philippines during a brief trip to Manila. It is unfortunate that he did not do the job more artistically and with greater attention to detail. There are already too many books of this sort on the market and too few that give American readers the slightest real notion of existing conditions in the Philippines, or of the actual work accomplished or neglected there. Incidentally, Mr. Crow ought to have learned to spell Philippine names after some one or more of the several more or less recognized methods now in use."

— Nation 18:701 Je 1 '14 300w

"An excellent companion piece to Mr. Le Roy's larger volume."

+ N Y Times 19:311 Jl 12 '14 200w

"He gives an excellent exposition of the Philippine situation in general and in particular."

+ R of Rs 49:764 Je '14 120w

CROW, MRS. MARTHA FOOTE. Harriet Beecher Stowe. il *$1.25 Appleton 13-25118

"Earlier biographies of Mrs. Stowe have been concerned, in the main, with her public career; the present volume with the domestic aspects of her life. In choosing this point of view Mrs. Crow has been well advised. As the author of 'Uncle Tom's cabin,' Mrs. Stowe is known around the world, but Mrs. Stowe the woman is, to the present generation, certainly a vague personality, closely related, indeed, to certain passages in the history of our country, but otherwise scarcely more than a shadowy figure of the past. In Mrs. Crow's pages she is shown to be very much alive and, so far from her sole title to distinction consisting in her connection with a world-famous volume, she is here shown to be deservedly renowned for accomplishments in many other directions."—Boston Transcript

"A readable biography. As interesting to adults as to the older girls."

+ A L A Bkl 10:246 F '14

"The narrative of what she was and what she did is profoundly interesting as Mrs. Crow tells it, and we commend it most heartily to the reader's attention."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 6 '13 220w

"Mrs. Crow has done her work with enthusiasm and intelligence."

+ Chaut 72:317 D 20 '13 250w

+ Nation 97:571 D 11 '13 40w

"The tone of indiscriminate praise detracts somewhat from the merits of the book."

+ N Y Sun p6 D 6 '13 70w

"In the handling of the material it is one of the best books that have been written about the author of 'Uncle Tom's cabin.' The latter part of the volume is hardly as satisfactory as the first."

+ N Y Times 19:166 Ap 5 '14 300w

"It is an absorbingly interesting story for grown-ups and children alike."

+ R of Rs 49:48 Ja '14 530w

"A very readable, enthusiastic biography. In the small library more useful on the adult than the children's shelves."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:163 Je '14 30w

CROWE, JOSEPH ARCHER, and CAVALCASELLE, GIOVANNI BATTISTA. History of painting in Italy; ed. by Langton Douglas and Tancred Borenius. 6v v 5-6 ea *$6 Scribner (6-16216)

v 5 and 6 "These volumes which conclude the series upon the history of painting in Italy, of the Umbrian, Florentine and Sienese schools, from the second to the sixteenth century, cover the period from the time of Piero della Francesca, 1415-1500, to that of Andrea del Sarto, 1487-1531. The same method is pursued in these volumes as in their predecessors. Each artist is studied in detail, the characteristics of his style indicated, his chief pictures carefully examed, and a classification of his works, with their present location given."—Boston Transcript.

+ A L A Bkl 11:51 O '14 (Review of v 4-6)

"Nothing is slurred in these remarkable studies; nothing is over-accentuated. Clearly, impartially, the facts are presented, while the superb pictures witnessing the work of very many of these masters of Italian painting, illustrate in the most adequate of ways, the scope and style of the art of each—pictures reproducing not only many a famous masterpiece, but others nonetheless interesting, although not as widely known. Thus is admirably concluded a series of books of rare value to all lovers as well as students of the art of Italian painting."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 350w (Review of v 5-6)

"Careful revision of a standard work."

+ Nation 59:531 O 29 '14 700w (Review of v 5-6)

"The notes would have been of greater value to the student if a brief summary of an important opinion could have been given in place of mere reference to magazine articles of more or less difficulty of access."

+ N Y Times 19:381 S 13 '14 180w (Review of v 5-6)

"Dr. Borenus has now completed the last two volumes of the new edition of this great work with the same scholarly care and thoroughness that he has brought to bear on the same authors' 'History of painting in North Italy.'"

+ Sat R 118:150 Ag 1 '14 180w (Review of v 5-6)

CROY, HOMER. When to lock the stable. il 10 *$1.25 (2c) Bobbs 14-15186

A homely story of country folks in a small Missouri village. Clem Pointer, Chief of the Fire department, polishes the village fire-engine and longs for an opportunity to prove himself a hero. The opportunity comes and he carries Mary Mendenhall to safety from a burning building, but the joys of notoriety do not at all meet his expectations, and the following week, when "camp-meeting" at which his sister Hulda is an officiating figure gets on his nerves, he decides to disappear. The story of his wanderings and adventures in company with one Brassy, a shell-game man; of his return to Curryville in time to outwit the wicked Dr. Fordyce, manufacturer of "Fordyce's Herb Specific"; and of his belated reward for the rescue of Mary Mendenhall, follows in order.

"Much of the book is actually as well as intentionally funny."

+ N Y Times 19:401 S 27 '14 200w

"Clem Pointer will take his place with other homely fictional figures whose experiences have so often amused the American reading public. The story is light, but wholly delightful."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 370w

CROZIER, GLADYS BEATTIE. Children's parties. il *50c Dutton A14-1235

A little book suggesting ways of entertaining at parties for children.

"Helpful to a hostess in organizing a children's party, in arranging details of games, costumes, and refreshments, specially for Christmas and May day. Though English in tone, the suggestions are adaptable to American conditions. The illustrations are good, though small; the binding is poor."

+ A L A Bkl 10:417 Je '14

+ Chaut 72:557 Mr 14 '14 20w

Ind 80:416 D 14 '14 40w

+ N Y Times 19:339 Ag 9 '14 20w

CROZIER, GLADYS BEATTIE. Indoor games for children. il *50c Dutton A14-1236

The author describes games which may be played in the house, either at parties or at informal family gatherings.

+ A L A Bkl 10:417 Je '14

+ Chaut 72:557 Mr 14 '14 20w

+ Lit D 49:1135 D 5 '14 30w

+ N Y Times 19:339 Ag 9 '14 20w

CROZIER, GLADYS BEATTIE. Outdoor games for children. il *50c Dutton A14-1237

This volume describes games suitable for outdoor amusement. Playground directors may find it helpful.

"Readable and suggestive."

+ A L A Bkl 10:417 Je '14

+ Chaut 72:557 Mr 14 '14 20w

+ Lit D 49:1135 D 5 '14 30w

+ N Y Times 19:339 Ag 9 '14 20w

CRUMP, IRVING. Jack Straw in Mexico; how the engineers defended the great hydro-electric plant. il *$1 (2c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-15370

Jack Strawbridge, an American lad, prominent in athletics in his school, is sent on an important mission to Mexico. He is entrusted with a set of valuable blue prints which are to be delivered into the hands of an American engineer in Necaxa. With some minor adventures he reaches his destination and the plans are handed over to the engineer, but immediately after they are stolen from his desk and there is an exciting hunt to get them back, together with a revolution and the unearthing of an important rebel plot.

"An exciting story, well told and attractive in its format."

+ N Y Times 19:557 D 6 '14 150w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON. Rural life and education. (Riverside textbooks in education) il $1.50 (2c) Houghton 14-3406

The author looks on the rural-school problem as a social rather than an educational problem, and as one which can only be properly understood when it is considered as a part of the rural-life problem. "Those who do most toward its solution will be those who see the problem clearly in its historical and sociological setting, and who have some grasp of American rural history. To give the problem such a setting has been the purpose of the first part of the book. . . . With this as a basis the student is ready to go to the second part of the book, which sets forth specifically the present rural-school problem." (Introduction) Questions for discussion follow each chapter, and there is a selected bibliography at the end of the book.

"Valuable charts, maps, and annotated bibliography."

+ A L A Bkl 11:54 O '14

R of Rs 49:637 My '14 150w

"This book is a valuable addition to the rapidly increasing literature on American rural life and rural school conditions. Dr. Cubberley's book should be read by every rural life student and is especially well adapted as a textbook for high, normal, agricultural and other schools having training classes for rural teachers." H. W. Foght

+ Survey 32:346 Je 27 '14 230w

"A thorough study of the rural school problem."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:125 My '14 30w

CUBBERLEY, ELLWOOD PATTERSON. State and county educational reorganization. (Text-book ser. in education) il *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-13547

In this book the author presents the "revised constitution and school code of the state of Osceola." Osceola is a hypothetical state supposed to be located in the upper Mississippi valley. It contains a few large manufacturing cities, a number of smaller cities, and has large agricultural interests. Some of the features of the constitution worked out for this imaginary state are: a strongly centralized educational organization, a county unit of school organization to take the place of the district system, the elimination of party politics from school elections, the uniting of library and school, provision for social center activities, provision for industrial and agricultural education.

CUBBERLEY, E. P.—Continued.

"It would make good material for debate and discussion at meetings of superintendents and teachers throughout the country."

+ Educ R 45:534 D '14 90w

+ El School J 15:234 Ja '15 380w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Twins of Suffering Creek. il *$1.25 (1c) Jacobs 12-5855

Suffering Creek is a Montana mining camp of the early days. The twins are four year old Jamie and Vada, and the story is chiefly concerned with the efforts of the well-meaning miners to aid Scipio, their father, in their upbringing, after Jessie, their mother, has wearied of her monotonous life and run away with "Lord James," a picturesque gambler. A bath and a Bible talk are items in the Sunday program, outlined by Scipio's friends for the correct bringing up of his children, and their efforts to carry it out provides the story with its chief humorous episode. All comes to a happy ending with the return of Jessie, chastened and repentant, to care for her own children.

Boston Transcript p22 D 31 '13 200w

"The novel is much too long."

— + N Y Times 18:768 D 28 '13 150w

CULLUM, RIDGWELL. Way of the strong. il *$1.35 (1c) Jacobs 14-7731

Alaska, southern California and the wheat lands of Alberta furnish the scenes for this story. The "strong" man is introduced first as a gold seeker in the Yukon. With his woman companion he is hurrying back to civilization in order that their child may be born within the sanction of the law. The two are separated; the woman goes to her old home in California and dies, trusting her child to a young sister and exacting from her a promise that she will bring up the boy as her own, never telling him of his shameful birth. A period of twenty years passes and the "Leo" of the first part of the story appears as a wheat king; Monica the girl who had taken charge of her sister's child is a woman of thirty-seven acting as his secretary; Frank the boy she had brought up as a son is a young man of twenty and the remainder of the story is concerned with the criss-crossed fortunes of these three. The struggle between capital and labor, with the author's sympathies on the side of capital, is introduced in the working out of the plot.

"There are many good situations cleverly handled, and several interesting characters. But on the whole we think the book would have been better had it been shorter."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup470 Mr 28 430w

"Written with the easy facility of a practised writer who knows his own particular public, this book is nevertheless strangely uneven." Grace Merchant

+ — Bookm 40:325 N '14 620w

"It is a story with an original plot, unlimited action and dramatic situations."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 21 '14 300w

Dial 57:342 N 1 '14 110w

"The story has many moments of dramatic power and many pages of vivid, sometimes even of thrilling, description. But the framework of the story is illogical and therefore weak and likely to arouse the reader's impatience and scepticism. Crucial situations are too often solved in accordance with the needs of the plot rather than with ordinary human conduct."

+ — N Y Times 19:431 O 11 '14 330w

"There is always the thread of good plot to follow. To those of us whose tastes are perhaps a trifle over-civilised the people of his drama may seem too ruffianly to command sympathy."

+ — Sat R 117:510 Ap 18 '14 200w

CULVERWELL, EDWARD PARNALL. Montessori principles and practice. il *$1.25 John Martin's house, 5 W. 39th St., New York City (Eng ed E13-1856)

"Prof. Culverwell's closely packed volume is at the same time an analysis, an appreciation, and a criticism of Dr. Montessori's work. His central thesis is that, while the spirit of her undertaking is vital and permanent, the practical details—apparatus, sequence, methods, &c.—must always be liable to reconsideration and changes."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 10:349 My '14

"Apart from—or, rather, side by side with—his main purpose, his book is full of facts that provoke thought, and is well worth the study of any person concerned in the education of young children."

+ Ath 1913,2:492 N 1 90w

"A book that is worthy of more than passing notice."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 7 '14 250w

CURLE, RICHARD. Joseph Conrad. il *$1.25 (1½c) Doubleday 14-30796

"The author is not writing this book because he has had breakfast with Mr. Conrad, or sat at his elbow while he was writing, or received an autograph copy of his first great work. He is writing because he really likes to talk about Mr. Conrad's novels; because he finds in them a good deal more than is commonly supposed to be there." (Sat R) "He claims that Mr. Conrad is the first English novelist who definitely enters the European tradition, and suggests that English readers will for that reason never place him among their cherished masters." (Ath)

"The enthusiasm is generous and sincere without effusiveness and the judgments on his work are often penetrating; but those who know Conrad will feel the author's lack of a sense of proportion, and of insight into the finer points of his art."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:67 O '14

"We emphasize the shortcomings because they have made it impossible to read with pleasure a book which, nevertheless, contains much just perception and discrimination, and a well-founded, if vaguely formulated estimate of Mr. Conrad's place in literature. If Mr. Curle had had patience to introduce order into his impressions, and to express them in coherent language, his study might have been both illuminating and delightful."

+ — Ath 1914,1:885 Je 27 1100w

Reviewed by Calvin Winter

+ — Bookm 40:566 Ja '15 130w

"A sympathetic, well-founded and discriminating, if somewhat vaguely formulated study."

+ — Cleveland 6:90 O '14 30w

"His book is an amusing personal document rather than a contribution to criticism."

+ — Dial 57:393 N 16 '14 600w

"We suspect that Conrad's personal connection with the book and its author may have been of the slightest, limited, very likely, to a casual 'interview' or so. It is impossible to believe that the author of 'The mirror of the sea' has deliberately encouraged the critical assiduities of an admirer so injudicious."

+ — Nation 99:528 O 29 '14 580w

Reviewed by Van Wyck Brooks

+ New Republic 1:26 D 26 '14 1250w

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

+ Pub W 87:186 Ja 16 '15 550w

+ R of Rs 50:636 N '14 170w

"We heartily recognise that this book is more than an exercise in literary sycophancy. Mr. Curle sincerely loves the work of Mr. Conrad. Mr. Curle's enthusiasm is sincere and admirable. He does not ask us to admire in himself the reflected glory of an intimacy with Mr. Conrad which less happy people are unable to claim."

+ — Sat R 117:772 Je 13 '14 730w

"Mr. Curle has performed a difficult task with real ability."

+ Spec 113:300 Ag 29 '14 1600w

CURLE, RICHARD. Life is a dream. *$1.35
(2c) Doubleday 14-19138

In the first of these stories a dull commonplace Englishman dreams of the far places of the earth which he can never visit; in one of the later stories another man dreams of England but is never able to shake off the fascination of the tropics which holds him away from home, and in all but one or two of the other stories the atmosphere is that of the East. The titles are: Old Hoskyns; A remittance man; Blanca Palillos; The velvet suit; Going home; The look-out; A memory; Consolation; The emerald seeker.

"The foremost impression that we receive from this collection of short stories is that the author is a true artist. He has achieved not merely a good story as a story, but his work has the distinction of style."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 27 '14 400w

"Mr. Curle will have to do something bigger before he earns much praise as a story-teller, but 'so far so good.' The outlook is promising."

+ Lit D 48:1494 Je 20 '14 150w

"To read four or five chapters of the nine short stories in this volume is to be impressed with the writer's obvious disqualifications for the form as Americans know it; and, at the same time, with the truth and naturalness of his little slices of life. Constructively, his tales want imagination, plot, surprise; there is scarce a situation in the lot of real dramatic quality. All, however, have merit of style and unity of theme, and shadow forth a character of convincing vividness."

+ Nation 98:698 Je 11 '14 300w

"Each tale promises well, is written in attractive style and draws us on and on until, by and by, we perceive that we are getting nowhere, and begin to wonder what it is all about."

+ N Y Times 19:145 Mr 29 '14 170w

"Although the dream is for the most part a dreary one, Mr. Curle endows his short stories with individuality and atmosphere above the common."

+ Spec 112:657 Ap 18 '14 25w

"Original and well written."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:163 Je '14 20w

CURTIN, JEREMIAH. Fairy tales of eastern Europe. il *$1.50 (2c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-19873

The fairy tales in this collection are drawn from four sources, Russian, Hungarian, Bohemian and Serbian. They were collected by the author in his travels thru these countries and are told as he heard them from the people themselves. The book contains as an introduction a tribute to the author by J. Walker McSpadden.

"Many new and interesting tales." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:446 D '14 25w

"These tales show no scholarship; they appeal strictly to the imagination."

+ Ind 80:414 D 14 '14 60w

Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 30w

"This posthumously published work has its scientific value, but this must not keep from it those readers who seek only entertainment. The beautifully made little volume has in it the strong magic of simple, primitive folk who did their own imagining and imagined greatly."

+ N Y Times 19:528 N 29 '14 120w

CURTIS, EDWARD S. Indian days of the long ago. (Indian life and Indian lore) il $1 (2½c) World bk. 14-18403

The author has written this book "in the hope that it would give a more intimate view of Indian life in the old days, in the days when to the far western tribes the white race was but a rumor. . . . A further desire was to call attention to the great divergencies in Indian life, the number of languages, and the striking differences in dress and habits." (Foreword) The illustrations are from photographs by the author and drawings by F. N. Wilson. The musical scores of Indian songs are introduced into the text, and in the course of the narrative many bits of folk-lore are presented in the form of stories told by a grandfather.

+ A L A Bkl 11:178 D '14

+ Nation 99:501 O 22 '14 120w

"A story rich in Indian lore and customs, and splendidly illustrated."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:303 D '14 200w

CURTIS, HENRY S. Play and recreation for the open country. il $1.16 (1¼c) Ginn 14-4503

The author attacks the most vital problem of rural sociology—the need for organized recreational facilities in country communities. He treats his subject in four parts as follows: Part 1, Play in the home and its environs; Part 2, Play at the rural school; Part 3, Recreation in the rural community; Part 4, The rural social center. The work is not all theoretical for much has already been done, especially in the middle western states, along the lines suggested by the author, and he is able to describe many successful experiments.

"These general suggestions are so fully elaborated as to make one question if any more valuable book on recreational topics has appeared recently." M. J. Wessel

+ Am J Soc 20:277 S '14 400w

"A valuable guide for teachers, ministers, mothers, and directors of recreation in rural districts." E. L. Tabert

+ Am J Soc 20:552 Ja '15 400w

"A practical handbook."

+ A L A Bkl 11:17 S '14 +

"Valuable and highly instructive book."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 350w

"An unfortunate dullness of treatment is the one marrring feature."

+ Nation 98:461 Ap 23 '14 150w

"Dr. Curtis presents what may be considered the latest word in the recreational problem for rural communities. With brevity, conciseness and breadth of view, the subject is presented from the practical standpoint. At the same time the philosophy of play and its full significance to country life are strongly emphasized." M. R. Haines

+ Survey 32:202 My 16 '14 450w

CURTIS, MRS. ISABEL (GORDON). Congress-woman. *$1.35 Browne & Howell 14-6798

"As the title may suggest, 'The congress-woman' has been written against suffrage and the author has used the means of an extreme case to ridicule the whole movement covertly. In the first place, the heroine is a wealthy widow—a slight suggestion that the women who should go in for public office will be those who are among the rich and 'unemployed.' She becomes a candidate for Congress in a western state and is elected. She is over-persuaded by her friends and has no real conviction or reason for running. Once in Washington, she is bewildered and frightened by the magnitude of her undertaking, and by her slight understanding of the problems that confront her. . . . The woman in Congress finds that in the social sphere through her large fortune she is able to take an important place, but that the immense hostility to women in Congress makes it impossible for her to accomplish anything. Finally this woman—the sole woman in Congress—sickens of the whole affair, and she throws over the cause of suffrage and goes home to be married again."—Boston Transcript

+ A L A Bkl 10:412 Je '14

"This sane and diverting tale should be carefully studied by all the clubs in the general federation."

+ Atlan 114:525 O '14 180w

Boston Transcript p22 Ap 15 '14 650w

N Y Times 19:145 Mr 29 '14 220w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

CURTIS, ISABEL—Continued.

"One can hardly read this book without drawing the conclusion that women are unreasonable, illogical, inconsequential, and therefore, the inspiration of their husbands; that they are noisy, vindictive, irresponsible, and should therefore devote themselves exclusively to bringing up little children." M. A. Hopkins

— Pub W 85:1327 Ap 18 '14 600w

"It has been Mrs. Curtis's self-imposed task to make her narrative so interesting and her characters so vivid and appealing that the reader will not pause for that consideration which might disturb the illusion. And in this Mrs. Curtis has succeeded to some degree, even though she has not stifled all the reader's doubts."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 1100w

CURWOOD, JAMES OLIVER. Kazan. il $1.25
(1½c) Bobbs 14-5166

A story that belongs in a class with "Bob, son of battle" and "The call of the wild," for it frankly takes a dog for its hero, making the affairs of men subsidiary. It is with the second-named book and with its companion, "White Fang," that the story challenges comparison, for Kazan is a dog of the north, "quarter-strain wolf, and three-quarters husky," and he is torn between the call of the human and that of his wild mate. Early in his experience with human beings, a young girl trusts him and is kind to him, and ever after he is the faithful servant of all women, whatever may be his attitude toward men.

+ A L A Bkl 10:369 My '14

"A story absorbing in its interest, gripping in its vivid comprehension of animal nature, masterly in its study of those pitiless, irrevocable laws which govern Nature's wild children."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '14 200w

"With keen sympathy, but without any of the sentimental anthropomorphism which disfigures so many tales of the wild, he has told this vivid and moving story of the wolf-dog of the arctic snows, and has told it in a way that makes it appeal to readers, old and young."

+ N Y Times 19:136 Mr 22 '14 250w

"Without necessarily making any comparison of the two books, the fact remains that it will be almost impossible for any reader who has read 'The call of the wild,' not to recall the earlier work more than once while reading 'Kazan.' And to those to whom Mr. London's book brought pleasure, Mr. Curwood's can hardly fail to bring a similar experience. It will seem to some readers that Kazan's mental processes and emotions are too human for an animal. But to the more sentimental reader, this criticism will not be important." H. Dick

+ — Pub W 85:1064 Mr 21 '14 350w

"Sets the blood tingling. Only one who loved dogs and knew the souls of the wild things of the forest could have written so eloquent a tale."

+ R of Rs 49:762 Je '14 90w

"Among recent animal biographies, we have no hesitation in placing first 'Kazan the wolf-dog.' It is a masterpiece, a perfect novel."

+ Spec 112:sup1062 Je 27 '14 250w

CURZON, GEORGE NATHANIEL CURZON, 1st earl. Modern parliamentary eloquence. $1
Macmillan 14-2056

"This treatise was the Rede lecture delivered before the University of Cambridge, Nov. 6, 1913.

The lecturer limited his review of parliamentary eloquence to the last fifty years; to those orators whom he had himself heard or to those who might be remembered by those who are now living. There is mention at times of earlier men, such as Pitt, Fox and Sheridan, and even of French orators, but this is by way of illustration. With these limitations he finds the field so spacious that only a small portion of the lecture as it is printed in this volume was delivered before the university. The scope of his plan includes a few American speakers along with the long list of British orators, and it is matter of pride to us to find that the lecturer gives the palm for excellence to two selections from the speeches of Abraham Lincoln."—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 11:68 O '14

Ath 1913,2:659 D 6 90w

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 430w

"Lord Curzon's Rede lecture, is an exhaustive treatise on one of the noblest of human arts by one of its most eminent practitioners. I should have said that it would rank as a piece of classical criticism if Lord Curzon had not spoiled it by a sudden and quite unaccountable descent to 'journalistic jottings' about the minor stars of the parliamentary firmament." A. A. Baumann

+ — Sat R 116:741 D 13 '13 1350w

+ Spec 112:128 Ja 3 '14 1850w

CUST, ALBINIA LUCY (MRS. WHERRY).
"Chronicles of Erthig on the dyke. 2v il
$7.50 (3½c) Lane 14-17237

The private letters of a Welsh family, published in this book, make a chronicle that extends from the seventeenth to the nineteenth century. Erthig Hall was built in 1682 by Joshua Edisbury. In 1715 it passed out of his hands and by order of the Court of chancery was sold, becoming the property of John Meller; it was inherited by his nephew Simon Yorke and has remained in the possession of the Yorke family to the present day. The house itself, built after the traditions of Wren and Inigo Jones, and furnished with corresponding good taste, has become the repository of many treasures, and the illustrations of the book, showing some of its best features, are most interesting. "Most of the letters belong to the century in question, but they read like the chronicle of a social order rather than as the documents of a particular period. The people of Erthig are not of the kind with which scandalous court memoirs make us familiar. They are in touch with men of great name, but they themselves neither move the times nor are moved by them." (Sat R)

"Mrs. Wherry has performed her task as editor—evidently a labour of love—with great care."

+ — Ath 1914,2:114 JI 25 780w

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 220w

Nation 100:145 F 4 '15 780w

+ N Y Times 20:8 Ja 3 '15 110w

Sat R 118:114 JI 25 '14 770w

Spec 112:1041 Je 20 '14 100w

CUTHELL, ELIZABETH E. Vagabond courtier;
"Baron von Pollnitz. 2v il $6 Brentano's

"The life of von Pöllnitz is of unceasing interest, and Thackeray immortalised him in 'The Virginians,' where he meets Harry Warrington in the card-rooms at Tunbridge Wells. Not alone did he fight as a boy at Oudenarde and join the wild court of the Regent d'Orleans at Paris, but he journeyed to Madrid and to the Russians, and was everywhere received as a leading wit and vagrant courtier, fond of literature and fair women. . . . His period is still redolent of a prim, old-world romanticism—the Georgian era in England, and Germany as yet ununited, full of Margraves, Princes and Electors. And what a charm there is in the character of Frederick the Great of Prussia, whom we meet so intimately in these pages!"—Sat R

Ath 1913,2:415 O 18 200w

"Mrs. Cuthell has caught something of Carlyle's impressive 'style.' N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 770w

"Perhaps only those who recall the beautiful palace, 'Sans Souci,' at Potsdam, can realise Miss Cuthell's book. But it does not require this recollection for the imaginative to fall beneath the spell of that tripping, gracious time of mignonette and rose pot-pourris which she conjures up."

+ Sat R 116:593 N 8 '13 320w

CUTTING, MRS. MARY STEWART (DOUBLE-DAY). Blossoming rod. il $50c (9c) Double-day 14-18804

One of Mrs. Cutting's little stories of married life. Mr. Langshaw had looked longingly at the trout rod in the sporting-goods window for many weeks, but time and again the ten dollars necessary for its purchase had been dissipated by family needs. He almost hoped to have it as a Christmas present from himself, but the money went again, and he resigned himself to the prospect of an ice pitcher or some other like gift from his loving family. Then came Christmas morning and with it his gift—not the mere bundle of sticks he might have bought for himself but a transformed rod, blossoming with love.

+ Dial 57:510 D 16 '14 90w

"We are all the better and the sweeter natured for reading of such episodes as this of Langshaw and his Christmas present."

+ N Y Times 19:505 N 15 '14 180w

D

DAHLINGER, CHARLES WILLIAM. New agrarianism. *$1 Putnam 13-21317

"The 'New agrarianism' is, by sub-title, A survey of the prevalent spirit of social unrest and a consideration of the consequent campaign for the adjustment of agriculture with industry and commerce. The implication here, and the contention of the book, is that the cause of the social unrest is the unequal progress being made between agriculture, and industry and commerce."—Survey

Reviewed by A. P. Winston

Am Econ R 4:129 Mr '14 450w

Reviewed by F. P. Bye

Ann Am Acad 51:277 Ja '14 430w

Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '13 250w

"Mr. Dahlinger could well have put his message into one-third as many pages."

+ Ind 77:315 Mr 2 '14 350w

N Y Times 18:612 N 9 '13 130w

Pol Sci Q 29:555 S '14 230w

"The suggestions for the improvement of American agriculture constitute the chief contribution of the book." J. R. Howard, jr.

+ Survey 31:678 F 28 '14 480w

DALES, JOHN HANDSLEY. Manual of mechanical drawing. *75c Putnam

"Those readers who take Mr. Dales as their guide will undergo a process of careful drilling in the use and maintenance of the scale, square, pencil, pen, and compass, by means of specially designed and carefully graduated sets of exercises, largely geometrical in character, followed by examples of the projection of various machine details, and completed by the preparation of a full set of working drawings of a screw-cutting lathe, fully dimensioned, with titles and descriptions, all executed in the style of the skilled professional draughtsman. Thus the book gives a course of organised training in the draughtsman's craft."—Nature

"The book is an excellent manual of the subject."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 100w

"As the principal aim of the book is to encourage neatness and accuracy in the execution of a drawing, the book may be considered a very good one for such a purpose."

+ Engin Rec 71:55 Ja 9 '15 130w

+ Nature 94:307 N 19 '14 130w

DALRYMPLE, LEONA. Diane of the green van. il $1.35 Reilly & B. 14-5041

The story of "a young and beautiful American heiress, who has wearied of conventional society and chooses to go wandering across country in a big green van, fitted up as cozily as any boudoir. She is followed by her lover and self-appointed protector enthroned on top of a load of hay; and in this guise they make their slow way from Connecticut southward, until they finally arrive, after many incredibly narrow escapes, in the Everglades of Florida." (Bookm) But the plot is not so simple as it sounds, for all unknown to herself Diane is the daughter of the lost heir to the Houdanian throne, and a Houdanian baron, a spy, and a prince are all on her track, bringing numberless melodramatic complications.

"The dialogue is stilted and ornate, and the tale hardly satisfies the demands it makes on the reader's credulity."

— Ath 1914,2:sup99 J1 18 200w

"The whole impression left by the book is that of a conglomeration of mad irresponsibility, a host of fantastic shapes, whirling through chaos in a devil's dance. It may be a masterpiece, and it may be worth the ten thousand dollar prize that it received. But to the present reviewer it seems like rather sorry stuff, a patchwork of the chief stage properties borrowed from the 'best sellers' of the past decade, with the patching none too neatly done." Philip Tillinghast

— Bookm 39:217 Ap '14 450w

"We frankly confess that the plot baffles us. The book offers the very delirium of romance, set forth in a manner of which a feeling for nature and a smart slangy type of conversation are chief ingredients." W. M. Payne

+ Dial 56:424 My 16 '14 350w

"It is all a very entertaining pilgrimage that we take by the permission of these two vacation nomads, and there is no lack of preposterous adventure by the way."

+ N Y Times 19:108 Mr 8 '14 750w

"It's all very complicated—extremely complicated—there being three or four deadly plotters, plotting more or less at cross purposes, and such a mixup of identity that the explanatory chapter toward the end might well have been called 'Who's who.'" Doris Webb

+ Pub W 85:1059 Mr 21 '14 500w

DALY, MAURICE. Daly's billiard book; ed. by W. Welton Harris. il $1.25 (3c) McChurg 13-26154

"Daly's billiard book' is credited on its title page to that veteran player and teacher of billiards, Maurice Daly, but as Daly is a billiard expert and not a writing expert, a large part of it, as the reader soon learns, was actually written by the editor, William Welton Harris. It was all inspired, however, by Mr. Daly: it is truly his book, and the theory and practice alike which it expounds and describes are his." (N Y Times) The book is very fully illustrated with diagrams and photographs.

A L A Bk1 10:264 Mr '14

"A new book on billiards, treating particularly of the modern development of the game, is very welcome. Its many diagrams and pictures, most of which were either made or suggested by Maurice Daly, are excellent aids to the student."

+ N Y Times 18:754 D 21 '13 400w

DALY, REGINALD ALDWORTH. Igneous rocks and their origin. il $4 McGraw 14-3738

The main object of this book "is to explain the known facts of igneous geology by a few general assumptions as to the composition, structure, and physical condition of the planet."

The book is divided into three parts. The first deals with the composition and mode of occurrence of igneous rocks, the relative abundance of the different types at the surface of the earth, and the phenomena of active volcanoes. The second part deals with abyssal injection, magmatic stoping, assimilation and differentiation, the mechanism of volcanic vents, and concludes with a statement of what the author terms an 'eclectic' theory of igneous rocks. The third part is devoted to applying the general theory to igneous rocks, which, for this purpose, are divided into

DALY, REGINALD ALDWORTH—Continued. seven great groups or clans: the gabbro-clan, the granite-clan, the diorite-clan, the granodiorite-clan, the syenite-clan, the alkaline-clans, and the peridotite-clan (including magmatic-ores).—Nature

"Whatever view is taken as to the validity of the assumptions, there can be no doubt that in working out their consequences the author has produced a most interesting work, full of information on the present-day aspects of igneous geology, and eminently calculated to stimulate thought."

+ Nature 93:449 JI 2 '14 1100w

"It seems to the writer that the most fundamental feature of the book is the mistaken method employed by its author in his attempts to solve the problems of volcanism, which involve the character and origin of igneous rocks and their antecedent magmas, a method which is disclosed by the construction of the book, as well as by the statements of the author regarding it. With Professor Daly's tireless energy and vigorous methods of attack; with the acknowledged honesty of his conviction as to the correctness of his reasoning, but with his lack of discrimination between the relative values of objective realities and subjective conceptions; with his chivalrous devotion to a 'complete mental system,' and with his courage in the use of his speculative imagination—he is a veritable knight errant in petrology."—J. P. Iddings

— Science n s 40:710 N 13 '14 3000w

DANA, WILLIAM SUMNER BARTON. Swiss chalet book. il *$2.50 Constock 13-8972

A well-illustrated work with suggestions for the adaptation of this architectural form to American use. "Everything the home builder needs to know about the Swiss chalets is set forth in this book, and if anybody cares to reproduce on his country estate one of the structures Mr. Dana deals with there are plans and specifications in the book that will show him how to proceed." (N Y Times)

"Will be suggestive to architects and builders in parts of the country suited to the style."

+ A L A Bkl 10:182 Ja '14

N Y Times 18:394 JI 13 '14 60w

DANBY, ARTHUR. Natural rock asphalts and bitumens. il *$2.50 Van Nostrand (Eng Ed GS13-728)

"Mr. Danby's book has a clear field in engineering literature. Delano's little book on the same subject which appeared some twenty years ago is out of print and even if obtainable would not be, at this late date, of much practical value. . . . The several chapters of the book are successively entitled: Geology of bitumen and rock asphalt; appearance and physical structure; history and ancient use; modern exploitation of rock asphalt; sources of rock asphalt and bitumen; American deposits of bitumen; extraction and preparation of rock asphalt; tests and analyses; physical properties of rock asphalt; the carrying out of rock asphalt work; the carrying out of rock asphalt mastic work; macadam roads; and, other uses of bitumen."—Engin N

"Upon the whole the book is a very interesting one to read and will be especially so to the American engineer who has not had opportunity to visit the rock asphalt mines and works abroad and thus to acquaint himself with their many interesting details. The reader will be likely to note that the author's statements are not always clear and consistent, particularly with reference to the classification of bituminous materials under his system of nomenclature." S. Whinery

+ Engin N 70:787 O 16 '13 530w

"The book should be had by all interested in natural-rock asphalt mastics; but otherwise it has little value, especially in America." J. W. Howard

+ Engin Rec 68:588 N 22 '13 730w

DANIELS, JOHN. In freedom's birthplace: a study of the Boston negroes. *$1.50 Houghton 14-3718

"Mr. Daniels's book . . . is a valuable presentation of the history of the colored and negro peoples in Boston. . . . In his ten chapters he studies the Slave, patriot and pioneer freeman, A race delivered, Equal rights and public favor, Reaction: the negro forced upon his own resources, Taking root, Social construction and ethical growth, The upward struggle of the negro church, The leverage of the ballot, Economic achievement, The solid foundation, and The future of the negro people. These topical themes, it is true, will apply in the study of the negro in almost any community in the country, but out of no other community will there be quite the conclusions reached or the same character group of people presented."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by E. S. Todd

Am Econ R 4:685 S '14 850w

"A most painstaking study."

+ Am Hist R 19:933 JI '14 420w

"Mr. Daniels is a clear, incisive critic, whose virile sympathy for the negro is always held in check by his discriminating candor." U. G. Weatherly

+ Am J Soc 20:121 JI '14 580w

"Its distinctive merit lies in its scientific, unprejudiced attitude and frank treatment."

+ A L A Bkl 10:387 Je '14

"On the whole it is one of the most unbiased studies we have seen. The appendices containing very complete statistical tables and the excellent index add greatly to the usefulness of the book." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 54:330 JI '14 320w

"Mr. Daniels proves himself a keen observer, an exact weigher of social value, a discriminating recorder of facts in this study; but he slips into the same error that so many sociological students of the 'problem' slip into, of seeing too literally and of sometimes missing the reality that lies in the unseen facts. Whatever may be the conclusions that Mr. Daniels arrives at in his study of the Boston negro there can be no question of his thorough and painstaking examination of the subject." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Mr 4 '14 1750w

J Pol Econ 22:819 O '14 280w

"Precisely the kind of painstaking inquiry into a local problem which must be the basis of sound knowledge of the situation in the North." O. G. Villard

+ Nation 99:739 D 24 '14 300w

+ R of Rs 49:756 Je '14 130w

"This is unquestionably the best study that has ever been made thus far of the negro in a northern community." R. E. Park

+ Survey 32:100 Ap 25 '14 500w

DANTE ALIGHIERI. English Dante; a tr. in the original rhythm and rhymes by J. Pyne. *$1 Boni 14-13902

"The author in a note to a literary adviser, while admitting that he 'has set for himself a task of some audacity,' thus describes his purpose: 'In translating the "Divina commedia" into English I design to use not only Dante's rhythm, but his rhymes, line for line. My idea is to give the reader of the poem in English, so far as possible, a sense of the fascinating melody and sweetness of the original.'"—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p20 JI 29 '14 180w

"The task of carrying this careful mechanical imitation through the one hundred cantos of the Commedia is one to rouse our admiration for the courage and zeal of him who attempts it, even, though, at the sacrifice of much of the chaste, severe beauty of the original and even here and there an entire perversion of the sense and an insertion of words wholly unwarranted by any implied meaning of the text. All this, we say, may be forgiven to the zeal and daring of such an attempt, and the production of a general resemblance to Dante in so sustained an effort is no mean accomplishment." Frank Sewall

+ — N Y Times 19:349 Ag 16 '14 1400w

DARGAN, OLIVE TILFORD (MRS. PEGRAM DARGAN). Path flower and other verses. *$1.25 Scribner A15-55

"It is gratifying to have one's prophetic sense confirmed, but in this volume Mrs. Dargan has done much more than this—she has given a surprise to her most sanguine prophets. One scarcely expected from a poet who has written almost wholly in the dramatic form such spontaneous lyric utterance as this. For it is in the singing lyric, the purest and most elemental form, that Mrs. Dargan is at her best. Where the technique is least elaborate the impulse is surest. . . . 'Path-flower' is a lyric in which one finds something of the mood of Francis Thompson's 'Daisy.' . . . Mrs. Dargan is aware of her age, and one meets the great issues in her pages, but from the standpoint of poetry these are not the subjects which most command her."—N Y Times

"Not imperative for the small library unless poetry is made a special feature."

+ A L A Bkl 11:210 Ja '15

"In the 'Ballad,' 'Magdalen to her poet,' and 'Little daughters,' Mrs. Dargan has reached the highest heights of pure poetic vision. In 'Magdalen to her poet,' we have one of the half dozen great odes in American poetry; in 'Little daughters,' the greatest lyrical rendering of a modern social vision, and in the 'Ballad,' a sacrament of spiritual devotion offered by woman to man." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '14 1550w

"One cannot fail to note the delicate psychology, the pure and unaffected diction, the feeling for beauty which marks them all, and one may say without reserve that no current work in verse bears more unmistakably the poet's credentials." J. B. Rittenhouse

+ N Y Times 19:581 D 20 '14 770w

DARROCH, ALEXANDER. Education and the new utilitarianism, and other educational addresses. *$1.20 Longmans E14-788

"A book containing a series of papers and educational addresses delivered by the author from time to time at various educational gatherings." (Educ R) "Most suggestive are the author's comments upon the outcome of public education, regarded as 'education for democracy.'" (Nation)

"A sober and thoughtful volume which is not particularly noteworthy. The book is without an index."

+ — Educ R 48:427 N '14 50w

"The addresses are, on the whole, instructive reading, though not specially striking."

+ Nation 99:320 S 10 '14 170w

DARZENS, GEORGES. Chemistry. (Thresholds of science) il *50c (1c) Doubleday 14-6247

The author, who is lecturer at the école polytechnique, Paris, treats his subject in this popular handbook under three headings: General notions of physical chemistry; General chemistry; Applied chemistry. In parts 1 and 2 many simple experiments are described.

"To say that the book meets a real need, which it certainly does, is the highest praise. Its value is practical as well as informational."

+ Boston Transcript p21 J1 8 '14 100w

"Prof. Darzens's book on chemistry will enable any intelligent person to obtain, without much exertion, a fair understanding of the elements of the science; it is an extremely simple, non-technical work."

+ N Y Times 19:273 Je 14 '14 100w

DAUGHERTY, ROBERT LONG. Hydraulic turbines; with a chapter on centrifugal pumps. il *$2 McGraw 13-20794

"The author's purpose has not been to write a treatise on the design of water turbines, but rather to present the subject in such a form as to give the reader a general idea of water-power development and conditions affecting turbine operation, and also to assist him in the selection of a turbine suitable for various conditions likely to be encountered in practical work. Such items as stream gaging and stream flow as affected by rainfall, etc., although of the greatest importance in the development of water-power at any given site, are only briefly referred to, the principal features of the book being the description of the various types of waterwheels and turbines, the factors governing the selection of the most suitable type and size, and the cost not only of the turbine proper but also of the horse-power hour, thus allowing comparison with other sources of power, such as steam."—Elec World

+ A L A Bkl 10:303 Ap '14

"Professor Daugherty has produced a book for which there is an undoubted demand. He has done his work well and kept within the limits set for himself. All those interested in the development of water-power, whether on a large or small scale, including electrical engineers and operators on hydroelectric schemes, should welcome this book."

+ Elec World 63:778 Ap 4 '14 400w

"A real treat. A book written solely in the interest of the reader and without any evidence of an effort on the part of the author to make a spectacular display of his own erudition and industry. The style is clear and pleasing, and work as a whole is a most refreshing and commendable bit of engineering literature." H. E. Longwell

+ Engin N 70:999 N 13 '13 400w

DAVENPORT, HERBERT JOSEPH. Economics of enterprise. il *$2.25 (1c) Macmillan 13-23870

"In questions of economic theory the writer conceives himself, as among his colleagues of the craft, to be in essentials rather a conservative than an innovator. . . . As between a reactionary loyalty to the old, and an innovating zeal which reforms only in essentials to destroy, he would choose a middle course—to prune in order to save, to ingraft only to complete, to restate only in fundamentals to reaffirm." (Preface) From this standpoint he writes of the adjustment of price; supply and cost of production; the distributive process; land; urban and agricultural rents; money, credit and banking; interest, laws of return, etc.

"An exceptionally interesting contribution to economic theory." W. C. Mitchell

+ Am Econ R 4:602 S '14 1150w

"An important work for advanced classes in economic theory or for specialists, but too difficult for the layman."

+ A L A Bkl 11:9 S '14

Reviewed by Eliot Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 53:324 My '14 330w

Ath 1914,1:sup181 Ja 31 150w

Boston Transcript p9 F 21 '14 250w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 12:691 Ap '14 180w

"Readers of his earlier works will find much that is familiar, combined with much new material, the whole organized into a most valuable body of economic theory." J. M. Clark

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:315 Je '14 3500w

DAVIDSON, P. WYLIE. Educational metalcraft; with a foreword by Fra H. Newbery. (Longmans' technical handicraft ser.) il *$1.40 Longmans A14-1065

"Mr. Davidson is one of the instructors at the Glasgow school of art, and his book is a practical treatise on repoussé, fine chasing, silversmithing, jewellery and enamelling. The descriptions are helped by nearly four hundred diagrams and illustrations."—Sat R

DAVIDSON, P. WYLIE—Continued.

"An excellent manual for the beginner. Useful to the instructor, the student, the craftsman, and the apprentice."

+ A L A Bkl 10:349 My '14

"We cannot pretend to admire some of the designs."

+ — Sat R 117:89 Ja 17 '14 180w

DAVIES, EMIL. Collectivist state in the making. 12 *$1.69 Macmillan (Eng ed A14-2393)

A work dealing "with the increasing economic activity of public authority in state and municipality. There is some discussion of the forces which have promoted collectivist policy and of the limits which may be set to collectivism; but in the main the book is devoted to an enumeration of things now done in various parts of the world by the community for its own people. The relation of collectivism to the labor problem is touched upon briefly in the closing pages of the volume."—Nation

"The author is most satisfactory when he is reproducing facts that he has culled from many lands and diverse publications. The book, being an introduction to a very large subject, is perforce somewhat sketchy, though we have no more fault to find with it on this score than occasional irrelevances which are meant, we think, sarcastically."

+ — Ath 1914,2:140 Ag 1 680w

"While this book does not offer much that will be new to the economist, the average reader, especially if he be interested in social betterment, or directly concerned in city or municipal organization and government, will find it highly suggestive."

+ — J Pol Econ 22:1023 D '14 350w

"The only assertion that the author makes on behalf of his book is that it is not academic. If by this he means that he has not gathered or sifted his material impartially, his contention is entirely well founded."

+ — Nation 99:583 N 12 '14 270w

DAVIES, RANDALL. Greatest house at Chelsea. il *$3 Lane 14-3579

"The greatest house in Chelsea' is one built by Sir Thomas More in 1520 and demolished by Sir Hans Sloane in 1740, then in possession of the manor. At that time it was known as Beaufort house, from the Duke of Beaufort, who conveyed it with its extensive garden and outbuildings to Sloane in 1737. All that is left of it now, is a fragment of sixteenth-century brickwork." (Sat R) "By making a careful study of old records, including many unpublished letters, Mr. Davies has constructed an orderly history of this famous house, the various episodes of which are enlivened by many charming pictures of domestic happiness." (Boston Transcript)

"Its successive tenants form a goodly band, and Mr. Davies does justice to them all."

+ Ath 1914,1:196 F 7 600w

"Fascinating volume." H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 13 '13 270w

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 31 '14 380w

"As a view of two centuries (1520-1740) of English life and character, illustrated by a succession of notable persons and interesting events, the book is well planned and well executed."

+ Dial 56:347 Ap 16 '14 300w

"Mr. Davies comes to his subject as an antiquary and historian, and his pages lack the intimacy of Miss Manning's charming tale of 'The household of Sir Thomas More'; but they have the advantage of not transgressing the actual documents."

+ Nation 98:242 Mr 5 '14 700w

"This story is written for lovers of curious bits of historical lore."

+ Outlook 106:505 F 28 '14 100w

Sat R 117:150 Ja 31 '14 180w

+ Spec 112:652 Ap 18 '14 330w

DAVIESS, MARIA THOMPSON. Phyllis. il 12 *$1.25 (21½c) Century 14-16944

A story for girls. Until she was fifteen, Phyllis has never had a girl friend, or a boy friend either for that matter. With an invalid mother she had traveled about the world never stopping long enough to get acquainted. Then she goes to live in Harpeth valley and finds a village full of boys and girls of her own age, but she is shy and diffident, and the young people, who cannot forget her father's wealth, are afraid to be friendly. It is Roxanne Byrd, who was forced to move into a little cottage when her own home became the property of Phyl's father, who first puts pride aside and makes friends.

"A very sentimental story."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:223 Ja '15

"As always, she has some delightful bits of portraiture for us in this latest book." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:448 D '14 50w

"The tale is told with some humor and Phyllis is a very attractive little person."

+ N Y Times 19:461 O 25 '14 200w

"A book every young girl will enjoy, even though it appeals to her elders as strongly." H. L. Reed

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:264 N '14 30w

DAVIS, CALVIN OLIN. High school courses of study: a constructive study applied to New York city. (School efficiency ser.) il $1.50 (3c) World bk. co. 14-13886

This volume, like the others of the series, consists chiefly of a portion of the report made to the Committee on school inquiry of the Board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York in July 1912. Professor Davis of the University of Michigan conducted the investigation into high school courses of study. His report proper is, in this book, prefaced by four general chapters: The newer conceptions and aims of the high school; The general aspects of the program of studies; The special aspects of the program of studies; High school systems in ten cities. The purpose of the book in general is "to promote a clearer appreciation than is now prevalent of the fact that a new conception is developing respecting the function of our public high schools."

"The chief adverse criticism on the book is the fact that a third of it is particular and not of general interest." D. W. Horton

+ — School R 23:139 F '15 200w

DAVIS, GRACE EMELINE (TINKER) (MRS. OZORA STEARNS). Mary Eliza's wonder-life. *$1 (4½c) Sherman, French & co. 13-26182

This is a story about make-believe things in which the events of Mary Eliza's every-day life on her grandfather's farm are very much mixed up with events in an imaginary world. The story is written for children.

"Mrs. Davis has succeeded in writing a child's book which any child under ten or twelve years of age will enjoy, identify herself with wholesomely, and, in all probability, be enthusiastic over."

+ Chaut 72:493 F 21 '14 250w

"Any little boy or girl can have similar wonders to those found in 'Mary Eliza's wonder-life,' for they are the make-believes that come in the everyday life, and help to make it much more interesting."

+ N Y Times 18:742 D 14 '13 180w

DAVIS, HORACE A. Judicial veto. *$1 (4½c) Houghton 14-20747

The author's position in regard to the judicial veto is stated in the preface. He says: "The three essays on judicial review which make up this book contribute each its share to the conclusion that deciding the constitutionality of statutes is a political and not a legal function. . . . The first chapter attempts to sketch in untechnical language the present situation and the present tendency; the second proposes a common-sense remedy; the third is an historical study of the origin of judicial review in the federal Supreme court." These three chapters are followed by Notes, consisting mainly of citations, and an appendix containing a classification of New York statutes adjudicated.

Reviewed by E. S. Corwin

New Republic 1:28 Ja 23 '15 1350w

"Mr. Davis's volume is full of facts; they are candidly presented, and they are sustained by detailed reference to authorities."

+ N Y Times 19:567 D 13 '14 1100w

DAVIS, JESSE BUTTRICK. Vocational and moral guidance. forms $1.25 (2c) Ginn 15-2089

This book has been prepared, the author says, in response to a demand for more detailed information regarding the work of the Central high school of Grand Rapids, Michigan, of which he is principal. The book is made up in two parts. Part 1 covers the whole subject of vocational and moral guidance with chapters on: The problem of vocational guidance in the public schools; The problem of moral guidance in the public schools; The plan; Vocational direction in the grades; The elements of character that make for success in life, etc. Part 2 is made up of contributed articles, 10 in number, by practical workers who have obtained results. For the benefit of those who are about to put a system of vocational guidance into practice, blank forms, outlines, and reports to show how others have attacked the problem are presented. The bibliographies at the ends of the chapters have been worked out with the assistance of Samuel H. Ranck, librarian of the Grand Rapids library.

"His suggestions are as practical as they are friendly, and should be read by every parent as well as teacher of boys and girls. Throughout, his theories are constructive rather than destructive, and tend toward the pacification of that 'revolution,' which he with most students of pedagogy, feels is 'bound to come in our system of education.'"

+ Boston Transcript p10 Ja 9 '15 370w

DAVIS, JOHN FRANCIS. California, romantic and resourceful. il $1.25 (13c) Robertson 14-14164

This book in which the author makes a plea for the collection, preservation and diffusion of information relating to Pacific coast history is made up of a revision and amplification of two addresses, one delivered at the celebration of Admission day in 1908, one given before the Commonwealth club in San Francisco in 1913. In an appendix the author tells an old California romance, The love-story of Concha Argüello, and quotes a poem by Bret Harte on the same theme.

Reviewed by C. A. Kofoid

Dial 57:497 D 16 '14 200w

Nation 99:714 D 17 '14 120w

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. Boy scout. il *50c (7c) Scribner 14-9412

A rule of the Boy scouts is that every member must do some one a good turn every day. Jimmie Reeder's good turn for the day was giving his sister Sadie ten cents to go to the movies. Then to make up the ten cents he started to walk the five miles to Hunter's Island where he was going to camp with the other boys, thereby saving car fare. On the way a rich young man in a motor car offered him a ride; Jimmie refused and told why he refused, and the young man started to think; and so it happened that Jimmie's good deed started a train of other good deeds that reached to the ends of the earth.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 1 '14 120w

"The story is told in a style that wastes no time, but never forgets incidental humor. It makes a helpful half hour's reading for any one."

+ Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 80w

"The spirit of 'The boy scout' is excellently caught in a rapidly moving short story."

+ Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 20w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:264 N '14 30w

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. With the allies. il *$1 (21c) Scribner 14-22662

Richard Harding Davis who as a correspondent in earlier wars has written of the glory of warfare, writes here of its horror and waste. He is strongly partisan and protests against the neutral state of mind urged upon Americans. Contents: The Germans in Brussels; "To be treated as a spy"; The burning of Louvain; Paris in war time; The battle of Soissons; The bombardment of Rheims; The spirit of the English; Our diplomats in the war zone; "Under fire"; The waste of war; The war correspondents.

A L A Bkl 11:212 Ja '15

+ Ind 80:475 D 21 '14 200w

"An interesting book."

+ N Y Br Lib News 2:8 Ja '15 30w

"Mr. Davis gives admirable descriptions of such phases of the war, and of the war's results, as he witnessed in some weeks in Belgium, France, and England."

+ N Y Times 19:563 D 13 '14 370w

DAVIS, ROY, and LINGHAM, CLARENCE HART. Business English and correspondence. $1 Ginn 14-14903

A text-book for classes in secondary and commercial schools. The subject matter has been chosen, the authors say, "as a result of a careful inquiry, among teachers of English and business men, as to what a course in business English and correspondence should include." First, they are agreed, it must include a thorough grounding in the principles of grammar and composition, and the first five chapters of the book are accordingly devoted to grammar, punctuation, spelling, etc. Following these are chapters on: The form of a letter; Letter of application; The buying letter; The selling letter; The friendly letter; The letter of introduction and the letter of recommendation; Collections; The advertisement; Reports and summaries; The telegraphic message. Postal information, a glossary of commercial terms, etc. are given in appendixes.

Nation 99:332 S 10 '14 120w

DAVIS, WILLIAM STEARNS. Day in old Athens: a picture of Athenian life. il $1.25 Allyn 14-10909

"An elementary handbook on Greek private antiquities. The book purports to set forth the experiences at Athens of a visitor in the year 360 B. C. The tourist lands at Piræus, follows the outside road to Athens, visits the marketplace, then the home of a well-to-do gentleman. In connection with this he gives all the necessary information as to the various members of the family—shows the position occupied by the women and the slaves, with chapters also on the children. Other chapters treat of the physicians, trade and manufactures, amusements, country life, etc."—Nation

"Good for supplementary work in high-school classes and for older readers bent on interest rather than scholarship."

+ A L A Bkl 11:71 O '14 *

+ Educ R 48:533 D '14 50w

"An example of textbook making pure and simple."

— Educ R 49:97 Ja '15 40w

"The style is vivacious, the information reasonably accurate, and the whole presentation interesting. The book will find its widest use in the schools, but it will also appeal to older readers who desire an interesting, rather than a learned sketch of life in Athens."

+ Nation 99:324 S 10 '14 200w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

DAVIS, WILLIAM STEARNS—Continued.

+ N Y Times 19:367 Ag 30 '14 90w

"A valuable supplementary reader for students who are beginning the study of Greek history."
+ Pittsburgh 19:416 O '14 70w

"Though of first value for school reference it is so vivacious in style, and the material so well arranged and presented as to make it readable for any one."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:304 D '14 60w

DAVIS, WILLIAM STEARNS, and MCKEN-DRICK, NORMAN SHAW. History of mediæval and modern Europe for secondary schools. il *$1.50 Houghton 14-10270

A text-book for use in secondary schools. The main purpose of the book is "to answer the question how the European nations, especially the prime units in civilization,—England, France, Germany, and Italy,—came to be what they are to-day." In including or excluding events the tests used by the authors have been: "Is this matter really important historically?" and "If so, can it be stated clearly, and so as to appeal to the imagination and understanding of an immature student in a relatively short number of words?" The account begins with the fall of the Roman empire but in the treatment of the succeeding periods the amount of space given to events is "increasingly ample as recent times are approached."

"It is more elementary and less full than the similar texts of West, Harding, Myers, and Robinson."

+ Nation 99:327 S 10 '14 320w

"The authors are to be much commended that they have found it possible, notwithstanding the necessity of being brief and concise, to put enough life and color into their narrative to make it interesting reading."

+ N Y Times 19:359 Ag 23 '14 90w

DAVOL, RALPH. Handbook of American pageantry. il $2.50 (10c) Davol pub. co., Taunton, Mass.

Of modern pageantry the author says, its aim is, "to increase the world's store of happiness by interpreting the meaning of human life and by bringing art and beauty into the minds of all the people." In part 1 of his book he has chapters on: The philosophy of pageantry; Pageantry as one of the fine arts; As an educational factor; As a nursery of patriotism; From the sociologist's standpoint; As a moral agent. Part 2 takes up the practical side, with a discussion of The technique of pageantry and suggestions as to Subject, Site, Committees, Costumes, etc. Extracts from librettos of various pageants are given, and the book is beautifully illustrated with scenes from pageants in different parts of the country.

"A volume that is at once an entertaining account and a valuable record."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 19 '14 300w

Cath World 100:691 F '15 160w

Ind 81:214 F 8 '15 80w

"A fascinating volume. A book that one even remotely interested in the subject cannot afford to ignore."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:444 F '15 250w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). Florence on a certain night, and other poems. *$1.25 Holt 14-9942

On a certain night in Florence Leonardo da Vinci, leaning out of his window, listened to a passer-by who sang one of the songs of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and it set him a-musing of his past life with its half-failures, and of his unfinished picture of Mona Lisa's face, the smile of which still baffled him. Later in the same evening came one bringing news of her death. The other long poem of the book, The hill-tower, is likewise a romance of mediæval Italy, and the rest of the book is taken up with songs and shorter verses.

Reviewed by W. A. Bradley
Bookm 40:209 O '14 140w

+ Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 90w

"The work of a true lyric poet."

+ Lit D 48:1129 My 9 '14 280w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 99:655 D 3 '14 160w

"It is a pleasure to learn from 'Florence on a certain night' that Mr. Dawson is a better poet than he is a novelist—a pleasure because we need poets more than we do novelists."

+ N Y Times 19:467 O 21 '14 420w

"Of rather uneven workmanship."

+ Springfield Republican p5 J1 16 '14 330w

DAWSON, CONINGSBY (WILLIAM). The raft. 10 il *$1.35 Holt 14-16917

"The theme is, in the broad view, sex; but at no point does the author resort to realism or trade upon it in the abstract. This phase is touched upon only remotely; marriage as a condition being more largely discussed than abstract sex. Of marriage, the keynote is voiced by one of the characters: 'We girls are adrift on a raft, and we can't swim. Over there's the land of marriage with the little children, the homes and the husbands. Unless some of the men see us and put off in boats to rescue us, we'll be caught in the current of the mid-ocean.' Incidentally, this girl's marriage was unhappy. . . . Parallel with her unhappy wedded life, Mr. Dawson beautifully unfolds the life of a happily married pair. And from this union springs Peter, who must be accorded the center of interest in the story."—Springfield Republican

+ A L A Bkl 11:121 N '14 ✕

"Because his substance is so much more important than his form, we feel that it does not greatly matter how loose his construction turns out to be at last analysis. His people are alive, preëminently and triumphantly alive,—and what higher form of creation is there than the giving of life?" F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:166 O '14 830w

"With all its defects, however, 'The raft' is a story that conquers the reader even in the midst of his annoyance over its incoherence. Even if it is not convincing, it is entertaining. Its shrewd philosophy, its presentation of human character, high and low, good and bad, strong and weak, is remarkably faithful." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 820w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:255 O 1 '14 450w

"'The raft' would hardly be worth noticing if Mr. Dawson hadn't written it."

+ New Republic 1:27 D 26 '14 1250w

+ N Y Times 19:378 S 13 '14 800w

"There is a certain lack of coherence toward the end in the story as a whole." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 86:806 S 19 '14 750w

"There is no gainsaying that this is one of the most striking pieces of fiction of the year. It not only establishes Mr. Dawson's high rank as a novelist, but reveals a remarkable versatility and an equal gift for characterization. In addition there is a maturity to his style rare in a writer so short a time before the public."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 17 '14 550w

DAWSON, MARY, and TELFORD, EMMA
10 PADDOCK. Book of entertainments and frolics for all occasions. 75c (1c) McKay A14-2540

The authors offer a number of suggestions for new ways of celebrating Christmas, New Year's, St. Patrick's day, and other well-established occasions, and also outline entertainments which can be carried out at any time one pleases. The suggestions cover games, refreshments, decorations, etc.

DAWSON, MARY, and TELFORD, EMMA
10 PADDOCK. Book of parties and pastimes. 75c (1c) McKay

An Alice in wonderland party, an American beauty evening, a clothespin social, a doll reception, a golf tee, a little women party, are some of the novel entertainments described in this book. There are also suggestions for christening parties, church socials, picnics, etc.

DAWSON, WILLIAM HARBUTT. Municipal life and government in Germany. *$3.75 Longmans 14-21427

"Mr. Dawson's volume, drawn from a period of twenty-five years of actual contact with German life, presents a picture of German self-government derived, not from the study of laws and statistics alone, but from observation of German municipal authorities as they are at work today. The fact which emerges most clearly from the exposition is, inevitably, the wide range of administrative powers possessed by the German towns, and the result, that the municipalities have been thoroughly ready to meet their growing responsibilities. . . . Every chapter of Mr. Dawson's exposition leaves the impression of a people working splendidly in harness, building up free and independent institutions under a government and a tradition which would seem to favor such institutions but little."—N Y Times

"Careful, cyclopedic work."

+ A L A Bkl 11:154 D '14

"A model of painstaking investigation, lucid description, and impartial deduction." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 13:433 Ja '15 100w

+ Nation 99:779 D 31 '14 400w

"As a sort of encyclopedia, Mr. Dawson's book will prove an excellent desk companion for those who would know the facts about German municipalities. As an indication of the forces which are at work upon the individuals of every community, making, through the adoption of a free-rein system, for the stimulation and preservation of that vigorous public spirit which was the expressed purpose of the municipal ordinance, it is none the less valuable."

+ N Y Times 19:361 Ag 30 '14 1900w

"This is a storehouse of valuable information."

+ Outlook 107:1017 Ag 22 '14 150w

"Detailed, clear, and readable study."

+ Outlook 108:902 D 16 '14 250w

"Is a mass of information."

+ Spec 113:sup695 N 21 '14 950w

"This work is a compendium, brief enough to serve for ready reference, yet developed enough to be readable." E. T. Hartman

+ Survey 33:274 D 5 '14 630w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:258 N '14 60w

DAWSON, WILLIAM JAMES. America, and other poems. *$1.25 Lane 14-18371

The initial poem is a fine tribute to America by one who looks on it from the background of old-world traditions and who believes its ideals will endure. Among the other poems in the book are several spirited narratives and a number of lyrics of real beauty.

"These poems are of great intensity and beauty."

+ R of Rs 51:248 F '15 50w

DAY, GEORGE E. Productive swine husbandry. (Lippincott's farm manuals) il *$1.50 Lippincott 13-16606

"It has been the author's twofold purpose in this volume to prepare a work which will serve as a text-book for agricultural students, and to place at the disposal of the busy farmer a reference book which will give, in concise form, the findings of the best experiment stations in regard to the problems of the successful handling of swine." (R of Rs) "It is divided into seven parts, dealing with the breeding, feeding, marketing and curing, housing, sanitation, and health of swine." (Boston Transcript)

"Covers the subject fully, is accurate but popular, and practical. Excellent book for secondary school instruction and for the farmer, though rather of more use to northern and Canadian breeders."

+ A L A Bkl 10:182 Ja '14

"It is full of practical suggestions for the farmer who is interested in the breeding of fine hogs."

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 3 '13 100w

"The subject-matter is comprehensive and painstakingly explicit."

+ Nation 99:331 S 10 '14 180w

"The illustrations of the volume are to be especially commended."

+ R of Rs 48:379 S '13 80w

DAY, LILLIAN CATHERINE (PASCAL). Social entertainments. il *$1 Moffat 14-12874

"If any one be in doubt as to what to do to amuse guests at any gathering—a May party, a barn fete, a bride shower, or any quest with wholesome fun as its object—a happy solution of the problem may be found in these pages. Indeed, the little book aims to be 'a central supply station, a sort of clearing house for home-made fun.' . . . Among the special entertainments it plans are those for Thanksgiving day, New Year's day, St. Valentine's day, St. Patrick's day, a town fete, a melon frolic, and an autumn leaf tea. All have the charm of artistic originality and inexpensiveness."—N Y Times

"For the hostess with ingenuity, a suggestive little book."

+ A L A Bkl 11:64 O '14

"A book of this kind has a practical value, for the entertainments it suggests are those within the means of people of moderate circumstances."

+ Boston Transcript p25 O 7 '14 170w

+ N Y Times 19:393 S 20 '14 60w

DEEPIING, WARWICK. King behind the king. u *$1.25 (2c) McBride, Nast & co.

It was in the course of his service as forester to John of Gaunt that Fulk Ferrers caught Isoult of the Rose red-handed in the act of stalking deer in his master's preserves. She is wondrous fair, this Isoult, companion of outlaws, but Fulk of the forest was not the man to be swerved from duty by a woman's beautiful face, and she is held captive, waiting trial before the verderers at the next swainmote court. Before that trial however John Ball's followers, of whom she is one, come to her rescue and the tables are turned and Fulk becomes her prisoner. The romance follows the turbulent course of Wat Tyler's rebellion, and the strange likeness between Fulk Ferrers and King Richard is made much of ere the story is done, for in Mr. Deeping's chronicle it was not the boy king himself who rode out that morning to meet the insurgents at Mile End.

+ Bookm 40:683 F '15 250w

"In this tale are present all the elements that go to the making of an 'historical' novel that sins against nothing but history."

+ — Nation 99:499 O 22 '14 350w

"His story is an entertaining romance, of no great depth or weight, but picturesque and easy to read."

+ N Y Times 19:431 O 11 '14 350w

"It is not unlikely that Mr. Deeping takes unwarranted liberties with history and perhaps is a little unjust to Richard's kingly qualities, but he provides a thrilling progress for the hero and heroine."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 400w

DEEPIING, WARWICK. White gate. il *$1.25 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. A14-865

The story of a protracted wooing carried on after marriage. A young girl who has led a lonely and abnormal life in an English village, with a mother whose past cuts her off from all society, is left crushed by her mother's death, feeling herself partly responsible for it. A man of inventive genius who has long interested himself in the girl marries her off-hand and carries her away to the south of France. Here, thru seeing much of life and meeting many types of men and women, she is restored to a normal balance and awakens to a sense of her own love for her husband.

DEEPING, WARWICK—Continued.

A L A Bkl 10:324 Ap '14

"This somewhat dreary story is a cloak for the exposition of theories of life which few people, we fancy, will feel sufficiently interested to dispute."

— Ath 1913,2:252 S 13 90w

"There is an atmosphere of wholesomeness and sanity about the whole book. The author never preaches and is never dull." P. L. Fleming

+ Bookm 39:221 Ap '14 470w

Boston Transcript p10 Je 6 '14 280w

— Nation 98:265 Mr 12 '14 370w

"Notwithstanding the feebleness of construction and the waning toward the end instead of the waxing of the interest, the story has freshness in its viewpoint and vigor and liveliness in the manner of its telling."

+ — N Y Times 19:37 Mr 1 '14 550w

"A holiday novel of a man and a girl, with much dialogue, little plot, and a happy ending: here and there it is in danger of being a little vulgar and unpleasant."

+ — Spec 111:468 S 27 '13 32w

DE FOREST, JEAN LOUISE. Love affair of a homely girl. il *$1 (2c) Sully & Kleinteich 14-1657

An unattractive girl who has never had a lover nor a proposal loses her self-consciousness in the presence of a blind man whose burden she tries to lighten. She is given to understand that a friend has told him that she is beautiful and in trying to live up to the rôle of pretty girl she finds herself attracting other men who have never noticed her before; but of course it is the blind man to whom her love is given, and as he regains his sight all ends well. The story carries an obvious moral for homely girls.

"A light story without any distinction, but pleasant reading for an idle hour."

+ A L A Bkl 10:324 Ap '14

"Other than an expression of the desire of its author to write, there seems little reason why the book should have been written."

— Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 150w

"The reader has to swallow not a few improbabilities by the way, but he will take them without a grimace for the sake of a well written story, peculiarly happy in its descriptions, and unusually wholesome, sweet and sunny."

+ — N Y Times 19:58 F 8 '14 350w

DE GARMO, CHARLES. Principles of secondary education; new and enl ed il *$1.25 - (1½c) Macmillan 13-25307

The first edition of this work was issued seven years ago. Since that time the aspects of secondary education have changed and new demands have been made on the American high school. Chief of these is the demand for vocational training. "What high-school leaders and teachers seem most to desire is a perspective of the whole situation, in order that they may estimate correctly the validity of the respective claims of general and special education. . . . To meet this need for perspective, six chapters upon Basic Ideals for educational progress have been added." The chapters treating of the function and educational value of the several school studies have not been altered.

"It is a good book for the student of economics as well as for the high school teacher."

+ Chaut 72:509 F 28 '14 200w

"The thing of most value in this book is the broad view presented in the impartial treatment of the function and worth of the studies and study groups." D. W. Horton

+ School R 22:349 My '14 600w

DEISSMANN, GUSTAV ADOLF. St. Paul: a study in social and religious history; tr. by Lionel R. M. Strachan. il *$2.50 Doran 13-269

"Dr. Deissmann has made two extended tours in the Levant, and has himself journeyed by routes and visited cities in the footsteps of the Apostle. So little, he claims, have the conditions of life in the lower and lower middle classes changed since the first century that his travels have enabled him to bring back to us not a little of the external conditions under which S. Paul originally worked. The author is also a well-known authority on the general archaeology of the period, and especially on the papyri which have thrown so much light on that side of the life of the time which is unrepresented in the great classical authors with their literary and aristocratic preoccupations. . . . The book also contains the author's interpretation of S. Paul, as a man, as a Christian, and as apostle or preacher."—Sat R

"The book is fresh and suggestive in thought, and graphic in style; and its special interest is that it is an attack on Paulinism, an assault on a theological system."

+ Ath 1912,2:621 N 23 470w

+ — Sat R 115:83 Ja 18 '13 730w

"The special merit of the book does not lie where the reader would look for it, and where the author himself seems disposed to place it. It lies rather in the thoroughness of the recognition that the true key to the Epistles is St. Paul's personal experience."

+ Spec 110:500 Mr 22 '13 500w

"It is a good book, but not good enough to justify the form and price of its publication. Good, but not so good as the author's own tone and claim would lead one to expect; not so good as the elaborate indices at the end seem to imply; not so good as one would look for, on such a subject as the Apostle Paul, from the man who occupies the most prominent New Testament professorship in Germany, that at Berlin." F. C. Porter

+ — Yale R n s 3:401 Ja '14 1050w

DE KNOOP, FRED A. baroness. Bible story and its teaching for children. il $2.50 Dutton

"The desire to give to young people and to busy people a combination of fine art with a simple synopsis of the books of both the Old and the New Testaments brought to birth this effort to simplify the Bible." (Chaut) The illustrations are from famous Italian paintings.

"If one wants a summary this book has its value."

+ Chaut 72:509 F 28 '14 140w

"The book would be more satisfactory perhaps if the author had omitted her own commentary; this is useful, nevertheless, when it is simply explanatory."

+ — N Y Sun p5 N 29 '13 70w

"This book is conspicuously better than many we have scanned. The narrative is straightforward, marked, of course, with the inevitable tendency of one who paraphrases a perfect model to use two long words where one short word sufficed in the original; but as a text book it will do."

+ — Sat R 116:sup14 N 29 '13 130w

DE LAGUNA, THEODORE. Introduction to the science of ethics. *$1.75 (1c) Macmillan

"The title of this book is intended to be fairly descriptive of it. It treats of ethics as a science, which if not wholly independent by metaphysical considerations—and of no science can that be said—is sufficiently independent to permit of separate positive treatment." (Preface) The book is made up in three parts. Part 1, on The field of ethics, considers the scope and methods of ethics as a science, with one chapter on freedom of will. Part 2 is a review of the chief Greek and English ethical theories. Part 3, on The evolutionary theory of moral values, takes up The significance of morality for society; Character, sentiment and value; The social character of sentiments, and the objectivity of values; The significance of Darwinism; The evolution of moral standards.

DELAND, MRS. MARGARET WADE (CAMP-"BELL"). Hands of Esau. il *$1 (7c) Harper
14-18918

A reprint of a story that appeared first in the "Woman's Home Companion." Nina Morgan loves and has promised to marry Tom Vail, a young architect in her father's office. She learns thru accident of a secret which he himself does not know because his mother had kept the truth from him—that his father had been a criminal. Later he finds out, and Nina, who knows that he knows, waits for him to tell her. He does not tell, and she breaks the engagement and sends him from her. This bare outline of a plot is, in the telling animated with Mrs. Deland's sympathy and understanding.

"A volume small in size but large in thought-provoking qualities."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 280w

+ Dial 57:462 D 1 '14 100w

"It is written of the youthful and for the youthful; its fluency, its unambitious treatment of simple minds and a readily comprehensible situation, its open emphasis on ethical values, design it for hearts a long way from the sophisticated dryness of summer's dust."

+ Nation 99:435 O 8 '14 200w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 140w

"Mrs. Deland's little story is told with all the simplicity and directness, but, at the same time, the delicate art that always marks her work. She has yielded again in this tale to her tendency to carry the story on after she has reached the dramatic climax."

+ N Y Times 19:399 S 27 '14 300w

"This is a short tale well told."

+ Outlook 108:393 O 14 '14 90w

"One of the most compelling and sympathetic narratives of recent days." Joseph Mosher

+ Pub W 86:2010 D 12 '14 250w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 370w

DELANO, JANE A., and McISAAC, ISABEL.
American Red Cross textbook on elementary hygiene and home care of the sick.
il *$1 Blakiston 13-26759

A book designed as a guide for the average household. "Half of the book deals with means and methods of preventing disease; the other half contains simple lessons from which one may learn how to care for the sick." (N Y Times)

A L A Bkl 10:265 Mr '14 ✕

"Instruction of great value is presented in the book."

+ N Y Times 19:60 F 8 '14 80w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Rocks of Valpré. il
* $1.35 Putnam 13-26183

"The story opens and ends on the Breton coast, at the little fishing village of Valpré, but the greater part of the action takes place in England. One of the chief characters is an ambitious young artillery officer in a regiment of the French army stationed at Valpré. He is at work on a new instrument of death which is to make the army of his France invincible, and to keep his secret perfectly secure he works in a cave whose entrance is closed by the waves at high tide. . . . While he worked, an English maiden, pretty and gay, had been his comrade. He had taken her to the cave, and they had been caught, through an accident, by the tide, and made prisoners. And this incident gives rise, as the years go on, to a coil of circumstances that makes a well-constructed and closely knit tale."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 10:324 Ap '14

"The easy simplicity with which this story is told is its chief merit; its faults are undue length and too numerous love-scenes."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup471 Mr 28 100w

"Altogether, this is a well-intentioned little story, with which it would be an unkindness to find fault for its extreme lightness of weight, —because it is so very evident that it is precisely the light, inconsequential thing that its author meant it to be." F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:210 Ap '14 200w

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 400w

"A deft old-fashioned novel, with much variety of interest and some effective character drawing. It comes dangerously near shipwreck on the rock of sentimentality, but never becomes quite mawkish." W. M. Payne

+ Dial 56:424 My 16 '14 300w

"The story abounds in strong and telling contrasts of character and temperament. The two men who love the girl and her three brothers all bear the stamp of individuality, are clearly realized, and effectively contrasted. The story abounds in emotional crises, carries its emotional suspense through to the end, and closes upon a high and solemn note."

+ N Y Times 19:73 F 15 '14 350w

"The rocks of Valpré' has all the elements of a popular success. Miss Dell writes skilfully. She has all the tricks of the trade. Her colours are thickly spread and her coincidences are stretched. She writes for an uncritical public, which will not blame her for that."

+ Sat R 117:54 Ja 10 '14 700w

"The plot is commonplace, the romance highly coloured; yet Miss Dell's story moves swiftly, and will appeal to those who prefer their heroes to be ultra-heroic."

+ Spec 112:273 F 14 '14 26w

DELL, ETHEL MAY. Swindler, and other
"stories." *$1.35 (1c) Putnam A15-30

Ten short stories make up the contents of this book. The second of them is a sequel to the first and was written, we infer from a note which accompanies it, to please a friend who wanted a happy ending. The stories that follow are unrelated; their titles are: The nonentity; Her hero; The example; The friend who stood by; The right man; The knight-errant; A question of trust; Where the heart is.

"Though the incidents and situations described are improbable, each story has a definite plot, which is handled with dexterity."

+ Ath 1914,2:232 Ag 29 170w

"The author's greatest defect lies in her sentimentality, which is occasionally more than oppressive."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O '21 '14 350w

+ N Y Times 19:461 O 25 '14 170w

"Their slipshod and facile sentimentality, their hopeless unreality, place them beyond the pale of criticism. The writer condescends to any device."

+ Sat R 118:227 Ag 22 '14 250w

DELLENBAUGH, FREDERICK SAMUEL.
Frémont and '49. il *$4.50 (2½c) Putnam
14-18401

The author has prepared a biography of one of the picturesque figures in American history. No complete story of this adventurous career has ever been written, he says, and he feels that neither at the hands of his government nor his fellow countrymen has Frémont received justice. The author recognizes three epoch-making events in our history and it is with the second of these, the extension of control to the Pacific, that his book deals, for Frémont's story is essentially the story of the winning of California.

+ A L A Bkl 11:217 Ja '15

"Mr. Dellenbaugh's contribution to the history of the west and the biography of one of America's great men, is not only of great value, but it is of fascinating interest." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 1400w

"As a picture of western exploration more or less vitally connected with the logical rounding out of our national domain, the volume is the success which the name of Dellenbaugh implies. But when we come to the other question, Has Mr. Dellenbaugh reversed the verdict of history as to the serious shortcomings of Frémont? we are forced to say that the book is unconvincing." W. H. Johnson

DELLENBAUGH, F. S.:—Continued.

+ Dial 57:452 D 1 '14 830w

+ Ind 80:380 D 7 '14 350w

"A full and fairly impartial account."

+ N Y Times 19:419 O 4 '14 80w

"That a really good biography of Frémont was needed will be conceded by historians, and Mr. Dellenbaugh's book seems to meet this need."

+ Outlook 108:732 N 25 '14 200w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 17 '14 2000w

DE MORGAN, WILLIAM FRENCH. When ghost meets ghost. $1.60 (½c) Holt 14-4932

Out of the many threads of story that are here woven together we select the one that gives the book its title. This is the story that leads up to the meeting of the two old, old sisters, women of over eighty, who as the twins, Maisie and Phoebe, had once looked just alike and had worn like lavender gowns, and each of whom for fifty years has believed the other dead. For the ghosts are only the old memories and old associations, so faint and wraith-like in this case that the two can live near one another for years and can finally come together in the same house without recognition. And finally, when recognition is thrust upon them, there is the pitiable attempt of each to see in the other the personality of the radiant Maisie or Phoebe of the long ago. There are other threads of story, too, and many characters: Gwen of the Tower, Miss Dickinson and Mr. Pellew, Uncle Mo and Aunt M'riar, Dave and Dolly, and Micky Ragstroar, and others who meet "so strangely to act and react on one another" after the manner of Dickens or De Morgan characters.

"Even the most devoted readers will be apt to find this a little too long."

+ A L A Bkl 10:324 Ap '14

"The book might well have been dedicated to all to whom rest and freedom from excitement are essential. It would be detracting from the enjoyment of a rest-cure to attempt to indicate what this rambling multitude of words seeks to convey to the reader."

— Ath 1914,1:226 F '14 200w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:208 Ap '14 880w

"It is evident from every page of 'When ghost meets ghost,' that William De Morgan is his story and his story is William De Morgan. With any other novelist this might be deplorably disastrous, but with him it is commendably praiseworthy. His personality, his very voice seeming to speak from the printed page, makes his story what it is." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 28 '14 1500w

+ Cath World 99:686 Ag '14 130w

"It is worth a whole wilderness of the popular novels of the day." W. M. Payne

+ Dial 56:247 Mr 16 '14 450w

"It is full of human interest, none more so."

+ Ind 77:354 Mr 9 '14 1350w

+ Nation 98:300 Mr 19 '14 1100w

"It is perhaps this mellowness and sweetness about Mr. De Morgan which holds him so secure a place in our affections. We are not blind to his faults. They have aggravated since we last met and 'When ghost meets ghost' is long, so long that we are not entirely mollified by the author's humble admission that he really can't tell the story very quick, and the assurance that we can skip if we like, for some of it is not important. But the point is, if we are true De Morganites, we don't skip. Which is high praise for a book of nearly 900 pages, fine print at that, and a worthy tribute to the spirit of fiction."

+ N Y Times 19:81 F 22 '14 1050w

"A mid-Victorian tale of fineness in spirit and quality."

+ Outlook 106:649 Mr 21 '14 350w

"The volume is a reversion to Mr. De Morgan's best manner, and one is tempted to place it second only to what still remains his best story, 'Joseph Vance.'" F. T. Cooper

+ Pub W 85:1347 Ap 18 '14 480w

"It represents Mr. De Morgan at his best."

+ R of Rs 49:499 Ap '14 200w

"His garrulity is only tolerable because he has something to say that is often, but by no means always, worth saying, and because he has a distinct flavour of his own."

+ Sat R 117:211 F 14 '14 700w

+ Spec 12:750 My 2 '14 200w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:91 Ap '14 50w

DENNEN, ERNEST JOSEPH. Sunday school under scientific management; with an intro. by Rev. W. E. Gardner. *50c (4c) Young ch. 14-9776

In his first chapter the author calls attention to the two-fold purpose of the Sunday school: it must be a school of influence, and a school of information. How to organize and conduct the Sunday school so that these two ends may be served is the subject of his discussion. His chapters take up: Purpose, Preparation, Equipment, Administration, Method, Unification, Conservation, and Product.

DENNIS, GEORGE RAVENSCROFT. Cecil family (Eng title, House of Cecil). (Great families ser.) il $2.50 Houghton A14-2953

"The greater part of the history of the house of Cecil is taken up with the life of three great men, Lord Burghley, Sir Robert Cecil, and the third Marquis of Salisbury."—Boston Transcript

"Mr. Dennis deals with his three illustrious Cecils on safe and sensible lines."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup357 Mr 7 1300w

Reviewed by E. Fuller

Bookm 40:462 D '14 500w

+ Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 450w

Nation 99:438 O 8 '14 420w

+ N Y Times 19:453 O 18 '14 400w

R of Rs 50:637 N '14 110w

"Very readable and pleasant book."

+ Sat R 117:309;343 Mr 7;14 '14 3000w

"The history of the house of Cecil was worth writing, and Mr. Dennis has written it conscientiously."

+ Spec 112:sup682 Ap 25 '14 120w

DE SELINCOURT, BASIL. Walt Whitman: a critical study. il $2.50 (3½c) Kennerley (Eng ed 15-59)

This critical study of Whitman belongs to a series of monographs in which like studies of Synge, Ibsen, Thomas Hardy, George Gissing and others have appeared. The author says in a note that his aim has been "to lay stress on aspects of the subject which court misunderstanding or have received relatively little attention hitherto." A biographical chapter is followed by a discussion of the problem of form, treated in three chapters, and chapters on: Style, Plan, Children of Adam, Calamus, Democracy and the individual; Whitman and America.

+ A L A Bkl 11:162 D '14

"In these pages we find a happy mingling of the judicial and the enthusiastic, which makes Mr. de Selincourt's essay the best possible companion for 'Leaves of grass,' to such as think that this wonderful and still unique book stands in any need of explanation."

+ Ath 1914,1:334 Mr 7 1150w

"Stimulating study." L. I. Bredvold

+ Dial 57:17 Jl 1 '14 950w

"This is a book on Whitman which will please nobody—not his disciples, not his enemies, not the inert public. It will offend his disciples through its occasional clever disparage; his enemies through the mood of high, nay, supreme, seriousness which pervades it; and the inert public through the dullness of a good deal of the discussion."

— Nation 99:167 J1 23 '14 930w

"There is a great deal of interesting and instructive criticism in Mr. de Selincourt's book, and in many respects his judgment of Walt Whitman seems admirable, though he is not happy when treating the poet's views on sex and their application in his life."

+ Sat R 117:404 Mr 28 '14 920w

"No more admirable and suggestive piece of literary criticism has recently come to the reviewer's desk than the study of Walt Whitman and his poetry by Basil de Selincourt."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 1600w

DESMOND, HUMPHREY JOSEPH. Larger values that make for the well rounded life. pa *50c (3c) McClurg

It is our tendency to strive for the temporary and immediate rewards rather than for those that are eternal that the author deplores in the nine little essays that make up the book. They are entitled: Better than gold; Side lines of the soul; The little diplomacies; Living and growing; Life's disciplines; The durable satisfactions; The social conscience; Pax vobiscum; The deeper meanings.

"They take a wholesome view of life, and will serve the purpose of cheering and helping those who need a bit of stimulus for the everyday task."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 10 '14 60w

"Only an American with a clear outlook and a sure eye and a kind heart could have written 'The larger values.' Its brevity adds effect to its wit—I use 'wit' in the sense in which Pope used it—for Mr. Desmond is a compound of a certain brilliancy and insight which may be called wisdom." M. F. Egan

+ N Y Times 18:637 N 23 '13 550w

DE VEER, W. Battle royal; a Western drama in an Eastern land. $1.25 (1½c) Lane

A story of the Dutch East Indies with all its characters connected with the colonial civil service. One of them Anton van Weghe is preparing to return to Holland to be married. He has been stationed on one of the outlying islands and before sailing stops in Batavia to visit a friend. Here he comes again under the influence of Marie Delmaar, the woman who had sent him from the city five years before. The old fascination again takes hold of him, but he is brought to his senses on learning that she is carrying on an intrigue with his friend, van Eelde. When discovery of this affair is imminent and van Eelde is at the mercy of the woman's husband, Anton intervenes to save his friend and becomes himself the victim, giving his life in a vain cause.

"The characters are carefully drawn, and the scenery presented with thoroughness and skill. The author might have made two books where he has made one, leaving us unsatisfied on both counts."

— + Ath 1914,2:sup97 J1 18 120w

"Such value as the novel possesses consists neither in its plot nor in its characters, but in its descriptions of a country about which the majority of people know little or nothing."

— + N Y Times 19:476 N 1 '14 270w

DEWING, ARTHUR STONE. Corporate promotions and reorganizations. (Harvard economic studies, v. 10) $2.50 Harvard univ. press 14-6465

"The main contribution of this work is a detailed study of a selected group of industrial combinations, each of which has passed through the cycle of promotion, failure, and reorganization. . . . The point of view of the author is of especial interest. He is apparently a thorough-going believer in the laissez-faire principle. He hazards the belief that whatever 'trust problem' exists will work out its own solution. Restrictive regulation will only hamper the efficient corporation, and the doom of the inefficient waits on no legislative regulation, but is rather delayed thereby."—Ann Am Acad

Reviewed by Hastings Lyon

+ — Am Econ R 4:914 D '14 700w

"The conclusions drawn from so wide an experience are of unusual value to students."

+ A L A Bkl 10:387 Je '14

"This book, though burdened with a mass of undigested tables, is thorough and scholarly, and a most valuable contribution to the literature of trusts and corporation finance." Elliot Jones

+ — Ann Am Acad 54:331 J1 '14 630w

+ Boston Transcript p25 F 10 '15 300w

"Federal lawmakers and all others who are inclined to express definite views on the 'Trust problem' should read this book. Its painstaking examination of the promotion and reorganization of typical consolidations, its scholarly balancing of motives and results, its penetrating analysis of the financial and industrial administration of the individual businesses, and its revelation of the actual causes of failure in each instance, are an invaluable foundation for the construction of a programme of reform."

+ Nation 19:20 J1 2 '14 1000w

DICKINSON, ARTHUR LOWES. Accounting practice and procedure. $3 Ronald 14-1499

"Mr. Dickinson makes a notable contribution to the literature of accounting, which reflects the mature views and wide experience of an accountant whose qualification as a leading authority has grown out of extensive practice in England and the United States. . . . The book's discriminating analysis of problems is frequently strengthened by attention to considerations of legal and administrative policy affecting specific applications of general principles, and by citations of English laws which often differ from, or go farther than, the legal rules governing American accounting. Strong ground is taken throughout against many prevalent artificialities of accounting which, through their unintelligibility to the layman, may effect obscurity, if not actual misrepresentation of facts."—Am Econ R

"The book has significance not alone for students and practitioners through the breadth of its survey of technical problems, since it also gives sharp emphasis to intelligible and thorough-going accounting as a factor in the private management and public control of large-scale enterprise. The volume may well prove suggestive, therefore, to the economist, publicist and business man." W. R. Gray

+ — Am Econ R 4:909 D '14 850w

A L A Bkl 11:59 O '14

DICKINSON, ASA DON, ed. Kaiser. il $2 (2c) Doubleday 14-21113

The title-page calls this "a book about the most interesting man in Europe," and the preface says: "This book is the result of an honest endeavour by several men to marshal fairly and present without prejudice the significant facts about William II, German emperor, the most interesting figure in the world today. Each contributor has treated that period or aspect of the subject upon which special study and reflection have qualified him to speak with authority." There are chapters on: The Kaiser as a man; the Kaiser's background—a biologist's view; The Kaiser's accession to the throne and the dismissal of Bismarck; and on the Kaiser's relation to the army, the navy, the Reichstag, the socialists, etc. The names of the contributors are not given. The book is illustrated with many photographs and has an index.

Ind 81:99 Ja 18 '15 100w

"A comprehensive work containing much information."

+ N Y Times 19:574 D 20 '14 130w

Outlook 108:818 D 9 '14 30w

"It is has the faults of a popular production."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 300w

DICKINSON, CHARLES HENRY. Christian reconstruction of modern life. *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 13-19692

Descriptive note in December, 1913.

Reviewed by G. B. Smith

+ — Am J Theol 18:311 Ap '14 600w

"Presents a thesis of interest to ministers and students of social problems."

+ A L A Bk 10:265 Mr '14

"The volume will be a help and an inspiration to thoughtful men and women who are not so far along as the author on the modern reconstructed highway."

+ Bib World 43:63 Ja '14 150w

"The author has a great and profound insight. He grasps the fundamental things which have made our civilization in a remarkably intuitive way. The book is not especially strong in argument. Indeed, all too often the author holds contradictory positions; and dogmatic statements are made, and the author hastens on, never dreaming that his readers expect more than his assertion for those statements. It is this lack of logic which makes the book difficult reading. Nevertheless, the general argument is so profound, and the author manifests such deep spiritual insight, and, we think, his solution is so sound and unassailable that the book must be considered a splendid contribution to the solution of our social problem."

+ — Boston Transcript p9 F 7 '14 500w

"If, unhappily, its author often clouds his thought with awkward language, his book should yet exercise a wide-spread influence for good. Decidedly it strikes a note that ought to arouse an enkindling response in all sincerely concerned with the vital problem of social regeneration."

+ — Outlook 106:97 Ja 10 '14 150w

DICKINSON, DOROTHY, comp. How to entertain your guests. *75c (1c) Sergel

A book containing a collection of games from which the hostess may select in planning ways of entertaining her guests. The games are grouped into classes: Competitions; Round games; Paper games; Noisy games; Quiet games; Table games; Tricks; and Children's games.

DICKINSON, DOROTHY, comp. More ways of entertaining your guests. *75c (3½c) Sergel

A supplementary volume to the author's "How to entertain your guests," containing new Competitions, Pencil games, Round games, Table games, Tricks and catches, and Children's games.

DICKINSON, EMILY. Single hound; poems of "a lifetime." *$1.25 Little 14-16571

A series of hitherto unpublished poems by Emily Dickinson. They were written at odd times during her lifetime and all addressed to her sister. Her niece, Mrs. Bianchi, writes an introduction, valuable in itself because it throws new light on a fascinating personality.

"These poems, fragmentary as many of them are in a sense, the daily, spontaneous expression of a private affection, are the rich legacy of a great spiritual imagination." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p24 S 30 '14 1200w

R of Rs 51:248 F '15 160w

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 22 '14 570w

DICKINSON, GOLDSWORTHY LOWES. Appearances. *$1 (1½c) Doubleday 14-20346

Travel notes on India, China, Japan and America. Those on the East appeared first in the Manchester Guardian; those on America in the English review. The author says: "In reprinting them, I have chosen a title which may serve also as an apology. What I offer is not Reality, but appearances to me. From such appearances, perhaps, in time, Reality may be constructed. I claim only to make my contribution." For the letters on America, in which, as he admits, there is a "note of exasperation," he makes something of an apology also. They were written in 1909, "before the election of President Wilson, and all that led up to and is implied in that event."

"Occasionally the book must move a serious reader to almost impatient repudiation; much more often it will evoke his sympathy and approval; and always it will command his respect for its sanity and seriousness of attitude, his admiration for its lucidity and gracefulness of style." F. B. R. Hellems

+ — Dial 57:500 D 16 '14 1750w

"Every man who values the candid opinion of a keen thinker about our own land and who wants another glimpse of the fascinating East will be delighted with 'Appearances.' It is a mental stimulant."

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 60w

+ Ind 81:57 Ja 11 '15 80w

"An American is obliged to wonder a little just how much of America Mr. Dickinson saw, and to venture a query as to whether such wholesale and unqualified damnation and scarcely qualified contempt should really be published unless supported by a broader observation than is evidenced."

— Int J Ethics 25:275 Ja '15 300w

+ — Nation 100:20 Ja 7 '15 1600w

New Republic 1:25 N 21 '14 350w

"There is much that is pungent, much that is tonic, in these estimates. Although the essays which concern Americans will probably win the greater number of readers, Mr. Dickinson is more at home in the East, and the sketches of India, China, and Japan, which make up three-fourths of the present volume, are more deserving of attention."

+ N Y Times 19:581 D 20 '14 380w

"The travels of a philosopher are always interesting, if only he has the gift of language. Mr. Lowes Dickinson, as is well known, has this gift in a high degree."

+ Spec 113:750 N 28 '14 400w

"Mr. Dickinson's book can be read with profit by all thoughtful Americans, or, at least, by those who ever give a thought to the national soul. Its fantastic exaggerations and occasional follies will do little harm; but one wishes that the author of 'The Greek view of life' had followed a little more successfully the 'golden mean' of Aristotle. Mr. Dickinson is a little too impatient and a little too 'esthetic' to be quite Greek."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 1550w

DICKINSON, H. N. Business of a gentleman. *$1.25 Putnam 14-3976

"Mr. Dickinson gives us . . . a spirited, highly colored, uncompromising picture of the evolution of a Tory Democrat from a country gentleman of feudal instincts and patriarchal habits. Sir Robert Wilton, alias Bobby, though he has many qualities in common with the baronet of penny-dreadful fiction, is not a criminal, or a philanderer, or a fur-coated capitalist. After a stormy youth, he settles down in early manhood to a life of blameless domesticity, tempered by a fundamental disregard for conventionality, and an inveterate aversion from doing anything in a lawful way. . . . He was, in short, 'very comfortable indeed,' and might have remained so but for the irony of fate. His wife's uncle, a cantankerous old man who had always looked on Bobby with disfavour, died suddenly and left his niece . . . some works at Denbury, where a protracted strike was in progress, owing to the harsh treatment of the workers by the wicked uncle. The new situation thus created drags Bobby into the vortex of industrial strife."—Spec

Atlan 114:521 O '14 450w

"The 'Business of a gentleman' contains more real food for thought than the ordinary novel of the day and deserves more than a cursory reading."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 17 '14 350w

"The author has a tendency to spoil effects by explaining perfectly obvious points and puts in a mass of ineffectual detail that makes the story drag at times."

+ — Ind 78:54 Ap 6 '14 150w

Nation 98:399 Ap 9 '14 420w

"There is a great deal of humor in Mr. Dickinson's story, but it is humor of a characteristically British flavor, which does not always appeal to the American palate. The story itself is top heavy, with inconsequent details, with overmuch description, and with mere words. The incidents and the structure of its plot are too slender for the number of pages—the sort of fictional performance that incites to skipping. But it has good character drawing, although some of this is more in the nature of caricature."

+ — N Y Times 19:76 F 15 '14 230w

"This is a novel with a very useful moral at the present time. For it aims at showing, by means of a brightly written story admirably true to life, how much may be done by the landed proprietor who is willing to take the trouble to look after his own estates and not leave the business to underlings."

+ Sat R 117:sup8 Mr 21 '14 380w

"The business of a gentleman' has undoubtedly merits as well as glaring defects. Like his hero, Mr. Dickinson is not stale, or weary, or cynical. But he has no detachment or self-effacement, and, under a show of impartiality, is in reality and acute partisan."

+ — Spec 112:355 F 28 '14 930w

DICKINSON, HELEN ADELL SNYDER (MRS. CLARENCE DICKINSON). German masters of art. il $5 (4½c) Stokes 14-19296

As an introduction to her book the author writes an opening chapter on German art as an expression of German national character. She says that the keynote of German character is emotion and finds that the strength and weakness alike in German art are the outcome of this emotionalism. The ideal in German art is not beauty but the expression of emotion. In treating her subject she classifies German artists broadly into three schools: the school of Cologne; the school of Swabia; and the school of Nuremberg or Franconia. The art of the first school is dreamy and lyric; that of the second is narrative or illustrative; that of the third virile, impassioned and dramatic.

"Valuable and beautiful book." Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:426 D '14 230w

"Mrs. Dickinson's elaborate and scholarly volume, 'German masters of art,' helps to supply a manifest want, and is at the same time in all its details a fine example of artistic book-manufacture."

+ Dial 57:459 D 1 '14 230w

"The first attempt to present in English a complete and adequate history of the development of German paintings."

+ Ind 80:412 D 14 '14 50w

"Her book is well conceived and excellently printed."

+ Nation 100:125 Ja 28 '15 350w

"She has condensed her information so as to win many readers who might be appalled by a more exhaustive work."

+ Outlook 109:237 Ja 27 '15 300w

"Another notable art book of the year."

+ R of Rs 50:755 D '14 200w

DICKINSON, THOMAS HERBERT, ed. Wisconsin plays. $1.25 Huebsch 15-26037

The three plays that make up the contents of this book are from the repertory of the Wisconsin dramatic society and have been presented in various places thruout the state. The first, "The neighbours," is one of Zona Gale's characteristic village stories told in play form; the second "In hospital" by Thomas H. Dickinson presents a tense little scene in a hospital waiting room before and during an operation; the third "Glory of the morning" by William Ellery Leonard goes back to the early history of the state for its theme.

Boston Transcript p23 D 30 '14 380w

Ind 81:138 Ja 25 '15 90w

+ R of Rs 51:247 F '15 330w

"We welcome this book of sample plays both for their own merit and as an indication of what is being done by Wisconsin and her neighbors in the cultivation of this phase of community life and expression."

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 4 '15 380w

DILLAWAY, THEODORE MILTON. Decoration of the school and home. il $2 Bradley, M. 14-12181

"Mr. Theodore M. Dillaway, director of drawing for the City of Boston, has rendered a real service to teachers by gathering together in book form some of the best results of the experience of the past fifteen years in the beautification of school grounds and school rooms, and in the attempt to influence the appearance of the home through school instruction. His book, a volume of some two hundred large pages, profusely illustrated, with several plates in color, treats every phase of the subject with discrimination, and in a way calculated to be of direct help to teachers and home makers."—School Arts Magazine

+ A L A Bkl 11:98 N '14 *

"It is a credit not only to the author but to the publishers. No other single book treats the whole subject in detail so helpfully as this."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:67 S '14 180w

DILLON, EMILE JOSEPH. Scrap of paper. 3d ed (Pocket books) *50c (1c) Doran (Eng ed 15-1474)

The author's discussion of the inner history of German diplomacy and her scheme of worldwide conquest is a scathing denunciation of Germany and her ideals. The phrase "a scrap of paper" applied to a binding treaty "is destined to stick like a Nessus' shirt to the memory of its author, his imperial inspirer, and their country until such time as the militarism which originated it has been consumed without residue."

N Y Times 19:498 N 15 '14 150w

Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 30w

DIMNET, ERNEST. France herself again. $2.50 12 (2c) Putnam 14-20558

A book which "aims at offering to the reader a body of doctrine which will help him to understand the rapid evolution of France in the past ten years, and to discriminate between what is real progress, and what ought to be regarded as an accidental relapse." The book was written in English, "and with constant attention to the English point of view." Most of it was written before the outbreak of the war and the author has not felt that alterations were called for on that account. "In fact, the reader will find for himself that the volume could not have been written without the danger of war which awakened France in 1905, that the possibility of war is present in every page, and in fact that this possibility and the effects it has had on French public opinion is what gives the book its innermost unity." (Preface) The book is divided into four parts: The deterioration of France; The return of the light; Political problems and the future; Conclusion.

"It has interest both because of the author's intimacy with French politics and literature and his distinction of style."

+ A L A Bkl 11:213 Ja '15

"His book may be welcomed for the authoritative, if not always concise, manner in which he shows why France is herself again."

+ — Ath 1914,2:417 O 24 1700w

"A book to be approached with interest, to be read with pleasure and profit, to be put down only with words of the highest praise."

+ Cath World 100:547 Ja '15 1600w

"Most of us will feel that his rather gloomy picture of French democracy and his indictment of the republic have been overdrawn." J. W. Garner

+ — Dial 58:78 F 1 '15 1650w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

DIMNET, ERNEST—Continued.

"The book is on the whole well written and good tempered. Perhaps one would have to be born on the Seine to enter completely into the author's point of view."

+ — Ind 80:504 D 28 '14 450w

+ Nation 100:117 Ja 28 '15 830w

"A good deal of talk, often vague, has been heard about the 'new France,' and M. Dimnet helps us to knowledge of what that phrase means, or, rather, of what it has meant in the immediate past."

+ Sat R 118:441 O 24 '14 1250w

"His essays on recent and present political tendencies in France have all his former vivacity and distinction, but they are vitiated, to our thinking, by an absorbing prejudice."

— + Spec 113:801 D 5 '14 1850w

DIMNET, ERNEST. Paul Bourget. (Modern biographies) il *75c Houghton 13-35966

A biographical and critical essay. "Dimnet does not class Bourget with the truly great writers of the world, but holds that he towers above most of the novelists of his time, an exceptionally robust author with a lot of well-balanced, well-constructed, and logical literature to his credit." (N Y Times)

"An essay, at once sympathetic and incisively critical, written from a full knowledge of its subject and of modern France."

+ A L A Bkl 10:182 Ja '14

"A sympathetic and at the same time incisively critical study of one of the most interesting personalities in modern French literature."

+ Ath 1913,2:312 S 27 80w

"A very good story of Paul Bourget's life and an admirable critical survey of his literary achievements."

+ N Y Times 18:711 N 30 '13 70w

R of Rs 49:368 Mr '14 100w

"M. Dimnet is the best possible author of such a book. He writes excellent English, and thoroughly knows modern France."

+ Sat R 116:sup14 O 11 '13 170w

"English readers will find Bourget's merits alike as a writer and as a thinker impartially discussed in M. Dimnet's excellent little book. It is of equal value as a piece of literary criticism or a psychological record."

+ Spec 111:768 N 8 '13 130w

DITCHFIELD, PETER HAMPSON. London 12: survivals; a record of the old buildings and associations of the city. il *$3.50 Stokes (Eng ed 14-14305)

"The Rev. P. H. Ditchfield's 'London survivals' is in the nature of a systematic tour through the City; and we may use the last word in its accepted sense, as showing that the region west of Temple Bar has but little attraction for the author. . . . He begins with the Roman remains, and gives an outline of the course of the Roman walls; he mentions 'London stone,' the meeting-place, as we may suppose, of the great roads, though he omits these on the plea that space is lacking where so much else awaits him. . . . The Tower, as is only right, has several pages allotted to it. . . . Mr. Ditchfield pays special attention to pre- and post-reformation churches, and gives various interesting facts and anecdotes thereon."—Ath

"Only those who know their London well will care for it, and only libraries already having good London collections will need it. Supplements the author's 'Vanishing England.'"

+ — A L A Bkl 11:71 O '14

"The book on a whole is of distinct and ample use for reference. It cannot claim merit for its style, which approximates to that of the official 'guide.'"

+ — Ath 1914,1:711 My 23 1000w

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:421 D '14 170w

+ Ind 80:412 D '14 '14 60w

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 180w

"A charming book which will be much appreciated by all who love London for her story as well as for her present."

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 130w

"Excellent book."

+ Spec 112:sup1069 Je 27 '14 100w

DIVER, MRS. KATHERINE HELEN MAUD (MARSHALL). Judgment of the sword. il *$1.50 (1c) Putnam 13-26609

This is a continuation of the story told by Mrs. Diver in the "Hero of Herat." It carries Eldred Pottinger, the young English officer whose figure dominated the first book, thru the events of the first Afghan war. The author says that the life of her hero divides itself naturally into two parts: "First Herat, action, fame; then Kabul, endurance, disaster. In Herat we had the hero—youth and courage triumphant over desperate odds. At Kabul we have the man—hampered, balked and finally traduced." It is the second phase that is described in this volume. These books are not historical romances in the ordinary sense of the word. The author describes them as "dramatized history."

"The tale is sad, and is, perhaps, overlong, but its gloom is lightened by glimpses of the conduct of Nott at Kandahar and of Broadfoot at Jalalabad. Indeed, the descriptions of Broadfoot trying to get clear orders from the Envoy and from the General; again at the Council of war at Jalalabad; and of Colin Mackenzie's mission, whilst a prisoner, to Jalalabad, are, for dramatized history, hard to beat."

+ — Ath 1913,2:623 N 29 330w

"Once it gets under way, the narrative is picturesque and vigorous."

+ — Nation 98:301 Mr 19 '14 200w

"From whatever point of view 'The hero of Herat' and 'The judgment of the sword' are regarded, their author has emphasized what her novels clearly declare, that she belongs in the front rank of living English writers."

+ N Y Times 19:64 F 8 '14 500w

"Written with careful and minute detail."

+ Outlook 106:650 Mr 21 '14 120w

"As a popular version of some interesting pages of history it can be commended, and it is free from the crowd of artificial characters which have cumbered much of her earlier work."

+ Sat R 116:689 N 29 '13 50w

"Written with care and enthusiasm."

+ Spec 112:357 F 28 '14 34w

DIX, BEULAH MARIE (MRS. GEORGE H. FIEBBE). Little god Ebisu. il *$1.25 (3c) Duffield 14-17622

A pretty love story, beginning when Dru Lovelidge had been two years out of college. She is a teacher in a girls' school and hates her work and the drab life she leads. Then comes an invitation to a week-end party, a meeting with Eliot Severance and, in rapid succession, love and happiness, and disillusion, and a return to drudgery. But a better and truer love is in store for the girl and she finds it before the story's end.

"Young girls will enjoy this."

+ A L A Bkl 11:173 D '14

N Y Times 19:504 N 15 '14 200w

"A pleasant, natural little story, suited to older girls as well as adults."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:305 D '14 50w

DIX, BEULAH MARIE (MRS. GEORGE H. FIEBBE). Maid Melicent. il *$1.25 Hearst's int. lib. 14-16919

"Maid Melicent had grown up in the Massachusetts plantation, and when she had turned 17 she went to England to marry Redemption Langmead, whom she had never seen. But they had been betrothed in their infancy because their fathers had soldiered together. The bride-groom-to-be objected both to the name that his father had imposed upon him and the marriage troth to which he had not been a party. So, when he heard that Melicent was coming he told his guardian that he would marry no 'tawny squaw come a-whooping out of the wilderness,' went to Ireland, and under the name of Shaneen McCarthy joined a troop of the Cavaliers that harried the country. Then it was not long until their two paths crossed, and they promptly fell in love. But in the meantime, and afterward, a great many things happened that were alarming, or perilous, or full of laughter."—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 11:220 Ja '15

"Melicent's adventures are delightful and exciting, and although not original or ingenious, the story avoids the commonplace. It is not a long novel, and the vigor and smoothness of its telling cause it to move rapidly, a swiftness pleasantly contrasting with the quaint formality of its dialogue."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 10 '14 180w

"It is a slight little story, but it offers full measure of pleasant entertainment for an idle hour."

+ N Y Times 19:448 O 18 '14 250w

DIX, DOROTHY, pseud. (MRS. ELIZABETH S. MERIWETHER GILMER). Mirandy. il *$1 (1½c) Hearst's int. lib. 14-7910

Mirandy is a "wash lady" and her pronouncements, delivered, one gathers, at the back door or in the kitchen as she comes to call for or to deliver the weekly "wash," are touched with a wise philosophy and with the characteristic good humor of the dusky race to which she belongs. Matrimony, on which she is an authority, is a favorite theme, touched upon again and again in such chapters as: Why men don't marry; Retaining a husband's love; The superior civilization of man; Adamless Edens; Why women can't vote, and so on.

"The best thing that can be said of 'Mirandy,' is that it averages very well." Norman Bryce

+ — Bookm 39:686 Ag '14 200w

"As a bit of humorous character study, 'Mirandy' is amusingly true to life. Throughout the book her homely philosophy stimulates as well as amuses."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 130w

"For 'the sick, the dull, and the weary' we prescribe 'Mirandy,' and not less for happy souls on the lookout for a good laugh, and for the many who would be the better for having a brisk breeze of common-sense blow the cobwebs from minds bemused by too much modernity."

+ N Y Times 19:298 Jl 5 '14 500w

DIXON, JOSEPH KOSSUTH. Vanishing race. 3 il *$3.50 (6c) Doubleday 13-24815

As described on the title page this book is "a record in picture and story of the last great Indian council, participated in by eminent Indian chiefs from nearly every Indian reservation in the United States, together with the story of their lives as told by themselves—their speeches and folklore tales—their solemn farewell, and the Indians' story of the Custer fight." The author, Dr. Dixon, was at the head of three expeditions organized by Rodman Wanamaker with a view to studying Indian life. The third of these took the form of a council of chiefs on the Little Big Horn. Eighty photographs of the Indian chiefs and scenes from Indian life illustrate the volume.

"So far as any one book can accomplish so large a purpose, Dr. Dixon's sumptuously illustrated volume will do a great deal to preserve for us the swiftly disappearing romance of Indian life."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 350w

"Further than to say that, as its title implies, it is about Indians, this book is not easy to classify. In the broader sense it is not history, and in the narrower it is not ethnology. The speeches reported bear a stamp of genuineness which give them real value as exponents of Indian character and thought, whether or not we are ready to accept their testimony as absolutely accurate after so long an interval."

+ Nation 98:162 F 12 '14 670w

"The interest of the volume, it must be admitted, lies rather in its spectacular features than in its data of Indian life."

+ N Y Times 19:35 Ja 25 '14 670w

DIXON, ROYAL. Human side of plants. il 11 *$1.50 (2c) Stokes 14-15427

That which we have looked on heretofore as a creation of Maeterlinck's fancy is presented by Mr. Dixon as fact. Plants feel and probably think. They can be credited with seven senses: sight, hearing, feeling, taste, smell, a psychic sense, and a physical sense. The author's purpose is to show that "for nearly all the characteristic traits and powers of human kind, there are corresponding traits and powers in plant life—some of which compare favourably with the human race; some far excel it; and some are inferior in their development." Some of the chapter titles will incite curiosity: Plants that walk; Plants that fish; Plants that are athletes; Plants that predict the weather; etc. A colored frontispiece and a number of plates are provided as illustrations.

"The author has in a pleasant way gathered a multitude of facts that greatly simulate intelligence."

+ Ind 80:65 O 12 '14 100w

+ Lit D 49:127 D 5 '14 140w

+ Nation 99:695 D 10 '14 50w

"Valuable for schools, but the manner of presentation is so far from the academic that the book will appeal even more widely to the general reader. The style is full of charm." J. B. Rittenhouse

+ N Y Times 19:530 N 29 '14 420w

"The analogies of the chapter titles are sometimes a little strained, but the book is full of curious and fascinating plant lore."

+ — Outlook 108:282 S 30 '14 100w

"As a book of nature-study for the growing boy or girl, as a book of wonder for the adult, it cannot be too highly praised or recommended."

+ R of Rs 51:120 Ja '15 230w

DIXON, THOMAS. Victim. il *$1.35 (1c) Appleton 14-12076

A stirring romance of the civil war built up about Jefferson Davis. Mr. Dixon makes it apparent from the earliest boyhood days of the tried president of the southern confederacy that he fed only on the meat that can add to the stature of heroes. He eschewed all other diet from the time he outwitted a father in the monastery where he received his first training to the day at Fortress Monroe when he cheated General Miles of the shackles imposed for torture. The story follows faithfully the course of the civil struggle, and brings into prominence the southern officers who directed the mighty engine of war that Davis's genius created. Especially informing is the author's treatment of the attitude of the North towards the South fifty years ago. An engaging romance opens the way for drawing the reader's attention to some of the by-products of the war's activity.

"The book, as literature, cannot be taken seriously. As a story dealing with a theme of great historical and romantic interest it may be recommended."

+ — Ath 1914,2:477 N 7 120w

"Mr. Dixon with his fierce southern enthusiasms has conceived a fine idea in the story, but that is the end of it. Even if Davis was at once the victim of both North and South, and even if Mr. Dixon has a very thorough-going enthusiasm for him, we do not readily accept such a wooden saint as he has given us. Jefferson Davis is just as much distorted by his enthusiasm for the man as he would have been had Mr. Dixon drawn him as a black villain. He is unreal and unnatural."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 22 '14 650w

Ind 79:72 Jl 13 '14 30w

"The book is much like its predecessors, having less venom, however, owing to the absence of the carpetbagger and the free and enfranchised negro. Barring its partisanship, it presents a vivid and truthful picture of war days in the South, particularly at Richmond."

DIXON, THOMAS—Continued.

+ — Nation 99:135 J1 30 '14 250w

"As a romance the tale is sufficiently entertaining. Its plot is improbable enough to be true, and its development affords a picturesque birdseye view of the civil war. Here and there a scene is painted not only vividly but finely."

+ — N Y Times 19:297 J1 5 '14 1250w

"Mr. Dixon attacks both the living and the dead with a bitterness and vindictiveness which show that his own prejudices have been carefully fostered and that he lacks both the discretion and the self-control to conceal them even in a work which is, from cover to cover, a plea for the softened judgment of a new generation. The book is interesting in the main." H. Dick

+ — Pub W 86:1284 O 17 '14 430w

"The story is, on the whole, interesting, but the effort to cast Mr. Davis in an heroic and superhuman mold is too obvious to be convincing."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 J1 23 '14 500w

DOBSCHÜTZ, ERNST ADOLPH ALFRED
OSCAR ADALBERT, VON. Influence of the Bible on civilisation. il $1.25 (3c) Scribner 14-7332

The author attempts to trace the history of the Bible thru the centuries and to mark its influence on the civilization of different periods. Contents: The Bible makes itself indispensable for the church (to 325 A. D.); The Bible begins to rule the Christian empire (325-600); The Bible teaches the German nations (500-800); The Bible becomes one basis of mediæval civilisation (800-1150); The Bible stirs non-conformist movements (1150-1450); The Bible trains printers and translators (1450-1611); The Bible rules daily life (1550-1850); The Bible becomes once more the book of devotion.

"Interesting to the ordinary student of history as well as to the special Bible student."

+ A L A Bkl 11:50 O '14

"The story is fascinating. Every student and teacher should know it. And, in truth, no student of politics, sociology, and the history of civilization can omit this story and claim that he has covered his field with anything like completeness. The diction is good, but the excellent illustrations add much to the interest of this wonderful story."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 21 '14 400w

"If this book were to be presented as a doctorate thesis in a Catholic university, it would be rejected as the work of a careless, inaccurate student, even had its orthodoxy been unimpeachable."

— Cath World 99:831 S '14 450w

Reviewed by James Moffatt

+ Hibbert J 13:426 Ja '15 80w

"It is a distinct pleasure to call attention to this brief but lucid sketch."

+ Nation 99:109 J1 23 '14 200w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 70w

"Brilliant historical sketch." The volume is finely illustrated, and is as entertaining as instructive."

+ Outlook 107:318 Je 6 '14 200w

DODGE, RICHARD ELWOOD, and KIRCHWEY, CLARA BARBARA. Teaching of geography in elementary schools. $1 Rand 13-15929

"This new book in the pedagogy of geography teaching represents the conclusions reached after many years' experience in the training of geography teachers, and of teaching the subject in the elementary school. 'It is an attempt to organize the underlying principles which, from the standpoint of good geography and good teaching, are necessary before one can effectually attack the problem of framing a course of study in geography for elementary schools of teaching any phase of this related whole.' . . . A full, clear, and incisive discussion of this thesis is given in chapters as follows: Scope and purpose of school geography teaching; Organization of a course of study in geography; Home geography and the world whole; Geography of the intermediate grades; The principles of geography; Geography in the upper grades; Relation of geography to other subjects in the curriculum; Geography and expression work; Place and use of a textbook in school geography; Use and misuse of maps; Observational work in geography; Geography in rural schools; Industrial and commercial geography; Collateral reading; Preparation, organization, and conduct of a lesson; Use of equipment." —School R

"One of the best books on the subject. More useful for the average teacher than Holtz though the latter work gives more on advanced teaching and on historical geography. The suggestive outlines for lessons and the carefully selected references will be helpful."

+ A L A Bkl 10:388 Je '14

"The book bears on almost every page evidence of the fact that it is the outgrowth of wide and practical experience. The physiographic work is well done and if there could be any substantial criticism, it is that the historical side of geography might well have been more strongly emphasized."

+ — Educ R 47:207 F '14 100w

"Every teacher of geography will find this a valuable book for study. Its statement of the fundamentals of elementary-school geography, the best method of procedure in the organization of the subject, the conduct of class work, and the essentials of a teacher's qualifications are sound both geographically and pedagogically. It is the best book of the kind yet written and its use will do much to accelerate better geography teaching." G. J. Miller

+ School R 22:421 Je '14 450w

DOLE, NATHAN HASKELL. Spell of Switzerland. il $2.50 Page 13-23508

A book that "will add much to the enjoyment of the tourist who can find time to stay a reasonable while in Switzerland, and will enable those who rush through to learn what it was they saw after they are comfortably at home again." (N Y Sun) "Men and mountains receive equal attention too frequently phrased in the words of other writers, for the author has contented himself with making more or less of an anthology." (Chaut)

"Chiefly noteworthy for its charming illustrations in sepia and color."

+ A L A Bkl 10:303 Ap '14

"The book is a manifestly valuable recital of interesting events and description of lovely scenes."

+ Chaut 72:301 D 13 '13 110w

"It is a pleasant and readable book."

+ N Y Sun p5 N 15 '13 110w

DOMVILLE-FIFE, CHARLES W. Guatemala and the states of Central America. il $3 Pott (Eng ed War13-259)

"In the present volume Mr. Domville-Fife continues the survey of Spanish America begun in his two preceding books, 'The great states of South America' and 'The United States of Brazil.' . . . The study of Guatemala forms the first part of the volume; that of the other four states of Central America—Honduras, San Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa Rica—the second. The survey of Guatemala is prefaced by a review of her history, the earlier portions of which are as dramatic as that of any of the Spanish-American countries, Peru and Mexico excepted. Then follows a study of its government, throughout which the author pays a high tribute to the integrity, patriotism and broad political views of its president, Don Manuel Cabera. Thus equipped we start with him the exploration of this republic." —Boston Transcript

"A well balanced treatment from the British point of view, but equally useful to the prospective American settler or investor. No index."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:304 Ap '11

"It includes some good illustrations."

+ Ath 1913,2:490 N 1 30w

"Throughout the book are vivid descriptions of scenery, and constantly shrewd observations upon Central American affairs inspire and suggest. All are, naturally, from a British point of view. All are distinctly illuminating. Particularly is this true of matters anent the commercial supremacy of the United States in Central America."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 6 '13 500w

+ Ind 78:326 My 25 '14 90w

"Attractive in appearance, coming at a time when our interest in the countries of the Caribbean is greater than ever before, fairly well provided with illustrations, and apparently comprehensive in scope, it is all the more annoying to find in the first place, that the illustrations do not illustrate the text, and in the second place, that the spirit in which the book has been written is not that of 'truth at any price.'"

— Nation 99:80 J1 16 '14 430w

"A sense of disproportion in knowledge as well as in treatment will be felt. So little attention has been paid to Central America of late, outside of the Canal Zone, in English publications that this book, with all its imperfections, will be found valuable so far as Guatemala and Nicaragua are concerned."

+ N Y Sun p6 O 25 '13 140w

— Sat R 117:151 Ja 31 '14 60w

"His descriptions of the social and political life of these countries are vivid and acute, though they present a picture not strikingly dissimilar to that with which many writers on South America have made us familiar. The historical matter is less satisfactory."

+ — Spec 112:sup163 Ja 31 '14 530w

DONNE, JOHN. Poems; ed. from the old editions and numerous manuscripts; with introductions, and commentary by H. J. C. Grierson. 2v *$5.75 Oxford 13-5442

"This is the first publication of Donne's poems which gives proper attention to the numerous manuscript copies of them in existence. Previous editors have taken as their basis the issue of 1633, two years after the poet's death, modernizing the punctuation, and emending freely on the authority of later issues, such as those of 1635 or 1663. Prof. Grierson prints a text based on that of 1633, controlled by the best manuscripts, and restoring the original punctuation. . . . The second volume consists of essays on the poetry of Donne, and on the text and canon of his poems, together with a valuable commentary on his allusions."—Ath

"Prof. Grierson's criticism is a particularly clear and illuminating piece of work."

+ Ath 1912,2:588 N 16 230w

"A carefully prepared text of Donne's poems, with proper commentary, has long been a desideratum for those interested in the transition from Elizabethan to Jacobean and Caroline literature, and this want has been amply filled by the present edition. Mr. Grierson's work will take an honorable place among the scholarly editions by which the Oxford university press is, in a way, reproducing for us the 'corpus' of English letters."

+ Nation 98:60 Ja 15 '14 1200w

"In two ways his edition is peculiarly valuable. By the judicious collection of numerous illustrative passages, particularly from the early Fathers and from Donne's own sermons, Prof. Grierson has been able to throw much new light on the intricate meanings of the text. His work on the text itself—involving the difficult and arduous task of a thorough collation not only of the early editions but of a great number of the contemporary manuscripts—is even more important."

+ Spec 110:102 Ja 18 '13 1750w

DOON, E. L. Joan's green year. *$1.50 Macmillan

"Joan's green year' was one spent as a paying guest at the Manor farm with tenant-farmers who had lived in Pelton for six generations. A woman of high birth, a factor in society, a writer of novels, Joan rested herself, mind and body, and described her experiences in long vivid letters to her twin brother, an officer in India. . . . Joan penetrates beneath the surface of individual lives by her sympathetic understanding, and for herself learns of some unhappy results of the workings of governmental decrees in agricultural England."—Outlook

"A pleasant, rambling story, told with considerable sentiment and some humour."

+ Ath 1913,2:751 D 27 80w

+ Ind 77:313 Mr 2 '14 60w

"The book is simple, well written, and, while not exciting or remarkable, is pleasant to read."

+ Outlook 106:424 F 21 '14 100w

"The alleged writer suffers rather badly from two things: in the first place, she has just discovered the English countryside; and, secondly, she has read a great deal and is over fond of quoting from her stock of literary knowledge."

— Sat R 117:55 Ja 10 '14 200w

"Pleasant volume."

+ — Spec 112:27 Ja 3 '14 1100w

DOSTOIEVSKI, FEDOR MIKHAILOVITCH. Crime and punishment; a novel in six parts and an epilogue. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan

14-19364

Other translations of this novel, often called Dostoevski's greatest work, have appeared in English, but Mrs. Garnett has made this new translation especially for the edition of the author's works which the Macmillan company is bringing out and of which it is the fourth volume. The plot of the story is less complicated than that of the other novels. In its early chapters a young student, thru the force of necessity and want, commits murder, and the story thereafter follows the slow working out of his punishment.

"Had Dostoevsky never written anything else, his place among the greatest masters of fiction would be secure."

+ Ath 1914,2:663 D 26 600w

Ind 80:339 N 30 '14 90w

"Greatest of his novels."

+ R of Rs 50:764 D 14 330w

"Dostoevsky's methods and ideas must alike meet a good deal of repugnance in countries like France and England, where we believe in such things as taste and the virtue of human activity. His realism knows no bounds. Apart from all this, Dostoevsky is, moreover, almost the only writer of the last century whom sane critics can mention in the same breath with Shakespeare. 'Crime and punishment' is not unworthy of comparison with 'Macbeth' and in 'The possessed' the character of Stavrogin can stand on a level with Hamlet."

+ — Sat R 118:419 O 17 '14 1400w

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 670w

DOSTOIEVSKI, FEDOR MIKHAILOVITCH. Letters of Fyodor Michailovitch Dostoevsky to his family and friends; tr. by Ethel Colburn Mayne. 1l *$2 Macmillan 15-26036

"These letters are a confirmation of all that English readers have imagined concerning the author of 'The idiot' and of 'Crime and punishment.' Their prevailing inspiration is a poignant nationalism, a love for Holy Russia, which was proof against persecution and exile. . . . It was Dostoevsky's nationalism which lay at the root of his antipathy for Turgenev. Turgenev preached German culture and affected to despise the achievements of his own countrymen. This attitude never ceased to inflame Dostoevsky. The relations of the two men are among the many interesting subjects illuminated by these letters."—Sat R

DOSTOIEVSKI, FEDOR M.—Continued.

"The collection of seventy-seven letters throws much light on the character of a remarkable man."

+ Ath 1914:2:663 D 26 600w

Reviewed by J. W. Smith

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 2 '15 160w

"Will interest admirers of the Russian novelist."

+ Dial 58:88 F 1 '15 250w

+ New Republic 1:27 D 5 '14 1250w

"These letters have been most judiciously selected and most ably translated."

+ Sat R 118:sup6 N 14 '14 230w

"Though the present volume does not trace his history in anything like complete detail, it is enough to allow the reader to form a conception of his character."

+ Spec 113:596 O 31 '14 720w

DOSTOIEVSKI, FEDOR MIKHAILOVITCH.
 2 The possessed; from the Russian by Constance Garnett. $1.50 (½c) Macmillan

14-1911

A novel which like other works of this Russian writer is massive and formless but packed full with human interest. "The ramifications of the story unite themselves in a Nihilist conspiracy, which results in the deaths of most of the plotters. But perhaps the greatest interest of 'The possessed,' as of 'The brothers Karamazov,' lies not in the actual events so much as in the extraordinary handling of psychological abnormality." (Ath)

"Dostoevsky's method of presentation gives such vivid results that his characters take up, as it were, a permanent abode in his readers' memories. Mrs. Garnett's translation has all the excellence we have learnt to expect during her twenty years work among the great Russian novelists."

+ Ath 1914:1:89 Ja 17 470w

"It is full of the weird insight of the great Russian psychologist into the subterranean workings of the human soul."

+ R of Rs 49:375 Mr '14 100w

"No attempt at literary construction is to be found in this novel, and Mrs. Garnett's pleasant prose would seem rather to flatter the author's style. Dostoevsky disdained all graces and refinements, but he had stupendous power in carving hunks from life, and to this he added a faculty for minute observation."

+ Sat R 117:145 Ja 31 '14 1150w

DOUGLAS, ALFRED (BRUCE) lord. Oscar Wilde and myself. il $2.50 (4c) Duffield

14-14132

The relationship between Lord Alfred Douglas and Oscar Wilde is clearly and emphatically set forth in these pages "with a view to making clear in the public interest, and for the benefit of posterity, the true inwardness of Wilde's writing and character." Only a brief portion of the text is devoted to the days of friendship; by far the greater part being an account of the disillusion that came to Lord Alfred thru the reading of unpublished parts of "De profundis," and a justification of himself against numerous slanders. There is included much on the subject of Wilde's appearance, personal tastes and habits.

"Egotism is the chief quality of 'Oscar Wilde and myself.' It is one of many books that might better not have been written." E. F. E.

— Boston Transcript p7 Ag 1 '14 1200w

— Dial 57:206 S 16 '14 400w

"It is regrettable that Lord Alfred Douglas's book is not written in better taste."

— + Nation 99:471 O 15 '14 1150w

DOUGLAS, GEORGE MELLIS. Lands forlorn; a story of an expedition to Hearne's Coppermine river; with an introd. by James Douglas. il $4 (5c) Putnam

11-20565

The Coppermine river flows into the Arctic ocean in latitude 60° 49' N. and longitude 115° 32' W. somewhat to the north-eastward of Great Bear lake. The party that made the journey described in this book started northward from Edmonton, and traveled by way of the Athabaska river, Great Slave river and lake, Mackenzie river and Great Bear lake. The object of the expedition was a preliminary survey of the Coppermine mountains with a view of determining the value of their mineral deposits, but for the purposes of this volume the descriptive and narrative aspects of the trip only are presented. A brief geological report is given in an appendix. There are many illustrations and two folding maps.

"The narrative is a simple, sincere and unpretentious one."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 10 '14 300w

"The most interesting feature of the volume is the 180 photographs of strange scenes, excellently printed."

+ Ind 80:380 D 7 '14 110w

"While the volume has little encouragement for the miner, it has many attractions as a book of travel."

+ Nation 100:120 Ja 28 '15 370w

R of Rs 50:759 D '14 50w

DOUGLAS-LITHGOW, ROBERT ALEXANDER.

Nantucket: a history. il $2.50 (2½c) Putnam

14-12350

Recognizing the important part which the physical features of a country play in human destiny, the author begins his history of Nantucket with a chapter on its geology and physiography. This is followed by chapters dealing with the legends of the island, its Indian inhabitants, and its first white settlers. Later chapters take up The Nantucket whale fishery; Quakerism in Nantucket; Eminent Nantucketers; The Nantucket flora, etc. The book is, its author says, the first systematic record of Nantucket history that has appeared since 1835 when Obed Macy's "History" was published.

"The reader may smile over the author's rhetorical flight in his introductory paragraphs; but to one who knows and loves the island this will appear no mere spread of flowery phrases."

+ Nation 99:228 Ag 20 '14 250w

+ N Y Times 19:308 Jl 12 '14 200w

"The author has diligently collected a great quantity of material concerning this picturesque island world from the earliest-known times of its Indian inhabitation. So diligent and so successful in fact has been his search as to make the faults of his style, which is somewhat stilted and occasionally verbose, of minor importance and no grave deterrent."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 13 '14 500w

DOWD, JEROME. Negro races: a sociological study. 3v v 2 $2.50 Neale

v 2 "The author does not study the negro in America. And so this volume has not the general interest that is likely in the third volume that is promised in conclusion of this work. The first volume deals with the 'West Africans,' and was published seven years ago; the present one studies the 'East Africans and South Africans.' The Gallas and the Bantus are the two particular divisions under which Mr. Dowd studies the political, family, religious and economic life of the various tribes of East and South Africa."—Boston Transcript

"The book presents an excellent study of the African background of the American negro question." U. G. Weatherly

+ Am J Soc 20:422 N '14 170w

"Work of this kind is valuable, not only for the scientific investigator, but for those who are interested in the practical work of missions."

+ Bib World 44:428 D '14 350w

Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '14 120w

DOWDEN, EDWARD. Fragments from old letters. E. D. to E. D. W. (Miss West) 1869-1892. il $2 Dutton

"The 'Fragments' are from a correspondence addressed to the lady who became his second wife. Like the larger collection, they are in the main concerned with literary matters, so han-

died as to furnish readers caring for scholarship with matter for pleasant meditation." —Sat R

"These letters give us, what is seldom to be had except in intimate communings between friends, the spontaneous impressions and reflections of an equipped and cultured mind on many, or most of those persistent questions which, in proportion of our sensitiveness and candour, life presents to all of us."

+ Ath 1914,2:194 Ag 15 570w

+ Ath 1914,2:560 N 28 110w

+ Boston Transcript p23 J1 1 '14 600w

"It is because the letters are devoted so largely to the writer's studies and literary diversions that they are of sufficient general interest to be made public." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 57:48 J1 16 '14 1000w

+ N Y Times 19:316 J1 19 '14 200w

+ N Y Times 20:28 Ja 24 '15 210w

+ Sat R 117:802 Je 20 '14 400w

+ Spec 113:855 D 12 '14 80w

DOWDEN, EDWARD. Letters of Edward Dowden and his correspondents. il *$2.50 Dutton 14-17853

"These letters offer an opportunity to supplement his more important work on Shakespeare and Shelley by his intimate and unconventional remarks on them to his friends, and on Gladstone's great home rule contest, in which he took no little part." (Ind) In his preface "John Eglinton sets forth both the peculiar significance of Professor Dowden's skill in the study of literature and the attractive phases of mind and body that brought him honor and esteem throughout his long life." (Boston Transcript)

"The collection of 'Letters of Edward Dowden and his correspondents,' interesting as it is, and covering the whole stretch of Dowden's life, from his 16th to his 70th year, exhibits him, perhaps, less fully, and has less in it to engage the reader, than the lately published series of his letters to E. D. W."

+ Ath 1914,2:3 J1 4 480w

+ Boston Transcript p23 J1 1 '14 600w

"The two volumes appeared almost simultaneously, and together constitute one work, the tone of all the letters being predominantly though by no means exclusively literary and critical, often rich in book-learning, and always kindly and, as one instinctively feels, agreeably characteristic of the writer." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 57:48 J1 16 '14 1000w

Ind 79:136 J1 27 '14 80w

+ Lit D 49:1015 N 21 '14 370w

"These informal utterances reveal his diffident but winning personality, throw light on his professional and literary interests, and are in themselves valuable as a record of life-long absorption in the best that is known and thought in the world."

+ Nation 99:499 O 22 '14 1500w

"The collection forms a valuable commentary on the literary affairs of the last half century by one of the leading scholars of his time."

+ N Y Times 19:316 J1 19 '14 200w

"One feels, with constant satisfaction, just this—that the letters do the man justice."

+ No Am 200:786 N '14 2500w

"Ought to be on the bookshelves of all those who are interested in Irish literature and criticism."

+ R of Rs 50:764 D '14 310w

+ Sat R 117:802 Je 20 '14 400w

+ — Spec 113:238 Ag 15 '14 1300w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. Great Britain and the next war. *25c (3c) Small 14-20240

Written in 1913 as a commentary on Bernhardi's "Germany and the next war." The author analyzes Bernhardi's major premises and says emphatically that he rejects all of them, but points out that this is beside the question, for it is not with the soundness of his argument that England should concern herself, but with its results. The essay was written as a warning to England, and was printed in the "Fortnightly Review" in 1912.

Ind 80:242 N 16 '14 60w

Ind 80:475 D 21 '14 110w

Outlook 108:816 D 9 '14 50w

DRACOPOLI, I. NICHOLAS. Through Jubaland to the Lorian swamp. il *$3.50 Lippincott 14-30424

"Jubaland is the northeastern corner of the East Africa protectorate, bordering on Italian Somaliland. Only the western portion has been surveyed and mapped, and Mr. Dracopoli in his journey from the coast to the northern Uaso Nyero river was covering country which had never been fully explored." (Spec) "It is the result of this journey which he lays before us."

"... A large portion of the narrative is devoted to a careful statement concerning the fauna of the region traversed and the habits of the strange animals encountered." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 10:338 Je '14

"When we say that we have read this book almost at a sitting with the greatest pleasure, we may perhaps be pardoned a few criticisms of detail."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup432 Mr 21 1050w

"Although Mr. Dracopoli's style is not especially vivid it is pleasing, and his book is a distinct addition to the literature upon the subject."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 570w

+ Sat R 117:151 Ja 31 '14 70w

"His narrative is as vivid as it is modest."

+ Spec 112:744 My 2 '14 500w

DRAKE, DURANT. Problems of conduct. *$1.75 (1c) Houghton 14-18285

This introductory survey of ethics is concerned with practical problems of life, with particular emphasis on those which face us in our own day. Before taking up these specific problems, however, the author makes a survey of the field of ethics, considering in Part 1 of the book, The evolution of morality, with a view of determining "what it is in their lives to which men have given the name morality." Part 2 follows this with a discussion of The theory of morality. Then comes Part 3 devoted to Personal morality, with chapters on: Health and efficiency; The alcohol problem; Chastity and marriage, etc. Part 4 then takes up Public morality with discussions of: Patriotism and world-peace; Social alleviation; Industrial wrongs; Industrial reconstruction; Liberty and Equality and privilege; The future of the race.

"Through and through scientific and scholarly, it is never academic in method or matter."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 16 '15 500w

"The author commands an agreeable style and has so ordered his material that it is not unduly pedagogic. The book is distinctly a good one."

+ Educ R 49:96 Ja '15 50w

"If Professor Drake has not concocted an original book he has written a very sensible and useful one. If, on dipping into his views of life, the reader feels at first that we have here typical Methodist puritanism put into systematic form, he is likely, on reading further, to ask himself whether Professor Drake's type of puritanism be not the soundest sense and the deepest wisdom."

+ Nation 100:28 Ja 7 '15 420w

DREISER, THEODORE. The Titan. *$1.40 (1/2c) Lane 14-9767

This story follows "The financier." At the end of that book, Frank Algernon Cowperwood, having made a fortune and lost it, served a term in the penitentiary, tired of his wife and taken another woman as a mistress, is ready to begin life anew. This he does in Chicago; in due time securing a divorce and marrying Aileen. All this takes place in the seventies when the foundations of the great Chicago fortunes were being laid, and Cowperwood, with his genius for finance, finds his proper field in the young city. Neither the details of his business operations nor his many liaisons with women are spared. He is a conqueror in either field, but the story ends with a situation not unlike that of its predecessor. The new public conscience, which by the end of the century had begun to make itself felt in politics, brings about a second defeat, and again, as in the first failure, he turns to a woman not his wife for solace.

DREISER, THEODORE—Continued.

"The financier" was absorbing and indubitably great; its continuation is neither."

— Atlant 114:523 O '14 670w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 39:447 Je '14 700w

"His story is built up of alternate layers touching now upon Cowperwood's conquests in high finance and now upon his successes with women. It is in fact substantially two separate novels, and they could be easily separated and with but a few changes become independent stories. 'The Titan' is a big book in size and intellectually, but it is by no means a great novel. It lacks the discretion, the restraint, the good taste, the normality essential even to an approach to perfection." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 My 23 '14 1100w

"No other writer's view of Chicago is so individual or so effectively presented." Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 56:504 Je 16 '14 450w

"On the whole it is a dull book."

— Ind 80:63 O 12 '14 270w

Nation 98:697 Je 11 '14 700w

"Surely a typical American situation, full of possibilities. Unluckily, Mr. Dreiser, instead of dealing in large masses and broad sweeping lines, loses himself in a mesh of petty detail and endless repetition. Nothing salient emerges. The main trouble with the book is that Mr. Dreiser does not get inside his hero's skin." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times 19:241 My 24 '14 1100w

DRESSER, HORATIO WILLIS. Religion of the spirit in modern life. *$1.50 (2c) Putnam 14-15148

The author says of this book that it is "primarily intended for those who are working their way into a larger, stronger, and more spiritual type of faith." Two series of lectures delivered on different occasions have been combined to make up the contents but the book as a whole is unified by the principle that underlies each of the lectures, that religion is essentially a matter of "inner experience." Contents: The nature of religion; Universal faith; The indwelling spirit; The criterion; The spirit in Jesus; The spiritual nature of man; The pathway of the soul; The value of a liberal faith; Inner peace; The inner centre; The fullness of life; What is truth? Social co-operation; The presence of God.

Boston Transcript p20 S 23 '14 300w

N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 120w

"The many who have found value in one or more of Dr. Dresser's numerous books will find large value in this."

+ Outlook 108:283 S 30 '14 350w

DRIESCH, HANS ADOLPH EDUARD. Problem of individuality. il *$1 Macmillan 14-13569

The book is made up of four lectures delivered at the University of London in 1913. "The point at issue throughout is the question whether the manifestations of life can be sufficiently explained on the theory of a machine, i. e., by a mechanical conception of phenomena, or whether it is necessary to postulate a further force, superior to, and independent of, the physico-chemical forces which govern the rest of the cosmos. It is, in fact, the old question as to the existence of a special vital force which differentiates living protoplasm from all other forms of matter." (Ath)

"Useful as a summary of the author's views, but too condensed for easy reading."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:150 D '14

"We lay down this little volume with the reflection that the problem of individuality is still unsolved, but that Prof. Driesch is an illuminating and valued guide along the road he has marked out for himself as the best."

+ — Ath 1914,1:782 Je 6 930w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

+ Hibbert J 12:305 J1 '14 350w

Reviewed by O. W. Griffith

Hibbert J 13:438 Ja '15 2900w

"A brief and clear, if not perfectly systematic, statement of the meaning of vitalism and the argument for it."

+ — Nation 99:502 O 22 '14 170w

DROUET, JULIETTE. Love letters of Juliette Drouet to Victor Hugo; ed. by L. Gimbaud; tr. by Lady Theodora Davidson. il *$2.50 (2½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-17316

Part 1 of this book is made up of a sketch of the life of Juliette Drouet, part 2 of a selection from her letters. In 1831 Mlle. Drouet was playing parts in a Paris theater. Victor Hugo saw her on the stage, fell in love with her and made her his mistress. The relationship lasted fifty years. He took her from her profession and when she complained of the monotony of her secluded life said to her: "Write to me. Write me everything that comes into your head, everything that causes your heart to beat." She wrote, and from the twenty thousand letters left in the possession of her executor, those that make up this collection have been selected.

Boston Transcript p9 Ja 16 '15 650w

"As letters, it can hardly be said they were worth printing at all. Their value is in displaying the behavior of Hugo's really sublime egoism in a relation the most intimate in the world, in revealing the effect of it day by day and year by year, upon the woman who was bound to him as with wain ropes by an over-mastering and singularly enduring attachment." Carl Becker

+ Dial 57:384 N 16 '14 1500w

"The biography is well put together, and the translation reads smoothly."

+ Nation 99:412 O 1 '14 200w

DRYSDALE, CHARLES VICKERY. Small family system; is it injurious or immoral? with 13 diagrams of population movements, etc., at home and abroad, and prefatory note by Binnie Dunlop. *$1 (2½c) Huebsch 14-14279

The author deals with the subject of the deliberate limitation of families and considers, from a scientific standpoint, the question is it injurious or immoral? His answer is a decided no: he believes that intelligent family limitation is essential to social reform and the abolition of poverty.

"Though we should give the fullest publicity to this valuable pamphlet, there is a 'but'—and the 'but' is, to our minds, most important—many reforms and reformers have become so immersed in their alleviative remedies as to forget the cure itself."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup182 Ja 31 330w

N Y Times 19:335 Ag 2 '14 200w

"A very valuable book treating with directness, and yet in a way without offense to any reader, of the problem of the consequent limitation of families."

+ R of Rs 50:252 Ag '14 70w

DUCHÊNE, EMILE AUGUSTE. Flight without formulæ; tr. by J: H. Ledeboer. il *$2.25 Longmans A14-3063

"This discussion of the mechanics of the aeroplane, by a French military engineer, is written in the simplest possible language, without the use of mathematical formulæ or equations. The chapters on stability set forth several new and important theories on this fundamental problem."—Spec

"The author and translator have succeeded in producing a brief treatise of appealing simplicity and pleasing literary style."

+ Engin N 72:1044 N 19 '14 250w

"The subject is a hard one to treat accurately without the use of mathematical notation, but by his ingenious explanations the author has surmounted the difficulty admirably."

+ Pittsburgh 19:552 D '14 60w

"The translation is excellent; and the book should be helpful to all who wish to understand the principles of flight."

+ Spec 113:175 Ag 1 '14 60w

DUDENEY, MRS. HENRY ERNEST. Set to partners. $1.25 (1c) Duffield 13-21827

The story is primarily a study of the development of Angelina Peachy from childhood to womanhood. It might indeed be looked upon as a study in heredity, for Angelina is unlike both her father and her mother and can be explained only as a "throw-back" to the wicked and fascinating old grandmother of whom we are allowed glimpses in the early chapters. Angelina's ideals of marriage were derived from a devout housemaid, who, bereft of a lover, turned nun. Neither of the two men who loved Angelina in later life satisfied this ideal, and refusing to enter into a marriage that falls short of perfection, she chooses an illicit relationship in its place. The end of the story is grimly tragic, with a final situation, recalling Mrs. Wharton's "Ethan Frome."

"The interest of this story is sufficient and the majority of the characters are well delineated. As a work of art, however, the book falls through its lack of restraint in words; and also through occasional improbability."

+ Ath 1913,2:315 S 27 70w

"Set to partners" is distressing, irritating or depressing, according to temperament, but it is not weak, it is not futile and it is convincing."

+ Boston Transcript p22 J1 1 '14 260w

"Humanly written realism involving the triangle. Sparkling with details that provoke smiles of sympathy."

+ Ind 78:324 My 25 '14 14w

"Admirers of Mrs. Dudeney's earlier novels will find this latest book somewhat disappointing. There is nothing in it to compare with the description of the Baigent family in 'A runaway ring,' and its plot seems very improbable, to say the least. Her characters lack vitality, and it is difficult to say why."

+ N Y Times 19:230 My 10 '14 250w

Outlook 107:370 Je 13 '14 50w

"Mrs. Dudeney is a realist with a taste for dramatic scenes. In her new book . . . she shows all the qualities which we most admire in her work. The blind lover's loss of human feeling does not, however, strike us as probable."

+ Sat R 116:sup9 O 11 '13 350w

"It is high praise to say of a book that it reminds one irresistibly of the 'Old wives' tale': it is not only true of Mrs. Dudeney's last book, but it is well earned. It is written with a quiet observation, with that power of enduring the trivialities of life with a supreme importance, which seems essential in a good modern novel, and with a style uniformly careful and adequate. The story, although the interest of the book is almost independent of the plot, is as good as another."

+ Spec 111:468 S 27 '13 300w

DUDLEY, ROBERT. In my youth; from the posthumous papers of Robert Dudley. $1.35 (1½c) Bobbs 14-17488

The author gives a picture of life in the "middle ages of the middle west." The scene of his story is a Quaker settlement in Indiana in the period before the civil war. It is told in the form of reminiscences by an old man whose memory goes back sixty years and it follows the development of an imaginative, book-loving little boy under the influence of primitive conditions, when books were few and precious.

"The chapter devoted to the 'Great moral exhibition,' otherwise a country circus, is worth a book in itself." P. G. Hubert, jr.

+ Bookm 40:561 Ja '15 400w

"As a picture of the middle west in the backwoods period the book has historic value. As a revelation of the unfolding mind of a lonely, sensitive, book-loving boy it holds the human interest that is of all periods. Its fault is that it is photographic, not impressionistic."

+ N Y Times 19:462 O 25 '14 170w

"As a relief from penny-dreadful best sellers and problem novels the book is fine and true. The reader who misses it loses real and worthy enjoyment."

+ Outlook 108:845 D 9 '14 70w

DUGDALE, FLORENCE E. Book of baby pets. il $2.50 Doran

The author gives "brief accounts of the birds and animals which children are wont to coddle. . . . The creatures' habits and haunts are fully explained . . . together with the sort of care which they should receive."—Nation

"A valuable family possession, and one which admirably fulfils the rôle of guide, counsellor, and friend."

+ Ath 1913,2:sup474 O 25 120w

"The information is explicit and comprehensive as well as simple. The book could be used advantageously by any one for reference."

+ Lit D 48:1124 My 9 '14 160w

"E. J. Detmold's drawings in color are not always true to perspective."

+ Nation 97:571 D 11 '13 60w

"Very good artistic paintings of animals familiar to young children. The text is well written and simple."

+ N Y Sun p4 N 29 '13 50w

"When Mr. Detmold recognizes the limits of the process of color reproduction, his pictures are charming; the mice, for instance, are altogether pleasing, but the sour greens he makes use of in his studies of a lizard and some treefrogs are sad travesties of the beautiful natural colours of these creatures."

+ Spec 111:sup799 N 15 '13 90w

DUGMORE, ARTHUR RADCLYFFE. Romance of the beaver; being the history of the beaver in the Western hemisphere. il $2.50 Lippincott

"What Enos Mills has done for the beaver chiefly in and around Colorado, Mr. Dugmore does for the animal in more easterly portions of the continent and in Newfoundland. The result, although the beaver is essentially the same in his ways everywhere, is a companion volume to 'In beaver world.' " (Springfield Republican) "The manifest intention of the author of 'The romance of the beaver' is to arouse so much interest in these most intelligent of animals that there will be sufficient public sentiment to stop the wholesale slaughter, which if it is allowed to continue for many more generations will make the beaver extinct. . . . Mr. Dugmore urges steadfastly the duty of the people of the present generation to secure for the beavers what has been secured for many kinds of birds—a freedom from continual killing." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 11:201 Ja '15

"The arrangement of the book throughout is somewhat too haphazard; both chapters and paragraphs are of inconvenient length, and the index is inadequate. Nevertheless the text is of absorbing interest, and carries conviction as the work of a careful and indefatigable observer of the best type."

+ Ath 1914,2:511 N 14 1550w

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '14 580w

+ N Y Times 20:54 F 14 '15 100w

"A thoroughly delightful book."

+ Spec 113:sup697 N 21 '14 50w

"Mr. Dugmore has a pleasant, easy style of narration and his pictures while hardly so remarkable as some in his other volumes, are nevertheless extremely good."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 470w

DUGMORE, ARTHUR RADCLYFFE. Romance of the Newfoundland caribou. il *$3.75 Lip-pincott A14-9

"Both in England and in the United States the caribou is little known except to sportsmen. Yet in Newfoundland herds of many hundreds are still seen, and to give as clear and complete an account of their life as possible was the author's straightforward aim. . . . After a brief study of the caribou and its habitat in ancient times, he commences his survey of the caribou of the present day, giving an outline of 'the four periods of his life, which correspond very closely with the seasons, touching lightly upon its most important events in order to give a consecutive idea of the animal's habits'—the points of greatest importance. . . . Appended are the 'Game laws of Newfoundland for caribou or deer,' and index, and a sketch map."—Boston Transcript

"[The illustrations] alone are enough to give the book distinction."

+ Ath 1913,2:627 N 29 30w

+ Ath 1914,1:790 Je 6 480w

"A book of rare interest to the general reader as well as to the sportsman and scientist."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 3 '14 370w

+ Dial 56:113 F 1 '14 280w

"Splendid as are the many large photographs with which he adorns 'The romance of the Newfoundland caribou,' to sportsman and to general reader alike the chief attraction of the handsome large quarto volume must lie in the remarkable and spirited story told in the text."

+ N Y Sun p4 D 20 '13 260w

+ N Y Times 19:39 Mr 1 '14 200w

"A permanent piece of original work, not without scientific value, has been well and most modestly done. The pictures are wonderful, the work thorough and new."

+ Sat R 117:17 Ja 3 '14 1250w

"A well written and interesting volume."

+ Spec 112:sup1063 Je 27 '14 350w

DUMBELL, KATE ETHEL MARY. California and the far West: suggestions for the west bound traveler. *75c Pott 14-18058

This volume "is a guidebook that keeps to its special province and aims merely to tell the traveler briefly what reasons there are for visiting any particular district and how to get there. It covers pretty thoroughly the whole region west of the Rocky mountains, including Alaska. It contains a map and a list of hotels, with their prices."—N Y Times

"Useful guide." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:572 Ja '15 49w

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 130w

DUNBAR, PAUL LAURENCE. Complete poems. il *$2 Dodd 13-25781

"The works of the late Paul Laurence Dunbar have been collected into a single volume. They comprise 'Lyrics of lowly life,' 'Lyrics of the hearthside,' 'Lyrics of love and laughter,' and 'Lyrics of sunshine and shadow,' and a number of poems never before published. Dunbar is the first American negro of pure African blood to reveal innate distinction in literature; as William D. Howells has said: 'to feel the negro life esthetically and express it lyrically.'" (1 of Rs) Howells's early appreciation of Dunbar is reprinted as an introduction to the volume.

A L A Bkl 10:265 Mr '14

+ Lit D 48:167 Ja 24 '14 970w

"Unquestionably it is in his dialect work, his character studies and songs of his own people, that he is most significantly himself. But, taking Dunbar's achievement in such writing for granted, I have been surprised at the unexpected excellence of much of his poetry written in usual literary English on general poetic themes." R: Le Gallienne

+ N Y Times 19:17 Ja 18 '14 1250w

"His dialect pieces are delightful; they show a complete understanding of his race and the range of their perceptions."

+ R of Rs 49:115 Ja '14 110w

DUNCAN, FRANCES. My garden doctor. 5 *$1 (2½c) Doubleday 14-5474

It is of the magic effects of a garden and of contact with the soil as a restorer of health and the joy of life that the author sings. There is a very competent and capable trained nurse in the story who knows as much about gardening as she does about nursing, and it is she who takes her patient up to the New England hilltop to give her a chance to live again. The story is full of out-of-door atmosphere and the touch of romance needed is not lacking.

+ A L A Bkl 10:370 My '14 *

"It is rather a mountain idyll than a gardening handbook, pleasant in style and excellent reading."

+ Nation 58:460 Ap 23 '14 130w

"Even if it does minimize discomforts and magnify enjoyments, the little book holds much sound sense which he that runneth (and especially she) may well pause to read."

+ N Y Times 19:144 Mr 29 '14 380w

Outlook 107:265 My 30 '14 50w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 30w

DUNCAN, NORMAN. Bird-store man. il *75c (1½c) Revell 14-15750

The author calls this an old-fashioned story, but it is a story written in a fashion which is Norman Duncan's own. It is all about Mr. Tom Twitter who kept a bird and animal store and conducted an Academy for the higher education of canines in which there was a choice between courses in Polite deportment and Parlour tricks and courses in Advanced acrobatics for dogs aspiring to a professional career; and about the Little Girl who came to the academy bringing her pet Alexander; and about Alexander who proved a promising pupil and grew up to be a credit and a comfort to both Tom Twitter and the Little Girl.

"An altogether delightful hour's reading, and not without suggestions of the more serious sort which he who runs may read."

+ Nation 99:380 S 24 '14 200w

"A rather pretty little story, whose avowed old-fashionedness is evidently intended to be of the Dickens kind."

+ N Y Times 19:371 S 6 '14 150w

"A quaint little story."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:262 N '14 50w

DUNCAN-CLARK, S. J. Progressive movement; its principles and its programme. *$1 (2c) Small 13-25956

The author takes up, chapter by chapter, the chief features of the progressive program. Following the introduction by Theodore Roosevelt, there are discussions of: Progressive fundamentals; A progressive philosophy; Restoring power to the people; Direct representation; Direct legislation; Woman and the progressive movement; The conservation of human resources; Social wrongs and remedies; The problem of wages; Child labor; Industrial ills and hazard; Conserving rural life; The trusts and big business; The courts; Some national issues; The progressive party in the state; The progressive party in the city; The enlistment of new forces; Progressive organization.

A L A Bkl 10:219 F '14

N Y Times 18:621 N 16 '13 330w

"A clear, authoritative statement."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:55 Mr '14 20w

DUNHILL, THOMAS F. Chamber music: a treatise for students. (Musician's lib.) il *$3.25 Macmillan A13-1463

"Mr. Dunhill's is the first serious study, in England at all events, devoted entirely to chamber music, which he rightly describes as 'the most intellectual and the most fully perfected department of musical composition.' In the course of his nine chapters he covers the whole field of chamber music in some detail, beginning with the string quartet, which is, as it were, the standard form. . . . For the layman the chief interest of the book will be the light it throws upon the mysterious question of the essential characteristic which distinguishes chamber music from all other kinds."—Spec

"This book is full of useful comments, criticisms, hints, and examples from classical and modern composers."

+ Ath 1913,1:631 Je 7 220w

"While intended chiefly for writers of chamber music, listeners will find much in these pages a knowledge of which will increase their pleasure in listening to concerts."

+ Nation 97:547 D 4 '13 230w

"A masterly analysis and history of the development of music for the chamber."

+ Sat R 115:752 Je 14 '13 350w

"Though this book must necessarily appeal principally to the student, it possesses enough general interest to deserve notice from the layman who has some acquaintance with the technicalities of music."

+ Spec 111:29 J1 5 '13 270w

DUNLOP, ROBERT, ed. Ireland under the Commonwealth; being a selection of documents relating to the government of Ireland from 1651 to 1659; ed. with historical introd. and notes. (Manchester univ. pub. Historical ser.) 2v *$8 Longmans (Eng ed 13-17618)

"The documentary matter to which Mr. Dunlop invites attention is the fruit of research made by him many years ago, at a time when he had it in mind to write a history of the Commonwealth's operations in Ireland. It is published with the expectation that it will be useful to historians and students interested in Irish history. Mr. Dunlop says it contains every scrap of information he could obtain in his study of Ireland's Cromwellian period, and he believes it gives a fairly complete record of that very interesting and somewhat puzzling episode. The matter is composed mainly of selections from the volumes known as 'The Commonwealth records' found by Prendergast in the Bermingham tower of Dublin castle and now preserved in the public record office in Dublin."—N Y Times

"Certainly any one who pretends to knowledge of the period must hereafter take full account of these volume." W. C. Abbott

+ Am Hist R 19:610 Ap '14 800w

Reviewed by W. E. Lunt

+ Ann Am Acad 54:332 J1 '14 700w

"The author's judgments on the leading characters in the great struggle between England and Ireland are worthy of special attention. As regards the present work, with the exception of one unaccountable oversight, we have little but praise for the way in which it has been performed."

+ — Ath 1913,2:381 J1 26 900w

"The documents themselves are not attractive reading. The cumbersome, involved sentences are repellent, and the meaning not always clear. Mr. Dunlop has, however done his work well, and has appended a number of useful biographical and topographical notes." G. H. Orpen

+ Eng Hist R 29:164 Ja '14 1050w

+ N Y Times 19:85 F 22 '14 500w

"Mr. Dunlop has earned the gratitude of students by this most careful work upon one of the most disputed periods of Irish history."

+ Sat R 117:55 Ja 10 '14 250w

DUNN, ARTHUR WILLIAM. Community and the citizen. il 90c (1c) Heath 11-21759

A revised and enlarged edition of a work published seven years ago. The changes made in community life and the progress of self government during the time since 1907 have made a revision desirable. The use of the volume as a school text book has called forth an introduction on Aims and methods, addressed to the teacher.

DUNN, BYRON ARCHIBALD. Storming Vicksburg. il *$1.25 (1½c) McClurg 13-20572

This volume like others in the "Young Missourians series" holds closely to the facts of history. It carries its young hero thru the campaign before Vicksburg and then back to Missouri where some of the minor but no less thrilling events of the war were taking place.

DUNN, ROBERT. Youngest world: a novel of the frontier. *$1.40 (1c) Dodd 14-5197

The youngest world is Alaska, and it is with the regenerative influence of struggle and contact with primitive forces that the story deals. Gail Thain, who has made pretty much of a failure of everything he has tried, including marriage, leaves his wife and ships as steward on the steamer for Alaska. On shipboard he meets Bob Snowden, a mountain climber, who asks him to become one of the party that is to scale Mt. Lincoln. This proves to be the big experience of Thain's life, the turning point in his career. There are three women in his life, too, who influence him, Martha, whom he betrays, Lena, his wife, and Clara the woman he meets in Alaska.

+ Ath 1914,2:sup97 J1 18 160w

"Mr. Dunn's book has very distinct human limitations and very obvious faults. But it does have a rather unusual bigness, in spite of these faults, indeed, in a measure because of them, and in order to understand this we must recognize that Mr. Dunn's methods are those of nature rather than of art, and that his work is far more akin to a rugged pinnacle of storm-scourged granite than to the chiseled stone of a cathedral. One of the few novels of recent years which the lover of good fiction cannot afford to miss." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 39:215 Ap '14 1150w

"It is 'good, big, significant, vital'; but there is too much in it—too many men and women in whom you are interested—too many varying conceptions and classes of life to which you must adjust yourself."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 330w

+ Ind 78:291 My 18 '14 70w

"It does not need the publisher's word on the cover to show this to be a first novel. Many of its descriptive passages are well done, and a few of its characters, notably Snowden and Jonesy, are real people."

+ — N Y Times 19:124 Mr 15 '14 750w

"We have felt, as we read, a sense of being rushed and bullied by a restless taskmaster."

+ Spec 113:139 J1 25 '14 1100w

"There is much in the book that is coarse and sensational."

+ Springfield Republican p5 J1 16 '14 500w

DUNN, SAMUEL O. Government ownership of railways. il *$1.50 Appleton 13-25916

"Mr. Dunn ventures the opinion that 'no more important question confronts the people of the United States than the question of what policy they shall pursue in the future in dealing with the railroads of the country.' He examines in a seemingly fair and judicial spirit the various arguments for and against government ownership of railroads, and reviews the experience of other countries in which the railroads are owned and operated by the state. His conclusions are distinctly adverse to the policy of government ownership in the United States. . . . The argument for government ownership drawn from the experience of other countries is, he thinks, by no means conclusive, because the conditions in countries like Prussia and Japan where government ownership has been most successful are entirely different from conditions in the United States."—Dial

"Fair and judicial in spirit."

+ A L A Bk1 10:265 Mr '14

"A readable and clear presentation of issues that will confront the public in this country, if government ownership and management of the railways should be undertaken." A. A. Osborne

+ Ann Am Acad 52:245 Mr '14 300w

DUNN, SAMUEL O.—Continued.

+ Dial 56:70 Ja 16 '14 350w

"The descriptions and conclusions are presented readably and concisely, and yet convincingly, bearing evidence that the author has analyzed and considered his subject carefully, even though he undoubtedly is opposed to the policy of government ownership. But no author competent to discuss the subject could be free from a definite opinion in favor of one or other side of the question, and the treatment of the subject in this case indicates reasoning and not prejudice as the basis of the conclusions."

+ Engin N 71:385 F 12 '14 550w

"If the reviewer has rightly read the work it is a fair presentation of the problem. In some particulars readers will not agree with his conclusions, but the facts are stated clearly, so that those who differ may have the figures before them upon which to base their opinions."

+ Engin Rec 69:401 Ap 4 '14 730w

"Combining in an admirable way the deductive and the inductive method, the author examines the arguments most persistently urged for government ownership." G: O. Virtue

+ J Pol Econ 22:396 Ap 14 1750w

"Mr. Dunn has written a useful book and its publication is well timed. The information as to government-owned railways in the various countries or the world is given in simple and readable form and bears every appearance of accuracy."

+ Nation 98:242 Mr 5 '14 480w

"His book is a fine example of the good work that can be done with secondary sources, if they are used with thoroughness and judgment."

+ Pol Sci Q 29:557 S '14 220w

"The treatment of the question is conservative, and, on the whole, fair."

+ R of Rs 49:250 F '14 110w

DUNNE, BRIAN BORU. Cured! the 70 adventures of a dyspeptic. il $1 (2c) Winston 14-20762

A man who suffered for years from nervous dyspepsia and who claims to have tried seventy unsuccessful cures, tells about them in this volume, which is supplied with a brief foreword by H. G. Wells. The seat of the patient's trouble was finally traced to eye strain and a pair of correctly adjusted glasses wrought the cure.

"The author has a happy faculty of injecting much wholesome philosophy into his humorous tale, all of which is so obviously devoid of malice that the doctors as well as their patients cannot fail to find the story amusing."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 2 '15 210w

DUNNING, WILLIAM ARCHIBALD. British empire and the United States. *$2 (3c) Scribner 14-18567

The book offers a review of the relations of the two countries during the years between 1814 and 1914, the century following the treaty of Ghent. It has a preface by Nicholas Murray Butler and an introduction by James Bryce. The eight chapters in which the author presents his survey are: Readjustment after war; Whig reform and Jacksonian democracy; The roaring forties; Polk and Poinsett; Through three-fold tension to harmony; The American civil war and its effects; The growth of Canada and its problems; Venezuela—and after; Conclusion.

"Dr. Dunning has discarded altogether the machinery of history, and produced instead a finished piece of literature. He writes with an easy pen, by no means disdaining touches of humour, and with a discrimination that eliminates tediousness even from the details of a fisheries dispute."

+ Ath 1915:162 Ja 23 930w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 23 '15 630w

"Much fuller and more satisfying than Senator Lodge's well-written but inadequate outline of the subject."

+ Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 80w

"Prof. Dunning deals with all these episodes and points of conflict with admirable impartiality and full knowledge." Joseph Jacobs

+ N Y Times 19:457 O 25 '14 1100w

DUNRAVEN, WINDHAM THOMAS WYND. HAM QUIN, 4th earl of. Canadian nights. *$2 Scribner 14-30797

"The author has cast his reminiscences in the form of narratives told over the camp fire by a cultured Englishman, who chose to desert what we call civilization, and to live, very much as an Indian or white trapper lives in the wilderness. . . . The author's stories are told in the Canadian woods, but they embrace experiences to the southward of the Canadian frontier, and one of the best records a hunting trip in one of the great 'parks' of Colorado, under the guidance of Buffalo Bill and Texas Jack."—Ath

"While in no way remarkable, they make pleasant reading; the leisurely, unpretentious manner of telling lends a certain atmosphere and charm."

+ A L A Bk 11:64 O '14

"It is an eminently readable volume, happily free alike from errors of taste and dull passages."

+ Ath 1914:1:818 Je 20 950w

"The charm of all the six chapters which compose the book largely lies in a real gift for bringing people and scenery before our eyes, without any tortured or even rhetorical description. The account of Newfoundland dates back to the 'seventies, and in parts the description of the country is quite unrecognisable. Some of it, indeed, is inaccurate, even when we have made allowance for the passage of a generation."

+ Sat R 117:707 My 30 '14 730w

DUNSANY, EDWARD JOHN MORETON DRAX PLUNKETT, 18th baron. Five plays. (Modern drama ser.) *$1.25 (5c) Kennerley 14-6803

A group of plays that may be called fantastic or mystical or symbolical, as the reader chooses. All but one have been produced on the London stage. The titles are: The gods of the mountain; The golden doom; King Argimenes and the unknown warrior; The glittering gate; The lost silk hat.

"The plays exhibit fantastic imagination of an uncommon and powerful order, and are written admirably, in vigorous prose, of almost classic purity. Actually, they are dramatic episodes rather than plays, being very brief, while the virtue in them is descriptive rather than constructive."

+ Nation 99:52 J1 9 '14 300w

"There is more to Lord Dunsany's work than mere literary flavor."

+ N Y Times 19:416 O 4 '14 300w

"The most entertaining dramatic work of the day."

+ R of Rs 51:118 Ja '15 250w

"Few plays stand the test of reading as do these five by Lord Dunsany. We are glad, indeed, to have them."

+ Sat R 117:377 Mr 21 '14 120w

DU PUY, WILLIAM ATHERTON. Uncle Sam's modern miracles; his gigantic tasks that benefit humanity. il *$1.25 (2c) Stokes 14-16785

What some of the governmental departments are doing for the country and its people is the subject of this book. The table of contents will be given in full as the best means of indicating the wide field covered: Conquering contagion; Awakening the Filipino; Revealing weather secrets; Recompensing the Indian; Transforming western deserts; Shackling the Mississippi; Helping the farmer's wife; Rejuvenating Porto Rico; Remaking the "poor whites"; Getting the land to the people; Smoothing a nation's roads; Combing the world for new crops; Blanketing the world with wireless; Daily mail in the country; Producing census facts; Accumulating hoards of gold; Teaching sanitation to the world; Capturing blackhanders; Preparing for possible wars; Assimilating the immigrant horde.

"Interesting also to young citizens of high-school age."

+ A L A Bkl 11:198 Ja '15 +

"The whole book is full of the romance of big business, and the average reader will gasp over the facts and will thrill with patriotism as he realizes how much the government is doing to save life and uplift it and speed it prosperously to greater usefulness and happiness. The author has a happy way of telling these stories, and they deserve to be widely read."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 14 '15 400w

DU QUESNE-VAN GOGH, ELISABETH HUBERTA. Personal recollections of Vincent van Gogh; tr. by Katherine S. Dreier, with a foreword by Arthur B. Davies. il $1.75 Houghton 14-128

A memoir of the Dutch artist and exponent of futurism who died in 1890, written by his sister. From it "one gets the softened but sufficiently clear picture of a fine mind prematurely consumed by its own unreasonable energies. The moody lad, incapable in practical concerns, spasmodically the evangelist and the artist, early suffered a mental breakdown through overstudy. A perilous emotional tension is in all his painting, as well in that produced in lucid intervals as in that coming from the asylum at Arles. . . . His sister's recollections, though numerous tragic incidents of Van Gogh's career are suppressed or merely suggested, help one to understand the man." (Nation)

+ A L A Bkl 10:220 F '14

"The translation is well done, reproducing the restrained but emotional character of the original."

+ Ath 1914:1:416 Mr 21 420w

"This book, supplemented by the letters of Van Gogh which have recently been published, will undoubtedly rank as one of the gospels of the modernist's faith."

+ Dial 56:149 F 16 '14 350w

+ Ind 78:401 Je 1 '14 120w

+ Nation 97:601 D 18 '13 450w

+ R of Rs 48:757 D '13 150w

Spec 113:sup775 D 5 '14 200w

DURAND, RALPH ANTHONY. Handbook to the poetry of Rudyard Kipling. *$2 (2c) Doubleday 14-19303

In arranging his material the author has taken the poems as they appear in the different books, taking in order: Departmental ditties and other verses; Barrack room ballads and other verses; The seven seas; The five nations; and Songs from books. Obscure allusions, technical terms, native words, quotations, historical and Biblical references, etc., are explained. An alphabetical list of the poems annotated and a general index complete the volume.

+ A L A Bkl 11:210 Ja '15

"Mr. Kipling's extraordinary range of allusion and insight into many technicalities fully justify notes, and Mr. Durand has made a very interesting book of them, adding here and there details of the author's life to make things clearer."

+ Ath 1914:2:sup605 D 5 470w

Boston Transcript p23 Ja 6 '15 180w

+ Ind 80:339 N 30 '14 90w

+ N Y Times 20:14 Ja 10 '15 90w

"Excellent piece of work."

+ R of Rs 51:248 F '15 80w

DURHAM, EDWARD BENJAMIN. Mine surveying. il $3.50 McGraw 13-22772

The author assumes on the part of the reader of this book a general knowledge of surveying, and after a brief summary of the subject in the first chapter, he takes up in turn, equipment for underground surveying, underground traversing, calculations and mapping, special problems and instruments, shaft plumbing, tunnel surveys, exploratory surveys, magnetic surveys.

"Prof. Durham has gathered together a large amount of valuable information. The reviewer has not seen any book which surpasses it in the treatment of the subject, or in general arrangement, clearness and brevity of statement. If it could be made slightly smaller, without affecting the size of the type or affecting the ease with which it can be read, it would doubtless be appreciated by those for whose use it is intended." L. D. Tracy

+ Engin N 70:1266 D 18 '13 1550w

"The book is a valuable one for the surveyor of mines. The subjects are introduced in logical order. The text is large and clear, with ample side heads; the illustrations are good and the volume is neatly bound and of a convenient size."

+ Engin Rec 68:560 N 15 '13 180w

DURHAM, MARY EDITH. Struggle for Scutari (Turk, Slav, and Albanian). il $4 Longmans (Eng ed 14-14762)

"The story that Miss Durham tells of the 'Struggle for Scutari' in the war of 1913 is a dramatic and tragic bit of European history. 'None,' she writes, 'who have not lived through the past few years on the spot can imagine the fraud, the treachery, the cold-blooded cruelty and brutality with which the various rulers of Europe have striven, each against each, to obtain, by hook or by crook, possession of, or influence over, that little corner of land in the Near East which has been lately the seat of war, and is now the seat of hopeless misery.' . . . Miss Durham's narrative takes up, besides giving a full account of the political and racial struggles of the Albanians and her neighbors, a personal experience in succoring the suffering people of the war-ridden district."

—Boston Transcript

Am Hist R 220:240 O '14 80w

+ A L A Bkl 11:213 Ja '15

"In view of the uphill work for the relief of suffering—work of a most repulsive kind—which Miss Durham did unceasingly in the midst of horrors and filth unspeakable, it is a marvel that she kept her senses, let alone her temper, as she did. There is not an angry judgment in the book."

+ Ath 1914:1:849 Je 20 1100w

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 22 '14 520w

"One finds Miss Durham's book fascinating."

+ Nation 99:718 D 17 '14 300w

+ N Y Times 19:357 Ag 23 '14 1050w

"There is no mincing of matters, no sentimentalizing, and the author does not seem to be aware that she is a second Florence Nightingale. It is not a book professedly written with a purpose, and there is no dogmatic assertion, but Miss Durham, in her plain narrative without comment, gives a singularly informing political study which everybody will read with interest. The more so that her style is pungent, and pleasant withal, and there is not a dull page between the covers."

+ Sat R 117:835 Je 27 '14 800w

"Miss Durham has such a power of presenting scene after scene, in staccato sentences which are extremely vivid for all their carelessness, that the reader feels he is in the very middle of the havoc, intrigue, brutality, and stench of Balkan warfare. Experience tells us, however, that persons capable of heroic acts of tenderness and consolation are sometimes also capable of unjudicial vehemence in their relations with others. She was an eyewitness of much of what she describes, and the present writer was not. It would not be possible, therefore, for him to contradict any single assertion that Miss Durham makes; but it may be useful to point out that, where there may be supposed to be degrees of culpability in the acts of an accused person, the gravity which the charge assumes depends a good deal on the temperament of the accuser. We judge from internal evidence that when Miss Durham has a 'down' on any nation she is scarcely able to exercise lenity."

DURHAM, MARY EDITH—Continued.

+ — Spec 113:55 J1 11 '14 1600w

DUSSERRE, ANTONIN. Jean and Louise; tr
* by J: N. Raphael. il *$1.20 (1½c) Doran
A14-1069

A simple story of Auvergne peasant life written by a man who is himself a self-taught peasant. Jean Paulhac, twenty years old, popular, high-spirited, with a promising future before him, is the victim of an accident that leaves him a cripple for life. He is forced to give up the active work on the farm and take to herding cattle, the only occupation for which he is fit. It is out in the pastures that he meets Louise, a foundling who acts as shepherdess for a neighboring farmer, and gradually he is won back to a sense of the joy of life. The growth of their love for one another is very beautiful and it should have brought them only happiness, but outside interference interrupts the idyl and the little story ends in tragedy.

"An exquisite but tragic idyl. It has the same naïveté and simplicity as 'Marie-Claire' but more poetry and response to the beauty of nature."

+ A L A Bkl 10:370 My '14

"A more substantial and detailed work than 'Marie-Claire,' but it suffers a little in comparison; we tire of the endless dialogue, always in the same vein, which precedes, the tragic ending. Mr. Raphael's version reads excellently, but we have no means of testing its accuracy, as the original has not yet been published in French."

+ — Ath 1913,2:279 S 20 130w

+ — Bookm 39:336 My '14 580w

"Although the story of 'Jean and Louise' in itself contains nothing new, its origin and the manner of its telling, its atmosphere and character development, give it an emphatic novelty. It offers nothing too much or too little, it is written with a compact eloquence that makes for its sincerity and truth, its very brevity and conciseness adding to its dramatic significance. In his preface Mr. Raphael hints that the story is largely autobiographical. If it is, it is certainly autobiography refined by exceptional imaginative gifts." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 14 '14 1250w

"The theme is as old as fiction itself. It has furnished more than one 'Romeo and Juliet' with its inspiration. But because it is here true to its peasant environment, utterly simple in its expression, beautiful because it makes no pretense of beauty, it appeals to the reader with all the eloquence of originality. And for that reason it recalls 'Marie-Claire.'"

+ N Y Times 19:119 Mr 15 '14 650w

Sat R 116:372 S 20 '13 60w

+ Spec 112:273 F 14 '14 30w

E

EARLE, MARIA THERESA (MRS. CHARLES W. EARLE), and CASE, ETHEL. Pot-pourri mixed by two. il *$2.50 Dutton A15-51

The book is in a way a sequel to Mrs. Earle's "Pot-pourri from a Surrey garden" published in 1897. "The chapters are arranged in diary fashion according to the months of the year and each closes with a series of recipes appropriate to the season, old fashioned and more or less connected with the product of kitchen gardens. The rest of the text wanders from the planting of phlox and delphiniums to the Shakespeare-Bacon discussion, from the carillon of French toads to traveling in India, nor is the reader conscious of any abrupt transitions. The faithful accounts of work in the garden at Redhazel are by Miss Case and the contributions by Mrs.

Earle are from letters written by her to Miss Case describing all that seemed interesting in her quiet life at Woodlands." (N Y Times)

"To criticize such a conglomeration is not an easy task. To some readers of simple taste and ample leisure the mixture may not be unpleasing. For the writing of both ladies is easy and natural, and, if it could be found, we would add a term implying its possession of the charm of cultivated womanhood."

+ — Ath 1914,2:21 J1 4 370w

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 30 '14 400w

Reviewed by H: T. Finck

Nation 99:384 S 24 '14 250w

"This new book, although written in collaboration, loses nothing in piquancy."

+ N Y Times 19:391 S 20 '14 550w

+ — Spec 112:746 My 2 '14 520w

EASTMAN, CHARLES ALEXANDER. Indian
" scout talks. il *$0c (2½c) Little 14-17879

A series of talks addressed to boy scouts and camp fire girls by an author who is a full-blooded Sioux and who until his sixteenth year was given the regular training of an Indian boy of his tribe. There are chapters on: Indian methods of physical training; How to make friends with wild animals; The language of footprints; Primitive modes of trapping and fishing; Fire without matches and cooking without pots; An Indian boy's sports; An Indian girl's sports; Indian girls' names and symbolic decorations, etc.

"A book containing a good deal of information."

+ A L A Bkl 11:223 Ja '15 +

+ Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 30w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Boy scouts in the Dismal swamp. il *$1 (2c) Wilde 13-26563

This is a continuation of "The boy scouts of Berkshire." Three of the boys of the Chipmunk patrol conclude that they want to see something more of the world and decide by chance on the Dismal swamp of Virginia as the scene of their adventures. In company with their scoutmaster, they spend a week in the swamp, and see something of Norfolk, the navy yard, New York City, and other places of interest on the way home.

A L A Bkl 10:417 Je '14

"When all is told, Mr. Eaton is using fiction solely to inculcate the methods and ethics of the scout movement. The slight characterization is enough to give the book a healthy spirit of sport and adventure. Geology and forestry peep perceptibly forth from the pages. Mr. Eaton's book will find a sale; there are numberless boys who devour all books on the scout movement."

+ — Lit D 47:1121 D 6 '13 150w

EATON, WALTER PRICHARD. Boy scouts in the White mountains. (Boys' dollar bookshelf) il *$1 (1½c) Wilde

In earlier books Mr. Eaton has taken his boy scouts, Art Bruce, Peanut Morrison, and others to the Berkshires and to the Dismal swamp. In this book the same boys with their scout master, a party of six in all, go on a long hike thru the White mountains.

+ Ind 80:417 D 14 '14 40w

"Mr. Eaton understands the boy demand for excitement rather than character. In 'Peanut,' however, we come very near meeting a real personality."

+ Lit D 49:1135 D 5 '14 60w

EBERLEIN, HAROLD DONALDSON, and MCCLURE, ABBOT. Practical book of period furniture, treating of furniture of the English, American colonial and post-colonial and principal French periods. il *$5 Lippincott 15-514

"The right way to study furniture is by period, but it is a difficult way unless a book is well indexed and well arranged. The present work not only has these advantages but has a chronological key with 113 cuts; through this key periods may be compared and articles identified as to period."—Outlook

"What is noteworthy about this book is that it is educative and informative in a systematic way as to its subject. The claim of the title in the word 'practical' is justified."

+ Outlook 109:105 Ja 13 '15 160w

"It straightway inspires confidence. It makes good its claim to simplicity. Best of all, its authors are obviously enthusiasts as regard their chosen subject; and their pages exhale a contagious affection for this delicate and graceful craft of household architecture." Calvin Winter

+ Pub W 87:183 Ja 16 '15 890w

ECHEGARAY Y EIZAGUIRRE, JOSÉ. Great Galeoto: a play in three acts; with a prologue; tr. by Hannah Lynch; with an introd. by Elizabeth R. Hunt. (Drama league ser. of plays) *75c (3c) Doubleday 14-7259

The "great Galeoto" of this play, translated from the Spanish, is Everybody. He is the They of "They say." He acts "without passion, without guile, often for mere distraction's sake." And so it is that he acts in this drama in which a happy home and three happy lives are wrecked thru the influence of curious eyes and thoughtless, chattering tongues.

"One of the finest and best known plays of the most noted modern Spanish dramatist. The translation leaves the style a trifle stilted."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:19 S '14

"The present translation is not free from occasional inaccuracies, and there is perhaps some lowering of tone. Nevertheless, the Drama league does good service in publishing this attractive volume."

+ — Nation 99:755 D 24 '14 250w

"Those who know Echeagaray will agree that this is his greatest work."

+ R of Rs 50:124 Jl '14 170w

"A very effective reading play."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 30w

EDDY, ARTHUR JEROME. Cubists and post-impressionism. il *$3 McClurg 14-5277

"Those of us who remember Arthur Jerome Eddy's 'Delight, the soul of art,' may surely take heart at finding the same clear-headed critic writing seriously and even enthusiastically of 'Cubists and post-impressionism.'"

Though he deals with all the many phases of post-impressionism, Mr. Eddy has chosen cubism as his central subject, not only because the theories which underlie it have reached a tangible development suitable for argumentation, but because also, as he says, it is the most abstract word yet uttered in painting. In analyzing these growing tendencies in their temporary aspect, Mr. Eddy is much too sound a critic to lose sight of the great fact of continuity in art. He makes it plain that post-impressionism will not displace or destroy our older art. It will be added to it and will fuse with it, to the enrichment, he evidently believes, of the great current that from generation to generation supplies our artistic needs."—Yale R

"A clever, interpretative analysis."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:259 N '14 89w

"His aim is to describe and explain in plain terms some of the changes that are taking place. Difficult as the task becomes at times, he manages it with extraordinary success." H-M. Luquens

+ Yale R n s 4:196 O '14 630w

EDDY, GEORGE SHERWOOD. New era in Asia. il 50c Missionary educ. movement 13-24874

"A summary of present conditions in Japan, China, Korea and India, for which fifteen years' residence in India and a tour of Asia in 1912-1913 have prepared the author in an unusual way." (Ind) "Everywhere in Asia he was impressed with the fact that Asia is about to enter upon a new era. Asia, he is sure, is passing through its renaissance, or new birth. The renaissance of Europe was five-fold, political, intellectual, economic, social and religious. But Asia's renaissance is on a much larger scale. To the intellectual renaissance must be added, religious reformation, nineteenth-century science and industrial development." (Boston Transcript)

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 200w

+ Ind 77:419 Mr 23 '14 70w

EDELSHEIM, FRANZ, FREIHERR VON. Operations upon the sea: a study; tr. from the German. *75c (6c) Outdoor press, 200 5th av., New York 14-21987

This is a technical work on naval operations written by a German for Germans. The first, and much the larger part of the book is taken up with Theoretical views. In this part the author considers all the details of sea transportation: embarking, the sea voyage, landing, reembarkation, etc. The second part consists of an application of these principles. The plans which Germany would pursue in invasions of England and the United States are outlined. Germany, we are told, is the one great power which is in a position to conquer the United States.

"Contains at least one passage which may well be of intense interest to Americans—that in which he outlines the plan by which he believes Germany might conduct a winning war against the United States."

+ N Y Times 19:585 D 27 '14 900w

EDEN, MRS. HELEN PARRY. Bread and circuses. *$1.25 Lane 13-25010

Poems of two kinds make up the contents of this book. The first are delightful child poems addressed to one Betsey Jane, a little daughter. The others are religious poems written with something of the passionate intensity of Francis Thompson.

"Such of Mrs. Eden's volume as accords with the lightsome suggestion of the title shows in striking measure the ease, wit, and dexterity, of rhyme and metre which are the essentials of good light verse. The book, however, takes a higher rank than the mere possession of these qualities would warrant."

+ Ath 1913,2:450 O 25 250w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 250w

"This volume is a miracle; it is written by a modern woman and has not one morbid, sentimental line between cover and cover."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 450w

"Seldom has the very spirit of childhood been portrayed in words with such skill and tenderness as in 'A house in a wood' and 'The petals.'"

+ Cath World 99:242 My '14 600w

"So far as we know, it is Mrs. Eden's first book, and we have no hesitation in saying that it is the best first book produced in many a year. Mrs. Eden's child-poems have the understanding and tender whimsicality that make 'A child's garden of verse' a delight, and she writes of things spiritual with the devout artistry of Crashaw."

+ Lit D 47:1130 D 6 '13 770w

+ Nation 99:168 Ag 6 '14 230w

"Little book of pleasant verse." Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 19:319 Jl 19 '14 300w

"'Bread and circuses' shows high skill in two very different forms—humour and satire on the one hand, and a tender and subtle observation of childhood on the other."

+ Spec 112:sup676 Ap 25 '14 150w

"This little volume makes pleasant reading and interspersed among its lighter pieces are a number of sincere and deeper feeling, and now and then one containing pungent comment upon current affairs in English life."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 23 '14 700w

EDGINTON, HELEN MARION. Oh! James! il
 ° *$1.30 (2c) Little 14-15371

A man who made money faster than he could spend it, hampered with a wife who, constitutionally prudent and economical, refused to help him in spending it—that was James Bright. Now it was a favorite theory of James's that money should be spent—put into circulation. A woman, James held, should be a spender, a stimulator of trade, and since his wife could not or would not fulfil the duty, what more natural than that he should engage deputies. This he does when he establishes six extravagant and beautiful young women in homes of their own with servants, motor cars and check books at their command. Highly diverting is the record of the complications that followed.

"All these delicate situations are handled in a skilful manner that is highly entertaining."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 370w

"The whole is a kindly, humorous comment on the struggle between the sexes." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:107 Ag 16 '14 110w

"It is one of the most amusing books I have read in many and many a long day." J. L. Gilder

+ Ind 80:403 D 14 '14 200w

"An amusing story, told brightly and with much clever dialogue."

+ N Y Times 19:354 Ag 23 '14 400w

Reviewed by Joseph Mosher

Pub W 86:808 S 19 '14 400w

EDMUND, PEGGY, and WILLIAMS, HAROLD ° WORKMAN, comps. Toaster's handbook; with introd. by Mary Katharine Reely. *$1.25
 (1c) Wilson, H. W. 14-11352

A handbook of jokes, stories and quotations, designed as a help in time of need to the after-dinner orator. The stories, etc., are classified under subject headings which follow an alphabetical arrangement. The choice of subjects is catholic: one page discloses appropriate illustrative material on Ability, Abolition, Absent-mindedness and Accidents; another on Fees, Feet and Fighting; still another on Passwords, Patience and Patriotism. A system of cross references is used to call attention to kindred subjects in other parts of the volume.

"The volume also is valuable for general reading by anyone who likes a brief, humorous story, for these tales, while many are familiar, are wonderfully well selected from all sorts of sources, mainly humorous."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 26 '14 200w

"The collection has gotten us nicely over several unpromising after-dinner moments, and we commend it to others."

+ Bulletin of Bibliography 8:118 Ja '15 120w

"An excellent tonic for anemic speakers."

+ Ind 78:256 My 11 '14 24w

EDMUNDSON, REV. GEORGE. Church in ° Rome in the first century. *$2.50 Longmans 14-63

"This, the latest in the series of the Bampton lectures at Oxford, begun in 1780, is devoted to a critical 'examination of various controverted questions relating to the history, chronology, literature, and traditions' of the Church in Rome in the first century. A polemic interest has raised the question whether Peter ever visited Rome. That he did, and was the first pastor of the church there, is conclusively shown. . . . Both interesting and satisfying is the light here thrown upon Paul's faithful fellow-workers Aquilla and Priscilla."—Outlook

"Unfortunately his undisguised purpose has been not to follow the guiding of the earliest data but to show how by violent wrenching these data can be forced to fit into a preconceived scheme. In a Bampton lectures series such a method is particularly deplorable; an apologetic that represents faith as depending on a most precarious series of 'may have been's' is of all things most mistaken."

— Am J Theol 18:486 J1 '14 480w

"Mr. Edmundson has an intimate knowledge of early Christian literature, possesses a lucid style, and gives ample proof that he is endowed with critical ingenuity."

+ — Ath 1914,1:126 Ja 24 1650w

"While the student of early Church history will find nothing new in this volume, he will certainly appreciate the careful presentation of such abundant material and the evident fairness of the writer."

+ Cath World 99:828 S '14 350w

"There is much learning in evidence and not a few novel conjectures are made, but imagination and influence are given too loose rein when they speed toward traditional conclusions."

— + Ind 78:565 Je 29 '14 120w

"This work is at once industrious, erudite, and independent."

+ Nation 99:474 O 15 '14 430w

"The ample learning with which in important points the author supports the testimony of ancient tradition and maintains his challenge to opinions now widely received gives importance to his work."

+ Outlook 107:501 Je 27 '14 400w

EDWARDES, TICKNER. Honey-star. *$1.35
 ° Dutton

"The beekeeping industry in the south of England forms the centre around which this tale is woven. But elemental passions and primitive distrusts are the moving factors which make it a story about people and not at all about bees, although the humming of the hives is never forgotten for long. One of the characters arouses the suspicions of his neighbors because they know nothing about him or whence he came, and also because he uses modern scientific methods in his bee culture. So enmity and black looks are long his portion. A pretty English maid takes up the care of her dead father's beeyard, but love rather than rivalry is soon the order of the day between her and 'Mystery Laughton.'"—N Y Times

"Mr. Edwardes reproduces faithfully the talk of the Sussex country folk, but his other characters use somewhat stilted language, and the plot is trite and commonplace."

— + Ath 1913,1:188 F 15 40w

"A story, woven with a precision of touch and a glowing warmth of color which make the novel one of the most delightful of its class."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 18 '14 400w

"The opening chapters give promise of something a bit unusual, but with the entrance of sentiment, mediocrity slips in and stamps the book."

— Ind 78:291 My 18 '14 60w

"Much of its attractiveness is due to the delicate finish and suggestiveness of the style; take that away, and the unreality of plot and character at once become overemphasized."

+ — Nation 98:363 Ap 2 '14 300w

"It is altogether a pleasing tale, fragrant with the scent of the heather country whither they take the bees in August at the time of the passing of the 'honey-star,' full of the color of English village life and very human with its full store of passions and revenges and repentances."

+ N Y Times 19:76 F 15 '14 250w

EDWARDES, TICKNER. Tansy. *$1.35 Dutton
 °

"His novel resolves itself into a delightful eclogue of a sheep farmer's life, where we share the anxiety of the lambing season, the riotous hurry of the sheep-washing, the simple joys and sorrows of rough, kindly men and women" (Spec) "Any one who is a lover of the outdoors in its quiet, gentle phases, will enjoy the book, quite aside from its story, because of the very heart of nature which the author, without seeming to make any effort toward that end or even to be cherishing that purpose, sets beating in its pages." (N Y Times)

"Entertaining and, withal, informing novel."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup740 My 23 160w

+ Ind 80:105 O 19 '14 60w

"He does not indulge in much description of the formal sort, but his skill with words is such that his story is full of the brooding peace and the quiet charm of downs and country roads, of fields and hills. The characters are few, but they are drawn with a steady hand, from a clear full conception in the author's mind."

+ N Y Times 19:363 Ag 30 '14 320w

"The characterization is not above the average in these days of detailed and intimate writing. Neither is there, in the plot of Mr. Edwardes's novel, any great originality. It is, after all, his power of setting down what he sees that lifts him a little above the crowd of fiction-writers."

+ Spec 112:962 Je 6 '14 230w

EDWARDS, AGNES. Our common road. *$1 3
Houghton 13-23752

A series of familiar talks to the busy people who follow the everyday road of common life. "This universal highway is viewed in a four-fold aspect, as leading 'to the fountain of joy,' 'to the house of friendship,' 'to gray hills and green,' and 'to the land of reflection.' Under these headings the matter is grouped in subordinate sections, each with its appropriate caption." (Dial)

"The essays are sometimes reflective, sometimes didactic, occasionally playful, always clever and sensible."

+ A L A Bkl 10:220 F '14 *

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 28 '13 250w

"The style of the book is generally excellent, and it is a pleasure to commend it."

+ Dial 56:113 F 1 '14 280w

"They are short, shrewd in their practical wisdom, and have the note of sincerity."

+ N Y Times 19:137 Mr 22 '14 70w

+ Outlook 105:853 D 20 '13 60w

"Not profound, but essentially human and appealing."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:38 Ap '14 20w

EDWARDS, GEORGE WHARTON. Forest of Arden. il *$4.50 (12c) Stokes 14-19700

The setting of Shakespeare's "As you like it" described and pictured before the ravages of war disfigured its beauty ought to become a prized possession. Descriptions of quaint old towns between Luxemburg and Liège, notably Dinant, are interspersed with bits of legendary lore that restore the woody atmosphere and revive the pastoral simplicity of Rosalind's pretty romance. The illustrations, both colored and uncolored, have admirably caught the magic of the region. One in particular, showing Old Castle and Cathedral at Dinant is a charming bit of water-color art.

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

Bookm 40:418 D '14 180w

Dial 57:458 D 1 '14 150w

Ind 80:412 D 14 '14 80w

"A rather commonplace book of travel."

+ Nation 99:692 D 10 '14 70w

"Graceful and picturesque prose."

+ N Y Times 19:529 N 29 '14 120w

"No one can have journeyed southward from Liège towards Bouillon and the other resorts of the Ardennes without feeling the lack of a really good book on the region. Mr. Edwards does much to supply the need."

+ Outlook 108:900 D 16 '14 220w

EGAN, MAURICE FRANCIS. Ivy hedge. *$1.35
1 (1½c) Benziger 14-20502

The story has to do chiefly with the social and industrial problems of a small New Jersey city, a suburb of New York. It opens with the breaking of the engagement between George Trevanion and Mary Coyne when the death of Mary's father leaves her responsible for her family. Embittered by the apparent injustice of the world, Trevanion interests himself in socialism and becomes a socialist leader. He runs for mayor, is elected, and marries the daughter of the town's rich man, Morton the "Can King." Mary, on the other hand, finds solace in religion and joins the Catholic church. The whole trend of the story tends to the conclusion that without religion a man or woman is rudderless, and that the Catholic faith offers the best surety of contentment and inward satisfaction.

"The characters in the novel are well drawn, but a half dozen of them might easily be omitted for the better development of the main story."

+ Cath World 100:685 F '15 140w

"The book is written frankly from the Catholic standpoint, but the author has evidently endeavored to treat the religious factors of Catholicism, Protestantism, and Judaism, all of which enter into the story, with fairness and truth. A crowd of characters of the most varied types fills the book, many of them striking and unusual and nearly all showing vitality. Some of them have pungent humor."

+ N Y Times 20:6 Ja 3 '15 250w

EGGLESTON, JOSEPH DUPUY, and BRUÈRE, ROBERT WALTER. Work of the rural school. il $1 (1c) Harper 13-21859

One of the authors of this book is president of an agricultural college, the other is a trained social investigator and writer on sociological subjects. They attempt an interpretation of the new movement in rural education that advances the slogan, "We must hitch education up with life." Their chapters are entitled: The community survey; The health of the children; School government and the course of study; The widening outlook of the rural school; Coöperative demonstration work; Demonstration work through the rural school; The school plant; Some neglected factors in school equipment; Consolidation and transportation; The teacher who is the citizen-maker; First aid to the citizen-maker; The opportunity of the county superintendent; The state superintendent.

"So far as a general treatise can be, this is a strong, up-to-date statement of facts as they exist today."

+ A L A Bkl 10:137 D '13 *

"It is worthy the attention of all who are interested in education, and especially recommended to any community with a rural school problem on its hands."

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 10 '13 170w

"In this comprehensive and constructive book various phases of the building-up, not only of the rural school, but of the rural community at large, are set forth in discriminating fashion."

+ Nation 98:461 Ap 23 '14 430w

N Y Times 18:699 N 30 '13 270w

"The book is a memorable contribution, not merely to educational literature, but most of all to the constructive statesmanship of our period."

+ R of Rs 48:759 D '13 170w

EKBLAW, KARL JOHN THEODORE. Farm structures. il *$1.75 Macmillan 14-4196

A technical handbook covering the ground of building material, methods of construction, heating, ventilating, water supply, sewage disposal, etc., with reference mainly to large-scale farming.

A L A Bkl 10:388 Je '14

+ Engin N 72:1049 N 19 '14 250w

"As a text book for the advanced farmer, its directness, variety of information, and assurance, resulting from long scientific experiment, make it a valuable asset."

+ Ind 78:212 My 4 '14 80w

"Such books are of greater importance to the man who is thinking of going back to the land than libraries of sentiment." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 98:459 Ap 23 '14 120w

"This book will be principally of value to students and professional farm managers. It will be of assistance and a source of much interest to town and city people who are making a practical study of the possibilities of farm life for themselves on either a large or a small scale."

EKBLAW, KARL J: T.—Continued.

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 15 '14 180w

ELBOURNE, EDWARD T. Factory administration and accounts; with contributions on "The general problem of industrial work design, by Andrew Home-Morton; and Financial accounts, by John Maughling. il *$7.50 Longmans A14-1568

"Americans who employ large forces in their productive works and in their counting rooms will find it profitable to read with some care this English work in which the author submits facts and conclusions relating to the matter of industrial efficiency. Mr. Elbourne has had large experience in English establishments that has qualified him to write as an expert, having served as Works accountant to Vickers, sons & Maxim, limited, and as Departmental works manager to the Birmingham small arms company, limited. His book contains a large number of tables and specimen forms for managers, engineers, and accountants." (N Y Times) "The book is divided into six sections entitled respectively The general problem of industrial works design, General administration, Works administration, Works accounts, Routine forms and Financial accounts." (Indust Engin)

"The book is well arranged to facilitate quick reference to any desired topic, and there is an exceptionally complete index. All things considered, this book will have to be classed as a luxury rather than a necessity in this hemisphere, but those who can easily afford it to use for reference only will doubtless get their money's worth." R. R. Potter

+ Engin N 72:1284 D 24 '14 680w

"An exceedingly pretentious volume which conceals considerably good material under a deluge of language. There is no doubt but what the various authors are masters of their respective subjects, but it is doubtful whether they have produced a work which will be of great service to American practice on account of the different tendencies of manufacturing in this country and Great Britain. The make-up of the book is disappointing."

+ — — Indust Engin 14:344 Ag '14 550w

N Y Times 19:419 O 4 '14 150w

ELDER, DAVID PAUL. Old Spanish missions of California. il *$3.50 (10c) Elder 13-22378

This handsome volume, bound in gray boards, printed on heavy gray paper, with mounted illustrations, is a memorial to the old mission days. Altho the author disclaims any original research in the preparation of the book, he supplies a very satisfactory descriptive text to accompany the illustrations and the quotations from other writers of both the early and the recent days.

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 38:394 D '13 140w

"Although the author makes no claim to personal research, but has taken his facts from the various writers on the missions, he tells the story in a very simple, appealing way, as one who delights in heroism, and as one who sees the beauty and romance of these historical landmarks."

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 13 '13 150w

"The book is artistic in design, and a pleasing contribution to the literature that has grown up about these picturesque old mission houses."

+ Dial 55:534 D 16 '13 150w

Reviewed by C. E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:511 D 11 '13 50w

+ Nation 97:569 D 11 '13 100w

"A very interesting and artistic book, at least as regards the pictures and the get up."

+ N Y Sun p4 N 8 '13 150w

"Both as literature and art it is a fine production."

+ N Y Times 18:701 N 30 '13 140w

Outlook 105:860 D 20 '13 70w

School Arts Magazine 13:322 D '13 60w

ELIAS, EDITH L. In Georgian times. il *$1.25 (1½c) Little A15-24

Following the plan used in two earlier volumes, "In Tudor times" and "In Stuart times," the author gives short biographical sketches of representative men of the period of which she treats. The kingship is represented by the four Georges; The state by Robert Walpole, the two Pitts, Charles James Fox, Edmund Burke, and others; The army and navy by General Wolfe, Lord Clive, Lord Nelson and the Duke of Wellington; Travel and invention by Captain James Cook, Mungo Park, James Watt, and others; Religion and philanthropy by Bishop Berkeley, John Wesley, John Howard and William Wilberforce; Painting and the fine arts by Hogarth and Sir Joshua Reynolds.

"The subjects of these studies have been well chosen, but the author's anxiety not to exclude any important character has led to undue compression."

+ — Ath 1912,2:552 N 9 24w

ELIOT, CHARLES WILLIAM. Tendency to the concrete and practical in modern education. (Riverside educational monographs) *35c (3c) Houghton 14-875

Two addresses delivered by Dr. Eliot after his return from the Far East make up the contents of this book. The stagnation of oriental life, he says, is due to the failure of oriental education, and this educational failure results from the prevalence of deductive methods. From a like stagnation we are to be saved in our own country by the further development of inductive or scientific methods of study.

A L A Bkl 10:304 Ap '14

Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 130w

Nation 98:542 My 7 '14 270w

ELIOT, THOMAS DAWES. Juvenile court and the community. (American social progress ser.) *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 14-20260

An illuminating discussion of the juvenile court in its relations to other social institutions, as a problem of social economy. It places the juvenile court movement in a clear perspective for communities launching upon such work. Chapters: Stages in the juvenile court movement; The present status of juvenile courts; Politics versus the juvenile court; The police and the juvenile court; The place of volunteer probation; Coöperation; Dependency jurisdiction of the juvenile court; Placing-out by juvenile courts; The diagnosing clinic; The place of the juvenile court in American criminology; The field of special education; A model criminology; When is a juvenile court not a juvenile court? The present task of the juvenile court; The juvenile court as community index.

Bib World 44:430 D '14 150w

J Pol Econ 23:95 Ja '15 530w

ELLIOT, FRANCES MINTO (MRS. GILBERT ELLIOT). Old court life in Spain. 2v il *$5 (2½c) Putnam

An anecdotal history of Spain from the sixth century to the sixteenth, with the Spanish court for a background. The historical figures are touched into life by the author's device of casting her anecdotes largely in dialog form. Great enthusiasm which results in strong highlights plentifully abounds, and accounts, also, for the atmospheric quality discovered here and there. The illustrations are numerous and unusually good.

"The writer adopts an almost voluptuously romantic style. She has simply taken the most striking figures and incidents out of old Spanish history, and dresses them in fustian."

+ — Nation 99:527 O 29 '14 400w

Spec 114:120 Ja 23 '15 80w

"It is what may be called a very 'popular' treatment of Spanish romance, but of its sort it is well and appropriately done and appears to be the result of much first-hand study of Spanish history."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 3 '14 300w

ELLIOTT, EDWARD CHARLES. City school supervision. (School efficiency ser.) il $1.25 (1½c) World bk. co. 14-5791

A constructive study applied to New York city. It contains Professor Elliott's contribution to the report submitted by Paul H. Hanus to the Committee on school inquiry of the Board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York. It is an analysis of the larger features of the problem of public school supervision in the city of New York, together with the accompanying arguments concerning reorganization. Two of the writer's important recommendations are, (1) that a division or department of investigation and appraisal be established as an integral part of school control; and (2) that steps be taken to establish a supervisory council consisting of supervising officers and members of the teaching staff.

"The suggestions and criticisms are interesting enough to New Yorkers but have few attractions for those readers who live in other cities."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 My 23 '14 70w

ELLIS, EDITH. Mary Jane's pa: a play in three acts. (Modern drama ser.) *$1 (4c) Kennerley 14-19642

A play that has had a long and popular run on the American stage. Its story is a variation of the Rip Van Winkle theme: a good-for-nothing father returns to his family after an absence of eleven years and is taken into the household as a cook; the sense of fatherhood is awakened in him by contact with his little daughter Mary Jane, and his manhood is aroused by his wife's need of him in an hour of crisis. Mr. Björkman in his introduction attributes the play's success to its strikingly American atmosphere, saying, "Very few plays equal its faithful portrayal of life in a small American community," and to the appealing quality in the character of Hiram Perkins, the husband and father.

+ N Y Times 19:499 N 15 '14 250w

"The more of this type we get the better, provided they are done with the sympathetic understanding and the dramatic skill contained here."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 8 '14 280w

ELLIS, HAVELOCK. Impressions and comments. $1.50 Houghton (Eng ed 14-22138)

"One cannot describe these compositions technically. The author modestly speaks of them as 'random leaves,' and puts them forth as unpretentious jottings in an irregular diary covering a period of eighteen months. They are not exactly 'pensées,' although one often thinks of Joubert. They could hardly be defined as essays, although one is frequently reminded of Lamb and Hazlitt and Montaigne and other beloved masters of that literary form. Occasionally there is an almost disturbing intimacy of self-revelation that suggests the inimitable Pepys. . . . As to the range and diversity of the subjects treated we may introduce the following successions to be found under three letters of the index: Browning, Bryan, Buddha, and Burgundy; Ogive, Olives, and Ovid; Vegetarianism, Velasquez, and Verlaine."—Dial

"Mr. Havelock Ellis's 'Impressions and comments' contain many fine and arresting thoughts finely expressed. Mr. Ellis occasionally yields to the temptation which most easily besets clever writers—the temptation to be smart."

+ — Ath 1914,2:449 O 31 870w

"Enjoyable volume." Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:564 Ja '15 150w

"Mr. Ellis's volume will be read with profit and pleasure and reread with pleasure and profit." E. F. El.

+ Boston Transcript p25 S 30 '14 850w

"We have spoken of the volume lightly as a hamper, and we may continue the figure by saying that inevitably different palates will be differently affected. All who partake may find toothsome and wholesome morsels; but many will make a wry face at certain mouthfuls and call for more orthodox fare." F. B. R. Hellems

+ — Dial 57:386 N 16 '14 1450w

Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 30w

"A few, a very few, of his papers are trivial. Most of his little commentaries, however, leave one with a regret that they end so soon, especially those on literary subjects." F. M. Colby

+ — No Am 200:938 D '14 2400w

"They reflect, in direct, vigorous expression, wide sympathies and logical thought."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 30w

ELLIS, JOHN BRECKENRIDGE. Lahoma. il 1 *$1.25 (1½c) Bobbs 13-25401

Her name, Lahoma, was short for Oklahoma, the state whose magic promise had drawn her mother and stepfather across the prairies. Left homeless by the death of her mother and the cowardly desertion of her stepfather, the little girl is taken in hand by a mountain outlaw, Brick Willock, who with the aid of an old trapper-hermit who knows something of the world and who possesses five of its precious books, brings her up. The only other people she knows in the period of her idyllic childhood are a settler's wife and young Wilfred Compton, who happens by chance into the mountain retreat. Her adventure out into the world, her meeting with her stepfather, her dramatic return to the mountains to save Brick Willock's life are events of the latter half of the story.

"Old Oklahoma, the scene of many a stirring adventure, has figured in few more entertaining stories than this. Most of the characters are of the types which figure in the lurid tales of the old West; but they are well drawn and without the customary exaggeration."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 320w

"The bits of history of the settlement of Oklahoma thrown in for local color are the best portion of this crude production."

+ — N Y Sun p4 D 6 '13 150w

ELLIS, JOHN BRECKENRIDGE. Woodneys: an American family. il $1 (3½c) Devin-Adair 14-11241

The Woodneys are a family of the cheerful happy-go-lucky sort who laugh in the face of adversity and make an asset of their poverty by coining family jokes about it. To them comes a worldly cousin who has been married and divorced since they last saw her, and who, in attempting to help them out of their difficulties finds a happy solution to her own problem. Mrs. Woodney has written a novel,—in which all the family claim joint-authorship—and her manner of accepting adverse reviews is one of the most amusing things in the story.

"The book, although not the first work of its author, is crude. For the indiscriminatingly sentimental, there will be some pleasure in the reunion of the divorced couple, which, like the rest of the story, is most artificially managed."

— Nation 99:225 Ag 20 '14 230w

"The book is just a little trifle of a story, but it has a savor that is both sweet and pungent."

+ N Y Times 19:291 Je 28 '14 280w

ELY, RICHARD THEODORE. Property and contract in their relations to the distribution of wealth. 2v *$4 (2½c) Macmillan 14-18677

Professor Ely's two volume work is an outgrowth of lectures delivered to classes at the University of Wisconsin during the past twenty years. Volume 1 is given up to an Introduction which defines and describes distribution, considers the forces in distribution, and the place of distribution in a system of economics, and to a discussion of the nature of Property, public and private. Volume 2 completes the discussion of Property and takes up: Contract and its conditions; Vested interests; and Personal conditions. An appendix contains a discussion of Production, present and future, by W. I. King,

ELY, RICHARD THEODORE—Continued. instructor in statistics at the University of Wisconsin, and a List of cases illustrating the attitude of the courts toward property and contract rights, prepared by Samuel P. Orth of Cornell. The work is provided with a List of authors and works cited and with an index.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 20 '15 320w

"A good book, deserving the attention of those of that way of thinking and of others as well."

+ N Y Times 19:549 D 6 '14 1700w

"It is to be hoped that Professor Ely's book will be very generally read by lawyers and judges, and that it will stimulate an interest in the work of Professor Pound and others in this field."

+ R of Rs 51:114 Ja '15 1600w

EMBURY, AYMAR, II. Country houses; sel. and ed. by H: H. Saylor. il *$3 Doubleday 14-21135

"Recognition of the need for trained knowledge in the design of a house is a concomitant of the higher stages of civilization." So says the editor of this book of fascinating places for moderate priced country homes. It is not merely a collection of pictures and plans, or a book of sample designs, but a "record of conditions met and fulfilled, of difficulties ingeniously overcome, of architectural embellishment rationally developed from the structure itself, of personality expressed in terms of stone and wood and plaster." Its aim is to help us to think architecturally.

"Still young in years, Mr. Embury has won wide recognition for his skill and taste in domestic architecture. The large, clean-cut half-tones are a delight to the eye."

+ Dial 57:508 D 16 '14 160w

EMBURY, AYMAR, II. Early American churches. il *$2.80 (6c) Doubleday 14-19297

An interesting volume that aims to rescue from oblivion every church building in America of "respectable antiquity, which either possesses architectural interest or historical traditions of importance." Photographs of one hundred and two churches are scattered thru the text which gives brief historical sketches of the structures. Their importance architecturally and historically is related carefully to the forces of the formative period in America, making the work one of distinct value.

"Undertaken primarily for brother-architects, it places at their disposal the richest collection of photographs of colonial churches yet assembled. The text—with architect, antiquarian, and general reader all in view—lacks fixity of purpose and uniformity of method. In his concluding summary of development, as in some of the interpretations of single buildings, the author is led astray by current misconceptions of architectural history and apparent lack of knowledge of earlier discussion."

+ — — Dial 58:53 Ja 16 '15 650w

"The name of the writer and the cherished memories and traditions which in this collection of illustrations and data are offered to the reader, would seem sufficient to ensure this book a secure position. There is much to interest the general reader."

+ Int Studio 54:sup62 D '14 250w

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 200w

+ N Y Times 19:589 D 27 '14 120w

"It is quite as valuable to the student of ecclesiastical history as it is to the student of architecture."

+ Outlook 109:295 F 3 '15 80w

"Mr. Embury has sought out all the facts about the buildings treated which seem likely to interest the historical student as well as the architect."

+ R of Rs 50:758 D '14 200w

EMERSON, MABEL IRENE. Evolution of the educational ideal. (Riverside textbooks in education) *$1 (3c) Houghton 14-3189

"The tremendous strides that have been made in education since the days of the Greeks and the Romans are explained in this new history. The author has contented herself with short descriptions of the work of the educational reformers and of the influences which they have exerted on academic progress." (Boston Transcript) Some of the subjects dealt with are: Christianity and scholasticism; Pestalozzi, and the kindergarten; Influence of woman on education; Education and the state; The American common school; The life-career ideal.

A L A Bkl 11:55 O '14

"The volume is, in essence, a text book for students of education, but it offers interesting reading for anyone at all concerned with its subject."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 28 '14 70w

"Emerson's book is perhaps the most attenuated summary of a long period that we have. The book presents a striking contrast to the admirable series of 'Riverside educational monographs' published by the same firm, in each of which we find an intensive and thorough treatment of one or a few topics. In general, progress in textbook construction has been in the direction of such intensive studies and away from the encyclopedic and superficial discussion of a wide range of topics." S. C. P.

— School R 22:419 Je '14 300w

EMERSON, RALPH WALDO. Journals; with annotations; ed by E: W. Emerson and Waldo E. Forbes. 10v v 9 and 10 il ea *$1.75 Houghton (9-29980)

In the ninth volume of Emerson's Journals "may be found notes, memoranda and reflections upon a wide range of subjects. Comprising as they do records of the years between 1856 and 1863 they naturally have much to do with political matters and the critical affairs of the nation. But as might be expected, they are rather the deeply contemplative musings of the philosopher than the vigorously aggressive proclamations of the partisan." (Boston Transcript) Volume 10 completes the work and contains the index for the whole set. "This last volume contains entries from 1864-1876—for days and weeks the journals were neglected. The last five years of silence and forgetfulness are hinted at in an editorial note. The decline, as one may infer it from these last journals, had little that was painful in it, was faced with a brave and conscious resignation, and enlivened by intervals of the old lucidity. On the whole, the writing in this volume is that of a tired old man, but of one infinitely curious and wise." (Nation)

A L A Bkl 10:266 Mr '14 (Review of v 9)

A L A Bkl 10:389 Je '14 (Review of v 10)

"Excellent and stimulating reading this, in spite of its scrappiness, or perhaps for that very reason." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 3 '14 500w (Review of v 9)

+ Boston Transcript p25 Ap 1 '14 650w (Review of v 10)

"The editing, throughout, though showing no remarkable scholarship or acumen, has been done in an intelligent and sympathetic manner that will be grateful to those who recall the crude mutilation of Hawthorne's literary remains."

+ Dial 57:108 Ag 16 '14 900w (Review of v 10)

"The whole series casts much new light upon Emerson's genius and should enhance his greatness."

+ Nation 98:14 Ja 1 '14 380w (Review of v 9)

"This volume closes the series worthily."

+ Nation 98:668 Je 4 '14 450w (Review of v 10)

"The ten stout volumes are essential to a full realization of Emerson's character." Bliss Perry

+ Nation 99:371 S 24 '14 3700w (Review of v 1-10)

Figures in parentheses following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"Not all these pages are filled with baffled questionings; there is plenty of shrewd and kindly humor, plenty of sound criticism, and vivid character sketching." Joyce Kilmer
 + N Y Times 19:181 Ap 12 '14 1250w
 (Review of v 9 and 10)

"Great thoughts and shrewd ones are on intimate terms in the Journals." H. W. Mable
 + Outlook 106:418 F 21 '14 1950w (Review of v 9)

EMERY, HENRY CROSBY. Politician, party, and people. *$1.25 (3½c) Yale univ. press
 13-21913

The five chapters of this book were first delivered as lectures in the Page lecture series before the senior class of the Sheffield scientific school. They are concerned with some of the ethical problems of politics, and are entitled: The voter and the facts; The voter and the party; The voter and his representative; The representative and his constituency; The representative and his party.

"A fair minded, comprehensive discussion of party government."

+ A L A Bkl 10:220 F '14

"The book contains much sound advice of a popular character for those who wish to inform themselves as to their political duties." J. M. Mathews

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:309 My '14 320w

"The essays are happily devoid of ultra-idealism and replete with the comment and knowledge of one intimate with the law-creating and the the actual law-making and enforcing agencies of the day."

+ Ann Am Acad 53:310 My '14 120w

"The book is fair-minded throughout."

+ Ath 1913,2:624 N 29 400w

+ J Pol Econ 22:506 My '14 380w

"We greatly fear that the book will be misunderstood by a good many of those who may happen to read it. Incidentally, the text, which preserves the familiar form of the lecture, ought to have been revised. There are numerous inelegancies, and on pages 42 and 58 are sentences that will not parse."

— Nation 97:569 D 11 '13 300w

EMERY, LUCILIUS ALONZO. Concerning justice. (Storrs lectures) *$1.35 (4c) Yale univ. press 14-18378

A series of addresses delivered as the Storrs lectures for 1914 before the law school of Yale university. The author, a former chief justice of the Supreme court of Maine, considers first such abstract matters as the nature of justice, the problem of rights, and the meaning of freedom, and then makes a plea for the maintenance of an independent judiciary.

"The argument is couched in an attractive literary style, and illustrated by a wide range of historical citations. The book is small and unpretentious, but it is excellent reading in these days of untried reformatory schemes."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 13 '15 220w

Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 30w

N Y Times 19:449 O 18 '14 60w

EMPRESS Frederick; a memoir. il *$2.50 (2½c) Dodd 13-25363

A biography of Queen Victoria's eldest daughter, who became Empress of Germany. "Your place is that of your husband's wife and of your mother's daughter," wrote her father, the Prince consort, shortly after her marriage; yet she was to be known to history by a still more distinguished relationship, that of mother to her son. And since the autocratic William of Germany is said to be his mother's son, this intimate portrayal of her life should prove something of a key to his own character. The anonymous author writes sympathetically and with a marked reverence for the tradition that makes of the Victorian household the ideal home.

"Well written, competent, wholly sympathetic biography."

+ A L A Bkl 10:349 My '14

"This well-written and well-informed book deserves to find its public."

+ Ath 1913,2:346 O 4 180w

"As no biography of the Empress has previously appeared, this memoir, written in an authoritative and convincing style, will surely be warmly received."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ap 8 '14 450w

+ Dial 56:428 My 16 '14 410w

+ Ind 78:175 Ap 27 '14 60w

+ Lit D 49:897 N 7 '14 230w

"The volume is, on the whole, readable and, being compiled from good sources, is not without a certain value."

+ Nation 98:760 Je 25 '14 320w

+ Outlook 107:680 Jl 18 '14 480w

"This volume is discriminatingly and discreetly written."

+ R of Rs 49:631 My '14 330w

"An impartial sketch somewhat on the lines of Sir Sidney Lee's admirable lives of Queen Victoria and King Edward is worth publication, even though it cannot pretend to the accuracy and particular information of those admirable productions."

+ Sat R 116:527 O 25 '13 1450w

"It is not a biography with the sign-manual of greatness, but it is thoroughly competent and workmanlike, and is, we believe, a perfectly just appreciation of the English Princess whom Queen Victoria called her 'dear persecuted daughter.'"

+ Spec 111:568 O 11 '13 140w

Springfield Republican p5 My 21 '14 570w

ENGLAND, GEORGE ALLAN. Darkness and dawn. il $1.35 (½c) Small 14-3972

Allen Stern, engineer, and Beatrice Kendrick, once his stenographer, wake up in his office in the Metropolitan tower to find that the city they have once known is a crumbling ruin in a forest of oak and pine; that wild animals and a strange race of savages, only half human, overrun Manhattan island; that they two are the only surviving members of their kind. The strange catastrophe that overwhelmed the earth in the year 1920 had put them to sleep, and they have awakened only after many centuries. Then begins a series of perilous and thrilling adventures, and with the finding of a race of devolved Americans whom they teach and inspire, the upbuilding of a new civilization in which an aristocracy of idleness is unknown, where there is no slavery, where mankind is free.

— Bookm 39:341 My '14 400w

"Tremendous! Thrilling! Bewildering! Sensational! Adjectives such as these, with their accompanying exclamation points, give but a meagre idea of 'Darkness and dawn.' It is a reversion to the type of sensational novel that has never lost its hold, and that will always be popular even in these days of Hewlett and Galsworthy, of Ibsen and Sudermann, of Romain Rolland and Mrs. Wharton."

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 330w

Reviewed by W. M. Payne

— Dial 56:425 My 16 '14 500w

"Underneath its always entertaining pages runs a serious idea which can hardly fail to impress even the frivolous reader. It is a pity that the author did not keep his hero free from the melodramatic taint which sometimes leads him to do more or less ranting and mouthing. Less of tensivity, sometimes almost hysteria, in the style would have given the narrative a stronger and more impressive feeling of reality. Nevertheless, if the reader but take the reins off his imagination, it is an appealing and absorbing story."

+ N Y Times 19:59 F 8 '14 800w

"People who like the Rider Haggard sort of yarn will find it hard to keep away from this

ENGLAND, GEORGE ALLAN—Continued. tale; and people who don't like it, if they start this one, will find it almighty hard to stop."

Justus Nye
+ Pub W 85:1060 Mr 21 '14 470w

ENOCK, C. REGINALD. Ecuador. il *$3 Scribner (Eng ed 14-9259)

"This, the latest volume [the eleventh] in the South American series, does not fall below the level of its predecessors, which have now covered almost the whole subject of Latin America. Mr. Reginald Enock, who has already written the volumes on Peru and Mexico, writes from personal knowledge of Ecuador, a country about which less is known than most of its neighbours. Parts are still almost unexplored, and the greater part is undeveloped, or in a very rudimentary stage of development, but it offers considerable opportunities to investors who care to risk their enterprise under an unstable government. Ecuador has seen as many, or more, revolutions than most South American republics, and its financial history is as chequered as its politics."—Sat R

+ A L A Bkl 11:72 O '14

"The book is too closely packed with information to afford light reading, and for reference its index is inadequate."

+ Ath 1914,2:171 Ag 8 1000w

"A complete and obviously unprejudiced account of all phases of the history of the country, a valuable and interesting work well written and well illustrated." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 29 '14 1150w

"In this volume Mr. Enock covers with his usual thoroughness antiquities and modern opportunities, climate, natural history and people."

+ Ind 78:325 My 25 '14 250w

"It would be ungracious to criticise too harshly the work of a compiler who so obviously depends for his information on his own explorations, his own books, and the ever-useful encyclopædia, particularly as he has taken the trouble to collect a mass of information not readily accessible. Although Mr. Enock can make no pretence of being an authority on Ecuador, his latest book is better than some of his earlier productions."

+ Nation 98:641 My 28 '14 320w

"It would be difficult to think of any item of interest concerning the country or its people which Mr. Enock has not put into his very complete, comprehensive, and painstaking volume."

+ N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 130w

+ Outlook 107:943 Ag 15 '14 500w

"Mr. Enock handles the subject with that breadth and sympathy of view that characterizes the cultured, traveled Englishman."

+ R of Rs 50:115 Jl '14 250w

"Mr. Enock does not exaggerate in any way, but tells a plain tale of the country's past, present and probable future."

+ Sat R 117:511 Ap 18 '14 140w

"A comprehensive account of the Republic of Ecuador, on which there has hitherto been no adequate English book."

+ Spec 112:617 Ap 11 '14 60w

"Mr. Enock's chapters on the resources, history, people and wonders of Ecuador are satisfactorily written and indicate the author's thorough grasp of his subject. For those who want a more than superficial knowledge of the country it offers excellent reading."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 25 '14 820w

ENRIQUES, FEDERIGO. Problems of science;
tr. by Katharine Royce. *$2.50 (1½c) Open
ct. 14-5045

This is a translation of an Italian work published in 1906. The author is Professor of projective and descriptive geometry in the University of Bologna and, as Dr. Royce says in his introduction, he approaches his problem "with the training of the mathematician and the logician." The book, Dr. Royce says, "is by far the most thorough and synthetic treatment of the problems of scientific methodology which belongs to recent years,—with the sole exception of the treatment which forms part of the first two volumes of Merz's 'History of thought in the nineteenth century.' And he points out that the book comes at an opportune time when enthusiasm for "anti-intellectualism" makes some emphasis on the "older types of scientific orthodoxy" necessary. The contents of the work follows: Introduction; Facts and theories; The problems of logic; Geometry; Mechanics; The extension of mechanics.

"The book is written in a very attractive style, and presents some of the most difficult problems in a way that the unprofessional reader can understand. It is worthy of being translated into English, and worthy of this excellent translation."

+ Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '14 370w

"The work before us is perhaps the most considerable contribution to the discussion since Mill. Apart from the difficulties inherent in the subject, the author's style, his disconnected paragraphs (reminding one somewhat of a syllabus), his abrupt transitions, his too confident assumption of detailed knowledge on the part of his reader, not to speak of a certain trace of the mathematician's lingo, to be expected doubtless from a descriptive geometer, all combine to make the work difficult reading."

+ Nation 99:287 S 3 '14 2500w

N Y Times 19:336 Ag 2 '14 140w

"We know of no other work that gives so keen a sense of the unity of all branches of science. The section headings are too numerous, breaking the continuity of the reader's attention; and there are some obscure sentences and paragraphs. These are external faults and are trivial in relation to the inner excellencies of the work." C. J. Keyser

+ Science n s 40:346 S 4 '14 3350w

ERSKINE, MRS. PAYNE. Eye of dread. il
*$1.35 (1c) Little 13-22282

It is the eye of conscience that haunts the two young men of this story, cousins and friends, and lovers of the same woman. It tortures one of them thru lonely days and nights on a western prairie, and follows the other thru the triumphs of a successful artistic career in Paris. And it brings them back in the end to the little Wisconsin village where they had lived as boys, to face one another and to learn that there had been no crime; for each had believed himself guilty of the other's death.

"The complicated plot is well worked out with some good characterization."

+ A L A Bkl 10:155 D '13

ESCOTT, THOMAS HAY SWEET. Club-makers and club-members. il *$3 Eaton-Ives-Sturgis-Walton

"Heroes of London social and artistic life from John Lydgate to Lord Rosebery, picturesque assemblies of kindred spirits from the Mermaid to the Athenæum, are described by Mr. Escott. He begins with 'The clubman in the making,' noting the fact that, although classical Athens and Rome had no clubhouses, the presage of a club system is discoverable there in their dining societies, Themistocles appearing especially as the earliest personal product of club life. Therefrom the history of the club may be traced through the centuries and the changing conditions of life to the present day, Mr. Escott finding that nowhere else than in London has it had so varied and entertaining a career."—Boston Transcript

"In his discursive way Mr. Escott writes interestingly."

+ Ath 1914,1:404 Mr 21 1150w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p9 Ja 24 '14 280w

Boston Transcript p23 Je 17 '14 700w

"A thoroughly companionable volume." G. H. S.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Jl 1 '14 1350w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Can we still be Christians? tr. by Lucy Judge Gibson. *$1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-6267

The substance of Dr. Eucken's essay can best be summed up by quoting his final answer to the question of the title: "We not only can but must be Christians,—only however, on the one condition that Christianity be recognized as a progressive historic movement still in the making, that it is to be shaken free from the numbing influence of ecclesiasticism and placed upon a broader foundation. Thus here lies the task of our time and the hope of the future."

"Though this book is somewhat of a repetition of the author's other works, it is clearer and more lucidly written for the average reader."

+ A L A Bkl 11:6 S '14

+ — Boston Transcript p6 S 5 '14 570w

"Professor Eucken has not offered us anything really new; he has merely set forth the existing situation in clear and unmistakable language, calling us to sift the wheat from the chaff, sow it in the fertile fields of our minds, and look forward to a golden harvest." T. D. A. Cockrell

+ Dial 57:78 Ag 1 '14 1100w

"The book has been translated with such a combination of dignity, lucidity, and ease that the reading of it should be a pleasure to all." Meredith Davies

+ Hibbert J 13:211 O '14 1700w

Nation 98:759 Je 25 '14 290w

Outlook 107:318 Je 6 '14 200w

R of Rs 49:624 My '14 110w

"Prof. Eucken's writings is always kindly and humane, his criticisms of current tendencies clear-sighted and vigorous, and his ethical enthusiasm deep and fruitful. There is wisdom, some of it of an aphoristic turn, on every page. If the book is less valuable in a metaphysical sense than Prof. Royce's, because Eucken does not attempt to set forth the deep truth in most Christian doctrines, it is still a significant work in that its author, a philosopher, toward the end of a long intellectual career, turns to Christianity as the safest guardian of the world's store of spirituality."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 23 '14 1200w

Reviewed by D. C. Macintosh

Yale R n s 4:431 Ja '15 300w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Collected essays; ed. and tr. by Meyrick Booth. il *$4 Scribner 14-11201

"The nineteen essays in this volume are upon widely different subjects, and view them from the German standpoint. The problems treated are of universal interest, and the personalities contemplated belong to the literature of mankind. The inner connection that unifies the whole is the central principle of Eucken's philosophy—namely; an absolute spiritual life as the ultimate basis of all reality."—Outlook

"They are rather more academic and more difficult to read than his longer treatises and should be kept till the last. Only large libraries will need them."

+ A L A Bkl 11:50 O '14

"Prof. Eucken's 'Collected essays,' strike us as somewhat miscellaneous. It cannot be pretended that they are lively reading."

+ — Ath 1914,2:303 S 26 500w

Boston Transcript p7 Ag 29 '14 530w

Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 30w

"The collected essays are for the most part a monotonous, yet melodious, reiteration of the theme repeated in all of the eight or ten works that have appeared in English translation in the last two or three years."

+ Nation 99:502 O 22 '14 140w

Outlook 108:53 S 2 '14 110w

"Throughout the volume he is more difficult to read than in his other books; and, as we have said, the other books range first in the line of approach; but to those who know their Eucken there are admirable things to be found in this volume."

+ Sat R 118:203 Ag 15 '14 1050w

Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 730w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Ethics and modern thought; tr. from the German manuscript by Margaret von Seydewitz *$1 Putnam 13-24810

In this volume the author "has gathered the lectures given last year at New York university, lectures that turn upon the question of morality as a substitute in the present day for a more intimate spiritual life." (N Y Times) "These lectures, six in number, consider: 'The ethical problem in the present time,' 'The ethical principle,' 'A defense of the ethical principle,' 'Evolution of the ethical principle,' 'Morality and religion,' and 'The present status of morality.'" (R of Rs)

Reviewed by G. B. Smith

+ Am J Theol 18:310 Ap '14 450w

"A penetrating analysis of the ethical principle and of the modern attitude toward morality."

+ A L A Bkl 10:266 Mr '14

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 21 '14 620w

+ — Nation 98:706 Mr 19 '14 120w

Reviewed by J. B. Rittenhouse

N Y Times 18:717 D 7 '13 650w

Outlook 107:501 Je 27 '14 270w

R of Rs 49:123 Ja '14 80w

EUCKEN, RUDOLF CHRISTOF. Knowledge and life; tr. by W. Tudor Jones. (Crown theological lib.) *$1.50 Putnam 14-3111

This is "an English rendering of what is in substance Professor Eucken's introduction to his theory of knowledge." (Educ R) "For those who have not yet made the acquaintance of Eucken, 'Knowledge and life' will be a stimulating preface. For Eucken has a peculiar appeal, which consists wholly in his permeating, penetrating, thoroughly sound vigor. . . . His message is one which awakes an answering note in every modern organism, a message which calls for the spiritual need of the individual." (N Y Times)

+ A L A Bkl 10:350 My '14

"The work has all of the mental vigor and prophetic aggressiveness of Professor Eucken, and creates a strong desire on the part of the reader for the larger work of which it is introductory."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 10 '14 350w

"We can commend the book as an excellent introduction to the study of philosophy as well as a good antidote to much that is now written on philosophical topics under various more or less attractive and high-sounding titles."

+ Educ R 47:420 Ap '14 150w

+ — Nation 98:306 Mr 19 '14 150w

"While 'Knowledge and life' is a bare sketch, a framework of the more elaborate thesis which is to follow, its richness of thought and its valuable contribution to the body of constructive philosophy which has been taking shape under the hands of the great German idealist in the past decade render it something more than a choice morsel for the student and scholar."

+ N Y Times 19:184 Ap 12 '14 1150w

R of Rs 49:350 Mr '14 100w

EUGENICS: twelve university lectures by Morton A. Aldrich and others. *$2 (2c) Dodd 14-11279

A many-sided study of eugenics embodied in twelve university lectures. The chapters aim to furnish an insight into the nature and importance of the principles of eugenics,—principles that have to do with agencies under social control that may improve or impair the racial qualities of future generations either physically or mentally. Some of the twelve chapters, each a lecture by a well known university professor, treat the subject from the standpoint of the zoologist, physician, physiologist, anatomist, genet-

EUGENICS—Continued.

icist and sociologist; others treat its limitations, its economic aspects and its relation to intellect and character.

"Concentration on fundamentals prevents a complete and detailed presentation of the subject. While the book is not planned to serve as a text, it is of high value as supplementary reading for classes in eugenics and sociology, and for the public that wants to know which of the many rumors it has heard about eugenics may be believed." D. W. LaRue

+ — Am J Soc 20:418 N '14 350w

+ A L A Bkl 11:102 N '14

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 13:432 Ja '15 150w

+ R of Rs 50:637 N '14 50w

"There is enough variety in the attitude of mind of the different writers to make a perusal of the whole volume well worth while. All opinions possible to the scientific mind will be found expounded in this book. To anyone deeply interested in this subject the whole series of twelve lectures will be none too much." Alice Hamilton

+ Survey 33:91 O 24 '14 750w

EVANS, FLORENCE WILKINSON (MRS. WILFRED MUIR EVANS). Idle home.

*$1.25 Houghton 13-25114

"'The ride home,' by Florence Wilkinson Evans, is a volume of 333 pages, which looks like a collection of reprints. It falls into three groups: First, the poems in 'The city' on practical or sordid subjects popularly classed as unpoetical; second, the travel poems; third, 'The marriage of Guineith,' a one-act tragedy in blank verse, of Celtic theme."—Nation

"Poems on diverse subjects, displaying a facile use of varied verse forms, with a sensitive ear for accent and rhythm; also much imagination and real poetic feeling, though keyed to the fanciful, the touching, the sympathetic, rather than to strong feeling. The response is mainly to the imaginative element in modern life, specially on the mechanical side, and the human interest of the crowd."

+ A L A Bkl 11:119 S '14

Reviewed by W. A. Bradley

+ — Bookm 39:193 Ap '14 160w

"As we read the large number of verses in 'The ride home,' we are struck with its mediocrity. The really good poetry of the book is drowned in the bulk of the volume." D. L. M.

— Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 100w

"The first group exhibits some pointed motives, but fails to show that overplus, that double charge, of imagination which is needed, in such themes, to offset the predisposition to a prosaic attitude, a predisposition which counts twice because it affects both author and reader. Of the travel verses, little else can be said than that they are the ingenious and brightly colored simulacra of poems, satisfactory only to those who are content to imagine that they feel. In the drama, the suspense dies of too much nursing."

— + Nation 99:248 Ag 27 '14 150w

"Mrs. Evans is a poet according to the best tradition of the New England school."

+ — N Y Times 19:587 D 27 '14 1200w

EVANS, LARRY. Once to every man. il *$1.35 Fly

"The whole tale is this: Denny's father died delirious from drink, and the villagers await that fate for Denny (for no reason whatever); Dryad's mother was a wisp of a girl, an unreal little elf who died when Dryad was born, and the villagers shake their heads over Dryad (for no reason at all). Denny, alone in the house on the hill, will not marry to see Dryad grow old before her time, like the overworked women of the country. News comes that Jed Conway, the village bully, has made good as a prize-fighter. Twelve thousand dollars are ready for the man who can beat him. So Denny mortgages his farm, goes to the city, and in a few months, fights his fight. That's all—except the ending."—Pub W

"But it isn't the plot that holds us; it is a trick that the author has learned early, and that cannot be taught,—the trick of making us care for his people, not for what they do, but for what they are. Young Denny is a good lover, a good fighter, and a good all-around human being, and who would be so unreasonable as to ask more?" F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:446 Je '14 470w

"Perhaps there is nothing extraordinary about the characters, perhaps Dryad has too little rusticity for a village maiden, perhaps the plot is not startlingly new—perhaps you won't like it—but I did!" Doris Webb

+ Pub W 85:1341 Ap 18 '14 400w

EXNER, A. H. Japan as I saw it. il *$2.50 Stokes

"The author's plan of dealing with his subject is geographical. He begins with Nagasaki and ends with Nikko and Ise. The chief ports, the capitals, the places of historic interest, of scenic beauty and of religious sanctity are described in detail and sketched with apparent fidelity. . . . A chapter is devoted to Shintoism and Buddhism, as these religions appear in their temples and in the external forms of their worship. As with all other features of life in Japan, it is the artistic quality of the religions that appeals to Mr. Exner."—Boston Transcript

"The present volume comes from the hand of one who had the judgment to select the material that was suited to the skill of the draughtsman's hand, and his sketchy pictures go along with his sketchy paragraphs through these pages in a wholly companionable manner."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 350w

"'Japan as I saw it' has a certain freshness that will secure it a reading, while its illustrations and other material details are such as to predispose one in its favor."

+ Dial 55:529 D 16 '13 180w

"Rather better done than the average globe-trotting Englishman's account of his travels."

+ Ind 78:327 My 25 '14 80w

+ Lit D 48:630 Mr 21 '14 150w

"'Japan as I saw it'—an indexless book, by the way—is, in truth, a summary of Japanese history and civilization that has been undertaken without adequate knowledge or preparation. The author fails to understand the whole drift and meaning of the national evolution, or to grasp the religious symbolism and ideals that lie at the root of the best in Japanese art."

— Nation 98:267 Mr 12 '14 1150w

EYRE, LAWRENCE. Things that count. il *$1.25 (2c) Little 14-18919

A novel made from the play of the same name. Mrs. Hennaberry, whose heart was in the right place altho her head was all wrong, had a fondness for managing other people's affairs that resulted in the mismanagement of her own. At the beginning of the story she is estranged from her sister and from her son's wife, whose little daughter, her own grandchild, she has never seen. At the end of it her mistakes have all been righted thru the influence of the little girl.

"As a bit of technique, the transformation into a novel has been cleverly done, leaving scant trace of joints between separate scenes and acts."

+ Bookm 40:684 F '15 110w

"There is much humor and pathos in the way in which one by one the various characters find their way to the little East Side room where Dulcie and her mother live."

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 11 '14 250w

F

FABRE, JEAN HENRI CASIMIR. Mason-bees; tr. by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. *$1.50 (2c) Dodd 14-18657

This book constitutes part 1 of a work on "The wild bee." Part 2 "The bramble-bees" is to appear later. The volume is translated from the author's "Souvenirs entomologiques" and contains all of the essays on the Chalcidomæ, or mason-bees proper, contained in that great work. Three of the essays, the translator explains, The mason-bees, Experiments, and Exchanging the nests, form the last three chapters of "Insect life," published by the Macmillan company, but are included here, in a new translation, to round out the volume. Some of the other essays are: More enquiries into mason-bees; Parasites; The theory of parasitism; The tribulations of the mason-bee; The Leucospes.

+ A L A Bkl 11:201 Ja '15

"This book, like others written by this patient master, teems with new facts and suggestions on insect psychology."

+ Ath 1914,2:628 D 12 500w

"The author is a keen observer, with an experimental turn of mind, and puts to test his theories of sight and memory as guiding factors in the homeward movements of insects. The translation is excellently done save for a few lapses into archaic terms."

+ — Dial 58:22 Ja '15 180w

"One does not know whether to class the entomological studies of 'the Homer of the insects' as science or belles lettres or social psychology. But no matter how classed they are delightful reading."

+ Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 90w

"If the reader does not follow the discussion carefully, he is soon hopelessly lost; if he does, he is indeed fascinated. M. Fabre's gracious, nimble style is precisely the medium demanded by the subject. The translator has maintained the high standard set in the previous volumes. The proofreading, however, is defective."

+ — Nation 99:697 D 10 '14 250w

"Fabre as a writer ranges wide; he is the most patient and exact of observers, his phrases turn quickly with vigorous thrusts and surprises, he has a critical humour, and he is a poet, with a poet's vision and power of touching the thought and guessing the hope of other beings."

+ Spec 113:929 D 26 '14 1700w

FAGUET, ÉMILE. Balzac; tr., with notes, by Wilfrid Thorley. il *$2 (3c) Houghton

A14-3056

A biographical and critical study. In his consideration of Balzac, the author takes up in order: His life; His general ideas; His general view of mankind; His art and its make-up; His characters; His taste; His style; Balzac after his death. The last chapter is an attempt to estimate Balzac's influence and to fix his place in literature. To do so comparison with others is necessary, and the author finds that "Balzac can only be compared to some purpose . . . to George Sand and Flaubert in his own century, and to Le Sage and La Bruyère in the rest of French literature."

Reviewed by Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:565 Ja '15 150w

Boston Transcript p25 O 21 '14 600w

"It is unfortunate that the translation as a whole is far from reproducing the sprightliness, elegance, and originality that make the work of M. Faguet so pleasing. The volume on Flaubert is better in this respect. M. Faguet is inclined to be harsh with Balzac and partial to Flaubert." Grant Showerman

+ — Dial 57:502 D 16 '14 800w

"The biographical chapters are models of concise fullness. The personal characterizations are vivid. In the discussions of the authors' writings there is a precision of phrase, a clarity of idea and an acuteness of critical view that give immense value as well as charm to the pages."

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 30w

+ — Sat R 113:609 D 12 '14 1150w

+ Spec 113:855 D 12 '14 10w

FAGUET, ÉMILE. Dread of responsibility; tr. with introd. by Emily James Putnam. *$1.25 (2½c) Putnam 14-18382

The author of "The cult of incompetence" takes a step forward in this present carefully reasoned volume. He is chiefly known as the author of destructive criticism of democracy and the socialistic tendency; but here, in addition to strengthening his old position, he offers constructive suggestions for a true aristocracy under democratic forms. He arraigns the courts for being controlled by the government in all cases in which the latter is interested, and, consequently, for being irresponsible; he arraigns the Frenchman, first for his fondness for easy employment, under the government, with the irresponsibility it brings, and, second, for the dread of responsibility in rearing large families; he attacks political customs which have constitutionally limited the responsibility of power. By way of a solution he believes that France should have "a republic with a democratic base and containing an aristocratic element," managed by people who will accept and love common responsibility.

"Much of interest to American readers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:199 Ja '15

"Genially and elegantly written (and elegantly translated)." Grant Showerman

+ Dial 57:389 N 16 '14 880w

Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 90w

Nation 99:664 D 3 '14 280w

"Very brilliant and entertaining book."

+ Spec 114:85 Ja 16 '15 1550w

FAGUET, ÉMILE. Flaubert; tr. from the French by Mrs. R. L. Devonshire. il *$2 (4c) Houghton

A companion volume to the work on Balzac. The chapters take up: The life of Flaubert; His character and disposition; His ideas and the turn of his mind; The romanticist: "Salammbo"; The romanticist: "La tentation de Saint-Antoine"; The realist: "Madame Bovary"; The realist: "L'éducation sentimentale"; The realist: "Bouvard et Pécuchet"; What remained of the realist in the romanticist and of the romanticist in the realist; Flaubert as a writer; The fate of his works. The author brings out Flaubert's superiority over Balzac as an artist, tho as a creative genius he gives him a lower rank.

"The only fault to be found with the 'Flaubert' is that it is too superlative; Faguet for once has lost his self-restraint." Calvin Winter

+ — Bookm 40:565 Ja '15 130w

Boston Transcript p25 O 21 '14 400w

Reviewed by Grant Showerman

+ — Dial 57:502 D 16 '14 800w

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 30w

"In this estimate of Flaubert's personal happiness and social merits, M. Faguet's point of view seems to me a little too contemporaneous and smug." F. M. Colby

+ — No Am 201:273 F '15 1700w

Spec 113:855 D 12 '14 10w

FAGUET, ÉMILE. Initiation into literature; tr. by Sir Home Gordon. *$1.25 Putnam

A14-1031

This work, translated from the French is "a simple and unpretentious survey of the march of literary events from earliest times. . . . Beginning with the writers of ancient India, they are surveyed country by country through ancient, mediæval and modern times to the latter day literary products of Russia and Poland. . . . Three chapters are given by M. Faguet to English literature, the first chapter to the writers of the Middle ages, the second to those of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and third to those of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Of America and American writers he has apparently no knowledge." (Boston Transcript)

FAGUET, ÉMILE—Continued.

Ath 1913,2:492 N 1 40w

"Written obviously for French pupils, there was little need for a translation of M. Faguet's volume into English or any other language." E. F. E.

— + Boston Transcript p8 Ap 11 '14 500w

"It is difficult to see why such a volume should be translated into English at all; it is more difficult to see how any reputable publisher could have put out so schoolboyish a version as Sir Home Gordon's."

— Dial 56:467 Je 1 '14 580w

+ — Educ R 49:102 Ja '15 20w

"As a reference handbook it is ill-proportioned, inaccurate, and full of debatable judgments."

— Nation 99:22 Jl 2 '14 230w

"Nothing of American literature or of American writers is included in the book, but otherwise it is a well-rounded production, and an exceedingly useful book for the student."

+ — R of Rs 49:763 Je '14 120w

"It is always a pleasure, according to our way of thinking, to watch a subtle, delicate, and sensitive thinker, such as M. Faguet is, expressing himself with a perfect simplicity. We enjoy that experience in this book. We cannot, however, always agree with him. It is a pity that he should not have been more carefully translated."

+ — Spec 111:871 N 22 '13 250w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 20 '14 200w

FAGUET, ÉMILE. Initiation into philosophy; tr. by Sir Home Gordon. *$1.25 (3c) Putnam A14-1597

The title describes the design and purpose of the book. It presents in brief form the history of philosophy and is intended as an incentive to further study. The book is divided into three parts: Antiquity; In the middle ages; Modern times. The period of antiquity extends from pre-Socratic times to the first centuries of Christianity. The next period closes with the beginning of the seventeenth century. The third period extends thru the nineteenth century.

Ath 1912,2:550 N 9 30w

+ — Educ R 49:101 Ja '15 80w

+ — Ind 77:421 Mr 23 '14 50w

"M. Faguet is too transparently clear to be always quite convincing. The fact is that a detailed historical initiation into philosophy cannot very well be compressed into two hours' reading."

— Nation 99:22 Jl 2 '14 200w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 20 '14 200w

FANSLER, DEAN SPRUILL. Chaucer and the Roman de la Rose. (Columbia univ. studies in English and comparative literature) *$1.50 Columbia univ. press 14-4330

The author takes up the problems presented by the "Roman de la Rose" and discusses at length Chaucer's indebtedness to Jean de Meung and Guillaume de Lorris. The contents is made up of chapters on: The influence of the Roman de la Rose on Chaucer's reading; Allusions to historical and legendary persons and places; Mythological allusions; Chaucer's style as affected by the Roman; Situations and descriptions; Proverbs and proverbial expressions; Influence of the Roman de la Rose on Chaucer's philosophical discussions.

"The tables of parallel lines and passages appended are invaluable to the student; and the book is really a masterly thesis if not an epochal contribution to Chauceriana." T: P. Beyer

+ — Dial 57:76 Ag 1 '14 630w

"A useful conspectus of the influence of the great French poem upon Chaucer. The ground has been so thoroughly worked that one is not surprised to find that the author has to offer nothing new that is of importance, but the definite classification of the various forms of influence on Chaucer's reading, style, situations, descriptions, etc., makes the debt of the English poet to his French originals clearer than ever."

+ Nation 98:505 Ap 30 '14 200w

"Conscientious monograph."

+ Spec 112:709 Ap 25 '14 80w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 150w

FARIS, JOHN THOMSON, ed. Sunday school at work, by Philip E. Howard, Amos R. Wells, Rev. A. H. McKinney and others. *$1.25 (1½c) Presbyterian bd. 14-7894

This book is partly based on the series of Sunday school manuals issued by the Westminster press and has been prepared in answer to the demand for "a book of tested Sunday-school methods, in which the material presented in the manuals should be given more permanent form." (Foreword) The sections of the book, each of which is written by an experienced Sunday-school worker, take up the following subjects: The superintendent and his associates; The secretary and his assistants; The treasurer and the librarian; The Sunday school graded; The graded lessons; The adult class; The teacher-training class; The home department; How to increase attendance; Missionary education in the Sunday school; Bringing the pupil to a decision for Christ.

FARMER, JOHN BRETLAND. Plant life. il 1 *50c (1c) Holt 13-23046

"I have not attempted in this little book to cover the whole ground indicated by its title. My object has rather been to try to place before the reader a few of the salient features of plant form from the point of view of function. . . . I have deliberately touched, though with enforced brevity, on certain of the more difficult problems which are even now confronting us, and I have endeavoured to present them with as little technicality as possible." (Preface) The book is number 71 in the "Home university library."

"Brief and popular but authoritative treatment. Contains some material not generally given in so brief a discussion."

+ A L A Bkl 10:266 Mr '14

"A judicious addition to the series."

+ Ath 1913,2:138 Ag 9 50w

"A work which, owing to its freshness of treatment of various problems of plant life, will be useful to students of botany, besides fulfilling admirably the object of the series of which it forms part—namely, the popularising of knowledge and the creation as well as the satisfaction of a desire among general readers for really authoritative and accurate, though simplified, treatises on various branches of knowledge, published at a popular price." F. C.

+ Nature 92:397 D 4 '13 330w

"May attract some readers who dislike the more formal texts."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:126 My '14 30w

FARNSWORTH, HENRY WESTON. Log of a would-be war correspondent. *$1 Dodd 13-25633

An unofficial story of the Balkan war written by a young American who wanted to know what war was like, so started on his own responsibility to find out. "And he had adventures, the account of which makes an entertaining little volume. When Constantinople officialdom would give him no permit or credentials, he simply rode out of the city in the general direction of the war. His cigarettes did for him what their passports did for the well-outfitted and very superior war correspondents for the continental papers." (Boston Transcript)

"The account has interest rather as a plain, unvarnished story of adventure than for any new light on the war."

+ A L A Bkl 10:221 F '14

"Mr. Farnsworth saw genuine fighting, he had experiences amusing and exhilarating, and now he publishes a book which proves him to possess a sense of humor, a good pair of eyes, considerable courage, and a knack for writing."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 23 '13 220w

FARRINGTON, FREDERIC ERNEST. Commercial education in Germany. $1.10 (2c) Macmillan 14-8614

A monograph whose purpose is to describe in detail the work of certain types of schools that have been a contributing factor in the transformation of the German people from an agricultural nation to an industrial nation. What these vocational schools are, how founded, how distributed, developed, managed and supported, their courses of study and teaching force, are all discussed upon from first hand information.

"Excellent study." J. P. M.

+ Am Econ R 4:943 D '14 110w

"Specially helpful to commercial teachers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:60 O '14

"No treatise seems quite so comprehensive, readable and complete as that just now published by Mr. Farrington."

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 15 '14 150w

"The book is the very best in its field."

+ Educ R 48:427 N '14 80w

"The book is a good example of thorough treatment of a single aspect of education. Its value in this respect is very large." C. H. J.

+ El School T 14:493 Je '14 400w

+ J Pol Econ 23:102 Ja '15 230w

"Excellent work."

+ R of Rs 50:634 N '14 250w

FARWELL, PARRIS THAXTER. Village improvement. (Farmer's practical lib.) il $1 (1½c) Sturgis & Walton 14-1679

The author, who is now chairman of the Village improvement committee of the Massachusetts civic league, has had some twenty-five years experience in work of this kind. He draws his material for this book from many sources, using his own experience as a basis, and quoting freely from reports of organizations in other parts of the country. North Carolina and Colorado, Massachusetts and North Dakota are all working out their own problems; and the author tells what each is doing in the matter of country roads, village parks, public buildings, boys' and girls' clubs, etc.

"Meets the demand for practical, up-to-date information on the organization, methods and proper activities of village improvement associations, by giving a straightforward account of the organization and specific achievements of such associations throughout the country."

+ A L A Bkl 10:350 My '14 +

"It is just the kind of a book needed for use in the small town where needs are many and means for satisfying them seldom at hand."

+ Ann Am Acad 53:311 My '14 190w

"It is a straightforward and simple account of the specific achievements of particular communities and it is therefore worth more for more purposes than the denials and pessimism of all the host of writers who take up the same problems in the slumming spirit. It is practical because it tells how those ends which almost every village desires may be attained."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Mr 4 '14 250w

"Eminently sane chapters."

+ N Y Times 19:189 Ap 12 '14 430w

"A timely and suggestive volume for towns and smaller cities."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:56 Mr '14 40w

FAUNCE, WILLIAM HERBERT PERRY. Social aspects of foreign missions. il 60c Missionary educ. movement. 14-11299

A volume, made up of lectures originally delivered at Crozier theological seminary. "President Faunce's survey of the activities of missionaries the world over should dispel any lingering vestiges of the old-time conception of a missionary as merely a 'frock-coated purveyor of religious beliefs.' In every land where the missionary has gone social service as well as religious conversion has been his aim, and to the missionary the uttermost parts of the earth are indebted both for the material gifts of civilization and for the still more important fertilizing of the mind that enables the ideas and ideals of civilization to take root and flourish." (Outlook)

+ A L A Bkl 11:150 D '14

"Such a book as Dr. Faunce's, with its compact and comprehensive review of past and present accomplishments, should make for increased confidence in and support of missionary enterprise."

+ Outlook 108:284 S 30 '14 160w

FAVRE DE COULEVAIN, Mlle. (PIERRE DE COULEVAIN, pseud.). Wonderful romance; tr. from the French by Alys Hallard. $1.35 (1½c) Dodd 14-19688

Mlle. Favre de Coulevain's philosophy, rich and varied, is summed up here just as the thread of life became pitifully thin. Life is the wonderful romance, "life so immense, beautiful with an immortal beauty." Not only are her theories of existence wholly her own, but anecdote and human interest stories used to make her philosophy concrete are drawn from her own experience. Simply and unconventionally she treats of joy, sorrow, love, duty, dreams, religion, mysticism, miracles and prayer in their bearing upon life's game. It is a fascinating game, made so by unshrinkingly shouldering the responsibility of our destiny.

A L A Bkl 11:210 Ja '15

"Perhaps the most remarkable of her stories." J. L. Gilder

+ Ind 80:405 D 14 '14 150w

"Love, faith, religion, spiritual vision and miracles are discussed in the simple, intimate way possible only to one from whom the years have rolled away the burden of self-consciousness."

+ Ind 80:478 D 21 '14 80w

+ Nation 100:170 F 11 '15 400w

"It is a comforting book, full of straightforward simplicity, and to-day, when a good many well-meaning people are shouting that God's plans have gone astray and that we are all rushing to destruction like a ship on fire, it is a good book to keep on the table. This old woman, full of courage and kindness, is a companion worth making an intimate of, whether or no you agree with her conclusions."

+ N Y Times 19:504 N 15 '14 820w

FAY, CHARLES RYLE. Copartnership in industry. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) *40c Putnam 13-16168

"This little manual outlines the history of copartnership, describes and illustrates the various types of copartnership and profit-sharing, and makes clear the real nature and spirit of successful experiments in this field." (Ann Am Acad) "[The author] takes issue with the attitude which F. W. Taylor, the apostle of scientific management, has assumed toward profit-sharing devices, and stoutly declares they have been of great value." (N Y Times)

"It is written in good form and conveys much detailed information. It is a good book for those who want a most brief treatment."

J. L. L.

+ Am Econ R 4:697 S '14 70w

"The author writes from wide knowledge and elucidates his facts by much sound comment."

+ A L A Bkl 10:221 F '14

Ann Am Acad 52:229 Mr '14 100w

J Pol Econ 22:712 J1 '14 100w

N Y Times 19:185 Ap 12 '14 80w

FEA, ALLAN. Quiet roads and sleepy villages. 7 il $2.25 (3½c) McBride, Nast & co. (Eng ed 13-21529)

A travel book describing quiet rambles thru rural England. Contents: Between the two north roads; Across Bedfordshire; South Northants;

FEA, ALLAN—Continued.

North Oxon and East Gloucestershire; East Gloucestershire and North Wilts; From Wiltshire into northern Berks; Northern Berkshire; From Berks into southern Oxfordshire; The border of Oxon and Berks; The waist of Oxfordshire. The photographs selected for illustration emphasize architectural features.

+ N Y Times 19:303 J1 5 '14 150w

"The journey lies through some of the prettiest parts of England, and Mr. Fea's descriptions of the villages, and particularly of the churches, which are passed upon the road, are of considerable interest."

+ Spec 111:149 J1 26 '13 60w

FEDDEN, KATHARINE WALDO DOUGLAS (MRS. ROMILLY FEDDEN). Shifting sands. $1.35 (1½c) Houghton 14-19850

Lurking in the background of this story is a tragedy which, however, the reader is little conscious of, and which, until the very dénouement, is not connected with a shadow that seems to lurk about the hero. What the reader is more interested in is an orphaned child whom this hero, a rugged, hardworking physician, takes to his home as his ward. Sunny, imaginative Jean abstracts from the atmosphere of her doctor guardian's busy life certain elements which the alchemy of her temperament transforms into "something rich and strange." Fussy, practical Cousin Roxina comes under the spell of her magic; no less so, Dr. John himself. Her development thru her teens, under the tuition of her guardian, ending in his loving her, a possibility entirely unreckoned with, is interestingly sketched.

"The climax fails in its purpose for lack of adequate preparation." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:555 Ja 15 500w

"The biography of John Erskine is a fine character study. In another way the character of Jean Dimmock is quite as interesting and quite as sympathetically portrayed as Erskine's. The author's manner of handling the story is firm and marked with a keen understanding of human nature."

+ Boston Transcript p25 N 25 '14 270w

+ — Ind 80:382 D 7 '14 70w

+ — N Y Times 19:557 D 6 '14 500w

"The false psychology of the hero's character will spoil the book for some readers."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:305 D '14 50w

FEDDEN, KATHARINE WALDO DOUGLAS (MRS. ROMILLY FEDDEN). Spare room. il $1 Houghton A14-376

"A honeymooning couple, British groom and American bride, take a villa at Capri. It is out of repair, but it has a single available 'spare room,' to which in their new pride of possession, they casually invite a number of their relatives and friends. Unexpectedly, on the same day, these persons all descend upon them. The shifts employed to house the interlopers, the complications which arise in consequence of their un congeniality, are (to a reader in the right mood for farce) really funny."—Nation

"An amusing little story."

+ Ath 1913,2:134 Ag 9 80w

"This is the kind of book for a traveller to slip into his bag, if he has any spare room; it will serve to while away a few boring hours."

+ Boston Transcript p25 O 29 '13 210w

"Good farce in fiction is not too common, and this, taken frankly as farce, is good."

+ Nation 98:12 Ja 1 '14 150w

"Sometimes her people verge upon caricature and her situations upon farce, but it is all done with refinement, vivacity, and charm, and her story is one of the most amusing trifles published in many a day."

+ N Y Times 18:699 N 30 '13 200w

FEDERALIST. Selections from; ed. with an introd. by W: Bennett Munro. $1 Harvard univ. press 14-3771

"The text is that of the first collected edition of 1788, and the selections, based upon the editor's experience as a teacher, are drawn from the first fifty numbers. There are no footnotes save such as appeared in the original edition, but Professor Munro has provided a brief introductory account of the formation of the constitution."—Nation

Dial 57:261 O 1 '14 40w

"We should prefer to have 'The Federalist' read and studied in its entirety instead of in the fashion in which it is presented in the volume."

— Educ R 48:425 N '14 60w

"Will be a boon to teachers and students who have been deterred, by the bulk of the original work, from using in the classroom what is still, for many purposes, the best introduction to the historical study of American federal government."

+ Nation 99:327 S 10 '14 100w

FENOLLOSA, MARY MCNEILL (SIDNEY MC-CALL, pseud.). Ariadne of Allan Water. il $1.35 (1c) Little 14-6239

Like the author's earlier heroine, Truth Dexter, Ariadne of this story is a simple, innocent southern girl, very ignorant of ways of the world. When she is fifteen her father brings home a second wife who proves to be a sentimental creature, sadly lacking in common sense. On her father's death, Ariadne is bound by a promise never to leave Donna, the stepmother. This promise takes her into strange places, for Donna marries again in a short time and the new husband proves to be an adventurer and a scoundrel. Ariadne, true to her promise, stands by her stepmother until circumstances leave her free to return to Virginia and to her devoted southern lover.

"Altogether, the effect of the whole story is painfully reminiscent of the 'Desperate Desmond' cartoons; and it does seem too bad that a story which opens with so much promise should waste its substance and end so cheaply." F: T. Cooper

— Bookm 39:558 J1 '14 500w

"[Ariadne is] another Truth Dexter, who will be warmly welcomed by friends of her predecessor and enjoyed by everyone who meets her, for her own many good qualities and because of the stirring narrative of her remarkable adventures."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 15 '14 380w

"With the exception that the point upon which the plot hinges is not quite convincing, it is a well told story, whose strong emotional interest is sustained from the first to the last, while its many dramatic situations are handled with strength and skill."

+ — N Y Times 19:163 Ap 5 '14 400w

"Regarded purely as a romance, the story has many qualities to commend it. There are obvious artificialities that might have been made less glaring."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ap 23 '14 400w

FENOLLOSA, MARY MCNEILL (SIDNEY MC-CALL, pseud.). Blossoms from a Japanese garden. il $1.50 Stokes 13-23199

"A book of child verses with colored pictures. 'The verses will give a child an idea of Japanese childhood that is enchanting, for they tell stories of the flowers, the cherry picnic, the gardens contained in a dish, the clay modeling of queer little animals, and so forth; but the pictures will serve an even larger purpose—that of initiating the young reader into the delicate profundities of Japanese art.'" (Bookm)

"A volume to which the lover of all things dainty and sweet will turn with pleasure."

+ Ath 1913,2:702 D 13 70w

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson
+ Bookm 38:440 D '13 150w

"A very charming little book."

+ Ind 77:212 F 9 '14 50w

+ Lit D 47:1121 D 6 '13 100w
 Nation 97:570 D 11 '13 40w
 N Y Times 18:694 N 30 '13 70w

"Truth to tell, some of the verses are a little disappointing and without distinction, though children will like the subjects; but the coloured plates are good enough and delicate enough even for elders."

+ — Sat R 116:sup10 N 29 '13 90w

"A pretty little book of verses."

+ Spec 111:sup956 D 6 '13 60w

FENOLLOSA, MARY MCNEILL (SIDNEY MC-CALL, pseud.). Strange woman. il *$1.30
 (1½c) Dodd 14-20501

A story made from the play of the same name. John Hemingway, a young architect from Delphi, Iowa, goes to Paris to study. Here he meets Inez de Pierrefond, loves her and is loved in return. But Inez, after an unfortunate experience, has rebelled against the shackles of marriage; she will agree only to a "free, untrammelled companionship." With the matter still at a deadlock between them, for John holds out for a true marriage, the two go back to Delphi to pay a visit. Here Inez comes into contact with the narrow ideals and strict conventions of a small town, but is finally won over to John's way of thinking by his simple but wise little mother.

"It is often crude in workmanship, its sense of the passage of time is deficient, its characters are overdrawn and one at least of the closing scenes suddenly converts a refined and sensitive woman into an undisciplined virago. And yet it compels a liking that amounts to real affection." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:555 Ja '15 620w

"There is no strong interest to carry it through so many pages. Whatever else fiction is, it must first be a good story. Common, human strength of fibre 'The strange woman' lacks." W. A. M.

— Boston Transcript p22 D 26 14 900w

"Sidney McCall can do work much better than this. The novel seems to have been published in a hurry, containing as it does several such very obvious blunders."

— N Y Times 20:6 Ja 3 '15 200w

FERBER, EDNA. Personality plus. il *$1 (4c)
 10 Stokes 14-16210

This new series of Emma McChesney stories follows the progress of her son Jock in his career as advertising man. There are five stories: Making good with mother; Personality plus; Dictated but not read; The man within him; The self-starter. In the last story of the series before this, T. A. Buck asked Emma to marry him; the last story of this series ends in the same way—with a difference.

+ A L A Bkl 11:75 O '14 +

"Wholesome, humorous business stories."

+ Cleveland 6:77 S '14 30w

Dial 57:342 N 1 '14 90w

"As in all Miss Ferber's work there is a certain fine, human quality in these stories which makes a swift and irresistible appeal."

+ N Y Times 19:386 S 20 '14 320w

"The story is intensely modern, humorous, and shrewdly observant of business and of men and women."

+ Outlook 108:224 S 23 '14 90w

FERGUSON, EMILY (JANEY CANUCK, pseud.). Seeds of pine. il *$1.25 (1½c) Doran

A book of Canadian sketches. The author uses the term "Little Canadian" to designate the man who speaks of Canada and thinks of the provinces south of the Great Lakes. Her book is written to celebrate greater Canada—Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and wonderlands still further to the west and north. She is a newspaper woman and writes of her own experiences in traveling thru the country she describes.

"She writes with freshness of feeling and vivacity of style, and these, combined with her keen, alert eyes and her human sympathy, make her volume of sketches of travel in out-of-the-way places in Canada very pleasant reading."

+ N Y Times 19:517 N 22 '14 250w

"Her book would be altogether charming were it not disfigured by the use of archaic phrases and by a maddening form of self-consciousness which finds its expression in an affected simplicity."

+ — Spec 113:503 O 10 '14 200w

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO. Ancient Rome and modern America. *$2.50 (3c) Putnam

14-10228

A comparative study of morals and manners. "The object of the essays collected in this volume, with the exception of three which recount three curious episodes in Roman history, is the investigation of the most important differences between the ancient world and the modern, between Europe and America; in what way and in what particulars the civilizations of the ancients and of Europe have been modified respectively by the course of centuries and by the passage of the Atlantic. . . . This volume may be considered as the bridge which connects the 'Greatness and decline of Rome' with a third work which, under the title of 'Between the old world and the new,' will be published shortly in New York and London." (Publisher's note)

"Has the brilliant style as well as the defects of the author's earlier works."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:69 O '14

"We have discovered nowhere such a keen insight into the contrasts between the old civilization and the new. The book is well worth reading by all those interested in the interpretation of modern society." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 56:179 N '14 450w

"We think that the author has found in this volume—apparently of popular lectures—his proper vein. But in many of his assertions we think him wrong, or prone to overstate things."

+ — Ath 1914:2:192 Ag 15 1050w

"A very stimulating book."

+ Educ R 48:421 N '14 70w

+ Ind 79:217 Ag 10 '14 550w

"This book is more interesting and more direct in its significance to American readers than anything yet written by the distinguished Italian historian."

+ Lit D 49:637 O 3 '14 700w

"In the drawing of detailed parallels between ancient and modern institutions one may not always follow Ferrero with safety."

— Nation 99:46 Jl 9 '14 830w

"Because of its application to present-day American tendencies, Signor Ferrero's latest book seems practically interesting."

+ Outlook 107:939 Ag 15 '14 1250w

"The book makes interesting reading; whether solid or not is a question that can not be argued in brief compass." R. S. Woodworth

+ Psychol Bull 11:440 N 15 '14 500w

"The only fault that the reviewer is inclined to find with the volume, unless he chooses to take issue with the author's conclusions, is its lack of form, and the inclusion of several chapters which, admirable as they may be in themselves, are quite irrelevant to the main issue." F: T. Cooper

+ — Pub W 86:813 S 19 '14 1300w

"A great deal of valuable stimulation is to be found on every page of the writings of this Italian historian."

+ R of Rs 50:119 Jl '14 170w

"Interesting essays."

+ Spec 113:sup776 D 5 '14 1550w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 23 '14 1100w

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO. Between the old world and the new; a moral and philosophical contrast; tr. by A. Cecil Curtis. *$2.50 (2c) Putnam

14-15570

As a medium of expression the author has chosen the dialogue, "that literary form, so dear to the ancients, the chosen instrument of Plato and Galileo." The conversations reported take place on a small steamer, the "Cordova" making its two-week trip between Rio de Janeiro and Genoa. The participants are a representative group of intelligent men and women from the old world and the new. All are of the Latin races, but the first discussion, curiously enough, turns upon the question of the beauty or ugliness of New York. This leads naturally into the broader field of aesthetics, and in discussions that follow questions of ethics, sociology and philosophy are touched upon. No conclusions are reached, but at the end there is an exposition of a "philosophy of limits" which is in a sense a summing up.

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO—Continued.

+ A L A Bkl 11:112 N '14

+ Ath 1914;2:617 D 12 1400w

"The book touches in a very suggestive way upon a hundred phases of contemporary life, and should appeal to any one who is interested in the play of the mind."

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 200w

Nation 99:502 O 22 '14 470w

"His book is tinged, one is inclined to say tainted, with the picturesque. Superlatives abound, and when the writer seeks to qualify them it is in a half-hearted, ineffectual fashion, as if he had not thought out the true balance, and could not. With all needed qualifications the discussion is well worth following."

+ N Y Times 19:381 S 13 '14 $50w

Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 580w

FERRIS, WILLIAM HENRY. African abroad; or, His evolution in western civilization; tracing his development under Caucasian milieu. 2v il $5 Tuttle 13-18604

A two volume work tracing the history of the negro race on the American continent. "Phases of negro thought and life," 'A thread to guide one through the mazes of the color question,' and 'An epitome of deeds, achievements and progress of the colored race in Africa, Europe, Hayti, the West Indies, and America,' make up the contents of the first volume and a part of the second. 'Some men of color who are doing big things,' and 'The forty greatest negroes in history,' and 'Who's who in the negro hall of fame—The forty colored immortals,' comprising parts 5 and 6 fill out the work of near a thousand pages." (Boston Transcript)

"The work is an adulation of the negro race, and in its historical aspects is one-sided and lacks altogether the judicial temperament or scientific spirit. His style is that of the sophomoric orator." Jerome Dowd

— Am J Soc 20:274 S 14 370w

"The most amazingly informative account of the negro race that has yet come to our notice. It is encyclopedic in scope. He has the perspective of the philosopher and the historian's sense."

+ Boston Herald p4 Ja 3 '14 130w

"When he is not dealing with irrelevances which obtrude themselves into his work in the mention of innumerable persons and facts of local interest, he handles the larger aspects of the subject with considerable power, and interest. The work also lacks coherence."

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 14 '13 320w

"The work is without value, a mere jumble of opinion and quotation, without order of any kind. As it is, the book merely reflects upon the educated American negro."

— Nation 98:608 My 21 '14 130w

"Mr. Ferris presents a fair and instructive survey of the evolution of the black man in western civilization, but he is inclined to smother his facts and conclusions with unimportant comment and irrelevant dissertation."

+ N Y Times 18:505 S 28 '13 70w

FICKE, ARTHUR DAVISON. Mr. Faust. (Modern drama ser.) $1 Kennerley 13-26590

A modern dramatic presentation of the old Faust legend. "This Faustus talks of the opera and Wall street and mixes a Scotch, but he is the same restless, questioning cynic. This Satan who came to life out of a bust of George Washington—and an inexcusably misleading bit of business that is, by the way—is 'as up-to-date as the Ritz-Carlton,' but he is the same old wily tempter. He offers the lure of lust, the lure of power, 1913 models, and, with a creditable promptness which did not characterize the Goethe hero, Mr. Faust rejects them. Then the lure of nescience under the shadow of Buddha, and next the 'peace that passeth all understanding' as offered by Christianity's faith in a remote will, both of which fail to satisfy. . . . The Faust of Goethe found salvation in a life of service. Mr. Ficke shifts the emphasis and gives it a scientific rather than an economic slant." (N Y Times)

"This modern paraphrase of the Faust legend is clever enough to justify the boldness of its inception. Its motive is the glorification of the spirit of individualism and the theme is worked out with no little dramatic ingenuity and uncommon literary imagination and facility."

+ Nation 98:191 F 19 '14 950w

"As it stands, 'Mr. Faust' may not be good work, but it is significant though."

— N Y Times 18:738 D 14 '13 1150w

FICKE, ARTHUR DAVISON. Sonnets of a portrait-painter. $1 (17c) Kennerley

A sonnet sequence of fifty-seven numbers. Like others of their kind they celebrate the poet's love for his lady. Their moods vary; sometimes there is a touch of bitterness that recalls the like tone of Meredith's "Modern love."

"There is just one chance for Mr. Ficke in the sonnet business as we see it, and that lies in the direction of humor."

+ N Y Times 20:18 Ja 17 '15 600w

FIELD, DOROTHY. Religion of the Sikhs. (Wisdom of the East ser.) 70c Dutton

(Eng ed 14-8411)

"Very few people of the West know more than the name of the Sikhs. That they have a pure form of religion, worship a monotheistic god, and combine what is best in both the Hindus and Mohammedans is entirely unknown." (Boston Transcript) "Those who are frightened by the formidable six volumes of Mr. Macauliffe on 'The Sikh religion' will be glad to turn to the little volume by Dorothy Field on the subject. The author evidently does not work from first-hand sources, but contents herself with using translations of native texts." (Nation)

"The study is at once concise and comprehensive."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ag 22 '14 380w

+ Ind 80:340 N 30 '14 100w

"We do not obtain anything new in the presentation of the subject, but the little compilation is useful as giving in a brief form all the essential facts of the curious religion of the Sikhs."

+ Nation 99:167 Ag 6 '14 120w

FIELDING-HALL, HAROLD. Love's legend. 10 $2.50 Holt

"Neither by its title nor its form does 'Love's legend' suggest its content. The reader who looks into it for a pre nuptial or post nuptial rhapsody will be disappointed; the reader who thinks its octavo shape and bulk presage a scientific study will be sadly deceived. It is the story of a romantic honeymoon, to be sure, and of a honeymoon amid the picturesque scenes of far-away Burma, but it is by no means an idyll of love's young dreams. It is instead an exposition of the relative differences between man's and woman's status in love and marriage, from the alternate viewpoints of the newly wedded husband and wife, with an occasional interlude if an incidental character in the story offers his, or her, reflections, and takes a hand in the evolution of the story."—Boston Transcript

"In his treatment the author is as fearless as in the choice of his subject; but his realization of the beauty and nobility of his theme raises his language above the possibility of offence. The book may be called naturalistic, but belongs to the higher naturalism."

+ Ath 1914:1:886 Je 27 500w

"The present reviewer closed the book with an uncomfortable feeling that, in spite of all its delicacy, he had in a sense been peeping through a forbidden chink in the blinds." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:170 O '14 550w

"Mr. Fielding-Hall's attempt to present both sides of a question is a strenuous one, but it is far from successful. He merely shows us how futile it is for one man to speak for many men, and how impossible it is for one man to speak for any one woman. On the other hand, his Far Eastern scene is beautifully exotic; and his story may be read with pleasure for that alone." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 2 '14 1100w

Nation 99:306 S 10 '14 480w

"It is a book that cannot possibly harm any one and which might make some think, though others may find that its lessons are written in words of one syllable. It might be described, and probably will be, as a 'sweet' book."

+ N Y Times 19:447 O 18 '14 550w

"Mr. Fielding-Hall neglects few important issues, though his study has been put into the form of a simple story, but he has dared to be romantic. He is always human and in touch with nature, and nature herself is the mistress of supreme magic. Colour really lives in his pages, and he masters us by it before we reach the actual matter of his narrative"

+ Sat R 117:833 Je 27 '14 1000w

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 300w

FIELDING-HALL, HAROLD. Passing of empire. $2.50 Houghton A14-1224

"The book differs from other books on India because it is not a description of the characteristics of its people as contrasted with those of other peoples so much as a discussion of the destiny of India." (Outlook) "Mr. Fielding-Hall writes from the standpoint of one who has found in India, and especially in Burma, a people who appealed to him primarily as the owners of a vast spiritual heritage. Although he himself spent the best years of his life as a member of the Indian civil service, he steadily refuses to regard Indian problems from the purely administrative aspect." (Ath)

"Informing and thought-provoking, but somewhat partisan and of less general interest than 'The soul of the people.' No index."

+ A L A Bkl 11:9 S '14

"This volume is invaluable for the man whether in London or Washington, in India or the Philippines, who has to deal with subject races." A. G. P.

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:704 N '14 370w

Reviewed by C. L. Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 54:334 Jl '14 800w

"Politicians might study the book with advantage, for it is the work neither of a political week-ender nor a sentimentalist, but of a well-informed and humane critic."

+ Ath 1913:2:452 O 25 160w

"Intimate knowledge joined with keen common sense makes Mr. Fielding-Hall call to the attention many seldom noticed facts." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 15 '14 1200w

"If the book is marred by such major and minor defects as these, why spend so much time about it? Just because it is exactly what I have described,—an improbable mingling of valuable suggestions and stimulating mistakes. And I have no hesitation in saying that it will be profitable reading for any American desiring to understand Indian problems. Only it must not be accepted as holy writ." F. B. R. Hellems

+ Dial 56:379 My 1 '14 2500w

+ Nation 99:80 Jl 16 '14 280w

"His book is timely both on the ideal and on the practical side. It unfortunately lacks an index."

+ Outlook 107:47 My 2 '14 280w

+ R of Rs 49:634 My '14 80w

FILLEBROWN, CHARLES BOWDOIN. Taxation. (National social science ser.) *50c (1½c) McClurg 14-393c

A simple exposition of the principles that underlie the various forms of taxation. Contents: The nature of taxation; Incidence of taxation; Justice in taxation; Construction of a tax system; National, state and local taxation; The general property tax; The income tax; Inheritance taxes; Corporation taxes; The land tax; Reform tendencies in taxation. A brief list of references and an index complete the volume.

"On the whole, this book succeeds admirably in its purpose to give a brief and simple exposition of the principles and practice of taxation." O. C. Lockhart

+ Am Econ R 4:681 S '14 370w

"A good brief compendium, giving a simple and clear account for the general reader."

+ A L A Bkl 10:389 Je '14

N Y Times 19:255 My 31 '14 70w

"It should not be supposed that the book is a single tax argument. It is, rather, a general and well condensed analysis which is of special interest and value at a time when there is a wide demand, not merely in Massachusetts, where the system of personal taxation must be revised to avert a crisis, for tax reform."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 270w

"Sane, unbiased by personal views, and of timely interest to the general reader."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:161 Je '14 30w

FILLMORE, PARKER HOYSTED. Rosie world. Il $1.30 (1½c) Holt 14-16918

This is the story of the world of Rosie O'Brien. Rosie was twelve years old and she earned twenty cents a week carrying papers for her brother Terence. Out of this salary Rosie was saving toward a pair of ball-bearing roller-skates. The hoard in the tin bank was approaching two dollars when tragedy descended upon Rosie's world—a tragedy too poignant for casual mention here. Rosie brought up her brother Jackie and when he grew old enough to pass out of her care and go swimming, she reluctantly transferred her affections to the next baby, Geraldine; for Mrs. O'Brien, tho she had raised five children out of eight, knew nothing at all about babies, and Rosie's superior skill was essential to their well-being. But Rosie's chief concern was Jarge (written name George) Riley, the street-car conductor who boarded with Mrs. O'Brien and who in spite of superior good sense persisted in being in love with Ellen. Rosie and Jarge, as both author and illustrator represent them, are a delightful pair.

A L A Bkl 11:220 Ja '15

"To one who enjoys genuine humor, without a hint of coarseness, who prefers little pictures from life that leave a good taste in the mouth, and who appreciates the setting forth of such pictures in good English, this collection will be distinctly welcome."

+ Nation 100:114 Ja 28 '15 200w

+ N Y Times 19:389 S 20 '14 270w

"There's no suggestion of conscious cheer in it—no reproachful moral—but it does make the average life seem a pretty livable affair." Doris Webb

+ Pub W 86:1286 O 17 '14 550w

Reviewed by H. L. Reed

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 120w

FINDLATER, JANE HELEN. Green graves of Balgowrie. $1.35 Dutton

"The plot of this story is a relic of the period when fiction was full of fair women possessed of a degree of sensibility and a delicacy of constitution impossible to realize in these days of lusty feminism. The green graves were those of two young sisters who departed this life during the last quarter of the eighteenth century. These two poor innocents were reared by a cruelly eccentric mother, in unnatural seclusion." (Nation) "It is one of those tales that one instinctively

FINDLATER, JANE HELEN—Continued.
tively feels actually happened; it has the pathos and not infrequent painfulness of a true human document." (N Y Times)

Nation 98:433 Ap 16 '14 220w

"To the mild virtues of simplicity and unpretentiousness it adds the tonic of a strong initial situation, for the most part consistently carried out."

+ N Y Times 19:109 Mr 8 '14 200w

+ Outlook 106:819 Ap 11 '14 50w

FINDLATER, MARY. Betty Musgrave. *$1.35
Dutton A13-2691

"The story deals with the misfortunes and perils of a young woman whose mother is addicted to drink, and though painful in parts is not so gloomy as might be imagined."—N Y Sun

+ — A L A Bkl 10:242 F '14

"Miss Findlater knows how to draw character, and she sets her people in an atmosphere that has all the appearance of reality. Quiet and reserved as her art is, the people in her pages live and compel interest."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 18 '13 250w

"Neither Scottish scenes, the description of some extraordinary eccentric and diseased personalities, nor the interest of a simple thread of sentimental action, quite saves this book from colorlessness."

— Nation 97:459 N 13 '13 230w

+ — N Y Sun p3 O 25 '13 70w

"In spite of the grimness of the theme . . . is full of a very charming humor."

+ N Y Times 18:724 D 7 '13 250w

+ R of Rs 49:374 Mr '14 130w

FINDLATER, MARY. Over the hills. *$1.35
Dutton

"Over the hills' is early Victorian in time and Scottish in scene. It has a strong and worthy heroine and a scheming and unworthy one, both in love with the same man. It is needless to say which of them wins out. . . . Horsehair furniture is not mentioned anywhere in [the story], but we feel its presence. We breathe the air of the provincial town of the early fifties."—N Y Times

+ Ind 78:291 My 18 '14 50w

+ Nation 98:433 Ap 16 '14 250w

"After all, it is neither character nor plot that holds us; it is the atmosphere of the book."

+ N Y Times 19:109 Mr 8 '14 280w

+ Outlook 106:819 Ap 11 '14 60w

FINDLATER, MARY. Tents of a night. *$1.35
Dutton A14-2527

"Titles are often mere labels, but this is something more. Miss Findlater borrows it from a phrase of Emerson's in which he observes that 'we are often made to feel that our affections are but tents of a night. . . . There are moments when the affections rule and absorb us, and make our happiness dependent on a person or persons. But in health the mind is presently seen again—its over-arching vault bright with galaxies of immutable lights.' The truth of the observation is illustrated by a romantic episode in the life of a normal young woman of to-day."—Spec

"This tale is concerned with a young woman who managed to crowd more futile discontent into her life even than the average person living under affluent conditions. Quotations from guide-books and misquotations from hymn books do not help to make the book more pleasing."

— Ath 1914,1:886 Je 27 160w

— Ind 80:66 O 12 '14 60w

"In 'Tents of a night' the Findlater talent is running thin. It is a simple tale, with a touch here and there of the insight into human nature and the good sense which comes near to being wit, so characteristic of Miss Findlater's earlier work."

+ — N Y Times 19:371 S 6 '14 180w

Sat R 118:87 J1 18 '14 280w

"Here are none of the signs of rapid manufacture; the story is the leisurely product of thoughtful and sympathetic observation. It has an excellent moral, though this is not aggressively enforced, and it is written with a distinction which never deviates into precocity."

+ Spec 112:1096 Je 27 '14 830w

FINNEMORE, JOHN. Boy scout in the Balkans.
il *$1.25 Lippincott A14-377

"An English schoolboy goes to spend his holidays on his father's tobacco farm near Adrianople. He sees the fighting on both sides, finding noble friends among Turks and Bulgarians, and many hair-breadth escapes."—Spec

"Cruelty, bloodshed, devastation are depicted with some vividness; the story is interesting; but the horrors of war are used too carelessly as settings for the hero's romantic and attractive adventures."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:329 Ap '14

"An exciting story of the recent war."

+ Ath 1913,2:sup679 D 6 110w

"Mr. Finnemore has evidently taken great pains to ensure accuracy in details, and it is particularly to his credit that he does not yield to the temptation either to paint the Turks too black or the Bulgars too white. He is at his best when dealing with actual fighting, and his description of the horrors of the Turkish débacle after Kirk Kilisse and Lule Burgas is very effective."

+ Sat R 116:sup18 N 29 '13 210w

+ Spec 111:1031 D 13 '13 60w

FINOT, JEAN. Science of happiness; tr. from the 10th French ed. by Mary J. Safford.
*$1.75 Putnam 14-3307

"That happiness is possible for all and that it is to be attained through a science of happiness, are the fundamental contentions of this book. . . . The author's chief points are that happiness cannot be found without us—it is within us. Then he insists that happiness is for all. Otherwise it could not be a science. A number of chapters are given to the development of this proposition. The last chapter endeavors to answer the question, what is happiness? He says the more we reflect the more we find that happiness is exclusively a product of the moral life."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '13 350w

"While undoubtedly possessed of some charm in the original, with the inevitable loss of this quality in the translation the volume becomes little more than the rhapsodical reflections of one who has deliberately undertaken a theme and is conscientiously bound to write a book upon it."

— Dial 57:111 Ag 16 '14 180w

"A fine study of morality that is wide in scope and well executed."

+ Educ R 48:212 S '14 40w

Ind 78:536 Je 22 '14 120w

"The author's habit of enthusiastic exaggeration . . . is abundantly in evidence in the present volume. There is, of course, nothing really new in all this, and few thoughtful readers, one imagines, would have felt any sense of injustice if the French Academy had withheld its crown."

+ — Nation 98:304 Mr 19 '14 750w

R of Rs 49:625 My '14 70w

FISCHER, LOUIS ENGELMANN. Economics of interurban railways. *$1.50 McGraw 14-2363

"This book is written for the promoter of and investor in electric interurban railways, outlining for the non-technical man the elements of operating revenues and expenses and cost of construction. . . . In the discussion of operating revenue and expenses the classifications prescribed by the interstate commerce commission are given. The author indicates how to determine what may be expected in the way of revenue from passenger business, freight handling and other sources, and presents statistics of existing roads. Similar statistics are given covering operating expenses. The forty-four items of cost of construction prescribed by the commerce commission are discussed individually and unit costs given."—Engin Rec

"A book of barely one hundred small pages is hardly sufficient to cover properly the subject of interurban railway economics." A. M. Sakolski
— Am Econ R 4:381 Je '14 250w

"The author has outlined a method of situation analysis which anyone able to invest would be able to follow. The principles are interesting and apparently sound from the engineering standpoint; the specific recommendations will probably be found in accord with the judgment of many other qualified engineers. However, the arguments and quoted data are not wholly convincing, for most engineers are wary of generalizing from such few data."

+ — Engin N 71:1166 My 21 '14 950w

"The entire book, however, should assist the prospective promoter or investor in differentiating between the good and the bad investment, and that, the author states in conclusion, is its purpose."

+ — Engin Rec 69:289 Mr 7 '14 276w

"The operating data, which have been painstakingly collected, will be useful to both layman and engineer. The deductions worked out by the author will be of interest to the latter but should be used with caution by the former lest he be misled in some respects." L. R. Nash
+ J Pol Econ 22:706 Jl '14 750w

FISH, CARL RUSSELL. Development of American nationality. il $2.25 (1½c) Am. bk. 13-21079

Descriptive note in December, 1913.

Am Econ R 4:127 Mr '14 50w

"In the opinion of the reviewer, the book is a highly practical and satisfactory execution of its purpose." C. W. Spencer

+ Am Hist R 19:651 Ap '14 620w

"Accurate, comprehensive, well written, more readable and better proportioned than Bassett's 'A short history of the United States.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:266 Mr '14 +

"In view of the excellent qualities of the volume, its failings should not be over-emphasized; but they are important enough to suggest a careful revision, especially of the closing chapters." E. M. Salt

+ — Educ R 48:306 O '14 720w

"It is not only the best book of its type, but it has positive merits that give it a high value."

+ Ind 77:72 Ja 12 '14 270w

"In a volume of 535 pages on the history of the United States since the revolution it is difficult to defend an apportionment of space which allots only 82 pages to the period since reconstruction."

— + Pol Sci Q 29:167 Mr '14 170w

"A useful companion to the ordinary history and an interesting work for general reading."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:89 Ap '14 50w

FISHER, MRS. DOROTHY FRANCES (CANFIELD). Montessori manual. il $1.25 W. E. Richardson co., 910 Michigan av., Chicago 13-23898

This book "is the outcome of a demand made for a book on the demonstrable side of the new system, rather than a discussion of the theory and spirit of the work, for the author's first book, 'The Montessori mother,' proved too deeply philosophical for general application. This volume is also the outcome of a mother's individual experience both in Mme. Montessori's Casa dei Bambini in Rome and in the application of the ideas in her own home."—N Y Times

A L A Bkl 10:267 Mr '14

"Clearly written and not lengthy, it is a volume which appeals to any one in conflict with the child problem, whether such a one be a mother or teacher."

+ N Y Times 18:751 D 21 '13 670w

FISHER, MRS. DOROTHY FRANCES (CANFIELD). Mothers and children. $1.25 (1½c) Holt 14-20611

A sensible book for parents—not for mothers only, for the author wisely recognizes that children have fathers also. The book says nothing of the Montessori method, but it is imbued with the Montessori philosophy. A recognition of the child as an individual and a respect for his personality form the basis for all that Mrs. Fisher has to say. She writes on: The background of our children's lives; Obedience; The scientific spirit for mothers; On joining the older generation; and on Maternity no longer a position for life.

"The whole-souled earnestness that Mrs. Fisher brings to her task, as well as the fact that her book of essays is widely illustrated with examples from the education of her own children, gives the book an appeal to a wide circle of readers."

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 16 '14 370w

Ind 80:338 N 30 '14 40w

"The sane, scientific and readable advice of a trained mother."

+ Ind 80:506 D 28 '14 50w

FISHER, IRVING. Why is the dollar shrinking? 2 il $1.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-15497

"The object of this book is to state, as simply as possible, the general principles which fix the scale of prices, and to show the manner in which these principles apply to the present 'high cost of living.'" (Preface) According to these principles—stated more fully in the author's work 'The purchasing power of money'—this purchasing power of a dollar depends on five factors: the volume of money in circulation; its velocity of circulation; the volume of bank deposits subject to check; its velocity; the volume of trade. How the scale of prices can be affected thru any one of these five mediums is the subject of this book, and the author promises another work later which will set forth a remedy for the periodic changes from which we suffer by "standardizing the dollar." The book has a postscript on the probable effects on prices of the war.

"A book for the intelligent man who is asking the question."

+ A L A Bkl 11:199 Ja '15

"It is a pleasure rarely experienced to read so compact, shapely, and thorough a discussion of a much-discussed problem."

+ No Am 200:950 D '14 450w

FISHER, JACOB, pseud. Quitter. il $1.20 (1½c) 12 Winston 14-15743

Like the princesses in the fairy tales of old, Sophia Burton of this story sends her lover on a quest. She will not marry him until he has proved himself; and since she desires a coat made of baby musk-ox skins she sends him off into the frozen north in search of this contraband fur. Hallam succeeds in getting what he goes after, but he never claims his reward at Sophia Burton's hands; for up in the north he finds Norma Leonard, an unsophisticated daughter of the wilds, and when he does return with his prize he brings a wife with him.

"Aside from a somewhat strained motive, the plot is well planned and the story is entertaining. The girl of the north is at least an original type."

+ — Boston Transcript p21 O 28 '14 230w

"The story moves at a lively pace and has plenty of incident."

+ N Y Times 19:449 O 18 '14 230w

FISKE, AMOS KIDDER. Honest business: right conduct for organisations of capital and of labour. *$1.25 (1½c) Putnam 14-18899

A book in which the author "has undertaken to give a description and explanation of the essential conditions that are the basis of business organisation and of the principles that control business operations." He defines business as "busy-ness" and treats it in a broad sense that includes almost all the world's activities. Some of the chapters take up: What is business? Selfishness as an economic principle; Unrest due to unfair division; Right and wrong in fixing wages and prices; Honesty in labour unionism; Can government regulate business; Ethics and religion in business, etc., and the author's conclusion, arrived at in the end is to agree with the copy-books that honesty, from the ethical and from the economic standpoint, is the best policy.

Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 30w

"His book does credit to his profession. He writes with insight into the troubles of the capitalist, and with sympathy for the troubles of labor."

+ N Y Times 19:577 D 20 '14 1000w

FITCH, ABIGAIL HETZEL. Junípero Serra; the man and his work. il *$1.50 McClurg 14-9106

"The central and dominating figure of Californian history during the early period of Spanish occupancy was the great pioneer among the first civilizers of our Pacific coast, Father Junípero Serra, a Franciscan monk." (R of Rs) "For it was he and the chain of missions he established from San Diego to San Francisco—whose remains the tourists still visit and whose characteristics have given us our so-called 'mission' style of architecture—and his diligent efforts to civilize the natives and teach them the arts of agriculture and horticulture that preserved California for Spain and so for us."

Mr. Fitch tells the interesting story simply, but with excellent effect, making frequent quotations from Fra Junípero's diary and from the work written by one of the monk's companions." (N Y Times)

A L A Bkl 11:112 N '14

"Mr. Fitch has presented a strong, well-written history of an important epoch in the history of the United States and a forceful account of many stirring incidents in the early history of Spanish California."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 27 '14 450w

+ Nation 99:692 D 10 '14 570w

+ N Y Times 19:323 Jl 26 '14 270w

R of Rs 50:117 Jl '14 50w

FITCH, ALBERT PARKER. College course and the preparation for life. *$1.25 (2½c) Houghton 14-17641

A series of eight talks first given before the undergraduates of Williams college make up the contents of this book. The author expresses a hope that they are not "essays of the didactic and moralizing sort, such as teachers and preachers might impose upon their passive and receptive hearers. They are just friendly talks of one man with some younger men. They are intended not so much to edify and instruct as to interpret and reveal." Contents: Where all the problems begin; The struggle for personal recognition; The fight for character; The religious instinct and the Christian experience; The exceeding difficulties of belief; Religion and scholarship; Is learning essential? The distaste for the beautiful.

FITCH, GEORGE. Sizing up Uncle Sam; vestpocket essays (not especially serious) on the United States. *$1 (1½c) Stokes 14-15420

These vestpocket essays, "little bundles of works on various themes," to quote the author were contributed originally to syndicate newspapers. All are concerned with things and institutions American, and are arranged in groups under headings as follows: States; Cities; Donations from nature; Arc lights in our history; Leading citizens; Political phenomena; Chief products; Exclusive features; Fads; Pastimes; Bragging points; Drawbacks; Problems.

Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 350w

+ Dial 57:464 D 1 '14 70w

+ Ind 81:102 Ja 18 '15 50w

"There is not a serious sentence in the book; it is all fun—good natured and exhilarating fun—full of jokes and inoffensive satire about American men and institutions."

+ N Y Times 20:30 Ja 24 '15 70w

FITCHETT, REV. WILLIAM HENRY. New world of the south. il 2v ea $1.75 Scribner 13-15689

"The first volume of 'The new world of the south' is 'Australia in the making.' It deals with sea adventure and discovery, the beginnings of settlement and inland exploration, and also the beginnings of lawlessness. In the second volume Dr. Fitchett continues and completes the story of Australia on the same lines, giving it the title of 'The romance of Australian history.' His aim, as he tells us, is to emphasise the human and picturesque side of the history."—Spec

+ A L A Bkl 10:138 D '13 (Review of v 1)

+ A L A Bkl 10:305 Ap '14 (Review of v 2)

"Dr. Fitchett's vivid style is too well known to need description, and it suffices to say that he has made good use of his opportunities in the present book."

+ Ath 1913,1:569 My 24 110w (Review of v 1)

"Dr. Fitchett has a fluency which is attractive."

+ Ath 1913,2:sup641 N 29 90w (Review of v 2)

"This book makes an excellent introduction to the study of Australia."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 11 '13 500w (Review of v 1)

"History frequently is much more interesting and stirring than fiction, and this never was more strikingly shown than in the story of early Australia, which Mr. Fitchett writes exceedingly well."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 10 '14 770w (Review of v 2)

+ Nation 98:393 Ap 9 '14 400w (Review of v 1)

"Mr. Fitchett has a knack of extracting all that is romantic in certain phases of history."

+ Sat R 115:751 Je 14 '13 210w (Review of v 1)

"A good, popular, and readable account of the early days of Australia—its discovery and first settlement—was much needed, and it is hardly necessary to say that Dr. Fitchett is an ideal writer on such a subject."

+ Spec 111:180 Ag 2 '13 1800w (Review of v 1)

"Literary talent of no mean order is required to tell history as a story without blurring or exaggerating the facts, and this talent Dr. Fitchett possesses in a marked degree."

+ Spec 112:100 Ja 17 '14 700w (Review of v 2)

FITZGERALD, PERCY HETHERINGTON. Memories of Charles Dickens. il *$5 Scribner

"In this volume Mr. Fitzgerald, surely one of the latest left of all Dickens's old lieutenants on 'Household words' and 'All the year round,' gives a record of his fifteen years' intimacy with the master. We use the word 'master' advisedly, for 'Boz' is Mr. Fitzgerald's hero. . . . Perhaps the most valuable chapters are those (and they constitute the greater part of the book) in which Mr. Fitzgerald describes 'Boz' in his relations with the two famous magazines. Here we have sight of many interesting personalities—some well known, some now forgotten."—Spec

Ath 1913,2:656 D 6 60w

"We cannot always agree with our author; but we must not leave his book without recognizing that it contains some amusing things and neat sayings which are much to the point."

+ — Ath 1914,1:156 Ja 31 950w

"The book is an admirable supplement to Mr. Lehman's volume of Dickens's editorial letters."

H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p10 D 6 13 200w

"The author's enthusiasm, though it has led him rather astray in the matter of length and repetition, has not prevented him from giving us some very vivid pictures of Dickens."

+ — Spec 112:443 Mr 14 '14 320w

FITZGIBBON, HENRY MACAULAY. Story of the flute. (Music story ser.) il *$1.25 Scribner 14-3429

"The flute has a history that is lost in the mists of antiquity which Mr. Fitzgibbon has traced briefly so far as possible in Chinese, Japanese, Egyptian, Greek, and Roman legends and literature. Then there is a gap of several centuries, when it reappears in mediaeval times. Here the more detailed account of the instrument begins." (N Y Times) "Biographic as well as technical details are given about those who, in several countries, helped to improve the flute, their number being surprisingly large. Military fifes and piccolos are not ignored. The gradual improvement of flute music is also described, with many interesting glimpses of the peculiarities of diverse composers, from Bach and Handel to Richard Strauss, in their treatment of this instrument." (Nation)

"An interesting account."

+ Ath 1913,2:762 D 27 25w

"Mr. Fitzgibbon discourses learnedly but with the eloquence of a devotee of the various transformations this instrument has passed through."

H: T. Finck

+ Nation 98:584 My 14 '14 130w

"There is no other popular account of this instrument that gives so much that is interesting and useful and that comes so near to exhausting the subject."

+ N Y Times 19:317 JI 19 '14 200w

"Mr. Fitzgibbon has provided an excellent history of this noise- or music-making machine, and, without going into details, we cordially recommend those who either like or intensely dislike the flute to read his pages. They are not too many, but they are not too few."

+ Sat R 117:56 Ja 10 '14 350w

FITZHUGH, PERCY KEESE. In the path of La Salle; or, Boy scouts on the Mississippi. il *$1.25 (1½c) Crowell 14-18300

Wesley Binford, a conceited and rather unpromising boy of eighteen, living in a small New Jersey town, is by chance thrown in with a party of government surveyors. They take him west with them and the qualities of manliness latent in the boy are given a chance to develop. The party which he joins is engaged in solving the problem of the Mississippi floods and their work takes them out to the headwaters of the Missouri.

"A book cram full of incident."

+ Lit D 49:1135 D 5 '14 60w

FITZMAURICE-KELLY, JAMES. Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra; a memoir; with a genealogical table. il *$2.85 Oxford A14-2994

"A succinct account of all the now authenticated main facts of the life of the author of 'Don Quixote,' with its many trials and troubles."

... This plain narrative, free from all critical mention of his works, and told in direct language, supplies a striking portrait and a clear insight into the nature of a man who, genius as he was, was in everyday affairs his own effective enemy."—Ath

"All Prof. Kelly's thorough and careful work is worth attention."

+ Ath 1913,2:490 N 1 30w

"The book fills a gap in the literature of Cervantes."

+ Ath 1914,1:58 Ja 10 600w

"Professor Fitzmaurice-Kelly has sifted the facts with the keenness of a detective, a keenness which confers interest and importance on apparently trivial occurrences. Additions may become necessary as research unearths new documents, but it is scarcely probable that any of the statements so precisely authenticated in this volume will be challenged; and all future biographers of Cervantes will necessarily make Professor Fitzmaurice-Kelly's work their starting-point."

+ Spec 112:sup162 Ja 31 '14 750w

FITZMAURICE-KELLY, JAMES, comp. Oxford book of Spanish verse, 13th to 20th century. *$2 Oxford 14-8971

"Bound in the usual blue-and-gold of the attractive 'Oxford books,' this volume presents delightful material in the form of representative Spanish poetry from the thirteenth to the nineteenth century. The ancient poems, beginning with 'Razon de amor,' are given without modernization; but from the time of Cervantes, with whom modern Spanish literature may be said to begin, the system of spelling and accentuation authorized by the Royal Spanish academy has been adopted." (Outlook) The collection is accompanied by an introduction and notes in English.

+ A L A Bkl 10:389 Je '14

"In the present volume he has given us, as was to be expected, the best flowers to be culled from the garden of which he knows every nook and corner, and his selection shows care and thought, both in the choice of specimens, and in the manner and method of their presentation."

+ Ath 1914,1:124 Ja 24 2000w

+ Cath World 100:107 O '14 150w

"The editor's fine critical sense and sound scholarship render him peculiarly fitted for his task, and he has acquitted himself in his usual happy manner."

+ Nation 98:531 My 7 '14 550w

"Carefully chosen, compactly presented, beautifully printed—surely the Oxford book of Spanish verse should delight all who, like Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly, love to delve into the soul of that singular blend of pride, melancholy, valor, and tenderness which is Spain."

+ N Y Times 19:52 F 1 '14 630w

"The introduction by James Fitzmaurice-Kelly adds greatly to the value of this book for the student of Spanish literature; it is an epitome of the history of Spanish verse from an authoritative source."

+ Outlook 106:867 Ap 18 '14 120w

+ R of Rs 49:371 Mr '14 50w

"Professor Fitzmaurice-Kelly's delightful anthology is assured of a ready welcome, all the more since a thoroughly satisfactory selection of Spanish poetry did not exist."

+ Spec 112:309 F 21 '14 700w

FLAMMARION, CAMILLE. Astronomy. (Threholds of science) il *50c (1c) Doubleday A14-2911

The distinguished French astronomer has prepared for this series a simple account of this science. The subject matter is treated in over forty brief chapters; there are many illustrations and diagrams, and an index.

"This is just the book to give young students an ardent desire to take up the serious study of the subject."

+ Ath 1914,2:360 O 10 60w

"The book is essentially one for young readers, and the subject-matter is presented in a manner both lucid and interesting."

+ — Nature 94:252 N 5 '14 270w

"The distinguished French author makes an admirable presentation of the elementary principles of astronomy, treating his subject in a notably pleasing and lucid fashion."

+ N Y Times 19:424 O 11 '14 50w

FLAMMARION, CAMILLE.—Continued.

"It is a masterpiece of simplicity, beautiful in its economy of unnecessary hard terms, and beautiful in its continuous appeal and training of the fancy. It is a perfect book for young people; and, though it is talk for children, it will surely be preferred by oldsters who begin than the ordinary text-book."

+ Sat R 118:204 Ag 15 '14 150w

"This little book is admirably adapted to answer the questions of the intelligent child who wants to know simple facts about sun, moon, and stars."

+ Spec 113:208 Ag 8 '14 40w

FLECKER, JAMES ELROY. King of Alsander.
$1.35 (2c) Putnam A14-2991

A story that has been classed with the "Zenda" type of fiction, and rightly, for, in romantic flights of imagination, the author is the equal of Anthony Hope; tho, at moments, for whimsical fancy, he suggests a parallel with Mr. James Stephens; and at other moments, leaves romance and fancy behind him, to challenge comparison with those serious young moralists of present-day English letters, Mr. Cannan, Mr. Marriott, and Mr. Waipole. He calls his story "a tale of madmen, kings, scholars, grocers, consuls, and Jews; a tale of two heroines, both of an extreme and indescribable beauty; a tale of the south and of sunshine, wherein will be disguises, mysteries, conspiracies, fights, at least one good whipping, and plenty of blood and love and absurdity; a very odd sort of tale; a tale as joyously improbable as life itself."

"Mr. Flecker is, we think, for all the vigour of his presentment, happiest in his digressions. Here his irony, humour, and lightness of touch have an admirable playing-field. It is not a profound or a searching humour, but it is vivacious and well salted."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup465 Mr 28 230w

+ Boston Transcript p24 F 10 '15 250w

"A reasonably entertaining story."

+ — Nation 99:283 S 3 '14 270w

"If the reader likes, he may think that Mr. Flecker is poking fun at the way things are done in this world and the convictions that many people hold. Or, if he prefers, he may think that the author has been jeering at a certain kind of romantic novel that has been very popular in days not long past. Or he may embrace the other possibility that Mr. Flecker was merely trying to write a novel of joyous absurdity."

+ N Y Times 19:363 Ag 30 '14 300w

"The main idea of the romance is reminiscent of 'The prisoner of Zenda'; but it must be admitted that in this story Mr. Flecker beats Mr. Anthony Hope on his own ground. He has style and humour. Not only is his romance admirably told; it is richly embroidered and set in a background of archaic survivals. Mr. Flecker has placed himself at a bound among the writers who count."

+ Sat R 117:375 Mr 21 '14 500w

"Of all the romances which trace their immediate parentage to Stevenson's 'Prince Otto' and 'The new Arabian nights,' this is one of the very best."

+ Spec 112:528 Mr 28 '14 1100w

FLEISCHMANN, HECTOR. Pauline Bonaparte<sup>2</sup> and her lovers. il $3.50 (7c) Lane 14-16579

The author tells the life story of Napoleon's sister "as revealed by contemporary witnesses, by her own love-letters and by the anti-Napoleonic pamphleteers." Sixteen illustrations accompany the text.

Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 140w

"What Mr. Fleischmann has offered us is a piece of highly overdrawn portraiture. Readers not too squeamish on points of morality will find entertainment in the adventures of this woman, surrounded by her court of warrior-lovers."

+ Lit D 50:110 Ja 16 '15 230w

Nation 100:119 Ja 28 '15 40w

FLEISCHMANN, HECTOR. Unknown son of<sup>11</sup> Napoleon. il $3 (4½c) Lane 14-18095

The author tells the story of one of Napoleon's liaisons, that with Éléonore Denuelle de la Plaigne, at one time companion to his sister Madame Murat, and follows it with an account of the life of their son, Count Léon.

"Whatever may be thought of Count Léon, this book about him by M. Hector Fleischmann is the most complete record that has appeared, or is ever likely to appear; and it will be found, by any who care for Napoleonic literature, extremely interesting from the first word to the last. But the main facts are by no means new, and most of them may be found elsewhere. The volume is attractive, and the translation has been well done."

+ Ath 1914,1:551 Ap 18 1250w

Boston Transcript p6 O 3 '14 850w

Nation 99:718 D 17 '14 350w

"This biography is as entertaining as a novel, and throws many curious sidelights on the seamy side of both empires."

+ Spec 112:838 My 16 '14 100w

FLEMING, GUY. Mostly true: a few little tragedies and some comedies. $1.30 Longmans

A collection of short stories. "A bargain" and 'An amateur criminal' are typical of Mr. Fleming's lighter vein. But they are cynical rather than genially humorous. Tragedy is the rule, although such sketches as 'This is what happened' and 'No one believed it' will interest the reader as concentrated presentations of live problems. The writer is suggestive of the late O. Henry in his ability to make a story out of anything or nothing at all." (N Y Times)

"Mr. Fleming's style is one of studied restraint, which is effective when it is employed upon a strong plot, but in this volume, in which the matter of the stories is for the most part thin, it proves somewhat tedious."

— Ath 1913,2:726 D 20 60w

"This is one of the best collections of short stories which the present season has to show."

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 29 '14 100w

"This new collection of short stories from the pen of Guy Fleming does not differ radically in spirit from former offerings, save that the author has allowed 'some comedies'—a very few, and these not unalloyed to grief—to creep in among these grim etchings of the iron side of life. The stories are characterized by the author's usual excellent economy of style."

+ N Y Times 19:88 F 22 14 200w

"A collection of stories, as short as they are clever."

+ Spec 112:103 Ja 17 '14 30w

FLEMING, JOHN AMBROSE. Wonders of wireless telegraphy. il $1.40 Gorham A14-754

"The admirable book now before us, which the principles of wireless telegraphy are 'explained in simple terms for the non-technical reader,' is a sequel to the author's work on 'Waves and ripples in water, air and ether'—a classic in its kind which deserves to be ranked with Faraday's 'Chemical history of a candle.' . . . The essential fact which it brings out is that the electric waves used in wireless telegraphy are precisely similar in all respects but size to the waves of light, and that the receiving instrument is simply an artificial eye which has to be used as long as we have no sense organ capable of receiving them."—Spec

"We doubt whether the reader who is not already well equipped with general scientific knowledge and a considerable grounding in electricity will be much wiser after reading this work than he was before, for the subject bristles with technicalities which it is impossible to explain. The pages which record the practical advantages of the new method of communication are more to the point."

+ — Ath 1913,2:459 O 25 100w

+ Nature 92:526 Ja 8 '14 250w

"Fascinating book, which can be understood throughout by the most unscientific of persons, and which narrates a true 'fairy-tale of science.'"

+ Spec 112:270 F 14 '14 750w

FLEWELLING, RALPH TYLER. Christ and the dramas of doubt. *$1 Meth. bk. 14-608

"The ever-recurring analysis of the problem of evil—the problem which is presented to every man at some time or other and which has narrowed him to many inadequate conclusions—is the theme of Mr. Flewelling's volume. His method of handling the topic is new, however, for he discusses it in terms of literary masterpieces which have been the expression of their ages upon the theme." (Chaut) The five dramas examined are: Æschylus' Prometheus unbound, Job, Hamlet, Goethe's Faust, and Ibsen's Brand.

"The book is written in a clear and simple style, with frequent flashes of insight; and it will have interest and instruction for many who are actively concerned about the problem of evil."

+ Bib World 42:391 D '13 400w

"The book is one of great strength. It reveals the author as a serious student of the problems of our day; and throughout everything is related to present-day problems. Students of social problems will find it especially illuminating." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 7 '14 1050w

Chaut 72:461 F 7 '14 150w

+ Ind 77:212 F 9 '14 60w

FLEXNER, ABRAHAM. Prostitution in Europe; introd. by J. D. Rockefeller, jr. il *$1.30 (1c) Century 14-1939

The book is the second of four volumes dealing with prostitution. The first volume, a study of New York conditions, was published last year. Mr. Flexner went to Europe for the purpose of making this investigation and his report is interesting and valuable to American social workers primarily for its exposition of the weaknesses and failures of the continental system of regulation and segregation.

"As the first authoritative and adequate treatment of the subject it will meet a definite need."

+ A L A Bkl 10:267 Mr '14

"By way of criticism, I might add that one gets the notion that Dr. Flexner had his mind made up in advance as to the things he would find. The tabular arrangement of the book is open to the objection that the material with reference to any one city is scattered throughout the various chapters." Carl Kelsey

+ Ann Am Acad 53:334 My '14 300w

+ Educ R 48:426 N '14 60w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

Hibbert J 12:915 Jl '14 60w

"Its publication is a noteworthy service. In the first place, it fills a great scientific need in straightforward, non-technical form."

+ Nation 98:75 Ja 22 '14 1100w

+ Outlook 106:293 F 7 '14 1050w

Survey 31:471 Ja 17 '14 600w

FLEXNER, BERNARD, and BALDWIN, ROGER NASH. Juvenile courts and probation. il *$1.25 (2c) Century 14-13504

A book intended as a guide to judges, probation officers, and interested laymen. It deals with the juvenile court and its administration as it exists today, but in their introduction the authors take occasion to point out some probable lines of development. They predict, for one thing, that the court of the future will deal more effectively with the family that produces the delinquent child. The subject matter is treated under five heads: The law; Organization and procedure; Probation; Reports and statistics; Forms. An appendix outlines a model juvenile court law. A list of references for reading and an index follow.

"Designed as a special help for judges and probation officers. As it is the first comprehensive treatment of the subject, it will be useful for reference as well."

+ A L A Bkl 11:55 O '14

"It is a sufficiently complete guide for those initiating this type of work in new localities, and for the general public it will serve as an exposition of methods and aims." T. D. A. Cockerell

+ Dial 57:336 N 1 '14 1050w

"Since it is the first comprehensive presentation of the problems and methods of the juvenile court, it has value as a reference volume."

+ Nation 99:286 S 3 '14 150w

"A valuable handbook for judges, probation officers and all who are interested in the treatment of delinquent and neglected children."

+ N Y Br Lib News 1:138 O '14 20w

N Y Times 19:419 O 4 '14 100w

"As a foundation for the broadening of the juvenile court as we know it to-day, the information gathered by Messrs. Flexner and Baldwin is indispensable."

+ R of Rs 50:379 S '14 200w

"A book that will interest many people although needed only in towns where juvenile courts are installed or where they are needed."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:257 N '14 90w

FLINT, EDWARD DU BOIS. Garden patch. *50c (3c) Lane (Eng ed 13-513)

A guide to the growing of the ordinary garden vegetables. "The writer has endeavored to stick closely to his subject and give in a compact and concise form the desired information so that the reader will not lose time in going over the book. It is arranged in alphabetical order with necessary index." (Preface)

"An amusing product of the intoxication which may be induced by contact with backyard soil. Each of the writer's somewhat infantile bits of instruction as to the planting and care of common vegetables is enlivened by a dash of verse, or worse." H. W. Boynton

— Nation 98:459 Ap 23 '14 350w

FLITCH, JOHN ERNEST CRAWFORD. Idler in Spain: the record of a Goya pilgrimage (Eng title, A little journey in Spain). il *$2 (2½c) McBride, Nast & co.

(Eng ed 14-13661)

This is not the book that Mr. Flitch set out to write. He went to Spain to gather material for a "Life and times of Goya," but once in the country he found, "the vital air of the Spain of to-day so good to breathe" that he was loath to exchange it for the drier air of an earlier age. "I tried to be a historian," he writes, "but, I don't know how, my own irrelevant emotions were always breaking in." So he has not given us a history of Goya or his art but has described his own pilgrimage to the cities associated with the artist's name and the galleries that hold his pictures, and perhaps he has made the man and his work more real to us by this very admixture of his own sensations and emotions.

"Whether he gossips pleasantly of modern Spain, or is engaged in interpreting Goya, his volume is always interesting."

+ Ath 1913,2:734 D 20 120w

"Charmingly desultory, picturesquely intimate, entertaining to the last degree, is Mr. Flitch's idling in Spain."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 17 '14 700w

+ Dial 57:394 N 16 '14 200w

"Much good criticism is interwoven, and perhaps rather lost, in the general whimsicality."

+ Nation 99:786 D 31 '14 200w

"Entertaining book."

+ N Y Times 19:477 N 1 '14 100w

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 17 '14 680w

FOERSTER, NORMAN; MANCHESTER, FRED. ERICK ALEXANDER; and YOUNG, KARL, comps. Essays for college men. *$1.25 (1½c) Holt 13-22802

A selected number of essays on education, science, and art. Contents: The spirit of learning, by Woodrow Wilson; Inaugural address, by Alexander Meiklejohn; Knowledge viewed in relation to learning, by J. H. Newman; Knowledge viewed in relation to professional skill, by J. H. Newman; On science and art in relation to education, by T. H. Huxley; The social value of the college-bred, by William James; On the advisableness of improving natural knowledge, by T. H. Huxley; On the educational value of the natural history sciences, by T. H. Huxley; A change of educational emphasis, by E. A. Birge; An address to students by John Tyndall; Literature and science, by Matthew Arnold; The study of art, by John Caird; First principles, by G. E. Woodberry; and How to read, by Frederic Harrison.

"Of use in college English courses, and in the study of educational principles."

+ A L A Bkl 10:305 Ap '14

+ Boston Transcript p13 D 2 '13 80w

"All these essays are specimens both of good writing and of good counsel, and no young man reading them could fail to be the better for the task."

+ Dial 56:30 Ja 1 '14 110w

Educ R 47:98 Ja '14 40w

+ Ind 78:103 Ap 13 '14 140w

"Such a collection may be found useful, both in courses in college English and in the study of educational principles."

+ Nation 97:593 D 18 '13 180w

FOLEY, JAMES WILLIAM. Letters of William Green. il *$1 (3c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-17484

William is a member of that biological group which includes Tom Sawyer, Popsy Shute, and Penrod. He is more fortunate than some of the others in the possession of a sympathetic aunt to whom he can pour out his troubles. His letters are addressed to her and are made up of records of his adventures with his chum Henry Begg, and of adroit hints concerning invitations to the country, gifts of fifty cents which will enable him to see the circus, etc.

"The author has caught the sunshine, the wild joys and the short, keen sorrows of boyhood. He has only failed in not making boys as funny as they are. The book is meant to be humorous, but with this end in view semi-humorous exploits are a little overdone."

+ — Boston Transcript p22 Ja 13 '15 250w

FOORD, EDWARD A. Napoleon's Russian campaign of 1812. il *16s Hutchinson, London

"Mr. Foord has taken pains to put together a close chronicle of Napoleon's great disaster. He does not profess to write as a soldier, or even as a theoretical strategist. He has studied the documents and tells a story. The story in itself is so vast in outline and tragic in purport that it cannot fail to overwhelm the mind even though it be recorded without the ambitious intentions of grasping at an epic presentation."—Sat R

"An accurate and fairly readable account of the series of operations accompanied by some good maps and plans."

+ Ath 1914,2:446 O 31 250w

"Mr. Foord, though his gifts are admirably suited to the work he has undertaken, is not perhaps the historian to do full justice to his mighty theme. He seems too anxious to see justice done upon a malefactor. He is too reluctant to let us see the greatness of Napoleon to impress us successfully with the greatness of Napoleon's ruin. But the facts are here, and they speak for themselves."

+ — Sat R 118:446 O 24 '14 230w

FOORD, JOHN. Life and public services of Andrew Haswell Green. il *$1.50 Doubleday 13-20569

This book is a record of Mr. Green's services to the city of New York. "When Mr. Green came into office as Controller of New York city the finances of the treasury were in a condition of dreadful confusion. A large deficit resulted from the speculations of the Tweed ring, and public works were suffering accordingly. Mr. Green fully reestablished the city's credit during his term of office from 1871 to 1876. It was this brilliant financier who originated the idea of a Greater New York. He also suggested the New York Public library as a combination of the institutions bearing the names of Astor, Tilden, and Lenox. Great also were his services to the city in promoting Central park and in the establishment of the Metropolitan museum of art and the Museum of natural history. His biographer gives us interesting details of a modest life spent in good works, public and private." (Lit D)

Boston Transcript p6 N 3 '13 380w

"The life of such a man as Mr. Green was well worth writing, and Mr. Foord's book is well worth reading. He has detailed the life of Mr. Green in a lucid and thoroughly business-like way."

+ Lit D 48:271 F 7 '14 250w

Reviewed by Henry Mann

+ N Y Times 18:449 Ag 31 '13 2050w

+ Outlook 105:46 S 6 '13 230w

R of Rs 49:509 Ap '14 200w

FOOTE, JOHN TAINTOR. Blister Jones. il *$1.20 (2c) Bobbs 13-22759

Blister Jones is a horse trainer, and the ten stories contained in this volume are stories of racing and racing life. Their titles are: Blister; Two ringers; Wanted—a rainbow; Salvation; A tip in time; Très jolite; Ole man Sanford; Class; Exit Butsy; The big train.

"The tales, after one becomes accustomed to the weird language, are clever and interesting. Certain little paragraphs of description demonstrate clearly that the author can write real English when he is so inclined, and that he has a good idea of what may make a good story, for several of these tales have excellent bits of plots. The writer draws his characters, as well as his horses, remarkably well."

+ — Boston Transcript p12 D 8 '13 190w

Ind 76:315 N 13 '13 300w

"Ten excellent and thoroughly entertaining horse stories."

+ N Y Sun p3 N 8 '13 110w

FOOTNER, HULBERT. Sealed valley. il *$1.25 (1½c) Doubleday 14-17986

The young doctor at Fort Edward, Athabasca, and the telegraph operator kicked their heels idly against a packing-box and scoffed at romance and at the possibility of its existence in the world. Enter a stolid, ill-dressed Indian girl seeking the doctor, and the two young men looked at one another and smiled sardonically; it was in this guise that "Romance" presented itself! The girl's business was with the doctor; would he come with her a six-days journey to see her mother? He deemed the request ridiculous, but his time really wasn't very valuable, and he went. And of course the doors of romance opened up to him, for the girl was Nahnya, in her own native costume, beautiful, bewitching, enchanting; and she took him up into the sealed valley, Bowl of the mountain, known to white man only in legend. Mr. Footner writes well of the land of great silence, and it must have taken true courage on his part, to give his story a logical and reasonable ending. A heroine like his might tempt an author to most unreasonable measures.

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 28 '14 320w

"There are some nicely written descriptive passages, and the plot puts no undue strain on the reader's credulity. A few idle hours may be very pleasantly spent in 'The scaled valley.'"

+ N Y Times 19:448 O 18 '14 250w

FORBES, ELMER SEVERANCE, ed. Social ideals of a free church. *$1 (2½c) Am. Unitar.
14-30275

Eleven addresses delivered at a conference held in Boston under the auspices of the department of social and public service of the American Unitarian association make up the contents of this book. Among the authors are Francis G. Peabody, Anna Garlin Spencer, Samuel M. Crothers, James O. Fagan and Charles F. Dole. The discussions all bear on the relation of the church to social service.

"The volume makes interesting reading and is a useful handbook for students or social workers. It can be recommended as thoroughly up to date in its ideals."

+ A L A Bkl 10:306 Ap '14

"The book contains several chapters on what churches are doing and what other churches may do in the way of social service."

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 25 '14 450w

FORD, JULIA ELLSWORTH. Imagina. il
*$1.50 (6c) Duffield 14-17097

The story of a lonely little boy whose artistic longings find expression in attempts at poetry and picture making. His companions are imaginary until one of them becomes real in the form of a little girl.

"Although this fanciful and charming bit of dreaming is very hard to classify, it is a delightful book, but likely to find its most appreciative audience among grown-ups who love to dream." G. I. Colborn

+ Bookm 40:447 D '14 40w

"A glaring example of how 'not' to write a story for children."

— Ind 80:414 D 14 '14 70w

"Tho the incidents are disjointed, we can see where Mrs. Ford wished to win our sympathy. The text is interspersed here and there with rather mediocre and ungraceful verses contributed to the volume by various poets."

+ — Lit D 49:128 D 5 '14 140w

N Y Times 19:480 N 1 '14 70w

FORMAN, HENRY JAMES. Captain of his soul.
12 *$1.35 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-19849

The story is told in three parts. In part one, Gilbert Spottswood, newly come to New York, looks for work, writes a play, dines at Frisquita's on Eighth street, and falls in love with Mary Fairweather. In part two, attaining to a promising position in Wall street, he forsakes his early ideals, hob-nobs with capitalists, dines at Sherry's and forgets Mary in an ignoble love affair with Mrs. Holroyd. In part three, after facing despair and contemplating suicide, he becomes master of himself. One of his plays is accepted and, with Mary, he faces the realization of some of his dreams.

"Until he comes to deal with the soul Mr. Forman is unusually clever." W. A. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 600w

"As a mere recounting of the fight of a man in a big city this book is well done, but the style is dull and commonplace."

+ — Ind 81:137 Ja 25 '15 100w

"The story, as Mr. Forman tells it, was worth while, and, what is more to the present purpose, it is worth reading."

+ Lit D 50:106 Ja 16 '15 300w

"It is clever and well thought out, an excellent example of the New York story as now written."

+ — Nation 99:690 D 10 '14 370w

"The book is full of strongly contrasted characters and situations, all alike admirably handled. It has none of the usual defects of a first essay in fiction. The plot is excellently developed, the whole well and firmly handled. It is long, but not one whit too long for the amount of material; the style is clear and natural, with many clever and quotable bits, and there is a well-thought-out philosophy of life. 'The captain of his soul' is a decidedly notable novel, and places its author at once in the ranks of those who have 'made good' in fiction."

+ N Y Times 19:487 N 8 '14 950w

"A novel of more than average quality and interest."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 31 '14 550w

FORMAN, HENRY JAMES. London, an intimate picture. il *$2.50 (5c); *$1.25 (2½c)
McBride, Nast & co. 13-24987; A14-1233

"To those whose tongue is English, London is the most romantic spot on earth," says the author in his first chapter, on "The lure of London." In the chapters that follow he tries to analyze further this illusive charm. The chapter titles are: The atmosphere of London; Trafalgar square and the Strand; A walk in Pall Mall and Piccadilly; Fleet street and the Temple; From St. Paul's to Charter house; The City; some Milton, Shakespeare, and Dickens land; The Tower; Whitehall and Westminster; Galleries and pictures; Here and there; The London of homes.

"A readable description, suggestive to the intending tourist, but not so useful as Hare, nor so charming as Lucas."

+ A L A Bkl 10:422 Je '14

Boston Transcript p25 N 26 '13 550w

"The work of a well-informed and observant sojourner in the city which he calls 'the most romantic spot on earth.'"

+ Dial 55:530 D 16 '13 150w

Reviewed by C. E. Hesselgrave

Ind 76:509 D 11 '13 50w

"An attractive title, but the author, unhappily fails to live up to its promise. As one reads, the dull conviction grows that this sort of thing has been done before, and done better."

— + Nation 97:568 D 11 '13 270w

"The work is fairly well done."

+ — N Y Sun p4 D 6 '13 110w

"It is a book of a convenient, even of a valuable sort."

+ N Y Times 18:701 N 30 '13 80w

"One can usually judge a traveler by the plane of his philosophy on man and manners in a foreign land. The scattered thoughts on the life and ways of the Londoner, by far the most charming passages of this book, quite coincide with the opinions of the ordinary observer."

+ — N Y Times 19:20 Ja 18 '14 900w

R of Rs 49:119 Ja '14 110w

"A pleasant, appreciative and yet discriminating review of present-day London."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:127 My '14 40w

FORMAN, JUSTUS MILES. Blind spot. il
11 *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 14-17093

The story of a man who believed that the world is to be saved, not by faith or good works, but by common sense; certainly sentiment and emotion must not enter as elements in its salvation. This was the creed of Arthur Stone who worked earnestly for the public good, not because he loved mankind and wished them well, but because he abhorred inefficiency and waste. He is very admirable and it is not to be wondered that Linda Grey mistakes admiration for a deeper feeling, turning away from the other man, Copley Latimer, who is not so admirable, but lovable. Latimer is a waster, but he is the kind of man who couldn't refuse to give to a street beggar, and when his sense of responsibility is once awakened, he, with his love of humanity, makes a success where the other man, guided by cold reason, fails.

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

Bookm 40:439 D '14 300w

"The book is a good one, and it narrowly escapes being much better."

+ Dial 57:390 N 16 '14 150w

FORMAN, JUSTUS MILES—Continued.

"A well-written and decidedly interesting novel."

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 70w

"Not only for its sincerity, but for its point of view, Mr. Forman's book is welcome, for it is in substance a defence of the 'via media' in social reform as well as in other relations of life—and to pursue the 'via media' in these days requires courage."

+ Natlon 99:470 O 15 '14 500w

+ — N Y Times 10:429 O 11 '14 550w

FORMAN, SAMUEL EAGLE. Advanced American history. il $1.50 (½c) Century 14-3422

The three great achievements of the American people, says the author, have been these: "they have transformed a continent from a low condition of barbarism to a high state of civilization; they have developed a commercial and industrial system of vast proportions; and they have evolved the greatest democracy the world has yet seen." His book takes account of these three aspects of growth. It begins with a chapter on Europe in the fifteenth century, and closes with a survey of the "Progressive era," from 1905 to 1914.

"Indispensable to libraries serving high school students."

+ A L A Bkl 10:350 My '14

"The book is not only an admirable text book for secondary schools, it is an excellent history for the general reader."

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 25 '14 380w

"On the whole, it is one of the best historical textbooks that has come under our notice in many years."

+ — Cath World 99:548 Jl '14 230w

"Considered as a textbook the volume has merits which grow less as it draws to a conclusion."

+ — Educ R 48:417 N '14 50w

"It is an unusual book, of the advanced-grade kind, and should accomplish the author's purpose in making the real history of America better known—that is, the history of the American people."

+ Lit D 48:632 Mr 21 '14 130w

"In spite of the fact that the manuscript has been read by several distinguished teachers of history, there are errors of fact."

+ — Nation 98:548 My 7 '14 300w

"A book like the present volume is a necessity."

+ Outlook 107:135 My 16 '14 80w

FORREST, SIR GEORGE. Life of Lord Roberts. 12 il $4 (3c) Stokes

This biography of Lord Roberts appears in America just as we have news of his death. "The plain tale of his sixty years is perhaps the finest national record on which the English of this generation have to look. It is a record to which we turn with a growing enthusiasm."

Of all the great men we know, Lord Roberts has the least pose, the least instinct for 'effect.' Yet as we read chapter by chapter the tale of his sixty years of loyal and vigilant service, many an historic reputation seems by comparison flashy and vain-glorious. . . . Sir George Forrest is to be cordially thanked for his 'unfolding' of so moving a story—unfolding it without false airs of a privileged biographer, but in a simple soldierly conviction that the facts of Lord Roberts's career should at this time be allowed to speak for themselves." (Sat R)

"The story of his life and great services up to date is vividly told, though in places it is obscured by historical detail to such an extent that the chief figure is for the time lost. Of the preparation of the book it is unnecessary to say much: it would have benefited by more careful revision, for there are misprints and slips which might have been corrected, but they are more irritating than important."

+ — Ath 1914:2:351 O 10 1050w

"Sir George's book is primarily a military history of a great fighter, and it is to be regretted that in choosing this side of his life he has not inserted a few maps or plans."

+ — N Y Times 20:25 Ja 24 '15 1350w

"Sir George Forrest has written a soldierly book, keeping, without exclamation, to fact and story. He allows his theme to shine by its own light. There could be no better way of writing a life of Lord Roberts."

+ Sat R 118:396 O 10 '14 1500w

"Sir George Forrest's narrative conveys a clear picture of Lord Roberts's character as a soldier."

+ Spec 113:594 O 31 '14 1750w

FORRESTER, IZOLA L. Polly Page motor club. il $1 (1c) Jacobs 14-619

This story is one of a series of well-written books for girls, recounting the happy adventures of Polly, a little southern girl, and her schoolmates and friends.

"A bit long, with conditions idealized, but the spirit of self-reliance, prompt action and determination is brought out and the team work is good."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:418 Je '14

FORSYTHE, ROBERT STANLEY. Relations of Shirley's plays to the Elizabethan drama. $2 (1½c) Columbia univ. press 14-21219

A contribution to the study of seventeenth century drama. The author's purpose has been to show the extent to which Shirley was influenced by the traditions of the age just preceding his own. "I have aimed to show that Shirley's true sources were, in perhaps the majority of cases, not single plays, incidents, or characters, but the aggregate, the sum total, of the similar plays, incidents, or characters, of earlier and contemporary playwrights. In other words, I have emphasized particularly the influence upon the plays of Shirley of the stock or conventional elements in Elizabethan dramatic literature." (Preface) The work is published as one of the "Columbia university studies in English and comparative literature."

FORTESCUE, CECIL LEWIS. Wireless telegraphy. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il $40c Putnam 13-15722

"This little book is intended for readers who already have some knowledge of applied science and who wish to extend their acquaintance to include the practice and principles of radio-telegraphy. . . . Through the first four chapters the book treats electrical quantities and phenomena concerned in radio transmission, and in the next two chapters the connection between the abstract principles and the actual apparatus is brought out. Six of the remaining seven chapters contain descriptions of modern applications of radio apparatus, including airship and aeroplane installations, and the text of the book is concluded by a chapter on 'History.'" —Elec World

"While the author does not attempt to treat the subject in detail and has omitted or failed to emphasize some matters of interest, he has produced a very readable book which meets its purpose excellently. It is regrettable that he has fallen into the error of describing a traveling electro-magnetic wave as having alternate rather than simultaneous maxima of electrostatic and electromagnetic forces."

+ — Elec World 63:500 F 28 '14 200w

"Prof. Fortescue has compressed into small space a very readable treatise on wireless signaling."

+ Engin. N 71:160 Ja 15 '14 150w

+ N Y Times 19:185 Ap 12 '14 70w

FORTESCUE, JOHN WILLIAM. Military history. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) $40c (1c) Putnam 14-12966

Four lectures delivered at Trinity college, Cambridge, make up the contents of this volume. The titles of the lectures are: Military history; its scope and definition; British military history; British colonial campaigns; British campaigns in India.

FOSTER, MAXIMILIAN. Keeping up appearances. il *$1.25 Appleton 14-7282

"When a young man receiving thirty-five dollars a week in a small Ohio city is offered five thousand dollars a year to go to New York, visions of unlimited wealth and a dash into society inspire prompt acceptance. . . . Adventures in house-hunting are as amusing as they are probable. Jim thinks he will take a house at about a thousand dollars a year, and is surprised to find nothing less than a thousand dollars a month. He soon discovers that $5000 a year in New York is much less than $1800 in Ohio; home life is lost, he lives at the rate of $8000 instead of $5000 and the end soon comes."—Boston Transcript

"On the whole, a readable book, though too obviously written for the sake of the lesson rather than for the story." F. T. Cooper
+ — Bookm 39:442 Je '14 400w

"What happens to them is set forth in an interesting manner."
+ Boston Transcript p10 My 2 '11 230w

"The book presents a concise, straightforward narrative, with a minimum of sensationalism."
+ Nation 98:666 Je 4 '14 300w

"The unusual quality which makes Mr. Foster's story 'different' is its truthfulness. He seems to have a thorough knowledge of the life he has chosen to portray, and he has refrained from the use of glaring colors; if his picture is not flattering, it is certainly not exaggerated."
+ N Y Times 19:207 Ap 26 '14 750w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK. Foster's complete Hoyle. il *$3 Stokes 14-19205

A revised and enlarged edition of Foster's encyclopedia of games which has long been an authority in club and home. It includes all indoor games played to-day, with suggestions for good play, illustrative hands and official laws to date.

A L A Bkl 11:184 D '14

"It is valuable for the expert and for the novice, for it considers fully all games in which either may be interested. Even the hermit will find solace in the many good games of solitaire it contains."
+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 13 '15 170w

+ Nation 99:610 N 19 '14 70w

FOSTER, ROBERT FREDERICK. Royal auction bridge with nullos. *$1.20 (1½c) Stokes 14-1746

The author of "Foster's complete Hoyle" and "Auction bridge up-to-date" offers in this volume the latest word in auction bridge including the nullo declaration and count, its rules and tactics. Foster differs from Miss Irwin in respect to the rank of the nullo count. He places it at ten, no trumps outbidding it; Miss Irwin ranks the nullo at eight, heart's outbidding the nullo. The handbook includes the official laws of royal auction bridge as adopted by the Whist club of New York, November 1913.

A L A Bkl 10:252 F '14

FOSTER, WARREN DUNHAM, ed. Heroines of modern religion. (Modern heroines ser.) il *$1.50 (2c) Sturgis & Walton 14-1434

This companion volume to "Heroines of modern progress" is "devoted to ten women who made vital contribution to the development and application of religious thought." (Preface) The ten women whose life stories have been written, treated in each case by a different author, are: Anne Hutchinson; Susannah Wesley; Elizabeth Anne Seton; Lucretia Mott; Fanny Crosby; Sister Dora; Hannah Whitall Smith; Frances Ridley Havergal; Ramabai Dongre Medhavi; Maud Ballington Booth.

A L A Bkl 10:350 My '14

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 4 '14 250w

"The biographical sketches are uniformly interesting and comprehensive."

+ Chaut 72:589 Mr 28 '14 130w

+ Ind 78:175 Ap 27 '14 50w

"Interesting biographical sketches."

+ N Y Times 19:322 Jl 26 '14 100w

"Will be useful to students in the many study classes in the churches. Ten women . . . pass in review, and are presented with fairness and some attractiveness of style."

+ Outlook 106:426 F 21 '14 50w

R of Rs 49:368 Mr '14 70w

"Readable stories."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 30w

FOSTER, WILLIAM TRUFANT, ed. Social emergency; with an introd. by C. W. Eliot. *$1.35 Houghton 14-7480

"This volume includes a series of lectures on the subject of sex hygiene and morals, most of which were originally delivered at Reed college, Portland, in 1913, by a number of doctors and educators. They are edited by the president of the college, Dr. Foster, who contributes in addition the first two and the last chapters. The medical, economic, recreational, educational and moral aspects are all treated."
—Ann Am Acad

"For the accuracy and soundness of its information, the vigor of its attitude toward vice, and its high purpose, this book is conspicuous in this field." F. F. Bernard

+ Am J Soc 25:557 Ja '15 420w

"A book for parents, teachers and ministers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:103 N '14 +

"The book is free from cant and emotionalism, and the tone which pervades the pages is to be commended. The perplexed parent as well as the student will find many valuable suggestions therein."

+ Ann Am Acad 55:278 S '14 100w

"Parents and teachers, guardians of children and social workers will find as much information and caution, as much suggestion and warning, as much wisdom in telling them what not to say or do and what to do and teach, as are to be found between any two covers—and besides there is a list of whatever else is worth reading." Graham Taylor

+ Survey 32:437 Jl 25 '14 500w

FOUNTAIN, PAUL. River Amazon from its sources to the sea. il *$2.50 (3c) Dodd

14-19730

In an earlier book on South America the author described some of his explorations into the Amazon country, but in the present work, devoted wholly to the river, he gives a more detailed account. The book is the result not of one journey but of many, made at different times and under diverse conditions. The author says: "It is not my intention to give a continuous narrative of my experiences; but rather a connected description of the river, based on these experiences." There are chapters on: The sources of the Amazon; The upper Marañon; The downward rush to the great forest; The search for the head-waters; The plains of Ecuador and Colombia; Natural history of the upper Amazon, etc. There are a number of good illustrations, and one large folding map and an index.

N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 60w

FOWELL, FRANK, and PALMER, FRANK. Censorship in England. il *7s 6d Palmer (F), London 13-22236

"The censorship, like the laureateship, still exists in England chiefly because it is an institution and not an accident. It has its roots in the past, and the past is in the heart of the true Britain. Perceiving the importance of this fact, Mr. Fowell and Mr. Palmer have applied themselves to tracing the source and following the development of this curious institution." (N Y Times) "Their research into the history of the office of Master of revels, in which the censorship had its origin, has been extensive and conscientious; the story is well told, and its recital is enlivened by a number of racy anecdotes of censorial peculiarities. In more recent times the movement for the abolition of the office of censor is fully described; the proceedings of the Royal commission of 1909 are carefully analyzed, and its findings given." (Nation)

FOWELL, F., and PALMER, F.—Continued.

+ Ath 1913,2:22 J1 5 750w

"It is an excellent history of dramatic censorship from 1347 down to recent days, and will be heartily welcomed by Henry Arthur Jones and all the other dramatists who are arguing for the abolition of the licenser of plays." H. C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 S 20 '13 420w

"The book is written frankly from the expert standpoint, but from the very violence of their antagonism to the censorship the authors have come near to spoiling their own case. Apart from blemishes of this kind and a general tendency to extravagance of statement, Mr. Fowell and Mr. Palmer have done their work well."

+ Nation 97:624 D 25 '13 550w

"It is a book conceived in a spirit of special pleading, and written com amore from a frankly partisan point of view; but it is not without scholarly pretensions." H. W. Boynton

+ N Y Times 18:457 S 7 '13 1250w

"This is the best history—though it is not the best study—of the institution yet published—very full, stuffed with readable documents, and bringing into view a host of famous names."

+ Sat R 116:56 J1 12 '13 200w

"Apart from a useful contribution to a current controversy, Mr. Fowell and Mr. Palmer have produced an informing and amusing book, marred occasionally by the tendency to overstate their case."

+ Spec 111:sup686 N 1 '13 1650w

FOWLER, ELLEN THORNEYCROFT. Her ladyship's conscience. *$1.25 (1½c) Doran 13-26684

The author tells sympathetically the story of Lady Esther Wyvern, who up to the age of forty had never had a lover. And then when love and happiness are offered to her she is too conscientious to accept them, for the man who loves her is younger than she and she fears that she cannot make him happy. She stands aside therefore while he marries a younger woman, acts the part of aunt to his little son, who is neglected by his selfish mother, and after many days comes into her own.

"The novel is not so good as 'Isabel Carnaby,' but it is better than some which the author has written. Her Ladyship is a consistent and credible character-study."

+ Ath 1913,2:493 N 1 220w

+ Ath 1914,2:212 Ag 22 170w

+ Boston Transcript p10 Je 6 '14 380w

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 27 '14 500w

+ Ind 79:32 J1 6 '14 80w

"It is the manner of telling rather than the thing told which will give the reader pleasure."

+ Lit D 48:1119 My 9 '14 200w

N Y Times 19:168 Ap 5 '14 300w

"The noble family of mother and two daughters present individual characteristics that are amusing and true to life, but the machine-made plot is too much for mortal mind."

+ Outlook 107:46 My 2 '14 90w

"The fact is that in 'Her ladyship's conscience' Miss Fowler preaches. She uses her novel as a pulpit, and she sermonises and moralises incessantly."

+ Sat R 116:560 N 1 '13 600w

+ Spec 111:1089 D 20 '13 250w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, Jr. Handbook of journalism. *$1 (3c) Sully & Kleinteich 13-16304

"This book is not, and does not claim to be, a cyclopedia of journalism. Nor does it pretend to be a guide to newspaper work. . . . Instead of attempting to teach, the author has given facts and information. . . . He offers this book as a series of moving pictures of newspaper life taken by the unprejudiced camera." (Chapter 1) Brief chapters are devoted to each of the departments of a newspaper: to The book reviewer, The financial editor, The political editor, The sporting editor, etc. Others discuss Schools of journalism, The small daily newspaper, Country newspaper opportunities. Others are devoted to the purely mechanical side of newspaper making.

"Altogether it is a capital book for its purpose."

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 10 '14 300w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, Jr. 1000 things worth knowing. *50c Sully & Kleinteich 13-22786

An encyclopedia in brief. "In the space of a few hundred pages the writer has presented the thousand or more things which are really worth knowing, and which are usually described at unprofitable length." (Preface)

+ N Y Sun p7 D 6 '13 40w

"A handy little book for small libraries, containing some very useful data and statistics previously found only in more expensive reference works."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:55 Mr '14 30w

FOWLER, NATHANIEL CLARK, Jr. Stories and toasts for after dinner. *50c (1½c) Sully & Kleinteich 14-2197

The author introduces his collection of stories with short chapters on The toastmaster, The toast, and The after-dinner story. The first of these in particular, is filled with good advice which a would-be toastmaster would do well to heed. The stories and toasts themselves, however, take up the greater part of the volume.

A L A Bk1 11:68 O '14

"This little book with its exceedingly brief chapters, and its many bright and humorous stories will do much to help the untrained after-dinner speaker to say his few words with comfort to himself and pleasure to his listeners. The stories are brief, bright, witty, and humorous; and the collection is very large, when the size of the book is considered."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ap 15 '14 250w

"A useful little book, but more commonplace in its selections than one could wish."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 30w

FOWLER, WILLIAM WARDE. Roman ideas of deity in the last century before the Christian era. *$1.40 Macmillan 14-13966

In this series of six lectures, delivered originally at Oxford. "Dr. Warde Fowler, than whom there is no greater authority living on the subject of Roman religion, attempts to reach some understanding of the views of the ordinary Roman on the divine nature in the last century before Christ. The question is difficult because the material for deciding it is so overlaid with alien importations." (Spec) "Such writers as Cicero and Lucretius were dealing with Greek material which had been imported more for literary uses than for spiritual benefits. To discover how far this foreign thought had become effective in social, civil and political life at Rome is the difficult task which the lecturer has set himself." (Boston Transcript)

"A very interesting and suggestive volume."

+ Ath 1914,2:300 S 26 700w

"The six lectures leave the discussion incomplete as it must always remain. This is not saying that they will not well repay the careful reading of the interested student. They will prove suggestive on many points though not conclusive on any."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 24 '14 350w

Reviewed by K. Preston

+ Class J 10:89 N '14 350w

"This is a most interesting and suggestive piece of work on a particular branch of a study to which a great deal has been contributed by scholars in late years, no small part by Dr. Fowler himself. If any fault may be found with it, it is that, dealing as it does with much that is matter of recent investigation, occasionally we feel that too much importance is attached to what is new—to what time must put in its proper place in the general body of evidence."

Lawrence Solomon

+ — Hibbert J 12:333 Jl '14 1100w

+ Outlook 108:53 S 2 '14 180w

Sat R 118:52 Jl 11 '14 1300w

+ Spec 113:237 Ag 15 '14 1500w

FOX, MARION. Ape's-face. *$1.25 (1½c) Lane 14-19363

Here is a theme worthy an Algernon Blackwood. An old house on the Wiltshire downs, permeated with an earthy smell, is the setting for a series of weird adventures in which a middle aged antiquarian figures. Among the ill-assorted group sheltered by the ancient roof is a young girl who possesses a face that proclaimed her a throw-back to an extinct species. She sheds light upon a four-century old mystery, with a tragedy at the core of it,—a tragedy whose ghost in the form of a curse reappears each hundred years. Not only is the strange power felt under roof but more especially far out on the downs where on a bitter December night the original horror had been enacted, and had outraged the sanctity of the Druid shrine enthroned there. The atmosphere of superstition and fear abounds thruout, thickly portentous at times.

"A story of measurable interest, whose 'thrills'—immemorially characteristic of its kind—wait upon 'mystery.' The ordinary reader will, however, find his greatest enjoyment of the book in its descriptions of the downs."

+ Boston Transcript p26 N 25 '14 430w

"The novel is well written, with vivid descriptions and an effect on impending calamity, of unseen, indefinable, shuddering horror, admirably contrived to keep the nervous awake at night."

+ N Y Times 19:517 N 22 '14 320w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. Girls and boys; scenes from the country and the town. il *$2.25 Duffield 13-23883

"There are different stories in the book, all written in English, but set into the full page colored picture on every other leaf is a full description of it in French. The illustrations are distinctly French, little French children in looks and dress, and the coloring is the coloring of the French artist. Little peasant children are shown with wooden sabots on their feet, the boys wearing long smocks and carrying quaintly shaped baskets on their shoulders."

—N Y Times

+ A L A Bkl 10:290 Mr '14

"The scenes from the country and town are described in simple text, feelingly translated by some silent collaborator. The pictures are expressive of the moods so exquisitely hinted at by M. France. The publishers seem to have heeded our long-raised cry to import whatever Boutet de Monvel has done for children; he is a prince among illustrators. All his pictures reproduce like water-colors, and all display a sympathy with the awkward dreaminess of childhood."

+ Lit D 47:1121 D 6 '13 120w

"The text is full of that understanding of child life which will fascinate the grown reader, and gain the immediate sympathy of the young. The illustrations are by a master hand of simple line and color. The French has been feelingly translated. Altogether the combination is refreshing."

+ Nation 97:543 D 4 '13 80w

N Y Times 18:695 N 30 '13 100w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. On life and letters; tr. by A. W. Evans. *$1.75 (2c) Lane 14-14137

The second volume of "La vie littéraire," a four volume collection of articles contributed to Le temps. The writer comments in his Preface that "All books in general, and even the most admirable, seem infinitely less precious for what they contain than for what he who reads them puts into them." It is what M. France has put into masterpieces as he has given himself free rein among them that finds its way into the varied chapters of this volume.

"In respect of translation, Mr. Evans has avoided the failure that would have awaited many another."

+ — Ath 1914:2,12 Jl 4 630w

Nation 99:501 O 22 '14 550w

"It equals, if it does not surpass, in interest the one already published." Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 19:586 D 27 '14 1500w

Sat R 118:177 Ag 8 '14 850w

"M. France's style is so personal and charming that it is bound to lose something in translation, but what he says is always so interesting that it can be read with pleasure in Mr. A. W. Evans's dignified English."

+ Spec 113:26 Jl 4 '14 50w

FRANCE, ANATOLE, pseud. Revolt of the angels; tr. by Mrs. Wilfrid S. Jackson. *$1.25 (1½c) Lane 14-17990

In the heavenly hierarchy, the guardian angels who watch the footsteps of their earthly charges occupy the lowest rank, but they are compensated by certain advantages denied those who dwell entirely in celestial spheres. The guardian angel of Maurice d'Espervieu, for instance, finding himself at leisure during the time spent by Maurice in sleeping off the effects of a too gay life, had access to the great scientific and theological library gathered together by succeeding generations of the d'Espervieu family. And like many another who has read too deeply of science and theology, the angel lost his faith in the God of the theologians, and, assuming earthly form, he gathered together the other fallen angels of Paris and organized a revolt against heaven. It is a work of clever satire, with some especially timely thrusts at militarism.

"There are shrewd sentences and clever characterizations, but it is all about as real as 'Paradise Lost.'"

— + Boston Transcript p25 N 25 '14 500w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:455 D 1 '14 300w

"The translation, as in the others of this series, is correct enough, but gives little sense of the felicity and delicacy of Anatole France's prose."

+ — Nation 99:524 O 29 '14 300w

"It is difficult to recall a bigger, wittier, or more entertaining satire within the past hundred years. But it has its message as well as its satire." Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 19:445 O 18 '14 2150w

"To some it will seem flippant and heartless, to others blasphemous, while many will be found to condemn the author's lack of reticence in the treatment of sex and matter that many people regard as sacred. The book abounds in sayings wise and witty. Its frank, outspoken ideas and revolutionary doctrines show an extraordinarily wide knowledge and diversity of mind, while there are glints of genius revealed in its deep wisdom. M. France, for all his smiling gaiety, is deeply serious."

+ — Sat R 118:sup2 N 14 '14 780w

FRANCILLON, ROBERT EDWARD. Mid-Victorian memories. *$3 Doran 14-30425

"Mr. Francillon has given us his recollections of a life mainly spent in novel-writing and journalism, and the result is a pleasant, gossiping volume dealing with a small part of the literary history of London from 1870 onwards. His educational and legal memory goes back much further, and many names of interest appear in the pages relating to his school and college years."—Spec

"Pleasant, gossiping recollections."

+ A L A Bkl 10:389 Je '14

FRANCILLON, ROBERT EDWARD

"Mr. Francillon's own 'Memories' form a record which present-day readers will find thoroughly agreeable, and which the historian of the future ought not altogether to neglect, especially if manners are his study. With well-known figures the author is not quite successful, chiefly because his good nature prevents him from dwelling on their weaknesses."

+ — Ath 1913,2:690 D 13 1050w

"An entertaining, though somewhat rambling, book of reminiscences."

+ — Sat R 116:786 D 20 '13 280w

"An agreeable addition to the class of literature to which it belongs."

+ Spec 112:354 F 28 '14 600w

FRANCIS, J. O. Change; with an introd. by 12 Montrose J. Moses. il *75c (2½c) Doubleday
14-16928

This volume of the "Drama league series" presents a play that was withdrawn from the stage in New York last winter before its merit had been recognized. The scene is laid in a Welsh mining village, and the problem of capital and labor enters into the action, but the real dramatic conflict is that between the generations, inevitable when the social order is in the process of changing.

"As is often the case with prize plays and stories, it is sincere, respectable, and rather dull. The action moves very slowly; there are three or four moderately interesting characters, but none of compelling interest; the play lacks focus." H. E. Woodbridge

+ — Dial 58:47 Ja 16 '15 140w

R of Rs 51:118 Ja '15 250w

"In book form its excellent workmanship and forceful ideas must make a stronger impression on American readers than when it was produced in the Booth theater in New York last January."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 500w

FRANCKE, KUNO, and HOWARD, WILLIAM
1 GUILD, eds. German classics of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. il 20v $90
German publication society 14-2927

v 1-5 The first volume of this series of translations of German classics contains a general introduction by Richard M. Meyer of Berlin university. The remainder of the volume, with all of volume 2, is devoted to Goethe. Volume 3 is given up to Schiller. Representative names in volume 4 are Jean Paul Richter, Schlegel, Novalis, Hoelderlin, Tieck, von Kleist, and von Humboldt; in volume 5, Schleiermacher; Fichte; Schelling, the brothers Grimm, Arndt, Uhland, Eichendorff, Hauff, Rueckert and Platen. Biographical and critical matter by recognized authorities makes up a part of the contents of each volume.

"The work has been wisely and skillfully laid out."

+ + Lit D 47:1074 N 29 '13 450w (Review of v 1-3)

+ Lit D 48:1121 My 9 '14 150w (Review of v 4-9)

"The intrinsic importance of what has so far been done scarcely justifies the elaborate apparatus of editors, especial writers, translators, and consulting boards of foreign authorities, that has been set in motion for this enterprise. The paper is scarcely good enough, and the illustrations vary greatly in merit, some of them being very pleasing, while others are poor reprints."

+ — Nation 97:539 D 4 '13 1000w (Review of v 1-3)

"The poetic translations, on the whole, are spirited and give more of the atmosphere of the original than do the prose renderings."

+ — Nation 98:368 Ap 2 '14 570w (Review of v 4 and 5)

"In so far as translations can render the idea of the originals these three volumes should achieve the object of the editors."

+ N Y Sun p6 O 11 '13 600w (Review of v 1-3)

"The prose translations, old and new, so far have been eminently satisfactory. 'The German classics' is certainly fulfilling the purpose of its projectors in bringing some idea of German culture and literature within the comprehension of those who have not mastered the language."

+ N Y Sun p3 D 27 '13 550w (Review of v 4-5)

"These first three volumes make us quake for the rendering of modern lyrics, but, after all, even a bad translator cannot ruin a good play or a good story entirely, and we can look forward to the next volumes of the 'German classics' series with more equanimity."

+ — N Y Times 18:765 D 28 '13 1400w (Review of v 1-3)

"There are some unfortunate typographical errors, but on the whole the series gives evidence thus far of care and scholarship."

+ — N Y Times 19:211 Ap 26 '14 1450w (Review of v 4-9)

"The type is clear, and, in general, the first three volumes indicate an excellent and readable work from a mechanical standpoint. It cannot fail to be of permanent value to American students and lovers of all that is permanent and great in literature."

+ R of Rs 49:125 Ja '14 480w (Review of v 1-3)

R of Rs 49:381 Mr '14 110w (Review of v 4-5)

+ R of Rs 50:123 Jl '14 170w (Review of v 6-9)

FRANK, TENNEY. Roman imperialism. *$2.50
Macmillan 14-6613

Roman history with a modern smack is suggested by such chapter headings as "The foreign policy of a socialistic democracy," "Senatorial laissez faire," and "Pompey's army in the service of capitalists." "The growth of the imperialistic history of Rome is full of lessons for modern times. Conquests brought wealth; wealth brought luxury; luxury brought effeminacy and all kinds of excesses. Yet Professor Frank inclines to attribute the Roman career of imperialism to the inconsiderate action of the democracy unrestrained by the mere conservative senators." (Boston Transcript)

Reviewed by W. L. Westermann

+ — Am Hist R 20:131 O '14 800w

Reviewed by R. V. Magoffin

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:691 N '14 1000w

"Here is an author who has sifted the wheat from the chaff with extraordinary success."

+ — Ath 1914,1:582 Je 27 1200w

"His book is a valuable and carefully digested study of a wonderful experiment." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 29 '14 1950w

+ Ind 78:400 Je 1 '14 300w

+ Lit D 49:900 N 7 '14 450w

+ Nation 99:78 Jl 16 '14 480w

"The book is an interesting study of one of the most important periods of the world's history and ought to have meaning also for every student of our own national affairs and tendencies."

+ N Y Times 19:311 Jl 12 '14 120w

"A work that both rationalizes and enlivens with intellectual interest the period of which it treats."

+ No Am 200:477 S '14 1000w

"Both in its text and in the critical notes appended to each chapter this is an admirable specimen of thorough scholarly work."

+ Outlook 107:317 Je 6 '14 370w

Spec 112:1041 Je 20 '14 130w

FRANKAU, JULIA (FRANK DANBY, pseud.).
Full swing. *$1.35 (1c) Lippincott 14-8472

The story of a woman with a conscience who, always with the best of intentions, wrecked her own life and the other lives that touched hers most intimately. A feeling of duty toward her estate and of devotion to a young step-sister led Agatha Wanstead to refuse the man whom she obviously should have married. Later, after the young sister has run away from home to marry an improvident youth, she herself makes an ill-considered and disastrous marriage. In the latter part of the story her son Desmond and her niece, Eunice, daughter of the runaway sister, occupy the stage, and again Agatha's blundering interference shapes the course of events.

"In the book as a whole there is far too much incident; a superfluity of detail and intrigue. This excess lowers the book from the standard it might possibly have attained as a psychological study; it lessens the realism, infringes upon the conviction."

+ — Ath 1914.1:sup735 My 23 380w

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper
+ Bookm 39:555 Jl '14 1500w

"It is so good a story in parts that the reader becomes frequently exasperated because it is not better in its entirety." E. F. Edgett

+ — Boston Transcript p10 My 16 '14 1200w
Nation 99:75 Jl 16 '14 230w

"There are small defects in a story in which much is uncommonly good."

+ — N Y Times 19:234 My 17 '14 650w

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron
+ Pub W 86:551 Ag 22 '14 450w

"There is the same breadth of canvas, audacity of theme and phrase, that marked her earlier books, but withal a firmer handling, a wider outlook, a clearer understanding of life and human nature. To her strength and fearlessness has been added the motive of pity. Her sympathies have broadened, her asperities have been toned down. 'Full swing' is undoubtedly the best novel she has yet written."

+ Sat R 117:443 Ap 4 '14 350w

"The whole book leaves the reader with a feeling of irritation that so much clever and careful work should have been expended on a theme so exasperating."

+ — Spec 112:837 My 16 '14 160w

FRASER, CHELSEA CURTIS. Every boy's book of handicraft, sports and amusements. il $2 Page 13-21866

A handbook for boys in which "every conceivable activity of youth is prescribed for: wood-working and electricity, printing and collecting, camping and gardening, to mention only a few." (Nation)

+ A L A Bkl 10:247 F '14

"There are seven pages of fun here."

+ Nation 97:571 D 11 '13 50w

"A complete encyclopedia of every form of boyish activity."

+ N Y Sun p4 N 8 '13 80w

FRASER, EDWARD. Napoleon the gaoler. il $1.75 Brentano's

"No fewer than half a million men of different nationalities passed the frontiers of France between 1803 and 1814 as captives. Of these about 12,000 were British. . . . It is with the latter that the book now before us is principally concerned." (Ath) "From old documents, from letters, diaries, and forgotten books Mr. Fraser has brought together a series of very graphic narratives and anecdotes which show that the life of the prisoner of war was a less happy one in those days than it is a hundred years later, though one hears nothing in these accounts of unnecessary atrocities upon the battlefield. Chapters are given to the detention depot of the officers at Verdun, to the dungeons at Bitchie and Sedan, to the prison at Givet, and to special narratives of individual captives, while two interesting sections contrast the different treatment accorded by Napoleon to his British and continental prisoners." (N Y Times)

+ Ath 1914.2:327 O 3 850w

"Some of these chapters are as interesting as any to be found in the ordinary book of adventures which makes no pretense to be anything but fiction. The book is altogether eminently readable, written by an Englishman for Englishmen, but nevertheless full of matter not dependent on national sympathies for its interest; a chain of stirring narratives of hair-breadth adventures." E. W. H.

+ Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 300w

+ N Y Times 19:585 D 27 '14 320w

Spec 113:720 N 21 '14 60w

FRASER, JOHN FOSTER. Amazing Argentine. 7 il $1.50 Funk 14-11768

An informing series of sketches of a tour in Argentine. "While the book is written in a somewhat popular style, Mr. Fraser has very evidently endeavored to picture things as they are and to give the reverse side of Argentina's glitter and wealth with a shrewd impartiality. The book is well illustrated and well divided in its attention to different phases of Argentine life, so that it makes an excellent study of a popular sort though it assuredly does not present the 'Yankees of South America,' in altogether favorable light." (Springfield Republican)

"The easy, popular style and absence of detail will commend the book to the average reader."

+ A L A Bkl 11:25 S '14

+ — Ath 1914.2:171 Ag 8 1000w

Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 1150w

+ Ind 80:30 O 5 '14 100w

+ Lit D 49:247 O 17 '14 220w

"The Argentines probably will not like this very frank and keenly observant Britisher, but he has succeeded in writing a thoroughly satisfactory description of their country."

+ Nation 99:525 O 29 '14 700w

"He has a newspaper man's keenness of observation, facility in massing facts, and seeing their significance, and that gift of words which makes easy, interesting reading."

+ N Y Times 19:256 My 31 '14 900w

"This may be distinguished from other books on Argentina because of its emphasis on South American trade."

+ Outlook 107:819 Ag 1 '14 450w

R of Rs 50:117 Jl '14 70w

"His style is colloquial and easy, his impressions vivid and occasionally a little jerky, his judgment and advice as to the present land speculation and the future of the Argentine and its finance thoroughly sound. Mr. Fraser has the valuable gift of always being able to interest the average reader, who is rather impatient of detail, but wants a broad view of the whole subject."

+ — Sat R 117:681 My 23 '14 100w

"We have had of late so many books dealing with the South American countries, and filled almost from cover to cover with superlatives, that it is a peculiar satisfaction to come upon a book of description that frankly aims at truthful criticism and even dares to do a little muck-raking."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Je 4 '14 800w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:261 N '14 60w

FRASER, MARY (CRAWFORD) (MRS. HUGH FRASER). Italian yesterdays. 2v il $3.00 Dodd 13-25636

"Enchanting Italy, its history, modern and mediæval, its art, its legends, and its sunshine form the subject of Mrs. Fraser's latest work. Her gossipy manner of writing is always delightfully entertaining. Having lived in Rome many years, she knows Italy and the Italians as few know them, and she thereby is able to give many an unusual anecdote and bit of history. A large part of these two volumes is devoted to pagan Rome, the beginning of Christianity and the 'stories and legends of saints and sinners long passed away from the land where they played their parts—some virtuous, some infamous, but all notable and worth remembering for the glory or the tragedy of their lives.'"—Boston Transcript

FRASER, MARY—Continued.

"The book follows no definite order, is often inaccurate, and does not approach in interest or value her 'Reminiscences of a diplomatist's wife.'"

+ — A L A Bkl 10:221 F '14

+ — Ath 1914,1:445 Mr 28 1200w

"It is indeed unfortunate, however, on the positive as well as the negative side, that so little of the book is devoted to her personal experiences. These are charming and tender, and clad in rhythmic, eloquent prose accomplished yet spontaneous." A. de Vivier

+ — Bookm 39:90 Mr '14 400w

"To those who know and have enjoyed Italy, and to those who hope to see this land of sunshine, these volumes will carry a persistent message."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 11 '13 520w

+ Cath World 99:544 Jl '14 150w

"Rather for her pages of personal experience than for her divagations into various eras of the Italian past do we value Mrs. Fraser's book." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 56:108 F '14 1450w

"Well-written volumes." C: E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:510 D 11 '13 60w

+ Lit D 48:913 Ap 18 '14 1150w

"There is a good deal that is amusing in the book, but the random method, with constant slants in all directions, grows tiresome, and the ratio of substantial grain of information to chaff of comment and illustration is unduly small."

+ — Nation 98:88 Ja 22 '14 120w

"There are many unfamiliar historical tales told in these volumes, and always well told."

+ N Y Sun p5 D 27 '13 1050w

+ N Y Times 19:295 Je 28 '14 1600w

R of Rs 49:369 Mr '14 70w

+ Spec 112:1095 Je 27 '14 600w

FRASER, MARY (CRAWFORD) (MRS. HUGH FRASER) and FRASER, HUGH CRAWFORD. Seven years on the Pacific slope. il $3 (3c) Dodd 14-21644

The author of "A diplomatist's wife in many lands," in collaboration with her youngest son, tells the story of their seven years spent in northwestern Washington. She is a woman who by wide experience in many countries has become a citizen of the world, but she found seven years spent in this little valley, with its primitive living conditions, well worth while, because it taught her that "in this great world, swayed by the love of money and the baseness of snobbery—there is one—perhaps—the only true—republic, where a man is judged by what he is, not by what he has." By way of illustrations the book has pictures from photographs that show the beauty of the country.

"From the interesting introductory chapter, with its free mental attitude, rather odd for a woman of the conventional world, to the closing lines of sincere appreciation of the great natural beauty and the splendid human material to be found in the far West, the book pulses with the spirit of new places."

+ Bookm 40:682 F '15 670w

FRASER, MARY (CRAWFORD) (MRS. HUGH FRASER), and STAHLMANN, J. I. Honour of the house. $1.30 Dodd 13-22278

An Italian romance of the beginning of the eighteenth century. "The 'house' of the title is that of the Bordelacquas, and the tale opens with the marriage of Prince Bordelacquas's elder son and heir, Don Giacinto, a lad 14 years old, to Donna Fiordelisa Trevigliano, princess of Asti in her own right, a child four years his junior. . . . Clouds threaten in the feud already existing between the Prince and his son, as well as in the relations of the Princess with her 'Cavaliere servente,' De Curtis, and a year later, while Fiordelisa is in the convent whither she has been sent to complete her education, the storm breaks. Of how a terrible crime was fastened upon innocent shoulders and a woman's love and faith defeated the wicked machinations of a great noble, the story presently tells." (N Y Times)

"At times the action moves a little slowly for a story of this kind, but those readers who have the courage to persevere will find their patience amply rewarded."

+ — Ath 1913,2:658 D 6 60w

"The novel is dramatic, and the setting brilliantly descriptive, although the wonderful exploits of the heroine are rather improbable and far fetched."

+ — Cath World 98:392 D '13 200w

"For once we come across a romance of Italy in which the authors have knowledge enough of the country and the language to make no blunders in the terms they use or the proper names. The story halts somewhat while the authors explain carefully the customs of the old Italian family life, the power of the father, the strange dependents of all sorts, the curious obligations."

+ — N Y Sun p3 N 15 '13 220w

"The book is well written and impresses the reader as being the outcome of a real knowledge of the period it portrays. It is a dignified, firmly wrought piece of work, which deserves, and will no doubt receive, respectful attention."

+ N Y Times 18:600 N 2 '13 280w

"The character of Fiordelisa, the heroine, is extremely attractive."

+ Spec 111:1127 D 27 '13 30w

FRASER, THURLOW. Call of the East. il $1.25 (1½c) Revell 14-15749

Formosa during the time of the Franco-Chinese war of 1884-85 is the scene of this story. The chief character is Donald Sinclair, a young Canadian who comes out to the Orient as a ship's doctor and remains there as a medical missionary. Jessie MacAllister, the attractive daughter of a Scotch merchant, is the girl of the story. One of the characters, a pioneer missionary, is taken from life and introduced under his own name, Dr. MacKay.

A L A Bkl 11:76 O '14

"The romance is well sustained, and certain little mysteries, not very deep, serve to add to the interest in the tale. Doubtless, as the writer intended, the best part of the story is the descriptive part relating to the East and her people."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '14 250w

N Y Times 19:379 S 13 '14 120w

FREEMAN, MARY ELEANOR (WILKINS)<sup>10</sup> (MRS. CHARLES M. FREEMAN). Copy-cat, and other stories. il $1.25 (1½c) Harper 14-16474

A collection of New England stories and stories of child life. The titles are: The copy-cat; The cock of the walk; Johnny-in-the-woods; Daniel and little Dan'l; Big sister Solly; Little Lucy Rose; Noblesse; Coronation; The amethyst comb; The umbrella man; The balking of Christopher; Dear Annie.

"Local color and character drawing are good, but in almost all the insistence on the somber and the unusual makes them rather depressing."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:122 N '14

"The stories are all exactly what might be expected of Miss Wilkins, and that means that they are what we wanted from her." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 S 26 '14 1100w

+ Ind 80:66 O 12 '14 50w

"All the realism, all the terseness, of Mrs. Freeman's ordinary vein is in these eight stories of New England village life; but in a majority the customary somberness is palliated by idealism of effect, while fancifulness plays an unwonted part."

+ Nation 99:498 O 22 '14 300w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton
Nation 99:654 D 3 '14 50w

"All the stories command interest, and, it is needless to say, are distinguished by fine workmanship and subtle insight."

+ N Y Times 19:475 N 1 '14 200w

"The twelve stories contained in the volume lack charm, but they are full of character."

+ Outlook 108:604 N 11 '14 130w

"It is a worthy and wholly interesting addition to her considerable list of fiction."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 19 '14 350w

FREEMAN, RICHARD AUSTIN. Uttermost farthing. il *$1.20 (2c) Winston 14-6233

The author tells the story of a "savant's vendetta" in seven chapters each of which recounts an adventure. The savant, Dr. Challenor, is bent on revenging the death of his wife. She has been murdered by a burglar who has broken in to the house. In his determination to get the right man, Challenor takes the lives of a number of other house-breakers, justifying himself on the ground that he is doing a service to society. His twenty-fifth victim proves to be the man he has been hunting. The bare outline of the story is repellent, but the author carries it thru with a skill that minimizes the element of horror.

"A story of sensational distinction, but nobody should read it unless he is prepared for a recital of horrors."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap '29 '14 250w

N Y Times 19:188 Ap 12 '14 60w

Reviewed by M. K. Reely

Pub W 85:1346 Ap 18 '14 600w

FRENCH, ALLEN. Beginner's garden book. il *$1 (1c) Macmillan 14-9815

A textbook for the upper grammar grades. It covers both school and home gardening. Beginning with the fall work at the opening of school and following the course of the year, it completes the garden cycle. The civic value of gardening is taught indirectly. The illustrations of growing things, tools and garden arrangement are many and helpful.

"An admirable guide, interestingly written. More comprehensive than Weed's 'School garden book.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:127 N '14

"A very practical and useful book."

+ Educ R 48:423 N '14 20w

"Is admirable for children and for adults as well."

+ Nation 99:330 S 10 '14 70w

"The treatment of fruit culture and bastard trenching is inadequate, and grafting and budding are not even mentioned, but, on the other hand several matters are dealt with that do not often find a place in gardening manuals."

+ Nature 94:362 D 3 '14 170w

FRENCH, ALLEN. Runaway. il *$1.25 (2c) Century 14-16941

A story for boys and girls that is full of exciting adventures and mysteries. The scene of the story is a valley in Massachusetts in which the Dodd woolen mill is located. The Dodds are a family of happy, cultured people who live a simple and contented life. To them comes a sophisticated city cousin with a streak of yellow in his nature, and almost at the same time there appears a young waif who cannot be accounted for and on whom suspicion falls. Who was Rodman, what became of Brian's wallet, why did Rodman distrust Mr. Lee are some of the puzzling matters to be cleared away.

"Mr. French has written better books. The present narrative, while it grips the attention, is too long drawn out."

+ Lit D 49:1128 D 5 '14 220w

+ N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 70w

FRENCH, ANNE (WARNER). Gay and festive Claverhouse; an extravaganza. il *$1 (3c) Little 14-17285

In the first chapter Claverhouse receives his sentence: with extreme care he may continue to live for six months. He sets about preparing for death, deciding that his most urgent duty is to make the girl who is in love with him fall out of love; for to die suddenly and leave her would be to assure her life-long devotion to his memory. It is as unnecessary to state that his efforts fail as it is to say that the doctor's diagnosis proves wrong.

"Unfortunately from chapter eighteen on, this story flattens out into a feeble mediocrity. The denouement is not unexpected; it is not a surprise; it is so inevitable that to read the last three chapters is an anticlimax. The dialogue is breezy, and the character drawing slight. Still 'Claverhouse' may well be endured upon a rainy afternoon."

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 7 '14 330w

Ind 80:340 N 30 '14 60w

"A mirth-provoking companion for an idle hour."

+ N Y Times 19:484 N 1 '14 110w

FRENCH, ANNE (WARNER). Sunshine Jane. il *$1 (1½c) Little 14-3106

Sunshine Jane is a new kind of nurse who goes about living and teaching "New thought." Her entrance into her Aunt Susan's home, where Aunt Susan has been for years a helpless invalid under the austere care of Aunt Matilda, brings about the rejuvenation of those two doleful ladies, and spreads the infection of sunshine thru the whole village. In one particular Jane's theory that you get just what you want seemed to prove false, for she had emphatically not wanted to marry. But Lorenzo Rath—who had the good sense to laugh at his own name—is converted to her belief, and by wanting Jane hard enough he wins her, thereby proving the truth of the theory after all.

"A wholesome 'new thought' story, not of absorbing interest."

+ A L A Bkl 10:325 Ap '14

"It would be a hardened misanthrope who could withstand the cheer of this beaming little story." Douglas Nettleton

+ Bookm 39:223 Ap '14 300w

"If the reader can succeed in accepting philosophically the unrestrained proselytizing zeal of the author which results in the promulgation—in season and out of season—of the doctrines of one of the branches of that mental science, immemorially old, but called in our day 'New thought,' he can spend pleasantly an hour or two reading of the marvels—they are nothing short of that—which Sunshine Jane wrought in the little New England village, whither she comes on an errand of mercy."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 280w

"Her pretty but improbable story is told with the humorous exaggeration characteristic of the author of 'The rejuvenation of Aunt Mary.'"

+ Ind 78:54 Ap 6 '14 100w

"The reader will find much to laugh over in this vehemently cheerful story."

+ N Y Times 19:76 F 15 '14 250w

"Any one who reads the first chapter of Anne Warner's posthumous novel, 'Sunshine Jane,' will surely read the succeeding chapters." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 85:1063 Mr 21 '14 450w

FRENCH army from within, by "Ex-trooper." 12 *$1 (4c) Doran 14-20243

The French army which the author describes dates back only to 1871. In the first chapter he writes of the constitution of the army with a word in favor of the conscript system. Other chapters describe: The French soldier at home; The higher ranks; Infantry; Off duty; Cavalry; Artillery; In camp and on the march; Manœuvres; With the cavalry scouts; Internal economy; Some incidentals; The great garrison towns of France; Some effects, and Active service.

"As a whole his account deals in generalities which might be true of any army; the exception being a fair amount of data regarding organization such as is available in any reference book."

+ Nation 99:635 N 26 '14 100w

N Y Times 19:455 N 8 '14 1100w

+ R of Rs 50:762 D '14 130w

FREUD, SIGMUND. Psychopathology of everyday life; auth. Eng. ed., with introd. by A. A. Brill. *$3.50 Macmillan 14-22011

"The interest of this book is that it applies Freudism, or psycho-analysis, to the faulty actions, the mistakes of commission and omission of the everyday life of the ordinary man who is not more morbid or neurotic than this individual usually is. Forgetting names and words, mistakes in speech, in reading and writing, forgetting impressions and resolutions, actions that we call accidents and awkwardness, our superstitious beliefs may, in almost every instance, it is asserted, if you know how to make the analysis, be shown to be under the determination of similar repressive, unconscious motives to those displayed in actual morbid manifestations. . . . It opens up a most curious and fascinating new system of self-examination which everyone may set about without worrying himself as to the state of his own nerves. It confines itself to the theory of the operations of memory within the conditions of the average healthy man's life; and its revelations are as unexpected as they are often amusing in the disclosure of the unconscious motives by which we are influenced in important as well as in trivial actions."—Sat R

"His explanations are often fantastic and incredible, his symbolism is sometimes absurd, but the exaggerated emphasis he has laid upon the influence of unconscious desire upon our thoughts has served the purpose of directing attention to a very real and much neglected factor in our mental life."

— + Ind 80:102 O 19 '14 200w

"So far as he emphasizes the close relation between normal and abnormal mental states he does good service; but his general mode of thought, as indicated in his earlier works, is here again exemplified. Being by nature a special pleader, he is willing to go to unwaranted lengths in his efforts to bring the facts of observation into line with his theories, his tendency to look for erotic influences constantly warps his judgment."

— + Nation 95:383 S 24 '14 280w

"This book ought to do much to popularize the system of Freud in England, as it has done in Germany."

— + Sat R 118:51 J1 11 '14 1300w

FROBENIUS, COLONEL HERMANN. German empire's hour of destiny; with a preface by Sir Valentine Chirol. *$1 (4½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-21603

A book published in Germany shortly before the war. The author shows a Germany menaced on all sides by enemies and predicts a great European conflict, to break before the spring of 1915. Great Britain will fight because her further existence depends on Germany's overthrow; Russia because Germany and Austria stand in the way of her expansion; France as a necessary military measure, knowing that if her defeat of 1870 is ever to be avenged it must be now. He fails, however, to count on the alliance of the three. Much of his argument is based upon Homer Lea's "Day of the Saxon."

Ath 1914:2:347 O 10 220w

"There is nowhere in print—not even in General von Bernhardi's writings—a more frank and forceful statement of the point of view taken by the German authorities in the present conflict." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 58:45 Ja 16 '15 400w

+ — Ind 80:476 D 21 '14 300w

"A rather negligible book."

— + Nation 100:175 F 11 '15 160w

N Y Times 19:510 N 22 '14 500w

Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 50w

"Colonel Frobenius's book is not a good one, but it was worth translation."

+ — Spec 113:563 O 24 '14 1350w

FROMENTIN, EUGÈNE. Masters of past time; tr. from the French by Andrew Boyle. il *$2.50 Dutton 14-30268

A translation of a French work of art criticism, published some forty years ago. "It is with the Dutch and the Flemish schools that the book deals, and its method is thus explained by the author: 'I shall merely describe, in the presence of certain pictures, the effects of surprise, pleasure, astonishment, and no less exactly of disappointment, which they happened to cause me.' Rubens, Rembrandt, Frans Hals, Van Dyck, Paul Potter, Terburg, Ruysdael, Cuyt—these are naturally treated at some length by the artist-author, through whose eyes it is pleasant and instructive to view the masterpieces of Dutch and Flemish art." (Dial)

+ A L A Bkl 10:335 Ap '14

"We feel that his criticisms are just, his admirations well founded, and his instinct right. He writes with burning enthusiasm, yet with restraint, and he is sufficiently detached to be able to enjoy the exuberance of Rubens and the elegance of Van Dyck, the mysticism of Rembrandt and the realism of Hals. The coloured illustrations to the book are, unfortunately, far from successful."

+ — Ath 1913:2:600 N 22 500w

"The subject though discussed with a freedom and intimacy of the born artist, is nevertheless written in so clear and popular a form that every chapter is a delight."

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 10 '13 350w

"A good English translation."

+ Dial 55:532 D 16 '13 150w

Reviewed by C. E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:510 D 11 '13 40w

+ Nation 97:562 D 11 '13 40w

+ N Y Times 18:700 N 30 '13 280w

"The volume has compelling charm. First of all, on every page one feels the consciousness that it was written by a man who was both an artist and a writer, by one who had both a technical knowledge of painting and a fine literary style."

+ Outlook 106:423 F 21 '14 300w

FROTHINGHAM, JESSIE PEABODY. Success in gardening: work in the flower garden week by week. il *$1.25 Duffield 13-9862

"The author takes up the months in sequence and week by week, and chronicles the work necessary and the results to be expected in a well-cared-for garden, so that the book becomes a practical guide and help for beginners and garden-lovers."—Lit D

"Manual of well-tried information."

+ Lit D 47:1077 N 29 '13 140w

+ Nation 97:83 J1 24 '13 270w

FRYER, MRS. JANE (EAYRE). Mary Frances housekeeper; or, Adventures among the doll people. il *$1.50 Winston 14-19361

Most of the pages in this book are meant to be cut. The text tells all about Mary Frances and her dolls and the cut-out pages provide the dolls, their dresses, the furniture for their houses, etc.

N Y Times 19:524 N 29 '14 80w

"This is a book of vast entertainment for children of a pictorial or mechanical turn of mind."

+ Outlook 108:901 D 16 '14 50w

FRYER, MRS. JANE (EAYRE). Mary Frances sewing book. il *$1.50 Winston 13-22543

A companion volume to the "Mary Frances cook book." As that book related "adventures among the kitchen people," so this one has to do with "adventures among the thimble people." As a guide to dolls' dressmaking, the book is very complete; even the patterns for the little garments are provided.

N Y Sun p6 D 13 '13 50w

+ N Y Times 18:742 D 14 '13 320w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"No more attractive book for beginners with the needle was ever published than the 'Mary Frances sewing book.' It woos children, by its sweet reasonableness and clever illustrations, to embrace with ardor the gentle art of making pretty things in cloth. Nor is it disappointing when it comes to specific helpfulness. With this book in hand one can learn how!"

+ School Arts Magazine 14:144 O '14 80w

FUJIMOTO, T. Night side of Japan. il $*2.50 Lippincott

"The book is written by a Japanese in English; because it is written by a Japanese it gives a far more intimate view of the Mikado's domain by artificial light than could possibly be given by a foreigner, and because it is written in English without editing it has a charm and Oriental flavor that create the atmosphere of Japan as no ordinary English could create it. The author tells of the fried fish restaurants and the bath houses, the theatres and the wrestling, of the geisha girls, and of scores of other features of Japan at night."—N Y Times

"The many quaint phrases with a real Japanese turn are delightful; but the book has other merit, it shows conditions that a literary man or anyone not a native and resident of Japan never would have discovered—the book clearly stands alone as a definite and picturesque exposition of Tokyo and other Japanese cities after dark. Much of it, indeed most of it, is trivial, and some of it goes a bit too deeply into personal matters; but it is all good reading. The illustrations are in charming harmony with the fascinating fantasy of the writer." F. L. W.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 D 26 '14 1100w

"A quaint and interesting book."

+ N Y Times 19:561 D 13 '14 110w

FULLER, EUNICE. Book of friendly giants; with introductory verses by Seymour Barnard. il $*2 (5c) Century 14-18800

The author has written a preface to this collection of stories "In defence of giants." Giants, it seems, have acquired a bad name all because of that villainous Jack-and-the-beanstalk giant and a few others of his kind, whereas, in reality, there have been in every country members of the Giant family who were clumsy, good-hearted fellows given to kind deeds. From the folk-lore of many lands stories about a number of these have been gathered for presentation in this book. There is the story of The giant and the herd boy, from the Hungarian; the story of The giants' ship, from the Norse; the story of the giants' pot, an old Rhine legend; and stories of The Wigwam giants, from American Indian folk tales, and others.

"A readable compilation of stories."

+ A L A Bkl 11:224 Ja '15

"Attractive book." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:446 D '14 90w

"Miss Fuller has set forth these tales in a clear, interesting and pleasing way that a child can readily understand."

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 9 '14 300w

"Pamela Colman Smith's drawings are not more delightful than this collection of stories written in defence of giants."

+ Ind 80:414 D 14 '14 60w

"Young readers should welcome this entertaining volume."

+ Lit D 49:1129 D 5 '14 160w

Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 80w

+ N Y Times 19:501 N 15 '14 70w

FURMAN, LUCY. Sight to the blind. il $*1 (17½c) Macmillan 14-20368

Miss Tarbell in her introduction to this story of the Kentucky mountains says of it and of the author's longer work "Mothering on Perilous" that "a more illuminating interpretation of the settlement idea does not exist." The story itself presents a moving tale of a vigorous, capable mountain woman to whom sight is restored after twelve years of blindness—blindness looked upon as a curse of God by herself and all others in her community who have been taught by the stern, unlovely creed of the mountain preachers.

"The story, so little in number of pages, is big with the sense of opportunity."

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 16 '14 220w

+ Ind 81:30 Ja 4 '15 80w

FURTWÄNGLER, ADOLPH, and URLICHS, HEINRICH LUDWIG. Greek and Roman sculpture; new, briefer ed., tr. by Horace Taylor. il $*2.50 Dutton 14-17680

"Furtwängler and Ulrichs's volume has been familiar for some time in its German form; it was an excellent notion to give us an English translation of the new German edition. The book was originally intended as a handy edition, for less advanced or less wealthy students, of the colossal and expensive Brunn-Bruckmann 'Denkmäler,' with its 600 or more folio plates in photogravure. Its chief value lay in the fact that it made accessible a brief and suggestive study of a number of the most representative examples of ancient sculpture by the greatest master of the history and criticism of ancient art in our generation."—Ath

A L A Bkl 11:160 D '14

"The whole text requires careful revision by some one with a competent knowledge of Greek art. If this were done, the book might be warmly recommended."

+ — Ath 1914.1:663 My 9 570w

"The translation can hardly be regarded as either graceful or happy."

+ — Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 330w

"Teachers and art-loving laymen alike will appreciate this English edition."

+ Nation 99:27 J1 2 '14 120w

"The translation of the present volume has been apparently well done. Unfortunately, its illustrations have necessitated the use of heavy paper, so that the book is not easy to hold."

+ — Outlook 107:265 My 30 '14 50w

R of Rs 50:252 Ag '14 30w

"An admirable book of reference."

+ Sat R 118:323 S 19 '14 800w

FYFE, H. HAMILTON. Real Mexico: a study on the spot. il $*1.25 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-8528

The author has been in Mexico as special correspondent for the London "Times" and he writes of the Mexico that he has seen. It is valuable for its unprejudiced pictures of Diaz, Madero, Huerta and others, and for its frank statement of the general attitude of Mexico toward the United States. He criticises the policy of the present administration, but feels that permanent settlement can only come thru intervention by the United States and the Powers of Europe. The United States, lacking the trust and respect of her southern neighbor, could do nothing alone.

"Ephemeral, but on the whole reliable though rather anti-Wilson in sentiment. Answers just the questions newspaper readers are asking, in a readable way."

+ A L A Bkl 10:351 My '14

Ath 1914.1:sup434 Mr 21 900w

"It has a note of sincerity, as if the impressions gathered so rapidly came with remarkable vividness and clearness, and were jotted down without taking time to modify or arrange them, or even to reconcile contradictory statements." A. M. Chase

+ Bookm 39:549 J1 '14 550w

"It is a valuable work for those who are interested in the 'measures short of war' now in progress, for it gives a definite statement of the causes of the action of the United States and it throws some interesting light on the prominent figures on the Mexican side of the border."

+ — Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '14 1350w

FYFE, H. HAMILTON—Continued.

"A most valuable and interesting study, of Mexican life and politics at the present day."

+ Cath World 99:824 S '14 500w

Reviewed by Wallace Rice

+ Dial 56:503 Je 16 '14 400w

"It is journalism, of course, but journalism at its best. The point of view is British, but the author is fairminded."

+ Ind 78:217 My 4 '14 160w

+ Ind 78:324 My 25 '14 50w

"He is decidedly anti-American, to be sure—or rather anti-Wilson and anti-Bryan—but he works so hard throughout his book to fight down anything looking like prejudice that this may be forgiven him."

+ — N Y Times 19:199 Ap 19 '14 900w

"No one can read it without getting a better idea of facts and conditions."

+ Outlook 107:132 My 16 '14 1400w

"Mr. Fyfe is a trained investigator of affairs, and we have little doubt that his readable book comes as near the truth as is possible."

+ Spec 112:488 Mr 21 '14 140w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 My 7 '14 700w

G

GAIRDNER, JAMES. Lollardy and the reformation in England: an historical survey; ed. by W. Hunt. v 4 *$3 Macmillan

v 4 This volume represents the last work of Dr. Gairdner who died in November, 1912, before the work as he had planned it was completed. The first part of Queen Mary's reign is treated, ending with her marriage with Philip of Spain.

"One feels that one is perusing here, not a piece of special pleading, but a careful, detailed story of a most complicated year, by a recognized master, whose opinion, even if one cannot agree with it, always demands careful and respectful consideration." R. B. Merriman

+ Am Hist R 19:602 Ap '14 1000w

Reviewed by J. W. Moncrief

+ Am J Theol 18:458 Jl '14 330w

"Dr. William Hunt has been hardly well advised, as editor, in giving some twenty pages of his own writing at the end of the book, in order, we suppose, to round it off. Although these additions and a few other insertions are distinguished by brackets, it would have been more satisfactory, and a better monument to the author's memory, if Dr. Gairdner had been allowed to end where the pen fell from his grasp, and if the admitted alterations and interpolations had been less frequent."

+ — Ath 1913,2:338 O 4 970w

"To the student of history or literature these four sober volumes are more exciting than the latest novel." W. P. Reeves

+ Dial 57:139 S 1 '14 1050w

"It is extraordinarily careful and fair." J. P. Whitney

+ Eng Hist R 30:144 Ja '15 850w

"The index, though bulky, is most inadequate. Although we feel, in this fourth volume, almost as strongly as in the first, that Dr. Gairdner had not thoroughly understood either the Lollards or the Reformers, yet we welcome this posthumous work as a most valuable storehouse of trustworthy facts, and as certain to stimulate thought even along those lines which the author himself was apparently too preoccupied to follow." G. G. Coulton

+ Hibbert J 12:951 Jl '14 600w

"The author's method is not essentially changed, but this volume is more readable than the others, partly, doubtless, because it has a central figure to hold the narrative together and somewhat to check that diffuseness which made the reading of the former volumes a rather difficult task."

+ — Nation 97:592 D 18 '13 870w

"Dr. Gairdner's contributions to sound history have been surpassed in scholarly merit by no writer in our time."

+ Outlook 106:426 F 21 '14 140w

"Dr. Gairdner constantly censures Foxe for overstating his case. It seems to us that he has, not less constantly, overstated his own, and his whole treatment is, not intentionally, but from the very vehemence of his own beliefs, consistently unfair. His book is an enlarged pamphlet, and it cannot be accepted as the last word of modern investigation into the English reformation. It is learned, and it is earnest, and its author's name and character will always command respect and attention."

+ — Spec 112:sup156 Ja 31 '14 1000w

GALE, ZONA. Neighborhood stories. il *$1.50 12 (2c) Macmillan 14-17988

Friendship Village stories need no introduction. There are eleven of them in this volume, all told by Calliope Marsh, and with them a preface by Miss Gale on the changing social order in country villages. The stories are: A great tree; Exit charity; The time has come; The face of Friendship Village; The flood; The party; The biggest business; The prodigal guest; Mr. Dombledon; Human; The homecoming.

+ A L A Bkl 11:220 Ja '15 +

Reviewed by F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:441 D '14 300w

"Miss Gale has succeeded admirably in giving us a new set of interesting stories about characters who are already sure of a welcome."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 210w

+ Dial 57:462 D 1 '14 160w

"If philosophy and metaphor occasionally break over the bound of village viewpoint and spread to the broader horizon of the author's own thought and experience, the book is so humorously true to life that one chuckles even in the middle of a sigh."

+ — Ind 80:291 N 23 '14 50w

"Miss Gale's work possesses in abundance that quality so many writers strive for and so few attain—that quality we call humanness."

+ N Y Times 19:486 N 8 '14 650w

"The most striking face about the eleven stories in this volume is the extraordinary amount of human nature packed into them; and their good sense and humor are not less obvious."

+ Outlook 108:846 D 9 '14 230w

GALILEI, GALILEO. Dialogues concerning two new sciences; tr. from the Italian and Latin into English by H. Crew and Alfonso de Salvio. il *$2 (2c) Macmillan 14-9346

"For more than a century," say the translators in their preface, "English speaking students have been placed in the anomalous position of hearing Galileo constantly referred to as the founder of modern physical science, without having any chance to read in their own language, what Galileo himself has to say." With the publication of this translation the theories of the early physicist are made accessible to all. To this edition Antonio Favaro of the University of Padua, the Italian editor of Galileo's works, contributes an introduction.

"Galileo built upon the foundation laid by Greek philosophers, and his book is of special interest and value as showing the advancement of learning in spite of ecclesiastical opposition to its progress."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 13 '14 400w

+ Ind 79:33 Jl 6 '14 50w

+ Nation 100:121 Ja 23 '15 1650w

"This book should be in the hands of all teachers and, better still, of all students of mechanics."

+ Nature 94:444 D 24 '14 1400w

N Y Times 19:395 S 20 '14 130w

"In publishing this translation the authors have done a service to all English-speaking students of the history of physics." W. F. Magie

+ Science n s 40:637 O 30 '14 1050w

GALLATIN, ALBERT EUGENE. Portraits and caricatures of James McNeill Whistler: an iconography. il *$3 Lane 13-24768

"Twenty-nine self portraits are recorded, of which three have been challenged by various authorities. Many of the self-portraits are slight or in small groups, and none represents the mature man satisfactorily. For this one must look to such portraits as Chase's and Boldini's and to the photographs, which Mr. Gallatin faithfully registers. . . . The diligence of Mr. Gallatin's iconograph quest is shown by the fact that he records the cover design for a Whistler cigar. There are twenty cuts, ten of which are first publications."—Nation

Ath 1914.2:252 S 5 630w

"If it is possible to conceive of such a distinction, Mr. Gallatin may be called the 'master of the critical cliché.' His style, such as it is, is almost wholly compact of the commonplace characterization, the trite turn of expression, the conventional phrase."

+ — Dial 57:80 Ag 1 '14 580w

"A. E. Gallatin has done a useful thing very well."

+ Nation 98:44 Ja 8 '14 150w

+ Sat R 118:328 S 19 '14 80w

GALLATIN, JAMES. Great peace maker. il *$2.50 (3c) Scribner 14-21112

The great peace maker was Albert Gallatin to whose "tact, patience, self-control and wisdom" the successful negotiation of the Treaty of Ghent is ascribed, but the diarist who kept the record presented in this book is James Gallatin, his son, who acted as his private secretary. The diary was begun in the year 1813 when young Gallatin, a boy of sixteen, accompanied his father abroad on his mission of peace. It is continued during the period from 1815 to 1823 when Albert Gallatin acted as United States minister to France, and from 1826 to 1827 when he was ambassador to England. James Bryce in his introduction to the volume says: "On the social as well as the political side, the book is a contribution to history, and Europeans as well as Americans may be glad that the diary of this youthful diplomatist has not shared the common fate of those to which young men consign their personal experiences."

"Altogether, this unpretentious and perfectly genuine diary is well worth reading for its sidelights on the period. We must add that we have seldom seen a well-printed book defaced by so many misprints, both in English and in French words."

+ — Ath 1915.1:24 Ja 9 700w

"An entertaining diary. The young man writes in cheerful style, he is a close observer and because of his father's prominence makes many friends among persons famous in the world then and in history now, and his descriptions of them are interesting phases of his diary."

+ Boston Transcript p26 N 25 '14 1100w

"All in all, it is a gay and sprightly chronicle, too trivial, perhaps, but did not a youth write it in the very heyday of his high spirits, intoxicated by the brilliant life about him?"

+ — N Y Times 20:11 Ja 10 '15 1100w

"A very interesting and amusing book."

+ Spec 114:85 Ja 16 '15 130w

GALLICHAN, CATHERINE GASQUOINE (HARTLEY) (MRS. W. M. GALLICHAN). Age of mother-power (Eng title), Position of woman in primitive society. *$1.50 (2c) Dodd 14-12139

This book is an expansion of that section of Mrs. Gallichan's earlier book, "The truth about women," which treated of the mother-age civilization. The author advances a new theory of mother-right based upon the fact that the women of the primitive patriarchal family, united by common bonds of industrial and social life, would naturally make a more rapid advance in culture and intelligence than would the single egotistical male, acting as head of his family, and living at war with other members of his own sex. She recognizes three stages in the history of the family: the first was patriarchal, based on the sex jealousy and fighting strength of the male; the second was the age of mother-right, based on the industrial and social supremacy of women; the third was again patriarchal, based on property right. Mrs. Gallichan parts company with Westermarck, Lang and others in refusing to accept the passive character of woman's part in early courtship and marriage.

"The book is extraordinarily interesting and subtle." W. L. George

+ Bookm 39:451 Je '14 950w

"Mrs. Gallichan's interest in the position of woman in primitive society is plainly subversive to her interest in present-day feminism. She is not conventional where morality is concerned. This book, while starting with second-hand documents, has presented a somewhat novel conclusion, and has 'connected up' an academic discussion with a vital issue." W. W. Comfort

+ — Dial 57:295 O 16 '14 1000w

Ind 80:341 N 30 '14 70w

N Y Times 19:426 O 11 '14 1650w

"In her book of course, one finds an attempt to make anthropology fit the theories."

— Springfield Republican p5 O 2 '14 500w

GALLICHAN, CATHERINE GASQUOINE (HARTLEY) (MRS. W. M. GALLICHAN). Cathedrals of southern Spain. il *$2 Pott A13-2692

"The Spanish cathedrals are little known to English travellers, and they have been described for the most part by French writers bent upon showing that the inspiration of Spanish ecclesiastical architecture came entirely from France. Mrs. Gallichan conclusively rebuts this assertion. She shows that the Spaniards had developed a national style of church architecture (founded on the Byzantine) before the beginning of the Moorish invasion, and that this style persisted right on to the eighteenth century." (Spec) "In her account of individual cathedrals the author divides the country into provinces, following the line of route in visiting them. This plan sacrifices the clearer development of the subject in a chronological sequence, but is probably more convenient to the traveller." (Ath)

A L A Bkl 11:64 O '14

"The book is written with enthusiasm and knowledge, and will be a useful guide for some time to come. It is a pity, however, that there is no map, and the architectural student will miss plans of the churches described, since it is for these that Spanish architecture is most remarkable. The photographic illustrations are good so far as they go, but are sufficient only to whet the appetite. We are glad to note that the volume, containing much information in a small space, is light to handle, and that it has a good index."

+ — Ath 1913.2:288 S 20 550w

"It is unfortunate that she has not thought of mentioning, at least in an appendix, how these cathedrals can best be seen. Her book will, however, be very useful to those who want to know more of Spanish cathedrals."

+ — Sat R 116:559 N 1 '13 470w

"This little book of Mrs. Gallichan's is one of real value. Unfortunately she has had to cast her volume more or less in guide-book form, and has not therefore, full opportunity to develop her argument. None the less her points are well and clearly made, and her book will be of interest both to the student and the traveller."

+ — Spec 111:469 S 27 '13 170w

GALLOWAY, GEORGE. Philosophy of religion. 7 (International theological lib.) *$2.50 (1½c) Scribner A14-1025

The author defines the problem of a philosophy of religion as "the problem of the final meaning of religion as a constituent element in human life and development." He says, "Religion calls for philosophic interpretation because it is an aspect, and a very important aspect, of human experience." The subject is treated in three parts. Part 1 is phenomenological, treating of The nature and development of religion; part 2 is epistemological, treating of Religious knowledge and its validity; part 3 is ontological, taking up The ultimate truth of religion.

GALLOWAY, GEORGE —Continued.

"A careful, scholarly work, marked by fair-mindedness. Though the thought and expression are clear, the book will be read only by students."

+ A L A Bkl 11:51 O '14

"A volume which should immediately take its place as an authoritative exposition of the philosophy of religion. He is more careful of his philosophy than of his style. Yet attention to matter and form would have lightened the task of mastering 600 pages of by no means easy reading."

+ — Ath 1914,1:784 Je 6 850w

"A book of 600 pages—packed, well arranged, without a dull paragraph."

+ Bib World 44:291 O '14 1000w

"The task assigned to Dr. Galloway was a most difficult one. Its treatment demanded extensive learning and intensive thought. But the author has proven himself a master of both materials and methods. The reader is impressed with the comprehensiveness and lucidity of the argument. The book will take its place among the very best works upon this subject." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 8 '14 900w

Cath World 100:263 N '14 450w

"A book which may be called, not in any disparagement but in the large German sense of the words, a text-book. It is likely to serve in that capacity for some time to come, since the author has, in addition to wide knowledge, a style which, if not very distinguished, has the supreme merit of clearness." W. R. Matthews

+ — Int J Ethics 25:116 O '14 1700w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 50w

"Dr. Galloway deals profoundly and thoroughly with the problems of his subject."

+ Outlook 107:878 Ag 8 '14 270w

+ Sat R 118:179 Ag 8 '14 250w

GALLOWAY, THOMAS WALTON. Biology of sex for parents and teachers. il 75c Heath 13-2444

"The subject of sex from the educational point of view is approached in this book, which attempts to outline the delicate task of imparting sex knowledge to young people. The author aims to tell how such instruction is to be given, rather than what should be taught."—Ind

"At present the best book of its kind. The subject is treated simply, freely, accurately, always in good taste and from a refined and idealistic viewpoint, for the parent and teacher."

+ A L A Bkl 11:60 O '14 +

"In a few years Dr. Galloway will give us a better book on this subject—one as good as his books on zoology. At the same time it must be said that the present book is probably the best to be had, of its kind."

+ — Ind 78:257 My 11 '14 200w

+ Spec 113:208 Ag 8 '14 60w

"The best work yet published for the use of the ordinary teacher and parent; fuller and more definite than Wile's 'Sex education.'"

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:57 Mr '14 40w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. The fugitive. *60c (2½c) Scribner (Eng ed 13-22361)

A four-act play. The fugitive is a young woman who leaves her husband's house, not because of anything he has or has not done, but because she finds life with him unbearable. She tries to make her way alone but is baffled at every turn by social conventions and traditions and all the evils that beset the way of a beautiful and incompetent woman adrift in the world.

"The fugitive" is not as big in its social philosophy as 'Justice' or 'The silver box,' but it maintains Mr. Galsworthy's value as a dramatist."

+ Ind 79:250 Ag 17 '14 120w

"The fugitive" is written, of course, with definite purpose, much literary skill, and evident sincerity; but, in spite of its cleverness and vigor, it is an unsatisfactory work."

+ — Nation 98:342 Mr 26 '14 350w

"The fourth act is of such daring and dramatic poignancy that it raises the whole play to a higher level. But the power of 'The fugitive' does not depend entirely upon its construction. Mr. Galsworthy has the true dramatic power of suggesting character with the fewest possible lines." Joseph Jacobs

+ — N Y Times 19:87 F 22 '14 1400w

"The story is dramatically told; for Mr. Galsworthy wastes neither time nor words. He seems to step out of the way, so far as mere writing is concerned, and let the play have the stage. This play is infinitely pathetic, but the result seems tragically exaggerated in contrast with the cause."

+ — Outlook 106:371 F 14 '14 250w

+ — R of Rs 49:501 Ap '14 500w

"It abounds in more dramatic high lights than some of Mr. Galsworthy's other plays have done."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 420w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Mob: a play in four acts. *60c (3½c) Scribner 14-11537

A short drama whose central figure, Stephen More, a brilliant young Englishman, lives and dies for an ideal. He dares to stand up in Parliament and defend little nations way off in Africa or the South seas against the greediness of Great Britain. He opposes war in the name of justice and civilization. Everybody is against him,—wife, father-in-law, brothers-in-law, friends. He stands completely ostracized. "What is a man who holds a faith with all his heart to do?" he asks. The drama is a powerful illustration of the contrast between the love of country that expresses itself in the blind, howling patriotism of the mob and that which lies at the heart of philosophic altruism.

+ Dial 57:55 Jl 16 '14 420w

"Ranks with 'Strife' as a masterful portrayal of mob psychology."

+ Ind 79:72 Jl 13 '14 30w

"Many gallant creations have come from Mr. Galsworthy, but none deeper or more poignant than 'The mob.'"

+ New Republic 1:27 N 7 '14 1350w

"It is worth reading. 'The mob,' for all its meatiness of thought, is curiously unsubstantial as a play in that it is too largely a conflict merely of ideas and not of persons."

+ — N Y Times 19:321 Jl 26 '14 1050w

"The story is told with economy of words and with precision and force."

+ Outlook 107:758 Jl 25 '14 170w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 27 '14 250w

"An admirable reading-play, having all the excellent qualities we associate with Galsworthy's work."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:260 N '14 100w

GALSWORTHY, JOHN. Plays; 3d series. *$1.35 (2c) Scribner 14-15438

The third series comprises three plays: The fugitive; The pigeon; and The Mob; each of which has been published separately. All three are problem plays; the theme of the first is marriage; of the second, philanthropy; of the third, patriotism.

"The theme of the first play is disagreeable and depressing."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:68 O '14

"All afford interesting character studies distinguished by artistic technique."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 50w

GANTVOORT, ARNOLD JOHANN. Familiar talks on the history of music. *$1.50 (2c) Schirmer 11-235

A concise work containing information about important events in the history of the development of musical art and about musical personages who have made those events possible. The scope and character of the work are suggested by the chapter headings: Music among the nations of remote antiquity; Music among the Hebrews, Greeks and Romans; Music in the early Christian era; Early didactics; Beginning of polyphonic music; Folk-music during the middle ages; The renaissance and the reformation; The golden age of Catholic church music; The birth of opera and oratorio; The development of Italian opera; French opera from its beginning; Opera in Germany, and the German opera; The development of the music of the Protestant church, the passion and the oratorio; Bach and Handel; The development of musical instruments, and the rise of instrumental music; The early symphonists; The beginning of romanticism; The development of romanticism, and the advent of the great virtuosi; The advent of the music-drama, and the rise of nationalism.

"Comprehensive and written in good style free from needless technicalities, its chief defects are its disproportionate fullness on early music and its lack of an index. The many musical illustrations, some hard to find elsewhere, are a useful feature."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:17 S '14

"A volume which has considerable merit and some faults. The most serious of the faults is a lack of proportion. One of the best features of the book is the use of copious illustrations in musical type, some of which—especially those taken from early operas—the student would have difficulty in finding elsewhere."

+ — Nation 98:583 My 14 '14 250w

GARDINER, ALFRED G. Pillars of society. il 12 *$2.50 Dodd 14-20744

This book "consists of forty frank views, each illustrated by a photograph, of prominent persons—from Sir Edward Carson to Prince Kropotkin, and from the Jam Sahib of Nawanagar to Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson." (Dial) "Mr. Gardiner has been editor of the London Daily News during the past twelve years, and these papers are gathered from the columns of that newspaper where they first appeared. They are, in fact, the second series of personal studies that has appeared from Mr. Gardiner, the preceding volume being called 'Prophets, priests and kings.'" (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 11:118 N '14

"All this is capital journalism, but still journalism. Mr. Gardiner seizes his man as he appears at the moment of writing, rapidly sketches his features, throws in an apt anecdote or two, and the sketch is complete. He is on terms of intimacy with many notable persons."

+ — Ath 1913,2:378 O 11 330w

"Fascinating personal sketches." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p23 O 14 '14 1250w

"Granted that his bias is towards Mrs. Despard rather than toward Mrs. Ward and toward Mr. Lloyd George rather than toward Mr. Andrew Carnegie, he seems an uncommonly fair man, with a catholic taste in personality, and he writes very well."

+ — Dial 57:306 O 16 '14 200w

"A certain extravagance and a certain superficiality are inseparable from this kind of writing, and Mr. Gardiner is on the whole remarkably successful in avoiding both faults. Whatever he says is said forcibly and clearly and with a certain romantic quality which makes the book, in spite of its defects, wonderfully agreeable reading, while almost every sketch contains some sentence which one remembers and would like to quote."

+ — Spec 111:921 N 29 '13 630w

GARDINER, GORDON. The reconnaissance. il 4 *$1.35 (1½c) Macmillan 14-2388

The story opens in South Africa in the nineties with a description of a native uprising and the feat of hardihood that wins Trooper Leslie his V. C. After that it shifts to Italy and to England where young Leslie is lionized and made the hero of numberless newspaper paragraphs. The boy's embarrassed attempts to explain that no honor is due him win for him only a reputation for becoming modesty and he is more than ever acclaimed the hero of the hour. It is only on the day that the Victoria cross is given him that he succeeds in making those about him understand that his act had been one not of bravery but of cowardice; that he had staid by his wounded comrade and carried him for forty miles to safety, not thru loyalty or courage, but because of fear—the fear of the night and of the veldt with its awful loneliness.

"The plot is slight and the situations rather forced though the first third of the book is above the average."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:370 My '14

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup470 Mr 28 170w

"The reconnaissance' produces a definite and lasting effect of the most desirable sort."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 4 '14 330w

N Y Times 19:112 Mr 8 '14 380w

"There is good story-telling here and sound psychology also. One looks forward to reading other novels from Mr. Gardiner's pen. He may fairly be classed with Mr. A. E. W. Mason and the late Mr. Scott-Merriman in method and style."

+ Outlook 106:772 Ap 4 '14 180w

"This story, which begins admirably in South Africa, falls off into rather conventional sentiment."

+ — Spec 113:25 Jl 4 '14 30w

"More interesting as a psychological study and for its vivid pictures of the South African veldt than as a novel."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 40w

GARDNER, PERCY. Principles of Greek art. 3 il *$2.25 (2c) Macmillan 14-1778

This book is an enlargement of a work by the author published in 1905 with the title "A grammar of Greek art." Many of the chapters have been rewritten; others have been carefully revised; two new chapters and twenty-five new illustrations have been added. The bulk of the book has been increased about one third. The author feels that a book such as this is demanded by the present decline of the Greek element in education. "Against this tendency," he says, "I am anxious to contend, side by side with my friends the lovers of Greek literature, and indeed with all humanists in every country."

"For readers who have some knowledge of Greek history and literature."

+ A L A Bkl 10:335 Ap '14

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 370w

"All lovers of Greek literature will enjoy this book."

+ Chaut 72:573 Mr 21 '14 300w

"There is much in the book to provoke adverse criticism. One finds questionable statements, dogmatic judgments that require qualification, and curious omissions. If I may venture on a general criticism, the author's whole attitude is a little old fashioned, a little too 'classical.'" W: D. Gray

+ — Class J 10:186 Ja '15 870w

"The book is not one for beginners, of whatever age, but rather for mature students to whom the elements of Greek art are already familiar." F. B. Tarbell

+ — Class Philol 9:325 Jl '14 950w

"The treatment is sane, scholarly, and enjoyable from beginning to end; and we can recommend the book most cordially."

+ Dial 56:348 Ap 16 '14 300w

"An exceptionally valuable book for reading and reference."

+ Educ R 48:417 N '14 50w

Outlook 106:603 Mr 14 '14 50w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

GARDNER, PERCY—Continued.

+ R of Rs 49:636 My '14 33w
Spec 113:sup775 D 5 '14 50w

GARIS, HOWARD ROGER. Charlie and Arabella Chick. il 75c (1½c) Fenno

A group of "bed time stories" to be read or told to little children. The stories all have to do with the financial adventures of a family of chickens.

GARIS, HOWARD ROGER. Joie, Tommie and Kittie Kat. il 75c (1½c) Fenno

The adventures of three kittens furnish the basis of these stories for little folks. The book is published as one of the "Bedtime stories" series.

GARLAND, HAMLIN. Forester's daughter. il 2 *$1.25 (1½c) Harper 14-2897

Theoretically, of course, every hero is a broad-shouldered, manly six-footer, and the heroine loves him for these Herculean proportions. In real life things quite often go the other way, and splendid Amazonian women fall in love with physically inferior men. So it is in this story of the Colorado mountains in which Berrie McFarlane, a girl equally skilled with the lasso and with the frying pan, who knows more of forestry than her father, the head forester, does himself, turns from her sturdy western lovers to choose Norcross, the tenderfoot who came out to the mountains as a "lunger." An invigorating out-of-door tang pervades the story.

"There is little or no originality in plot or action but the story will appeal to those readers who want 'another western story.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:325 Ap '14

"It is hard to believe that this story came from the same hand that once gave us a book of real strength, 'Rose of Dutcher's Coolly.'"

+ Bookm 39:206 Ap '14 550w

"No one who reads his story will regret that he could not resist the impulse to turn it into pure romance—pure in every sense of the word."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 330w

+ Ind 77:420 Mr 23 '14 30w

"Again we must express doubt as to Mr. Garland's capacity for extended narrative; and wish him a return of the sincere mood and restrained hand which produced those little classics of Middle Western literature, 'Main-travelled roads.'"

+ Nation 98:210 F 26 '14 400w

"The forester's daughter" is crisp with the freshness of clear mountain air, fragrant with the odors of the pines. And for the sake of these virtues we give it welcome."

+ N Y Times 19:72 F 15 '14 730w

"The ranger's daughter is a fine, wholesome creature, and her love history is simple and true."

+ Outlook 106:504 F 28 '14 30w

"The section most readers will enjoy best is that which deals with a camping excursion. The old forester is learned in wood-lore." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 85:1342 Ap 18 '14 300w

+ R of Rs 49:629 My '14 28w

GARNETT, EDWARD. Tolstoy: his life and writings. (Modern biographies) il *75c Houghton A14-1504

"Mr. Edward Garnett, the second son of the late Dr. Richard Garnett, and the husband of Mrs. Constance Garnett, who has been an indefatigable translator of Russian literature, writes with authority regarding the life and works of Count Tolstoi. He has had access to the most authentic materials and he has made an excellent brief summary in a little less than a hundred pages of the life-work of the 'great writer of the Russian land.' He makes no attempt to give a final verdict on his career."—Boston Transcript

"Admirable, compact sketch of Tolstoi's life and character, and criticisms of his works. A just estimate by an authority, which will be handy for quick reference."

+ A L A Bkl 11:73 O '14

"It is a pity that Mr. Garnett adds to the whirlwind of confusion in the transliteration of Russian words and names. This, however, is only a small technical defect and does not much detract from the value of a biography that ought to bring to a large circle of readers a correct and sympathetic notion of the great peasant-count of Russia." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 9 '14 1150w

"Save for a careless haste in style, which affronts the reader with repetitious use of that lazy and abominable abbreviation 'etc.,' the sketch is surprisingly well done."

+ Ind 80:30 O 5 '14 80w

"A compact, sympathetic, and illuminating little biography."

+ R of Rs 49:753 Je '14 70w

GARNETT, LUCY MARY JANE. Greece of the Hellenes. (Countries and peoples ser.) il *$1.50 Scribner A14-1586

"The author glances briefly at the derivation of the Greeks . . . and passes on to an account upon broad lines of the government and of the administration of its several branches, enlivening this with much description of important personalities. There are interesting chapters upon classic survivals in the life of the people, family ceremonies, and traits of Greek character, while other sections tell of life and labor in city and country, of home life and woman's work, of natural products and commerce, religion in its varied phases, and of education, literature, and art."—N Y Times

"The study of the present Greeks here presented to us is exceedingly interesting and done by a very competent hand. Here and there we note omissions which we regret."

+ Ath 1914.1:581 Ap 25 800w

+ N Y Times 19:359 Ag 23 '14 150w

+ Spec 113:sup447 O 3 '14 70w

"The author presents the subject in a concise manner that makes it possible to include a deal of interesting matter without irrelevant padding."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 1 '14 150w

GAROFALO, RAFFAELE. Criminology; tr. by Robert Wyness Millar; with an introd. by E. Ray Stevens. *$4.50 Little 14-2935

The book, which is published as volume 7 of the "Modern criminal science series," is a translation from an important Italian work. "The treatise is divided into four parts: Crime, The criminal, Repression and Outline of principles suggested as a basis for an international penal code. There are also appendices: one treating of enforced reparation as a substitute for imprisonment, the other containing tables giving comparative statistics of crime." (Boston Transcript)

"We cannot suppress the wish that every-one in our land who has anything to do with criminology would read this book and profit by it." D. W. LaRue

+ Am J Soc 20:413 N '14 1400w

"It is a great book." J. P. Lichtenberger

+ Ann Am Acad 54:336 Jl '14 670w

"Baron Garofalo's book ought to be in the hands of every lawyer and legislator. It is a magnificent contribution to sociology." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 1300w

"The whole character of the book is eminently sane, conservative, evidently written from actual knowledge of conditions."

+ Cath World 99:103 Ap '14 620w

"On the whole the work here noticed is one of the most instructive and stimulating contributions to the study of crime and punishment, quite indispensable to the student of the subject."

+ Dial 57:56 Jl 16 '14 330w

Ind 77:280 F 23 '14 60w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"This quality of hard-headedness makes him stimulating reading and introduces an element of stern common-sense, which helps to atone for a not too subtle psychology and gives to his treatment of crime a tone somewhat less sensational than that of his compatriot, Lombroso. Garofalo's chief contribution to criminology is the conception of 'natural crime.'"

+ Nation 98:666 Je 4 '14 850w

"The consistency of the argument, the author's willingness to conform theory to fact, and his avoidance of extremes, make it more nearly possible to accept his teaching 'in toto' than is usually the case with books on criminology and allied subjects."

+ No Am 199:626 Ap '14 950w

GARRISON, FIELDING HUDSON. Introduction to the history of medicine, with medical chronology, bibliographic data and test questions. il *$6 Saunders 13-26753

"The book opens with an introductory chapter on the identity of all forms of ancient and primitive medicine, and then follows chapters on Egyptian, Sumerian and Oriental, Greek, Byzantine, Mohammedan and Jewish, and medieval medicine, all these being treated in the brief space of one hundred and thirty pages. Then follows a well-balanced chapter on the period of the renaissance, but the greater part of the book, nearly five hundred pages out of six hundred and sixty odd, is devoted to the history of the sixteenth to the twentieth centuries. . . . Each chapter consists of a biographic and a general portion, the former setting forth the main features of the lives, endeavors and accomplishments of those who have contributed in any degree to the advancement of medicine, while the latter sums up succinctly and clearly the conditions under which they lived and worked."—Science

"Not only an accurate history, crowded with facts, but interesting reading, emphasizing the culture and social aspects of the various periods."

+ A L A Bkl 10:306 Ap '14

+ Nation 99:475 O 15 '14 1350w

"In covering so vast a field errors are almost unavoidable; nevertheless the number to be noted in Dr. Garrison's book is so small that it seems almost invidious even to mention them. But such errors and omissions are of little account beside the general excellence of the work. Its thoroughness, conciseness and clearness bespeak for it the fullest appreciation from all who are interested in the past and future of medicine." J. P. McM.

+ — Science n s 39:468 Mr 27 '14 900w

GARROD, HERBERT BARING. Dante, Goethe's Faust and other lectures; ed. by Lucy F. Garrod; with an introd. memoir by Geoffrey Garrod. *$1.10 Macmillan A13-949

"Almost half of the present volume is devoted to a series of lectures on Dante, in which Mr. Garrod aimed at leading his hearers through the prodigious tract of the poet's work by the moral and spiritual path. The next lecture treats Goethe's 'Faust' from much the same standpoint, endeavouring to isolate and express its moral content. . . . The rest of the volume is occupied with the treatment of educational subjects."—Spec

"The treatment is scholarly and will be appreciated only by educated readers."

+ A L A Bkl 10:306 Ap '14

+ — Ath 1913,2:203 Ag 30 950w

"Throughout these very concentrated and careful lectures the treatment is sane, lucid, and enlivened from time to time by sparks of that humor which helped to make Garrod so agreeable a companion and so effective an administrator."

+ Spec 111:63 Jl 12 '13 420w

GASK, LILIAN. Hundred best animals. il *$2 (3c) Crowell A14-3021

A collection of animal stories, all told by a famous hunter to a group of children who make friends with him. There are stories about lions, tigers, and wolves, and about their domesticated relatives; about seals and walruses, monkeys, antelopes and deer, and about some of the birds and fishes. The book is well illustrated with 100 pictures from photographs.

GASK, LILIAN. True stories about horses. il *$1.50 (4c) Crowell

"The horse has been, after the dog, man's most constant companion," says the Preface, and the stories gathered from many lands, all have to do with this companionship. The author says that each of the stories is true, "inasmuch as every intelligent act of devotion or decision, and every exercise of will power or memory, has actually been performed by one of the species."

GATHERING storm; being studies in social and economic tendencies, by a "riflesman." *$1.50 Lane 13-25044

"In his new book the author traces the evolution of society through various periods to the present era, and then applies his conclusions to contemporary conditions. His chief point is that economic antagonism between two sections of a community must lead to a collision. He cites the American civil war as an illustration, declaring that anyone who has studied the history of that struggle must admit that its chief causes lay in the fundamental economic antagonism between the North and the South."—Boston Transcript

"He is dogmatic in the extreme and uses his firearms indiscriminately on Christianity, socialism, capitalism, trade unionism, and all schools of political economy, yet his work is well written, stimulating, and of considerable merit." G: L: Arner

+ — Am Econ R 4:698 S '14 350w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p11 O 11 '13 280w

"Though his outlook is so gloomy, he is a philosopher and a thinker, however much we may disagree with his theories."

+ — Boston Transcript p24 N 12 '13 550w

"'Riflesman's' views are often quite extraordinarily stimulating as he surveys the development of man in the remote past; he is nowhere better than when he is advancing some heresy as an alternative to the conventional view of history; he has not only thought for himself, but he will make the laziest reader think when some of the pet axioms of the text-books are assailed. This is a virtue which excuses much, and an occasional hastiness where the ice is thin."

+ — Sat R 117:85 Ja 17 '14 350w

"Our 'Riflesman' is neither terse nor elegant, for he emphasizes by frequent repetition and he splits his infinitives unmercifully. The main feature of the whole lies in the pushing to extremes of the theories of economic determinism."

+ — Spec 113:172 Ag 1 '14 550w

Reviewed by John Martin

— Survey 31:530 Ja 31 '14 280w

GAULTIER, PAUL. Meaning of art, its nature, rôle, and value; with a preface by Émile Boutroux; tr. from the 3d French ed. by H. & E. Baldwin. il *$1.50 Lippincott (Eng ed 13-25246)

"M. Paul Gaultier strives to reveal the purpose and symbolism underlying diverse expressions, of art. In his hands every great masterpiece becomes a visible emblem, he reveals the motives of its creator's soul; the emotions which clamoured for life in his heart and which appeared in his handiwork." (Sat R) "The sections into which the book is divided—'What is art,' 'What a work of art teaches,' 'The morality of art,' 'The social rôle of art,' and 'The criticism of art'—cover the ground adequately and allow of the subject being dealt with from different aspects." (Int Studio)

"Characterized by clear thinking and statement; valuable to artists, educators, students of psychology, and the 'intelligent public.' More inspiring, less didactic than Rowlands' 'Significance of art.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:390 Je '14

GAULTIER, PAUL—Continued.

"A discussion, scientific and logical, of the nature, rôle, and value of art from an emotional point of view."

+ Ath 1913,2:259 S 13 120w

"It is the part of wisdom to understand the rôle of sensibility and the several rôles of the intelligence, and permit each to play its part. M. Gaultier's book presents in an excellent manner their complex interrelations, and by his delicacy, clarity, and sense, is saved from both dogmatism and impressionism." L: I. Bredvold

+ Dial 56:344 Ap 16 '14 650w

"As a serious study of a very wide subject this book can be commended to the attention of all students of art. It is treated thoughtfully and judiciously, without fanatical enthusiasms; and it is free from those affectations of abstruse suggestion which spoil much that has been already written on the subject."

+ Int Studio 51:168 D '13 160w

"This introductory letter of M. Boutroux's is, in fact, of far greater literary and philosophical value than the work it introduces, and itself makes the book an important addition to the aestheticians' library."

+ Nation 99:564 N 5 '14 450w

"The book will be appreciated by all who follow art, for it is an earnest exposition of art in its utmost complexity."

+ Sat R 116:402 S 27 '13 150w

"Not too abstruse for students, but rather above popular comprehension."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:259 N '14 60w

GAUNT, MARY ELIZA BAKEWELL. Woman in China. il *$3.75 Lippincott A15-31

"Mrs. Gaunt is an Australian who, in the pursuit of literary aims, has taken many adventurous trips of exploration into Africa and other lands. When a combination of events and opportunities presented themselves, it was not strange that she availed herself of them and left London for the Far East." (Lit D) "Entering the country by the Siberian railway in mid-winter shortly after the revolution, she spent some weeks in Peking observing and studying, and then travelled without companion by cart to Jehol, Inner Mongolia, the ancient hunting palace and grounds of the Manchu emperors. Her opportunity for forming an independent impression of the Chinese was, thus, very different from that of the ordinary tourist." (Dial)

"One of the most entertaining and pleasing of books on the subject. Artistic by temperament, Mrs. Gaunt has filled her pages with sketches from life, vivid and delightful. Her appreciation of Chinese architecture and landscape gardening is more earnest and outspoken than that of any writer we recall. Indeed, 'A woman in China' is a rather unusual blend of keen observation, humor, sympathy, and artistic sense." O. D. Wannamaker

+ Dial 58:20 Ja 1 '15 350w

"A book full of instructive information, fascinating description, and appreciative comprehension of the Chinese civilization."

+ Lit D 50:156 Ja 23 '15 150w

"Her descriptions and observations of the native life are vivid and sympathetic."

+ N Y Times 19:532 N 29 '14 100w

+ Sat R 119:67 Ja 16 '15 330w

GAY, CARL WARREN. Productive horse husbandry. (Lippincott's farm manuals) il *$1.50 (1½c) Lippincott 14-4221

It is the author's belief that if the production, marketing, and use of horses were regarded as an industry and conducted more generally along business lines, with a definite purpose in view, more uniform results could be obtained with greater profit to those engaged in the industry. Impressed by the truth of this statement and recognizing the tendency to neglect the importance of the horse in experiment station investigation there seemed to the author a field for his handbook. It is the same systematic and complete study of the horse that this series has accorded to other classes of live stock.

+ A L A Bkl 10:351 My '14

GAYLEY, CHARLES MILLS. Beaumont, the dramatist. il *$2 Century 14-4733

"Professor Gayley presents an illuminating and brilliant exposition of the life and work of Francis Beaumont. Notwithstanding the fact that critics as skilled as Coleridge could not trace the line of demarcation between plays that were written mainly by Beaumont and those which are attributed principally to Fletcher, Professor Gayley succeeds in definitely separating the work of the literary twins."—R of Rs

"The most thorough-going attempt thus far to build up a definite conception of Beaumont apart from Fletcher."

+ A L A Bkl 11:28 S '14

Reviewed A. de Vivier

+ Bookm 39:214 Ap '14 700w

+ Dial 56:428 My 16 '14 400w

"This is a book of genuine and scholarly interpretation."

+ Educ R 48:213 S '14 60w

"The author is not only thoroughly informed at every point in regard to his subject, but he has imagination, and his criticism is marked by the warmth and color of a fine humanity."

+ Nation 99:260 Ag 27 '14 1100w

"The work is scholarly; it contains material drawn from rare and uncommon sources, and the whole is displayed with a delicacy and ripeness of literary style that is most fitting to the material."

+ R of Rs 49:629 My '14 170w

"An exhaustive monograph."

+ Spec 113:855 D 12 '14 30w

"He has built alongside his hill of fact a mountain of conjecture. The guesses of a first-rate scholar are always interesting and sometimes illuminating; but this book is not only unnecessarily lengthened by them, it is confused." W: L. Phelps

+ Yale R n s 4:425 Ja '15 500w

GAYLEY, CHARLES MILLS, ed. Representative English comedies. 3v v 3 *$2 Macmillan (3-11660)

v 3 Later contemporaries of Shakespeare.

This volume contains part 2 of "A comparative view of the fellows and followers of Shakespeare in comedy," by Professor Gayley, and six representative plays with an introductory essay for each written by well-known scholars. The plays are: Thomas Dekker's The Shoemakers holiday; Middleton and Rowley's The Spanish gipsie; Fletcher's A wife and have a wife; Massinger's A new way to pay old debts; Richard Brome's The antipodes; and James Shirley's The roylall master.

+ A L A Bkl 11:163 D '14

Boston Transcript p8 O 31 '14 750w

+ Nation 100:174 F 11 '15 380w

N Y Times 20:34 Ja 31 '15 140w

GEDDES, PATRICK, and THOMSON, JOHN ARTHUR. Sex. il *50c (1c) Holt 14-12821

Number 85 in the "Home university library." It aims first of all at enlightenment in its broadest and most scientific sense for the good of the race. Chapters: The study of sex; The evolution of sex; Sex-characters illustrated; Theory of sex dimorphism; What determines sex? The cycle of sex; Corruptio optimi pessima; Pros and cons of sex-education; The ethics of sex; Sex and society.

+ A L A Bkl 11:103 N '14

"We hope that amongst the valuable publications in the 'Home university library' this, with its admirable lucidity, its delightful ease of style, and its broad human interest, may find its way all over the country."

+ Ath 1914,1:820 Je 13 1050w

"Plain, readable presentation for the thoughtful, mature reader."

+ Cleveland 6:74 S '14 40w

"A most persuasive and lucid presentation of the case for sex instruction, entirely free from dogmatism or overstatement, and with a keen sense of the practical difficulties in the way of acquainting young people with the essential facts concerning the continuance of life." R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:915 J1 '14 80w

"A sensible handling of what is in our time a most mishandled subject."

+ Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 110w

N Y Times 19:338 Ag 9 '14 150w

"A very comprehensive and clear exposition."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:259 N '14 80w

GEHRKENS, KARL WILSON. Music notation<sup>10</sup> and terminology. il *$1.50 Barnes 14-2829

In this book "one may see how the symbols of music developed and were applied, and how they may be read to increase the understanding, even of a layman, of written music." (Educ R) "In an appendix there are some excellent remarks on 'Terminology reform,' an important subject on which reports are issued every year by the Music section of the National education association." (Ath)

"A good deal of sound information is here given in comparatively short space."

+ — Ath 1914:2:186 Ag 8 270w

"An odd book which has in it a quantity of information that appeals to others than technical musicians."

+ Educ R 48:208 S '14 60w

GEIKIE, JAMES. Antiquity of man in Europe.<sup>2</sup> (Munro lectures, 1913) il *$3 Van Nostrand (Eng ed GS14-440)

"This is a series of lectures upon a subject with which Professor Geikie's name has been associated for more than a third of a century. . . . The work is an argument from the geologist's standpoint, the most important of all since geology is the final court of appeal." (Science) "Although he tells the familiar story of early man as revealed in cave-deposits and river-drifts with much mastery of detail, it is not this that gives individuality to his present work; it is the relation of man to the great ice age that forms its central theme. . . . Prof. Geikie believes that the oldest human remains yet discovered on the continent may be referred to the epoch that he calls the Norfolkian, or first interglacial epoch." (Ath)

"A notable contribution to the study of the period. Based on later researches than his standard work, 'The great ice age.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:202 Ja '15

"Whatever view may be taken of Prof. Geikie's ingenious rendering of a complicated chronology, it will be admitted that his Munro lectures are a valuable contribution to anthropological geology. They are admirably written, well printed in bold type, and amply supplied with illustrations."

+ — Ath 1914:1:830 Je 13 820w

"In this book, the Munro lectures, containing the ripe experience of the foremost student of the 'ice-age,' are placed at the disposal of archaeologists and anthropologists all the world over." A. K.

+ Nature 94:174 O 15 '14 700w

"Professor Geikie's work is a model of directness and compactness in statement. The discussion is judicial; facts are presented so skillfully that they appear to form a consistent argument and when the conclusions are reached they have been anticipated by the reader as the only ones possible." J. J. Stevenson

+ Science n s 40:62 J1 10 '14 950w

+ Spec 112:1038 Je 20 '14 500w

GEIKIE, JAMES. Mountains: their origin, growth and decay. il *$4 Van Nostrand (Eng ed GS13-1024)

"This volume contains in systematic form the substance of various contributions made by Professor Geikie during the last twenty years, supplemented with much new matter. The author recognizes two classes of mountains, original or tectonic, and subsequent or relict. Tectonic mountains are due to accumulation or deformation; the former includes the various types of volcanoes as well as glacial and æolian hills. . . . The study of tectonic mountains occupies by far the greater part of the work, which is intended to be a non-technical presentation of the subject."—Science

"Free from technicalities, it will be read by the intelligent general public as well as by geologists."

+ A L A Bkl 11:14 S '14

"Comprehensive and admirably written study."

+ Ath 1913:2:627 N 29 120w

"Not less instructive than the text of this excellent work is the selection of eighty photographic plates which illustrate it." J. W. J.

+ Nature 92:530 Ja 8 '14 1250w

"It is full of interesting information clearly and attractively presented."

+ N Y Times 19:253 My 31 '14 80w

"All, whether accepting or opposing his conclusions, will agree that the tone of his presentation is judicial throughout, as befits one who has made direct study in a great part of Europe and whose familiarity with the literature is equalled by that of few other geologists." J. J. Stevenson

+ Science n s 39:212 F 6 '14 500w

"Admirable text-book."

+ Spec 112:745 My 2 '14 650w

GEORGE, W. L. Making of an Englishman.<sup>3</sup> *$1.35 (1c) Dodd 14-4307

In this novel, written in the form of an autobiography, Mr. George takes occasion to analyze the English character as contrasted with the French, summing up his conclusions from time to time in the "Creed of a middle-class man," "Creed of a public-school boy," "Creed of a young English girl," and the like. Lucien Cadoresse, the son of a Bordeaux merchant, comes to England at an early age, determined to become English in conduct and character as well as in name. The novel follows his efforts to Anglicize himself, his business success and his love affairs with various girls, including Maud, his landlady's daughter, Lotie, outlaw of the streets, and finally Edith, the typical English maiden of fiction and fancy.

+ Atlan 114:521 O '14 900w

"A novel with so obvious a purpose as the criticism of a national life is likely to tell a tiresome story. Yet Mr. George has woven his 'purpose' into his plot and made it an essential of the latter's development." Rex Glendinning

+ — Bookm 39:88 Mr '14 800w

"The element we miss most seriously in this novel by the author of 'A bed of roses,' and 'Until the day break' is humor."

+ — Boston Transcript p24 Mr 18 '14 700w

"Very clever novel."

+ Ind 77:419 Mr 23 '14 50w

"Mr. George has tried an interesting experiment in his latest novel. He hasn't entirely succeeded with it; he has succeeded only in spots, or perhaps it would be nearer to say in layers. 'The making of an Englishman' is, first and last, interesting. Reading his book is a real adventure, by no means to be missed."

+ — N Y Times 19:96 Mr 1 '14 1250w

+ R of Rs 49:628 My '14 40w

"The autobiographical way of telling a story has many disadvantages, and Mr. George, though a practised writer, cannot overcome them all. His book has some good writing in it and is a long way ahead of the average novel."

+ — Sat R 117:149 Ja 31 '14 270w

Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 430w

GEORGE, W. L. Second blooming. *$1.35 (1c)
 2 Little 14-22556

The story of three sisters who have reached that stage of life called by another novelist "the dangerous age." All are married; Clara to a rising politician, Grace to a rising lawyer, Mary to a successful business man. Clara, who has no children, throws herself into politics; Grace, who has only two children, is driven by her restlessness into an illicit love affair; Mary, who already has four children, keeps on having more. At the end of the story Clara has wearied of her feverish round of activities and declares herself done with politics; Grace, while not exactly repentant, has given up her lover; and Mary, the number of her children increased to seven, is still placidly content. Some readers may see in Mary Mr. George's solution of the woman problem; others may feel after reading the book that he has a wider vision of what their future may be; for, after all, Mary's solution was a purely negative one; her children merely kept her from thinking.

"It is to Mr. George's credit that by skilful characterization and dialogue he wins sympathetic interest in such a novel."

+ — Ath 1914,2:453 O 31 400w

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 6 '15 1350w

"There are some weak places in the story. Mr. George has written an excellent novel, and one much more readable than the clever one he published last year, 'The making of an Englishman.' He has done more. He has exhibited a kind of imagination which is too rare in English fiction, an imagination that has enabled him to see (and to tell us) how it was with Grace."

Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 58:52 Ja 16 '15 900w

Nation 100:171 F 11 '15 630w

"But it is unjust to rail at Mr. George, even by implication, for what he has not given us, when in his original, truthful and often brilliantly written novel he has given us so much."

Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 20:22 Ja 17 '15 900w

"Mr. George is regarded as something of an expert on the woman question—at least he has written on it considerably. It is probable, however, that he has never gotten into the subject as exhaustively as in this novel."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 14 '15 600w

GEORGE, W. L. Woman and to-morrow. *$1.25
 1 Appleton (Eng ed-27212)

"Feminism is, according to Mr. George, an attempt to 'establish a state of balance when sex differences will remain, but when sex-privileges will vanish.' . . . He does not discuss individual women, but the problems that woman has got to have settled for her in the future. . . . He gives us a very accurate illumination of woman's relation as it has been, as it may be in the future, to the home, to suffragism, the arts and labor, and to passion, a sociological term for love."

— Boston Transcript

"The author's sentimental soarings reach their highest flight in the chapter on 'Woman and passion.' The chapter on 'Woman and the home' has in it a very good criticism of the waste in the present system of private house-keeping." F. F. Bernard

+ — Am J Soc 19:415 N '13 500w

"Interesting but, too extreme to be convincing to many readers."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:139 D '13

"He should withdraw the book, and give at least a year to reflection, sympathetic investigation, and correction."

— Ath 1912,2:522 N 2 600w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Woodbridge
 Atlan 113:510 Ap '14 8500w

+ Boston Transcript p25 Ap 16 '13 270w

"The author states that any discussion of feminism should be stimulating—as his own book certainly is. With many of its suggestions the rank and file of feminists will not agree."

+ — Ind 74:318 F 6 '13 380w

"It is smart journalism, the effort to write brightly and epigrammatically on a subject before the public, that the author has not considered very deeply."

— N Y Sun p4 My 17 '13 30w

"His remarks upon women and prohibition in the United States and upon co-education are decidedly ill-informed. His book, however, sets forth very plainly and cogently, and discusses with calmness and reasonableness, just what are the demands and desires of the feminist movement in its most comprehensive sense."

+ — N Y Times 18:266 My 4 '13 110w

GEORGIA, ADA ELJIVA. Manual of weeds.
 2 (Rural manuals) il *$2 Macmillan 14-18393

A weed is defined as "a plant that is growing where it is desired that something else shall grow." Each weed, the author says further, has its own way of winning in its struggle with the farmer's crop, and in order to get the better of it he must make a particular study of its life history and habits. To furnish a guide in this matter of extermination of weeds is the purpose of the book. Brief chapters on: What is a weed? Financial loss due to weeds, Dissemination of weeds, and Chemical herbicides precede the Descriptive list. This list aims to include every species known to occur in the United States and Canada. Each species is described and the best means of extermination outlined. The book is concluded with a bibliography, a list of poisonous plants, a glossary, and an index.

"Many agricultural handbooks have come recently from the press, and this is among the best of them. The index is adequate." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 23 '15 140w

"It is excellently prepared and eminently useful."

+ R of Rs 51:250 F '15 200w

GEORGIAN poetry, 1911-1912. *$1.50 Putnam

If the title of this book suggests an earlier century, one must remind himself that at the present day a George occupies the British throne. The anthology is compiled from the work of modern English poets, and is presented to the public, the editor states, in the belief that English poetry is on the eve of a new renaissance.

+ — Ath 1912,2:780 D 28 90w

Reviewed by W: A. Bradley
 Bookm 39:190 Ap '14 160w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p7 F 8 '13 300w

"The book contains some very good poetry."

+ — Boston Transcript p7 O 28 '13 550w

"The English book seems to contain a good deal of poetry in solution, but it does not crystallize into anything distinct." C: L. Moore

— + Dial 55:472 D 1 '13 380w

"Important and interesting anthology."

+ Lit D 46:479 Mr 1 '13 1000w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 99:655 D 3 '14 270w

Reviewed by Helen Bullis

+ N Y Times 20:33 Ja 31 '15 330w

"One of the chief criticisms of the book is that the space allotted to the various poets is badly apportioned." Filson Young

+ — Sat R 114:764 D 21 '12 1550w

"The selection has been done with great skill and judgment, but the editor must expect the fate of all anthologists and have his choice criticised."

+ — Spec 110:107 Ja 18 '13 550w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 O 29 '14 320w

GERMAN army from within, by a British officer
 11 who has served in it. *$1 (2½c) Doran

14-18661

The author says that as a boy he was educated partly in his own country and partly in Germany. At twelve years of age he was sent to a German military college, so he is able to write of the training a German soldier receives from the beginning. Later he held a commission in the German army. He writes of The cadet college; The officer at work and play; The non-coms; Married life in a German garrison; The training of recruits; Uniforms and badges; Transport and manoeuvres; General staff; The secret service; The war lord and his entourage. He is a loyal Englishman and he condemns the Prussian ideal and its military system, but he writes without bitterness and confesses to happy memories of his own experiences in the German army.

"We commend the book highly to all who welcome instruction of real value tempered by amusement."

+ Ath 1914,2:387 O 17 250w

"What value this book has lies in its narrative of army life in Germany." E: B. Krehbiel
+ — Dial 57:379 N 16 '14 120w

"Worthless. It is made up almost entirely of dubious anecdote, the 'information' it conveys is full of errors, and the spirit in which it is written is enough to discredit it, being one of cheap sneers at the army it is supposed to describe and the nation behind that army. The book was evidently written to tickle a certain kind of public taste in England."

— Nation 99:635 N 26 '14 80w

"On the whole, it is not to be recommended to serious students; it is written obviously with an anti-German bias, and is not always to be commended on grounds of accuracy."

— Nation 100:148 F 4 '15 630w

N Y Times 19:455 O 18 '14 320w

+ Outlook 108:815 D 9 '14 60w

R of Rs 50:762 D '14 80w

Spec 113:469 O 3 '14 27w

"The information of the anonymous author of this book is not quite up to date, but he has given us an interesting account of the life of the German soldier as he himself lived it; and even when he is severe in criticism, it is his obvious intention to be fair."

+ — Spec 113:561 O 24 '14 1700w

GEROULD, KATHARINE FULLERTON. Vain oblations. *$1.35 (1½c) Scribner 14-4741

The title of the book, taken from that of the first story, serves admirably to define the group as a whole. All are, in one way or another, stories of useless sacrifice. The titles following the first are: The mango-seed; The wine of violence; On the staircase; The tortoise; The divided kingdom; The case of Paramore.

"Not since Mrs. Wharton's first appearance in this field have we had anything so wholly satisfactory."

+ Atlan 114:530 O '14 320w

"The best collection of short stories of the year." Griffin Mace

+ Bookm 39:562 Jl '14 800w

"They are extremely skilful products of the art of the short story. They are not pretty or pleasant stories; in fact, they are without exception 'disagreeable,' gresome, or harrowing."

+ — Nation 98:332 Mr 26 '14 280w

"Though the tales in this volume are, generally speaking, above the average, this note of helplessness becomes a trifle wearing. They are all ingenious; and related with many felicitous expressions and clever descriptions of the out-of-the-way corners of the earth in which their scenes are laid, but they sometimes lack the dramatic quality."

+ — N Y Times 19:124 Mr 15 '14 530w

"The author's literary achievement and her penetrating analysis of temperament deserve unstinted praise, but we hope her next book will have fewer shudders and more smiles."

+ — Outlook 106:772 Ap 4 '14 100w

"Clever, well-written stories, mostly unpleasant in subject."

+ — Spec 114:56 Ja 9 '15 10w

GERRARD, REV. THOMAS J. Bergson; an exposition and criticism from the point of view of St. Thomas Aquinas. *90c Herder

"This philosophical treatise of Father Gerrard appeared last year in the pages of 'The Catholic world.' . . . Father Gerrard writes for the man in the street, and tells us that his book is 'an attempt to place the questions at issue on a basis of common sense, with St. Thomas, the great philosopher of common sense, as his guide.'"—Cath World

"The point of view chosen has much to recommend it for the purposes of popular criticism such as this, and the book contains many good passages—nuts to crack for the too-ready or uninstructed disciple of M. Bergson. But the treatment as a whole is slight and often astonishingly crude, marred further by the scolding tone which pervades many pages, also by the uncommon poverty of the illustrations. The writer's science is not his strong point."

— + Ath 1913,2:621 N 29 200w

"Father Gerrard's popular exposition answers the need of the average Catholic affected by 'Bergsonitis,' better than a more pretentious scholastic treatise."

+ Cath World 99:111 Ap '14 300w

GERRY, MRS. MARGARITA (SPALDING).
2 Masks of love. il *$1.20 (1½c) Harper

14-2480

On its objective side this is the story of a young girl's stage experiences; subjectively it is a psychological study of her emotional development during one crucial year. At their first meeting Marjorie Spofford and Newbold, the manager under whom she is to play minor parts in a traveling company, experience at once both sex attraction and sex antagonism. The story that follows, whatever its outward concerns, deals primarily with their reactions and readjustments. The author takes her title from the Burne-Jones drawing, "The masque of cupid," a picture which, according to Newbold's reading of it, represents the various masks which love may wear.

+ Atlan 114:532 O '14 180w

"The author runs the usual difficulties of trying to portray a half-symbolic truth in a novel. At times she adheres slavishly to the outlines of her motive; at other times she contradicts herself and makes us wonder if she is trying to disprove her theory. A bright, controversial novel written with careless vividness."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 650w

"The story has about as much relation to reality as the old-fashioned Sunday-school book had, it is, however, readable, and calculated to give the young person the illusion that she is being enlightened."

+ — Nation 98:398 Ap 9 '14 350w

"The novel mirrors almost none of that vulgarity and coarseness which the public has grown accustomed to expect in stories of theatrical folk, but is written with a refined, almost fastidious, instinct of selection."

+ N Y Times 19:76 F 15 '14 300w

Reviewed by M. A. Hopkins

Pub W 85:1061 Mr 21 '14 370w

GERRY, MRS. MARGARITA (SPALDING).
12 Sound of water. il *$1 (2c) Harper 14-17620

A mystery story. The house known as the lobster-pound off the coast of Maine, approachable only by water, is occupied by a man named Rogers and his wife. Little or nothing is known of them by the villagers and they keep no servants. Mrs. Rogers disappears and her husband is suspected of foul play. The only clue is a shoe buckle dropped by an unknown young woman who landed at the house the day of the strange disappearance of its mistress. With the buckle in hand the local sheriff starts out to find the young woman; he succeeds and brings her back to act as star witness in the trial that follows.

"So much has to be explained and affirmed in these last pages that the story loses interest here from its over-substance as it does previously from its under-substance."

— Boston Transcript p20 D 23 '14 350w

GERRY, MRS. MARGARITA—Continued.

"This story is sufficiently well told to command the interest of its readers, in spite of the obvious defects of its machinery."

+ — N Y Times 19:476 N 1 '14 150w

GEST, JOHN MARSHALL. Lawyer in literature.
$2.50 Boston bk. 13-15339

"Mr. Gest has dealt entertainingly with the law and lawyers of Dickens, Scott, and Balzac. There are also chapters dealing with the writings of Coke, the influence of biblical texts upon English law, and the historical method of the study of law as illustrated by the development of the doctrine governing the master's liability for the tort of his servant. An introduction is furnished by Prof. John H. Wigmore."—Am Pol Sci R

+ Am Pol Sci R 7:682 N '13 90w

"The addresses and essays reprinted in this volume possess interest enough to warrant their reproduction in book form without the voucher of a third person, however distinguished."

+ Nation 98:402 Ap 9 '14 500w

+ Spec 112:615 Ap 11 '14 500w

GETTELL, RAYMOND GARFIELD. Problems
in political evolution. $2 (2c) Ginn 14-4580

"This volume aims to settle no controverted questions. Its province is to state problems, not to solve them. Its purpose is to show the relativity of political methods and the multiplicity of forces involved in each phase of political evolution. . . . Such a study necessitates numerous broad generalizations, few of which are entirely above criticism. . . . In a general way an attempt is here made to trace the evolution of certain phases of the state, to point out some of the problems that have arisen because of the nature of political organization, to indicate the methods that men at various times and places have employed in their attempted solutions, and to bring out the permanence of these problems, the impossibility of their final settlement, the need for constant compromise and adjustment, and the danger of rash experiments and extremes."—Preface

"Within his frankly admitted limitations the author has certainly accomplished what he set out to do. His statements, while comprehensive and somewhat attenuated in spots, are readily understood, for his treatment is general and even elementary throughout. There is no attempt made to treat exhaustively, and in a fresh and vigorous manner, some selected problems of political evolution, as the title of the book might suggest. It is however, a scholarly and a thoroughly creditable piece of work, which will serve a useful purpose in disseminating the available information and in promoting sane and well balanced thinking on some problems of the state." W. A. Schaper

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:509 Ag '14 430w

Educ R 49:104 Ja '15 50w

"Within the limits laid down the author has done his work with carefulness and good sense."

+ Nation 99:583 N 12 '14 300

GHOSAL, MRS. (SRIMATI SVARNA KUMARI DEVI). Unfinished song. $*1.50 Macmillan

A story by the sister of Rabindranath Tagore. "Mrinalini (Lotus), who is called Moni (Jewel), is the heroine and narrator of Mrs. Ghosal's novel, which surely is not without its autobiographical touches. She tells us first of her childhood in a home where the most beautiful of the Indian traditions flourished side by side with the refinements of European civilization. . . . When Moni is about nine years old she falls in love with the boy called 'Chotu' (Little one), a sort of monitor in the school which she attends. Once, with some of her friends, she hears Chotu, alone in the school-room, hum a snatch of song:

Alas, we met
When moon and stars had faded.
Springtime had fled and flowers withered lay,
Garland in hand through the dark night I awaited . . .

This is the unfinished song, from which the book takes its name. Two years pass and Moni hears it again, sung this time by one Romanath Roy, a cultured Hindu, who has studied abroad. Roy makes love to her, and chiefly by means of his singing he wins her affection. . . . The dénouement of Moni's love story is natural and happy, and proves Mrs. Ghosal's mastery of the plot." (N Y Times)

+ Atn 1914:159 Ja 10 430w

"She knows what she has to tell, and she tells it with a simplicity and directness almost child-like." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:204 S 16 '14 250w

"It is, in short, a simple and pleasant story of a type very familiar to western readers."

+ Nation 99:470 O 15 '14 350w

"She describes characters vividly and creates dialogue that is vivacious and real. Some of the conversations of the Bengali youths, 'whose whole life is one of great imitations,' are deliciously funny."

+ N Y Times 19:345 Ag 16 '14 1100w

Spec 112:356 F 28 '14 30w

GIACOSA, GIUSEPPE. The stronger; Like falling leaves; Sacred ground; three plays; tr. from the Italian with an introd. by Edith and Allan Updegraff. (Modern drama ser.) il $*1.50 Kennerley 13-25735

"The unpretentious introduction reviews sympathetically Giacosa's life and work. It might have been more useful had it taken its point of departure from research on Giacosa's visit and reception in America in 1892, rather than from a comparison of him with D'Annunzio. The comparison rightly concludes that there is no comparison possible."—Nation

"The translation, while not literal, so far conveys the spirit and movement of the text as to give the impression of original works."

+ A L A Bkl 10:351 My '14

"One feels that in making these selections from Giacosa's rich offering, Mrs. Updegraff has gathered together the most typical illustrations of his genius in a work that will give to the American public all of Giacosa it needs or will care to know. Her translations also are among the best that have appeared in the Italian field."

+ — Nation 98:166 F 12 '14 420w

GIBB, MARIAN P. Guide to the Chassevant method of musical education. il $*1 (4c)
Stokes 14-8485

Mlle. Chassevant is here introduced as "one of the first pioneers of what has now come to be regarded as sound musical education." The outstanding feature of her method is ear training. The aim of the method is "to draw out the musical faculties generally—not merely to teach the child to play or sing, but primarily to aid him to distinguish pitch, rhythm, expressiveness, and beauty of tone." The book is designed as a manual for teachers.

"Those engaged in teaching may not agree with every detail in the book, but all must admire the broad lines on which the method is based."

+ Ath 1914:1565 Ap 18 350w

Boston Transcript p19 Ag 12 '14 180w

Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 20w

Reviewed by H. T. Finck

Nation 99:614 N 19 '14 140w

GIBBONS, HERBERT ADAMS. New map of Europe (1911-1914). il $*2 (2c) Century
14-22012

Beginning with a chapter on Germany in Alsace and Lorraine and a discussion of Germany's "Weltpolitik," the author traces the development of the causes that led to the outbreak of a general European war. The Bagdad railroad, Algeiras and Agadir, the war between Turkey and Italy, and the whole of the Balkan struggle are shown to be links in a single chain. Germany forced the war, and Great Britain's entrance into the conflict was inevitable, even had there been no Belgian question. "In August, 1914, the only way to have avoided the catastrophe of a general European war would have been to allow Germany to make, according to her own desires and ambitions, the new map of Europe."

"Nowhere in English will one find as yet a fuller or better discussion of the political and geographical changes which the war is capable of producing." F: A. Ogg

+ Dial 58:46 Ja 16 '15 330w

"In spite of its deficiencies, Mr. Gibbons's book is far above the average of its kind, and is happily almost free from the intense egotism and boastful anecdote which are usually so prominent in current history written by press correspondents."

+ Nation 100:80 Ja 21 '15 1050w

"The book is interesting, well-informed, and without pedantry. If it errs, it is upon the side of undue concessions to timeliness."

+ New Republic 2:28 F 6 '15 580w

+ N Y Times 19:551 D 6 '14 730w

"An important book, well worth reading."

+ Outlook 108:818 D 9 '14 80w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Flaming sword. il
12 *$1.30 (1½c) Appleton 14-16477

Satiated with dissipation, Stephen Fernald decides to end his life by sailing out to sea in the teeth of a gale. Face to face with the naked elements however he finds life sweet and battles for it with the wind and waves. His boat is wrecked on the shore of Heron island and he is rescued and nursed back to health by the lighthouse keeper's daughter. This girl, Meera, is a true Miranda in her innocence—her father's name, by the way, is Prosper. She is ready to fall in love with the first man she sees, and Stephen, altho he knows his own unworthiness returns the feeling. He learns that Prosper Cahoon, her father, is the man his own father had wronged, and later Maisie, the girl out of his past, comes to the island to confront him and make a union with Meera seem more impossible. The author however believes in forgiveness of sins and the story ends with every one happy—except Maisie.

"Mr. Gibbs has drawn with some power the characters of two widely different women."

+ Boston Transcript p26 N 25 '14 250w

"The book holds much dramatic incident, but it refuses to grip the reader or to enlist his sympathetic interest in its characters."

+ N Y Times 19:476 N 1 '14 150w

GIBBS, GEORGE FORT. Madcap. il *$1.30 Appleton 13-23734

A story in which contrasting pictures of society life in New York and peasant life in France alternate. The madcap of the title is Hermia Challoner, an heiress who, having exhausted all the ordinary pleasures offered to idle American girlhood, seeks for new sensations. One of her escapades is a vagabond journey thru France in company with an artist, who like herself is a rebel against conventions. In the end these two mutineers find that happiness lies in the very hum-drum paths which they have hitherto scorned.

"Much as we may admire Mr. Gibbs' realism, we cannot but contrast its picturesque light-heartedness with the many sterner pictures this world offers of reality."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup873 Je 20 350w

"The whole thing is too extravagant, too grotesque, too utterly preposterous." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 38:541 Ja '14 400w

"Altogether it is an attractive story which if sometimes lacking in conviction—notably the 'Vagabondia' episode—compels and holds one's interest."

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 12 '13 550w

"The account of the tour is far and away the best thing in the book."

+ N Y Times 18:704 N 30 '13 200w

GIBBS, HAMILTON. Hour of conflict. *$1.25
4 (1c) Doran 14-4495

A young Englishman who has just been "sent down" from Oxford crosses the channel to spend his enforced vacation in a French fishing village. To pass the time he enters into a flirtation with a village girl who catches his fancy. She is sweet and innocent, and before he realizes it he finds that he truly loves her. He has already let the affair go beyond the bounds of discretion, and because he realizes that he cannot marry her, he goes away. The morning after he has said good-bye to her, he hears that she has drowned herself. Then begins for him a long period of remorse that drives him to the verge of suicide. He comes back to the village, determined to end his life as she had hers, to learn that she is not dead, and that there is still a chance to right the wrong he had done her.

"Mr. Gibbs has wasted a good deal of intelligent and realistic observation on an inadequate story."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup871 Je 20 220w

"Mr. Gibbs's manner of telling his story is simple and direct, his sense of character strong and his style smooth and clear."

+ Bookm 39:343 My '14 340w

"Just where the 'hour of conflict' in the hero's life came the novelist does not make clear. But, wherever it was, the change upon which the author asks us to base our confidence that it made an entirely new man of Leyden, who was twenty-four years of age, is not convincing. The frankness with which the central fact of the story is told will startle the timid reader."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '14 400w

"Despite this decidedly romantic ending, the story is quite convincing, and has a number of intensely dramatic situations. The characters are well drawn."

+ Nation 98:364 Ap 2 '14 230w

"The tale has deep feeling, the utmost sincerity, and many dramatic moments. There is also some good character drawing, especially among the minor figures. But the hero does not ring quite true."

+ N Y Times 19:121 Mr 15 '14 500w

GIBSON, ARNOLD HARTLEY. Natural sources of energy. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c Putnam 14-495

"The work of Professor Gibson naturally discusses the extent and distribution of fossil fuels, but is concerned more largely with possible substitutes for these sources of power, such as solar and internal heat, vegetation, wind, water, and tidal power." (Am Econ R) "The author is extremely optimistic in regard to the maintenance of adequate fuel supplies in the ages to come, believing that science will furnish inventions that will economize the use of fossil fuels and make more and more available other sources of energy." (J Pol Econ)

"In general it forms a convenient summary, though the maps abound in glaring inaccuracies." E. V. R.

+ Am Econ R 4:635 S '14 90w

"This book contributes a good deal of interesting data on the subject of the fuel supply of the future."

+ J Pol Econ 22:714 Jl '14 120w

Reviewed by T. D. A. Cockerell

+ Science n s 40:382 S 11 '14 170w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. Great ball on which we live. (Science for children) il *$1 (2½c) Lippincott (Eng ed A15-57)

The author has told the story of the creation of the earth and the development of life upon it. He has aimed to make the story interesting to children from ten to fifteen. He writes of: How the great ball was made; When the earth was young; How the rocks were made; The first living creatures; The first people who lived on the earth, etc., and in the final chapter gives his young readers an imaginary moving picture of the whole history of creation.

GIBSON, CHARLES R.—Continued.

"A good feature of the book is the number of simple and easy experiments which the author suggests."

+ Ath 1914,2:sup67 D 5 50w

"Mr. Gibson has attempted with considerable success the solution of the old problem—how to interest the children and at the same time instruct them."

+ Nature 94:390 D 10 '14 90w

"Mr. Gibson has written for children of from ten to fifteen years of age, but we fancy his book will be liked best by the youngest of these."

+ Sat R 118:sup12 D 5 '14 120w

"It would provide a child with its first rough lessons in many sciences—astronomy, geology, biology, and even aeronautics."

+ Spec 113:sup780 D 5 '14 40w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. Our good slave electricity. (Science for children) il *$1 (2c) Lippincott (Eng ed A15-58)

The author of this book for children says: "It is not a lesson book, dressed up in a pretty coat, and parading under a fanciful title. It is a story book; a true story which has been made as interesting as possible without departing from the truth." Some of the things which our "slave" electricity does for us is to carry messages, rescue ships at sea, light our streets and houses, ring our bells, push our street-cars, etc. There are also chapters on: Where did we find electricity? and What is electricity like?

"If it is possible to form sound elementary ideas of experimental and observational science merely by reading, it would be difficult to find more attractive introductions than Mr. Gibson has prepared."

+ Nature 94:390 D 10 '14 60w

+ Sat R 118:sup12 D 5 '14 150w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. Romance of scientific discovery. il *$1.50 Lippincott A13-2693

A non-technical description of the most important discoveries in science from the earliest times to the present day. The author "deals simply with very big subjects, such as the size, weight, and the crust of the earth. He has chapters also on human and animal life throughout the ages, on elementary chemistry, light and electricity." (Spec)

+ A L A Bkl 10:307 Ap '14

+ Ath 1913,2:258 S 13 50w

"Includes interesting anecdotes in great variety."

+ Ind 77:386 Mr 16 '14 30w

"The title of this book covers an extremely large field, and any one who attempts to deal with the manifold discoveries in so many branches of science undertakes a difficult task. In spite, however, of the many pitfalls, the author of this work has been fortunate in avoiding them. A capital index is given, and the book is well illustrated with numerous excellent plates."

+ Nature 92:369 N 27 '13 230w

"To the juvenile reader, the book should prove both instructive and inspiring."

+ N Y Times 19:156 Ap 5 '14 100w

+ — Spec 111:sup954 D 6 '13 70w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. Wireless telegraphy and telephony without wires. il *$1 Lippincott A14-11

"Wireless telegraphy is here presented from the point of view of the general reader. An author's note placed opposite the first page of the text requests such a reader to read the book through from the beginning, as the proper understanding of each chapter depends on a knowledge of what has preceded it. With this proviso the work becomes quite intelligible to the lay mind, and should stimulate a fresh desire for knowledge in an important development of modern science."—Ath

Ath 1913,2:384 O 11 80w

"While the arrangement and development of the subject is interesting, the author has not avoided the inaccuracies which are usually frequent in 'popular science' works of this sort. The book is not especially well balanced, but there is in it, nevertheless, a quantity of material which should be interesting to its readers. If in studying it one will not permit the writer's abrupt style and occasional lack of grammatical care to distract him, and will not insist upon absolute accuracy in the treatment of recently developed instruments and methods, he should gain a fairly good idea of the elements and history of wireless."

+ — Elec World 63:443 F 21 '13 250w

"A pleasing and eminently readable volume."

+ Nature 92:682 F 19 '14 200w

GIBSON, CHARLES R. Wonders of modern electricity. il 75c (1½c) McKay

A publisher's note says: "The contents of this book have been taken from Mr. Charles R. Gibson's larger book entitled 'The romance of modern electricity.' Contents: The part played by electricity; How we came to know about electricity; How batteries were invented; What is magnetism? How magnetism is related to electricity; How we came to have the telegraph; How we now send telegrams; Telegraphing across the sea; Some early attempts at telegraphy; Telegraphing through space; Electricity in nature; Interesting applications of electricity; Further applications of electricity; Electricity and speech."

GIBSON, FRANK. Charles Conder: his life and work. il *$6 Lane 14-130

"The book contains the first complete record of his life and work published since the death, four years ago, of this 'decorative artist and painter-poet, who created and lived in a fairy-land of his own.' It also includes a catalogue of his lithographs and etchings by Campbell Dodgson, M. A., keeper of prints and drawings in the British museum. . . . Supplementing the record of the artist's life and work is a collection of full-page plates—one hundred and seven in number—a superb series of illustrations, which witness as in no other way could so vividly be done, Conder's decorative work, his paintings in oil and those water-color drawings which possess so rare a charm. They also include reproductions of his fans, those miniature masterpieces of painting on silk and other delicate fabrics, which won for the artist a distinction none save Watteau has ever held in that branch of art. Indeed, to most people Conder is best known as a painter of fans."—Boston Transcript

Ath 1913,2:sup396 O 11 100w

"A monograph evidently born of real enthusiasm. The actual writing, however, is oddly careless, with redundant words and relative pronouns clumsily appearing to belong to wrong antecedents."

+ — Ath 1913,2:628 N 29 1050w

"Mr. Gibson has done a service of real value not only for artists and students of art, but for all lovers of the beautiful, in making better known to them the work and the personality of Charles Conder."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 14 '14 570w

+ Dial 55:532 D 16 '13 200w

"The biography is not exhaustive, but it is intimate and sympathetic, and in its equitable tone will serve to perpetuate the memory of the artist better than any other style we can imagine. A volume of sufficient importance in appearance to represent the lifework of the short-lived individualist whom it commemorates."

+ Int Studio 51:245 Ja '14 470w

"From Frank Gibson's memoir and essay it seems possible to us to surmise a very definite artistic temperament. To do so becomes something of an act of divination, for Conder's uneventful life is merely sketched, and his work is passed in somewhat descriptive and perfunctory review. Still, what is done is done carefully. The work is listed with surprising thoroughness."

Mr. Gibson's work is dignified and adequate, the fitting tribute of an old friend, but precisely its discretion is its weakness."

+ — Nation 98:43 Ja 8 '14 1250w

+ N Y Sun p3 D 6 '13 140w

Sat Outlook 106:370 F 14 '14 330w

Sat R 116:589 N 8 '13 820w

"In these days of diffuse biography of artists it is a pleasure to find a volume like Mr. Gibson's work on Charles Conder. In it we are given just a few pages of the artist's biography and a few more of notes on his art, and then a large number of reproductions. This is just what is wanted. We cannot help thinking that Mr. Gibson was most singularly ill-advised in admitting three-colour process reproductions into this book. The tender, elusive harmonies appear, of course, only in vulgar travesty."

+ — Spec 111:1029 D 13 '13 500w

GIBSON, ROWLAND R. Forces mining and undermining China. 1l *$2 (3c) Century 14-21059

An analysis of China's real problem and her future by a military interpreter in the Chinese language and a former Chinese inspector under the Transvaal government. It presents facts concerning railroad, mining and labor conditions in China; tells the story of the "big loan," and of the rise of the Kailan mining administration; and shows what forces are mining and undermining China. Chapters: To the business man at home; Mining in general; The rise of the Kailan mining administration; China's future Liverpool; To the concession-hunter; On loaning; The story of the big loan; Railways; Chinese labour overseas; Chinese labour in China; The other side of the picture; Conclusion.

"In every way the book is entertaining as well as informing. Mr. Gibson knows what he is talking about, and he is perfectly fearless." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 15 '14 1400w

"Lacking in that orderly analysis and mastery of material which wins the confidence of the reader in the judgment of the writer the book contains valuable information. But it lacks maturity of judgment and dignity of expression." O. D. Wannamaker

+ — — Dial 58:20 Ja 1 '15 200w

"His discussion of some of the forces which are at work to undermine China at the present day is obviously founded on a valuable intimacy with Chinese affairs."

+ N Y Times 19:377 S 13 '14 1200w

"The book is full not only of statistics, but is also atmospheric with the experience of its author, who knows well the Chinese temperament and conditions of life and industry. It is written with a human touch."

+ Outlook 107:821 Ag 1 '14 180w

"Whether one agrees with Mr. Gibson in his point of view, notably as to what he calls China's 'foolish reluctance' to let control of her land pass into foreign hands, and in a few other matters of state and business ethics, still many readers will thank him for his entertaining and enlightening book." G. J. Colbron

+ Pub W 86:816 S 19 '14 850w

"A very stimulating volume."

+ R of Rs 50:381 S '14 80w

GIBSON, STRICKLAND. Some Oxford libraries. 9 1l *85c Oxford E14-764

"Mr. Gibson gives excellent descriptions of a number of the world's famous collections of books and manuscripts, including those belonging to Merton, Corpus, St. John's, Queen's, All Soul's, and the Bodleian libraries."—N Y Times

"Gives interesting and not generally-known particulars relating to some famous books."

+ Boston Transcript p21 Jl 22 '14 250w

"It is an interesting and pleasing little book."

+ Nation 98:474 O 15 '14 100w

+ N Y Times 19:330 Ag 2 '14 40w

"Friendly little book packed with matter." D. D.

+ Sat R 117:540 Ap 25 '14 850w

GIBSON, WILFRID WILSON. Borderlands and thoroughfares. *$1.25 Macmillan 14-16934

"Borderlands" is made up of three long poems in dramatic form, presenting in each case a dialog between two characters carried out in an unusual setting. In the first, "The Queen's Crags," the scene is a fantastic group of rocks in Cornwall, with one peasant telling another how he has seen Queen Guinevere there on Midsummer eve. The second, "Bloodybush Edge," describes a meeting at night between two tramps, one a poacher one an urban burglar out of his natural setting. The third, "Hoops," gives a picture of a circus ring. "Thoroughfares" is made up of a group of shorter poems.

"Mr. Gibson is straightforward and forcible, with a convincing movement and clarity that brings his scenes and personages vividly before the reader. It is enough to say that Mr. Gibson, even in 'things old and unlovely,' can see the horror, the pathos, and the beauty."

+ Ath 1914:2:449 O 31 430w

"The heart of humanity is in this poet's verse, but in his evocation of the social spirit he never neglects that artistic perfection through which he gains the interest and admiration of all who love art and life." W. S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 5 '14 250w

"Altogether, his is the manliest voice among the younger choir, and the two qualities of simplicity and sympathy are united in him as in no other poet of the day."

+ Ind 80:288 N 23 '14 190w

"For sheer pictorial representation he is unexcelled among the men who belong to the Masefield school."

+ R of Rs 51:117 Ja '15 70w

GIDDINGS, FRANKLIN HENRY. Pagan poems. 2 *$1 Macmillan 14-17317

A small group of poems written by a man "who has given his best years to science and discussion, but who has turned, aside for a time "to make a book of verse." The twenty poems are arranged under the headings: Song, Creation, Man, Woman, Child, Power, Fate.

R of Rs 51:117 Ja '15 70w

GIDE, CHARLES. Political economy. *$3 Heath A14-2149

This is the authorized translation from the third edition of the "Cours d'économie politique." "M. Gide approaches his subject without prejudice, and has no thesis to defend. He is no apologist for the existing social order or any of its proposed substitutes. Hence it is impossible to classify him among any of the exclusive schools of economists. He never forgets, and will not permit us to forget, that a single economic phenomenon may be the effect of many co-operating causes. He therefore opposes any artificial simplification of the problems of political economy, whether in the form of the dogmas of the classical school or the large generalizations of collectivism. . . . In his attitude to the social problem, M. Gide is equally cautious and reserved. No more than any other economist of our times does he defend the inequalities which result from the competitive system. To reduce these inequalities he apparently looks most to the extension of the co-operative movement, both in consumption and in production." (Ath)

"Based on wide and exact scholarship, but written in a lucid, untechnical style which adapts it for general reading."

+ A L A Bkl 11:154 D '14

"The style in which it is written is a model of clear and objective exposition. It is based throughout on a wide and exact erudition, which is, moreover, lightly borne. The interest of the work, too, is as great as its competence. This English translation has been thoroughly well done by Miss Archibald. Naturally enough, she has sometimes been betrayed into Gallicism, and her rendering of technical terms is not always happy. But, if something of the verve and neatness of the original is lost, its meaning has always been interpreted with lucidity and fidelity."

GIDE, CHARLES—Continued.

+ — Ath 1914.1:815 Je 13 800w

"A concise, comprehensive, and up-to-date presentation of the principles of political economy."

+ N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 80w

GIFFEN, SIR ROBERT. Statistics, written

"about the years 1898-1900; ed., with an introd. by H: Higgs, assisted by G: Udney Yule. *$3 Macmillan 14-2941

"A posthumous work, consisting of fragments of material under the same general heading, the volume makes clear the interest of the author in statistical data. The introduction deals with the meaning of statistics. The main part of the book includes a number of chapters on area and population statistics, births, deaths and marriages; imports and exports; agricultural statistics; mineral statistics, and the like."—Ann Am Acad

"The reviewer agrees with the editors that this volume, 'when it has ceased to be reckoned among the literature of knowledge will still remain among the literature of power.'" H. S. Person

+ — Am Econ R 4:441 Je '14 230w

Ann Am Acad 52:229 Mr '14 80w

"Although vast changes have taken place in statistical departments since the book was written, much of the detail and most, if not all, of the generalizations hold good."

+ — Ath 1913.2:492 N 1 250w

"This volume will not attract the flippant reader of course, but for all who have serious interest in the important questions of this country as well as of England it will have interest and instruction."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 23 '13 450w

"The chief virtue of the book, and one most worthy of note, is the clearness with which the author points out the pitfalls of statistics." W. M. Persons

+ — J Pol Econ 22:279 Mr '14 900w

"It contains much of permanent value."

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:177 Mr '14 300w

"The whole of this illuminating book is full of useful instruction conveyed in the simplest and most lucid manner."

+ Spec 112:876 My 23 '14 770w

GIFFORD, FRANKLIN KENT. Democratic

<sup>10</sup> Rhine-maid. *$1.25 (2c) Devin-Adair 14-11093

A pretty story of a young American who meets a German baroness masquerading as a peasant girl on a highway along the Rhine. All goes merrily so long as the baroness keeps up the play, but when she reveals herself, as she is forced to after a time, there are misunderstandings and recriminations, and the little farce comes near to a tragic ending. There is an American girl in the story too—an old love of the hero's—but never for a moment is there any doubt as to which of the two heroines holds his heart.

"The story is amusingly told, and is full of whimsical and farcical incidents that sometimes cover serious intent."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 15 '14 200w

"A bright, frolicsome romance."

+ Cath World 100:688 F '15 80w

"It is an amusing romance, with its touch of the farcical here and there and its many clever conversations. There is, indeed, a maximum of conversation and a minimum of action. But all the characters have a touch of vitality, and a certain humor, whimsical or ironic, glimmers over each one. Underneath all its sprightly fooling one guesses that Mr. Gifford had also some serious thoughts and meant his readers to do a little thinking of their own while they read and smiled."

+ N Y Times 19:291 Je 28 '14 350w

GILBERT, ARIADNE. More than conquerors.

<sup>11</sup> il *$1.25 (1½c) Century 14-17634

A group of biographical sketches written for young people and published first in "St. Nicholas." The men chosen by the author were all called upon to overcome some form of adversity and their success was achieved by a conquest of circumstances. Among them are: Beethoven, Charles and Mary Lamb, Scott, Irving, Emerson, Stevenson, St. Gaudens, and Lincoln.

"Will be useful to the older children and even adults, either for reading or reference."

+ A L A Bkl 11:224 Ja '15 *

"The title of this book would lead one to think the moral tone predominates. That is not so. The human side of these sketches is splendid."

+ Ind 80:416 D 14 '14 50w

"An excellent and invigorating collection of biographies, cordially recommended for home and school use. As a book of collective biographies, this is one of the best examples that has come to our desk for many a year."

+ Lit D 49:1129 D 5 '14 220w

"We have not met with a more agreeable series of sketches in a long while, and we feel assured that the volume will be welcomed as a distinctive supplementary reader in schools."

+ Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 80w

"An excellent book, well written and interesting."

+ N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 70w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 60w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:264 N '14 40w

GILBERT, HENRY. Conquerors of Mexico. il

<sup>2</sup> *$1.50 (2c) Crowell A15-48

A story retold from the pages of Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico," and issued as a companion volume to "The conquerors of Peru." "The aim of both volumes is to bring within the reading scope of young people the history of two of the most romantic achievements in the domains of discovery and conquest. The sober narratives of Prescott have for this purpose been given a more vivid presentment." (Preface)

GILBRETH, MRS. LILLIAN MOLLER. Psychology of management. *$2 (2c) Sturgis & Walton 14-6158

"The psychology of management, as here used, means,—the effect of the mind that is directing work upon that work which is directed, and the effect of this undirected and directed work upon the mind of the worker. . . . This book aims not so much to instruct as to arouse an interest in its subject, and to point the way whence instruction comes. If it can serve as an introduction to psychology and to management, can suggest the relation of these two fields . . . it will have accomplished its aim." (Chapter 1) Contents: The psychology of management; Individuality; Functionalization; Measurement; Analysis and synthesis; Standardizations; Records and programmes; Teaching; Incentives; Welfare.

"This book is well adapted for those who have a previous interest in the subject and is excellent for general class teaching. However, to the one whose interest in this subject is creative it might at times seem to overemphasize the spirit of definition."

+ — Ann Am Acad 55:279 S '14 180w

Boston Transcript p22 Ja 27 '15 200w

Dial 56:507 Je 16 '14 350w

"The author's point of view occasionally yields a new idea of practical value, and the book may serve for nontechnical readers as a digest of 'scientific management' literature." R. R. Potter

+ Engin N 71:1395 Je 18 '14 180w

"A verbose, rambling book that, however, emphasizes strongly some of the important points in cutting down costs in industrial enterprises. It is too tiresome, however, to hold the attention of the busy man."

— + Engin Rec 69:742 Je 27 '14 120w

- + — Ind 79:72 J1 13 '14 330w
 + Indust Engin 14:300 J1 '14 180w
 — Nation 99:442 O 8 '14 150w

"In spite of remediable features the book is a real contribution to applied psychology as well as to the work of the student of efficiency engineering." H. L. Hollingworth

- + — Science n s 40:64 J1 10 '14 450w
GILLETTE, JOHN MORRIS. Family and society.
 *50c (1½c) McClurg 14-1353

Uniform with "The national social science series" this book deals with the basic questions of modern social science—the constitution and function of the family. Chapters: Functions of the family; Origin of marriage; The evolution of the family; Current conditions affecting the family; Biological phases of sex and the family.

"It is a compilation and presents nothing new."

- + — Ann Am Acad 56:175 N '14 70w
 "The book is a model of what such books ought to be. It discusses every phase of family life and relation but in a manner so direct and concise that it can be read through at a sitting."

- + Boston Transcript p6 S 5 '14 150w
 "Mr. Gillette presents his facts in a brief, yet very comprehensive and readable manner."

- + Chaut 72:540 Mr 7 '14 230w
GILLMORE, JNEZ HAYNES. Angel island. il
 *$1.35 (1½c) Holt 14-2479

With the shipwreck of the five men on an uninhabited island, this story starts out as a realistic tale of adventure; with the coming of the winged women, it turns into a fantasy; and with the capture of the women and the clipping of their wings, it becomes allegory. The men are five highly developed products of civilization; the women are untrammelled spirits, free to go and come between the earth and the stars. They come to the island, drawn by an attraction stronger than they; but the five men are convention-ridden; the women must be captured, kept, their wings cut, because, perforce, woman's place is the home, she was never meant to traverse the air. Later there comes the fight of the women to gain freedom for their children and the sacrificial death of one of them for the good of all.

"There are sad blemishes on what came near to being a rather fine achievement. And the fault, we suspect, lies in a deficient sense of humour." F: T. Cooper

- + — Bookm 39:76 Mr '14 750w
 "The beauty or the greatest beauty of a symbolism lies in that which defies exact analysis. Always the story carries itself, but always it is pregnant with the larger suggestion, which gives it its place in feminist literature." D. L. M.

- + Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 800w
 Lit D 48:553 Mr 14 '14 1050w
 "It is, indeed, one of the many praiseworthy qualities of Mrs. Gillmore's novel that it is eminently just. She exalts neither sex at the expense of the other. A book of sound, prosaic truths, as well as of high ideals and beautiful imaginings."

- + — N Y Times 19:45 F 1 '14 1000w
 "An unusual romance, falling only a little short of the impress the author evidently intends to make."

- + R of Rs 49:375 Mr '14 70w
 Spec 113:335 S 5 '14 100w

- GILLMORE, MRS. MARIA (MCILVAINE).
 * Meatless cookery, with special reference to diet for heart disease, blood pressure and autointoxication; introd. by L: Faugeres Bishop. il *$2 Dutton 14-21437

"This book shows how to secure the full and sufficient nutritive values of food without the use of meat, and how to adapt the meatless diet to the various forms of invalidism."—N Y Times

"A most complete receipt-book on 'Meatless cookery.'"

- + Ind 81:31 Ja 4 '15 60w

- N Y Times 19:444 O 11 '14 60w

- GILLMORE, RUFUS HAMILTON. Opal pin.
 *$1.35 Appleton 14-5429

"The plot concerns the identity of Lord Bellmere, a young Englishman, who comes incognito to the United States in order to disprove his father's statement that he has neither the enterprise nor the ability to earn his own living. Another Englishman, one of a band of thieves in New York, impersonates Lord Bellmere for a time successfully, gaining entrance into the 'inner circle' of Boston's most exclusive social set, and causing much trouble for the real Lord Bellmere. In the end, of course, that which threatens to develop into a tragedy of errors finds a happy solution. Throughout the little drama an opal pin passes from one person to another, carrying the traditional ill fortune with it." (Boston Transcript)

"The book is slight and not particularly probable, or realistic."

- Ath 1914,1:sup876 Je 20 130w

"The novel has a 'detective' flavor that lends it the only real interest it possesses."

- + — Boston Transcript p24 Ap 29 '14 230w

"This is one of those swiftly moving, breathless novels of crime and mystery likely to keep an impressionable reader awake until all hours to finish the tale."

- + — N Y Times 19:145 Mr 29 '14 180w

- GILMAN, LAWRENCE. Nature in music, and other studies in the tone-poetry of today.
 *$1.25 (3½c) Lane 14-20512

Mr. Gilman's study of nature in music is made up of two parts, one on Tonal landscapes, one on Music and the sea. The remaining essays in the book are on: Death and the musicians; Strauss and the Greeks; The question of opera in English; A note on Montemezzi; The place of Grieg; A musical cosmopolite.

"It must add to the genuine understanding of music wherever it is thoughtfully read." L: J. Block

- + Dial 58:84 F 1 '15 950w

"A valuable and stimulating little book for music lovers."

- + Ind 81:255 F 15 '15 100w

"Mr. Gilman's books are always worth reading, as well as thought-stimulating. He looks at older topics from neglected angles and revels in new enthusiasms." H: T. Finck

- + Nation 100:33 Ja 7 '15 500w

"He discourses entertainingly and delightfully, —revealingly, because with sympathy and insight."

- + R of Rs 51:121 Ja '15 220w

- GIOVANNITTI, ARTURO. Arrows in the gale.
 *$1 Hillacre bookhouse, Riverside, Conn.

This Italian-American poet, who came to our country at the age of seventeen to serve an apprenticeship in our coal mines and slums, tries to express in this book the meaning of life as such a man interprets it. As Helen Keller says in her introduction, "He has tried to render his ideas of the world he lives in," adding the wise warning to us to judge him "by his success in rendering these ideas in verse, and not by his relations to syndicalism or socialism or any other movement in which he happens to be active."

"His genius is peculiarly alive to sensations of all sorts, upon which a preternaturally active intelligence impresses symbolical correspondences and interpretations." W: A. Bradley

- + Bookm 40:208 O '14 220w

"The impression left by 'Arrows in the gale' is that an earlier and more exclusive addiction to writing might have made Arturo Giovannitti a genuine man of letters. In spite of chronic superabundance, of much vague rhapsody in formless Whitmanesque verse, of an excess of density and hardness in the grenadier-like pace of the squadroned lambics, of plentiful infractions of good English and good taste, the writings of this syndicalist show real imagination, which, when joined with compression and restraint, rises into momentary power."

GIOVANNITTI, ARTURO—Continued.

+ — Nation 99:248 Ag 27 '14 180w

"Our old accepted English meters jangle upon his lyre, but the long rhythmic strophes which we usually associate with Whitman, Giovannitti has made his own by an inward music as compelling and individual as that of the elder poet. It is too soon to attempt an estimate of Giovannitti's genius. These twenty-four poems are like the tentative carolings of young birds. Our singer is trying to find his range, and to get used to his voice. To say, as Miss Keller does in her introduction, that he is 'a better poet than has come out of the privileged classes of America in our day,' is premature." Florence Converse

+ — Survey 32:346 Je 27 '14 1750w

GIRARDEAU, CLAUDE MONICA. Scarlet wagon. $1.25 (2½c) Holt 14-17284

The Scarlets were the owners of a wagon that is likened to the One Hoss Shay, and like that storied vehicle its collapse was sudden and complete. Mrs. Scarlet who had made use of the wagon in her trips to and from the Quarantine station, where she acted as washerwoman, was in despair, but her son Bob was resourceful and from the wreck of the old, a new wagon arose, constructed out of four wheels, a pair of shafts and a discarded boat. The wagon is the means of starting the Scarlets on the road to prosperity. Bob belongs to the type that is bound to succeed, and the story of his progress would be absorbing, even without the adventure of the buried treasure.

+ Nation 99:552 N 5 '14 180w

"The story is told with some humor, and Bob is a likable hero."

+ N Y Times 19:461 O 25 '14 300w

GLADDEN, WASHINGTON. Live and learn. $1 (3c) Macmillan 14-15809

A book made up of eight addresses, reprinted in the form in which they were originally delivered to audiences of young people and other older folk who were still willing to look upon themselves as learners. The speaker would have his hearers, and now his readers, learn to think, speak, see, hear, give, serve, win, and wait.

"Helpful for their virile expression and practical optimism, rather than for any special originality of thought."

+ A L A Bkl 11:151 D '14

"Thoroly wholesome, wise and admirable."

+ Ind 80:291 N 23 '14 80w

N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 90w

"This small but sententious volume is a book of wisdom."

+ Outlook 108:505 O 28 '14 140w

"They are distinctive for their virile expression and hopeful attitude rather than for originality of thought, but should prove useful also to teachers and parents."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:257 N '14 70w

GLASGOW, MAUDE. Life and law. $1.25 (3c) Putnam 14-18100

This book is a discussion of "the development and exercise of the sex function, together with a study of the effect of certain natural and human laws, and a consideration of the hygiene of sex." The first chapters of the book are given up to a consideration of the origin and development of sex and to its physiological aspects. The later chapters take up social problems: prostitution, the regulation of vice, social diseases, the teaching of sex hygiene in schools, etc.

"It is intended for grown folk, but will serve as a basis for information to be given the young. There is a tendency from one cover of the book to the other to regard the good in man as due to woman, and the evil in woman as due to man. This, it need hardly be stated, is no more true than that woman's superior morality is undisputed. But the book has its value notwithstanding this bit of pharisaism."

+ — Dial 57:395 N 16 '14 300w

GLOVER, ELLYE HOWELL (DAME CURTSEY; MADAME MERRI, pseud.). "Dame Curtsey's" book of candy making. il *50c (3c) McClurg 13-21730

Both simple and elaborate recipes for candy, especially adapted to the home. An informing chapter on "The gentle art of candy making" prefaces the recipes.

"A practical little manual for the inexperienced person. Not so elaborate as Nell."

+ A L A Bkl 10:183 Ja '14

GLOVER, ELLYE HOWELL (DAME CURTSEY; MADAME MERRI, pseud.). ed. "Dame Curtsey's" book of games for children. *50c (2c) McClurg 13-24139

Indoor and outdoor games for children are described. Some of them are games suitable for special occasions, Christmas, St. Valentine's day, Halloween, etc. Many are party games; others are home games with which two or three children may amuse themselves.

"A helpful and practical book for mothers and teachers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:178 D '14

"A small volume chock full of meat."

+ N Y Times 19:410 O 11 '14 40w

GLOVER, ELLYE HOWELL (DAME CURTSEY; MADAME MERRI, pseud.). How the piano came to be. il *50c (8½c) Browne & Howell 13-24139

Beginning with the legendary accounts of the origin of the stringed instrument, the author traces the various steps that led from the harpsichord, clavichord and spinet up to the grand piano. These stages are illustrated with interesting photographs.

+ — Boston Transcript p15 D 5 '13 100w

"It is not a mere compilation from the dictionaries, but it contains evidence of wide reading, with entertaining details."

+ Nation 98:19 Ja 1 '14 110w

"The story contains considerable curious information, which does not appear in any other history of the piano."

+ N Y Times 18:689 N 30 '13 40w

GLOVER, TERROT REAVELEY. Christian tradition and its verification. (Angus lectureship, 1912) $1.25 Macmillan

(Eng ed A14-487)

"The appeal of this book is for a verification of the traditional Christian faith, such as can only come from a broad view of life and history, and from patient and steady thinking; an accomplishment rare in any age, but especially rare in one like the present, when popular science and philosophy supply ready-made formulas which can be applied to any problem under discussion, and save the trouble of investigation. Mr. Glover seeks to wean the critic of Christianity from a hasty and superficial examination by sketching for him a course of historical study, and trying to make plain to him that for this and any other historical verification large powers of mind and imagination are necessary."—Spec

"These lectures are good to read; they must have been better to hear. Their form is that of the spoken word, and there is some natural iteration; their appeal is enhanced by a felicity of diction and a wealth of singularly apt illustrative quotation and anecdote. That it is rarely suggestive and stimulating every reader will gratefully attest." C. R. Bowen

+ Am J Theol 18:301 Ap '14 1000w

"His treatment is brief, but suggestive, being fortified by excellent use of pertinent quotation."

+ Ath 1913:1589 My 31 100w

"The last two lectures are especially good."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ag 2 '13 270w

"The volume is remarkably characterized by broad culture, fresh thoughts, and intentness on spiritual reality."

+ Outlook 104:1010 Ag 30 '13 250w

"It would be difficult to point to a volume of theological lectures so full of imaginative stimulus."

+ Spec 112:615 Ap 11 '14 600w

GLYN, ELINOR. Man and the moment. il
11 *$1.35 Appleton 14-16200

"Not once or twice have we fallen upon a novel founded upon the situation of a man and a woman agreeing, for material reasons, to a nominal marriage, and parting immediately after the ceremony. Dear to the heart of a writer of fiction are the countless complications which thereupon arise, invariably ending in the contracting parties falling in love with each other, and changing a marriage de jure into a marriage de facto. In 'The man and the moment' the hero marries to escape from a liaison of which he is weary; the heroine, a slip of a girl just from a convent, to gain her freedom and the control of her large property. Strange results follow, and years pass before the two come into their own."

—N Y Times

"Something of real plot ingenuity is shown by Mrs. Glyn for the first time in her latest novel. Whether this achievement marks an advance in craftsmanship or is merely a happy accident, it is equally welcome. Moreover—and this is the important point—she keeps the story moving forward, with a minimum of space devoted to pseudo-philosophic vaporing or risqué suggestion, to a more or less logical conclusion." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p24 S 30 '14 950w

"The story is told with spirit, but it does not carry the reader with it. It belongs to the many that help to kill time when we have ourselves very much on our hands, but that seems, after all, scarcely worth while."

—+ N Y Times 19:449 O 18 '14 200w

GLYN, ELINOR. Your affectionate godmother (Eng title, Letters to Caroline). il *$1.25
Appleton 14-7272

"Caroline is a girl of 17, an heiress, and apparently an orphan, and the letters of the title are addressed to her by her godmother." (Ath) "The subject—the principal and recurring theme—of these frank conversations is how men may be charmed and held." (Sat R)

"The morality, it is true, is of no lofty order, and cannot be said to be even distantly tinged with emotion. But these qualifications by no means make against dullness—rather the contrary; and that unpardonable sin is avoided, if avoided at all, only by the narrowest possible margin."

—Ath 1914:1:618 My 2 750w

"One of the last things to be wished is that this book of 'common sense' advice to a debutante should be taken as a guidebook of conduct by girls of the present day, but it has its side of interest. We always wonder what the author is going to say. We often guess wrongly, and it piques us to continue the perusal of the book." D. L. M.

—+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 29 '14 500w

—Sat R 117:507 Ap 18 '14 700w

GOBINEAU, JOSEPH ARTHUR, count de. The renaissance: Savonarola—Cesare Borgia—Julius II—Leo X—Michael Angelo; ed. by Oscar Levy. il *$2.75 Putnam 14-2971

Count Gobineau, a French philosopher who worked out a Nietzschean philosophy before the day of Nietzsche, is well known and much admired in Germany, but practically unknown in the English speaking countries. "Only now does an English translation of his 'Renaissance' appear. The book is interesting enough to make its readers feel a sense of surprise that it should have waited so long for translation. . . . The book covers the time from Savonarola's period at the end of the fifteenth century to the death of Michael Angelo in 1564. The essence of the age of the renaissance is revealed in five historical scenes, wherein some of the notable men of the age give to us their ideas in the form of dialogues." (Outlook)

"Without assenting to this somewhat crude philosophy, we recognize the power of these pictures, which are poetically, if not always historically, just."

+ Ath 1913:2:308 S 27 450w

"The book is useful as a corrective. The Conte de Gobineau is a sort of 'advocatus diaboli' whose work may perhaps moderate what is sometimes an undue and excessive enthusiasm for the people and the period." C. T. Brady

+ Bookm 39:213 Ap '14 880w

+ Lit D 48:1126 My 9 '14 110w

"After all necessary qualifications, 'The renaissance' remains essentially a true book, in which one of the most amazing episodes in history is vividly embodied. Mr. Cohn's translation, although not distinguished, is readable, and, wherever we have compared it with the French we have found it trustworthy."

+ Nation 97:535 D 4 '13 2800w

"The long introduction by Dr. Oscar Levy is one of those things that make an author beg to be delivered from his friends."

+ N Y Times 19:24 Ja 13 '14 900w

"The text is both vivacious and vivid."

+ Outlook 106:154 Ja 17 '14 160w

"It is seldom that we have read a piece of literature that so revitalizes a long gone historical period as do these plays, particularly 'Savonarola.'"

+ R of Rs 48:761 D '13 110w

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 12 '14 1250w

GODDARD, HENRY HERBERT. Feeble-mindedness; its causes and consequences. il *$4 (2½c) Macmillan 14-12574

A book based upon a case study of mental defectiveness carried out by the Vineland research laboratory. It contains a report on 327 cases investigated by field workers with conclusions drawn from them and comments on the relation of feeble-mindedness to such social problems as prostitution, alcoholism, pauperism, etc. Contents: Social problems; Reliability of the data; The data; Causes; Discussion of the data; Mendel's law of inheritance; Is feeble-mindedness a unit character? Is the inheritance of feeble-mindedness in accordance with the Mendelian law? Eugenics; Practical applications.

A L A Bk1 11:151 D '14

"The conclusions Dr. Goddard has reached will greatly interest all who have relations, more or less close, with unfortunates to whom possession of sound minds has been denied."

+ N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 200w

"Every reader of the book must be struck by the accuracy with which the investigation has been carried on, the care with which data have been checked up, and the conscientious conservatism which has guarded the writer in his somewhat radical conclusions." M. A. Hopkins

+ Pub W 86:819 S 19 '14 580w

"The facts here presented are most interesting and valuable from the standpoint of social science."

+ R of Rs 50:627 N '14 80w

"A most interesting and valuable contribution to the literature of this subject."

+ Spec 113:809 D 5 '14 80w

GODDARD, HENRY HERBERT. School training of defective children. (School efficiency ser.) il 75c (4c) World bk. co. 14-17640

This report on defective children in the New York city schools was prepared as part of the general report of the New York city school inquiry made in 1912. Altho it deals entirely with conditions in one city its conclusions have a wider application since, as Dr. Goddard points out, "the problem is, in the main, the same everywhere." The value of the report to those outside New York, he points out further, "lies in the fact that, because of its great size, New York has had much experience in a short time."

GODDARD, HENRY HERBERT—Continued.

+ Educ R 48:534 D '14 100w

+ El School J 15:235 Ja '15 180w

GODINEZ, F. LAURENT. Lighting book. il
*$1.25 (5c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-278

The book deals exclusively with home lighting problems and considers both their practical and esthetic aspects. Contents: Light and the eye; The misuse of light; Light and the mind-psychology; The modification of light; Seeing by light transmitted; Shading and re-directing light; Light on the path; Making the most of light; Indirect lighting; Individuality in lighting; Light in the home; Light and decoration.

"Small libraries will find sufficient material on this subject in periodicals or books on house decoration."

+ A L A Bkl 10:351 My '14

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 20 '13 230w

"The book should interest all who seek to arrange the lighting of their homes."

+ Elec World 63:221 Ja 24 '14 130w

+ Engin N 71:650 Mr 19 '14 230w

"A helpful and interesting book."

+ N Y Sun p6 D 13 '13 80w

+ N Y Times 18:762 D 28 '12 50w

GOEPP, PHILIP HENRY. Symphonies and their meaning. v 3, Modern symphonies. *$2
Lippincott 13-23510

"The third series includes the symphonic poems of Liszt, Saint-Saëns, Wolf, Loeffler, and Richard Strauss; but most of its pages are devoted to the symphonies of Berlioz, Liszt, Franck, Tchaikovsky, the neo-Russians, Sibelius, Bruckner, Mahler, Sgambati, Martucci, Elgar, Hadley, Strube, and Chadwick."—Nation

"Useful to untrained music lovers."

+ A L A Bkl 10:263 Mr '14

"Sympathetic understanding and abundant technical knowledge make the book a helpful 'vade mecum' for the concert-goer."

+ Ind 77:355 Mr 9 '14 90w

+ Nation 98:219 F 26 '14 310w

"Music lovers will read the book with interest and can profit by it. Mr. Goepp is, for all his imagination, not a sentimentalist, and keeps a more or less firm grasp of the realities of things, and guides his readers intelligently through paths that are not always easy to find."

+ N Y Times 19:84 F 22 '14 320w

"As an aid to study and a valued companion at concerts this work cannot be excelled."

+ R of Rs 49:113 Ja '14 40w

GOLDFISH; being the confessions of a successful man. *$1.30 (2c) Century 14-8223

A successful man, who finds an income of seventy-five thousand a year inadequate for the current expenses of his family, whose wife and daughters move in the inner circles of New York society, whose son, altho nominally a lawyer like his father, has a reputation as an amateur dancer, having arrived at the age of fifty, sits down to analyze his way of life, to sum up his assets and liabilities. The assets as it turns out, are, practically negligible. This rich man, too, is one of those who, having gained the world, has suffered the corresponding loss. The confession is frank to a surprising degree, and the whole forms an honest criticism of contemporary tendencies.

A L A Bkl 10:412 Je '14

+ Atlan 114:526 O '14 230w

"The book is one to be read slowly and pondered over. It is rich in wise comments on current American life and lays a discerning finger on some of the weakest spots in our national manners and customs. It is fiction, but it is many other things besides: philosophy, satire, household economics, all these and more. Best of all, it is a breviary of the saving gospel of contentment." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:554 J1 '14 850w

Boston Transcript p4 My 13 '14 750w

"An eminently readable volume from which the reader draws both entertainment and information."

+ N Y Times 19:197 Ap 19 '14 820w

Springfield Republican p5 My 21 '14 360w

GOLDMAN, SAMUEL P. Handbook of stock exchange laws; affecting members, their customers, brokers and investors. *$1.50 (2c)
Doubleday 14-4290

A book intended as a reference book for stock-brokers and lawyers. "Mr. Goldman deals with the New York stock exchange alone, but the preeminence of that institution justifies such selective treatment. He sets forth not only the relevant laws and decisions of the state of New York but also the constitution and by-laws of the stock exchange itself, with the court interpretations that have from time to time been given of this constitution." (Pol Sci Q)

"Part three, dealing with the broker and customer, is the most valuable portion of the work, and well deserves more than forty pages. If any criticism may be made, it is that an arrangement by subject would have proved more satisfactory to the ordinary reader than a division into constitution of the exchange, laws and decisions, by-laws and rules of the exchange, and laws of the state of New York. The latter arrangement makes necessary a reference to several sections at times in order to cover completely a particular subject."

+ Ann Am Acad 55:279 S '14 220w

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 2 '15 250w

"The book is written with lawyer-like directness and precision and is well indexed."

+ Pol Sci Q 29:559 S '14 130w

R of Rs 49:507 Ap '14 80w

GOLDMARK, PAULINE DOROTHEA, and HOPKINS, MARY, comps. Gypsy trail: an anthology for campers. *$1.25 Kennerley 14-19178

This collection of poems, put up in convenient size and durable binding, is designed for the camper's kit. The verses selected are of the kind that read well out of doors, and there is a sufficient variety for the satisfaction of many tastes. A number of poems in other languages, German, French and Latin, are included. Preference seems to have been given to the older poets: Emerson, Wordsworth and Whitman are well represented; but the younger singers are not forgotten: Yeats, Bliss Carman, Josephine Preston Peabody, and other moderns contribute.

"A delightful little collection of verse, full of the open-air and woodsy atmosphere."

+ A L A Bkl 11:210 Ja '15

"There are many more poems than in 'The open road,' and several new and happily conceived groupings. Lovers of verse and the trail will find abundant pleasure in the book, but the 'Golden treasury' of outdoor verse is still to be made."

+ Ind 80:172 N 2 '14 170w

N Y Times 19:481 N 1 '14 100w

R of Rs 51:118 Ja '15 100w

GOLDSMITH, ELIZABETH EDWARDS. Toby. il *$1.25 (3c) Macmillan 13-21768

A book for dog lovers. In telling Toby's story his mistress introduces many of her other dog friends, from Wrinkles, the pug, to Rob-roy McGregor, the collie. Toby himself is a fox terrier who, in the course of the narrative, grows from joyous puppyhood to serene old age.

"A really delightful book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:286 Mr '14

"There is an unfortunate inclination to tell the story in the hither-and-yon style which is a little irritating, otherwise it is well written, bright and descriptive. For the last pages we have nothing but praise."

+ — Ath 1913;2:702 D 13 160w

"Should interest all who love dogs."

+ N Y Sun p4 N 8 '13 60w

+ N Y Times 19:333 Ag 2 '14 160w

Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 20w

GOMME, SIR GEORGE LAURENCE. London. il
12 *$2 (2c) Lippincott A15-32

This volume is devoted to the thesis that the continuity of London's history is evident from Celtic times to the present. "London retains in each successive age that which is useful from the past in meeting new facts of life which arise; and it adds to the old that is retained, the necessary fresh elements which go to make up the successful grappling with new problems coming with new eras." Ten chapters deal with the various epochs, supplemented with two upon Growth and The greatness that is London.

"The author has gone too far in his emphasis on the origins of the greatness of London. But in his treatment of the city itself, its history, its plan and demarcation, its internal and self-governing constitution, he is admirable."

+ — Ath 1914;1:711 My 23 1150w

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

Bookm 40:420 D '14 430w

"Whatever may be the soundness or the unsoundness of his theories, the book is a monument to his antiquarian research and at the same time a novel and interesting treatment of an inexhaustible theme."

+ Dial 57:460 D 1 '14 200w

"A most stimulating and suggestive volume."

R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:914 J1 '14 80w

"For the antiquarian and historian, as well as for the student of English history, there is a wealth of information and research in Sir Laurence Gomme's trilogy on London. The format is so desirable that one regrets objecting to the weight of the book, which could have been obviated by using a thinner paper."

+ — Nation 100:120 Ja 28 '15 380w

"It is the work of an informed man, thoroughly skilled in the art of sharing his information; it is a story without a dull page."

+ N Y Times 19:529 N 29 '14 170w

R of Rs 50:757 D '14 90w

"Sir Laurence's fine enthusiasm animates the book throughout, and his choice of quotations is most skilful. The style of the book is bright, but somewhat unconventional. The illustrations are attractive and to the point."

+ — Sat R 117:607 My 9 '14 900w

GOODING, DAVID PAUL. Picturesque New Zealand. il *$3.50 Houghton 13-21897

"Mr. Gooding's is no guide book, nor is it an encyclopaedic summary of notable sociological and industrial conditions. It is rather an intimate picture of New Zealand; of its shores, forests, caves, geysers, mountains, glaciers, birds, and fishes, and especially of its men and women—and of these, particularly of those whose ancestors were cannibals."—Outlook

"An interesting book. He is a close observer but not too bent on imparting information."

+ A L A Bkl 10:183 Ja '14

"In his 'Picturesque New Zealand' he has produced a work of art. It has beauty of a glowing, vital quality; it is carefully planned, balanced and unified."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 20 '13 600w

+ Dial 55:528 D 16 '13 250w

+ Ind 76:315 N 13 '13 60w

"The tantalizing character of Mr. Gooding's descriptions is enhanced by the excellence of the numerous illustrations with which his book is enriched."

+ Nation 98:638 My 28 '14 900w

"His observations may not be more valuable than those of the average tourist, but he is an intelligent one; he tells us many astonishing things that we ought to know and he is always entertaining. The book would be read eagerly even if it had no pictures; those the author has obtained are wonderfully fine."

+ N Y Sun p4 O 25 '13 170w

"A travel book of singular beauty and charm."

+ Outlook 105:935 D 27 '13 100w

GOODNOW, RUBY ROSS, and ADAMS, RAYNE. Honest house; with introd. by F. L. Ackerman. il *$3 Century

The title page describes this as a book "presenting examples of the usual problems which face the home-builder, together with an exposition of the simple architectural principles which underlie them; arranged especially in reference to small house design." There are chapters on: American houses and their European prototypes; The useful and the beautiful; Concerning color; The materials; Walls and their openings; The consideration of the roof; The column and its cornice; The pleasure of porches; Details of interior design, etc., with plentiful illustrations and plans.

Reviewed by Algernon Tassin

+ Bookm 40:433 D '14 400w

"This is much more than an honest book. It is a charming and sensible book besides. Their discussion of the house as a work of art, therefore, is shot through with commonsense, a quite refreshing commonsense—even with a liberal sense of humor."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '14 200w

+ Dial 57:458 D 1 '14 270w

"It should have a wide circulation."

+ Outlook 109:294 F 3 '15 120w

"It is as valuable and suggestive a book on the purely artistic phases of house building as has come to our notice. Not that we agree with it all, by any means." Fremont Rider

+ — Pub W 87:182 Ja 16 '15 630w

"An excellent book."

+ R of Rs 50:756 D '14 100w

GOODRICH, JOSEPH KING. Coming Hawaii. 9 (World to-day ser.) il *$1.50 (1½c) McClurg 14-5974

The author of "The coming China," "The coming Canada" and other books has given a like treatment to Hawaii. The first eight chapters sketch the history of the country and describe its social conditions up to the beginning of American rule. Following these are chapters on: Development under American administration; The islands; The Hawaiian people; Myths and legends; The Hawaiian flora; The Hawaiian fauna; Agriculture; especially in its economic aspects; Other resources; The Chinese in the archipelago; The Japanese in the archipelago; Mountains and volcanoes; Literature; The Polynesian language; Sports and pastimes; Social life; Defence of the islands; The coming Hawaii.

"The story is an interesting one, and as it deals not only with native Hawaiians, but with the Japanese and Chinese, much valuable information is included which may prove profitable even to some who may never visit Hawaii."

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 15 '14 230w

"The style is scholarly and at times a trifle monotonous, but there is plenty of information."

+ — Ind 78:398 Je 1 '14 100w

"With suitable corrections, additions, and rearrangement, the volume might be transformed into a useful 'handbook.'"

+ — Nation 99:197 Ag 13 '14 360w

"An entertaining and instructive volume."

+ N Y Times 19:322 J1 26 '14 80w

"This is an interesting and concisely prepared general study of the Hawaiian islands. But the book reveals some haste in preparation or, at the least, unpardonable carelessness in proofreading."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 850w

GOODWIN, ALICE HOWLAND, comp. and tr.
 6 Rhymes from the Rhineland. il *$1 Sherman, French & co. 13-23175

A volume of quaint and charming translations for children. A note says: "It has been the work of years to search out these little stories and parables in rhyme by the old classic German writers. In translating, the aim has been to follow as closely as possible the meter and the meaning of the originals."

A L A Bkl 10:329 Ap '14

"The translator has caught the tone and charm of her originals, and has given us a book to have and to hold and to cherish; a book to delight all the family, from oldest to youngest."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 3 '14 280w

"These little stories in verse will please the children."

+ Chaut 72:237 N 22 '13 60w

GOODWIN, CARDINAL. Establishment of state
 6 government in California, 1846-1850. *$2 (2c)
 Macmillan 14-13535

A work covering the period in California history from 1846 to 1850. The introduction traces briefly the extension of American influence over the territory from an early date to the completion of the conquest. There follow a detailed account of the period of military rule and the political unrest resulting therefrom; a consideration of the work of the Convention of 1849 and the election, organization and important enactments of the first legislature; a review of the proceedings in Congress so far as they pertain to California's admission to statehood; and a final chapter including statistics on the population and resources of the new state in 1850.

"In his precise and definitive, if somewhat dry investigation Mr. Goodwin has made an important contribution to that rewriting of American history which now goes on apace."

+ — Ath 1914,2:420 O 24 2150w

"This well-written monograph covering four years of Californian history is both a narrative of political events on the Pacific coast during a critical period and a study in the origin of American institutions. From both points of view it will prove useful. The volume embodies a modest but highly creditable piece of work, based wholly on official or otherwise dependable sources. It will clarify our ideas on several rather intricate matters connected with the political and economic expansions of the antebellum period."

+ Nation 99:556 N 5 '14 370w

"The author seems to have studied his subject carefully and with an open mind, and to have written a story, that is well based on the authoritative records."

+ N Y Times 19:356 Ag 23 '14 50w

R of Rs 50:761 D '14 90w

GORDON, ARMISTEAD CHURCHILL. Maje.
 6 il *75c Scribner 14-3971

"The simple title, 'Maje: a love story,' is most appropriately given to the simple tale this little book contains. Its author allows us to join him in a smile of tenderness at the quiet, courteous life of the old Confederate soldier, who lives not only in the past, but in the dreams of his past, and there finds happiness and contentment."—Boston Transcript

"The plot—if such it may be termed—is too slight to warrant a review; the book must be read without previous information other than that it is charming in its dignity and sweetness, and that its flavor will remain for many days."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 150w

"It makes a pretty and touching story and is handled, through most of its course, with exquisite tenderness and much sentiment. But the melodrama of the closing pages seems rather out of drawing with the rest of it."

+ — N Y Times 19:88 F 22 '14 280w

GORDON, ERNEST BARRON. Anti-alcohol
 6 movement in Europe. il *$1.50 Revell 14-2284

"In the dispassionate style of the statistician, rather than with the eloquent appeal of the propagandist, Mr. Gordon sets forth, first, the conditions on the continent of Europe which have forced the fight against alcohol. Then he describes the campaign as begun in the universities of Europe and extending to the armies, among socialists and elsewhere, setting forth the radical measures that are being undertaken to suppress the evil. Mr. Gordon has lived for years in Europe and studied the question at first hand."—R of Rs

"A careful study of facts and statistics."

+ A L A Bkl 10:390 Je '14

"No student of the temperance reform should be ignorant of the facts to be found in this volume."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Mr 4 '14 270w

N Y Times 19:28 Ja 13 '14 80w

"A very comprehensive study."

+ R of Rs 49:507 Ap '14 120w

"The book is a mine of information." Elizabeth Tilton

+ Survey 31:680 F 28 '14 500w

GORDON, GEORGE ANGLIER. Revelation and 4 the ideal. *$1.50 Houghton 13-21783

"The profoundest questions in the entire sphere of religious interest," says Dr. Gordon, "are these: Does the eternal God speak to man? If so, how?" . . . In the first chapter he shows how Jesus is the great revealer, and in the second chapter he shows how Jesus is the great ideal. And by the time the reader finishes these two chapters he finds the two questions the author asks in his preface have been answered. . . . In the following chapters, twenty-nine in all, the different forms of the ideal are explained in the light of the fundamental thesis of the book, namely, that God reveals his truth to men in the ideal. Each chapter has a text from the Bible, and in fact each chapter is a compact sermon."—Boston Transcript

"A book stimulating and elevating alike to ministers and laymen."

+ A L A Bkl 10:268 Mr '14

"Although this is a collection of sermons, it has more of unity and compactness than ordinarily attach to homiletic volumes."

+ Bib World 43:350 My '14 260w

"The message of this volume is just the message this world needs at present to steady it intellectually and morally. The book is clear and strong, well worthy of the attention of all seekers after God." F. W. C.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 18 '13 720w

"He who essays to follow Dr. Gordon as he probes the depths of thought and soars in high altitudes of imaginative discourse will find no easy task before him, but perseverance will bring a rich reward."

+ Ind 77:243 F 16 '14 100w

"The discourses are wholly undocctrinal in tone, and in style they represent the best type of pulpit eloquence. To the reader who reads analytically, much of Dr. Gordon's book will be somewhat disappointing."

+ — No Am 198:884 D '13 650w

GORDON, HELEN C. Woman in the Sahara.
 2 il *$1.50 Stokes 14-18339

"Two women, one a painter, the other a writer, went to live among the Arab towns that fringe the Sahara desert on the north. One would think that the writer, an Englishwoman, was herself a painter, her book is so pictorial, so full of color. She has a welcome sense of humor; a sympathetic interest in Arab life of every form, except the debasement of women. . . . She quotes Arab proverbs most aptly; she tells many a story, and leads the reader through narrative to tragedy."—Boston Transcript

"Why should she give us unusual forms of words already well known and long accepted? But this is only a slight error of judgment in a book which is interesting in a hundred ways; a delightful tale akin to the 'Arabian nights.'" + — Boston Transcript p10 Ja 9 '15 300w

"An interesting account."

+ N Y Times 20:14 Ja 10 '15 70w

GORING-THOMAS, ARTHUR RHYS. Strong heart. *$1.25 Lane 14-4464

The author of 'The strong heart' turns back to the days of Dickens and Thackeray for his models in his picturing of the life of the high and the middle classes in London of the eighties. During the first book of the story, two separate plots run side by side, both with settings in London, but separated by the barriers of 'high and middle' and 'rich and poor.' Our sympathies throughout are with the story of the middle class father and daughter, who are continually dragged down by the exceedingly common Mrs. Murray. It is a sordid little story were it not relieved by the courage and devotion of the daughter Barbara Murray."—Boston Transcript

"The second part of the story is not as good as the first. Mr. Goring-Thomas understands well how to show a character and to make it live before us in all its habits and inconsistencies."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 F 23 '14 400w

N Y Times 19:101 Mr 1 '14 250w

"This is a brilliant book. The characters are alive and human. Occasionally the swift analytical insight of the author reminds one of Victorian writers of the old psychological school."

+ — Sat R 117:sup8 Mr 21 '14 250w

"It is a diverting tale that should appeal to a variety of readers."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 23 '14 250w

"Except for [one] fine character the story is not pleasant and the plot is poorly developed."

+ — Wis Lib Bull 10:163 Je '14 50w

GORKY, MAXIM, pseud. (ALEXEI MAXIMOVITCH PYESHKOFF). Tales of two countries. *$1.25 (3c) Huebsch A15-176

The two countries are Italy and Russia. Thirteen Italian tales and nine Russian tales make up the contents. The stories are simple, mere sketches and few of them would measure up to the standard of the "short story" about which textbooks have been written. But each is a unit that presents a vivid picture, makes a definite impression, or suggests a new idea.

Ath 1914:1:886 Je 27 550w

"There can be few to whom the volume will not seem a falling off from 'A confession' or 'The spy.'"

+ — Nation 99:747 D 24 '14 300w

"The writer is an artist of high rank, but he has mixed blood with his ink, and the blood cries out through the words, even where they are gentle and kindly. In a few of the stories the propagandist speaks too clearly, and these fall below the power and beauty of the rest. But the book is remarkable, on the whole, in that, though it is the intense expression of a creed, it remains pre-eminently a work of art." Hildegarde Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times 19:590 D 27 '14 1000w

"He has his own way of telling a tale, his style is clear cut and crisp, and in a few words he takes us away with him into the sunshine of Italy or the snow-bound steppes of Russia. Some of the Italian tales are living and warm. The Russian sketches are very like badly smudged impressionist pictures. Were they not smudged they would still be without definite form. They seem to be ideas run amok."

+ — Sat R 117:805 Je 20 '14 300w

GOSS, WARREN LEE. Boys' life of General Sheridan. Il $1.50 (2c) Crowell 13-17669

The greater part of the book is taken up with General Sheridan's civil war record; two chapters only are given to his early life, and of the later chapters, some half dozen are devoted to his services after the close of the war. The book is well illustrated, and there are a number of maps.

+ A L A Bkl 10:161 D '13

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 33:444 D '13 70w

"The 'rebel' element is too often dwelt upon, and justice is hardly done to the strategy and tactics of the enemy. Otherwise the book adequately fulfils its purpose."

+ — Lit D 47:1122 D 6 '13 80w

"The author sticks closely to Sheridan's war career; he might have made more in a book for boys of his early life."

+ — N Y Sun p5 N 8 '13 70w

GOTTHEIL, RICHARD JAMES HORATIO. Zionism. (Movements in Judaism) Il $1.50 Jewish pub. 14-8244

"Professor Gottheil, the well-known Semitic scholar, who holds the chair of Semitic languages of Columbia university, has been identified with Zionism almost from its inception, and he has followed the somewhat devious and entangled course of the movement closely. He writes exceedingly well; his presentation is attractive and at times forcible. He is well acquainted with all details, and he draws from his large fund of learning in Oriental literature and Oriental history to reinforce his point of view. . . . To define Zionism baffles even its author, for he nowhere clearly defines it. Its key-note is insistence upon Jewish nationalism, quite irrespective of the fact that the combination of nationalism with religious tenets of a universal scope would appear to be an almost impossible alliance. . . . Professor Gottheil devotes the latter portion of his work to a consideration of what might be called side-issues of Zionism."—Nation

"The author is an ardent advocate of the movement and presents his case learnedly and well, and on the whole fairly; but the book is not likely to interest those outside of Judaism."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:6 S '14

+ — Nation 99:103 Jl 23 '14 1450w

"It is, of course, to be understood that Prof. Gottheil presents his subject rather as an advocate than as a judge; but making allowance for this bias he presents the case both against and for Zionism with both force and elegance." J. J.

+ — N Y Times 19:515 N 22 '14 550w

R of Rs 50:381 S '14 40w

GOULDSBURY, CHARLES, ELPHINSTONE. Tigerland. Il $2.50 Dutton (Eng ed A13-2494)

Reminiscences of forty years' sport and adventure in Bengal. There are thirty-three chapters of hunting anecdotes which the author gleaned from the diaries and notes of one who ran away to sea at fifteen, was in India thru the Mutiny, joined the police force, became a powerful "shikari," and spent forty years in Lower Bengal. "The tiger, of course, takes precedence in this book of all the other inhabitants of the jungle, some of which, notably the elephant, are far more dangerous to kill. The author's tiger shooting was almost all done in Bengal, where, as he explains, the nature of the country makes the use of the elephant and the howdah necessary, which is not the case in Southern India." (Sat R)

+ A L A Bkl 10:390 Je '14

"The stories are good, well told, and well illustrated."

+ Ath 1913:2:278 S 20 170w

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 20 '14 300w

"The book is of great merit and interest."

+ Sat R 116:429 O 4 '13 1200w

"As sporting medleys go, the book is well written."

+ Spec 111:sup949 D 6 '13 200w

GOWEN, REV. HERBERT HENRY. Outline history of China. 2 pts pt 2 il *$1.20 (2½c) Sherman, French & co. 13-9751

Part 1, sketching in outline the pre-Manchu period of Chinese history was published last year. The present work began with the reign of Shun Chih, 1644-1661, and continues the history down to the year 1913, closing with a chapter on the republic.

"The information is well selected, well arranged and tabulated; and it is given in a very readable style."

+ Dial 56:150 F 16 '14 120w

GOWLAND, WILLIAM. Metallurgy of the non-ferrous metals. il *$5 Lippincott 14-30907

"This book . . . gives in a concise but wonderfully complete form the up-to-date practice in the extraction of the following metals from their ores: copper, lead, gold, silver, platinum, mercury, zinc, cadmium, tin, nickel, cobalt, antimony, arsenic, bismuth, and aluminium. . . . In writing this book the author has had in view not only the student engaged in a course of metallurgical training, but also the man who is actually dealing with practical problems."—Nature

"As there has been no comprehensive, general work on the subject for many years, this fills the gap quite satisfactorily."

+ A L A Bkl 11:158 D '14

+ Nature 94:196 O 22 '14 530w

"Concise but thorough treatment. While in part compiled from other authoritative works, discrimination is shown in selection of material. Only the really useful and important features are presented."

+ Pittsburgh 20:21 Ja '15 60w

GRABO, CARL HENRY. Art of the short story. *$1.25 Scribner 14-720

In this book the author "has gathered the fruits of his work as instructor in English in the University of Chicago. . . . Mr. Grabo's readers will find an especially illuminating chapter on Types of story ideas and a careful discussion of Unity of tone. The desirability of letting a story grow in the author's mind after the first dash at it is a point seldom sufficiently emphasized as here."—Chaut

"A practical and excellent guide. For teachers and students of literature and for the writer of short stories, but needed only in the large library."

+ A L A Bkl 10:390 Je '14

"Rather better than the average of these books, in that it is more historical and illustrative than pedagogic. It will be easily seen as a whole that Mr. Grabo is most successful when he is addressing story-readers, and least successful when he plays the teacher, or when he indulges in such fantastic nonsense as to be found in his chapter on 'Titles and names.'" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 11 '14 530w

"A too leisurely style mars the usefulness of Mr. Grabo's work as a handbook. For the un-hurried the volume has its own charm just to read."

+ Chaut 72:637 Ap 11 '14 140w

"An interesting book to any one who has ever experimented with that literary form."

+ Nation 99:23 Jl 2 '14 170w

"An admirable textbook for the general student of literature and for the young writer." Walter Sargent

+ School R 22:568 O '14 520w

GRAHAM, HARRY J. C. Splendid failures. il *$3 Longmans (Eng ed 14-8845)

"Mr. Harry Graham has the happy faculty for finding 'catchy' titles. . . . Thus under the head of 'Splendid failures,' . . . he groups a number of those men who he believes clutched victory by the sleeve, but were not able to hold her men whose moments of success have been quite forgotten because of their ultimate failure. . . . The 'splendid failures' are Theobald Wolfe Tone, 'the first of the Fenians'; Toussaint L'Ouverture, 'the Napoleon of San Domingo'; Charles Townsend, William Henry West Betty, the first of the infant actors who once threatened Mrs. Siddons's reputation; Hartley Coleridge; George Smythe, 'the paladin of 'young England,' and Maximilian, first emperor of Mexico."—N Y Times

"Writing pleasantly, on occasions brilliantly."

+ A L A Bkl 10:391 Je '14

"Mr. Graham writes lightly and pleasantly about each member of his strangely assorted company."

+ Ath 1913,2:440 N 1 350w

+ Nation 98:187 F 19 '14 630w

"The book bears evidence of much research, and it has one or two brilliant passages, but it leaves the reader in a doubtful mood as to just what constitutes failure."

+ N Y Times 19:53 F 1 '14 820w

"Sympathy and a keen insight into character mark Mr. Graham's essays on these interesting historical characters."

+ R of Rs 49:368 Mr '14 70w

"His book is well worth reading."

+ Sat R 116:531 O 25 '13 280w

"Mr. Graham has chosen his subjects, with the exception of the Infant Roscius, from well-beaten highroads of history, but he tells his story with spirit and discretion, and provides a wealth of pleasant gossip details. Also, he has that rarest of merits in the modern biographer—he does not moralize."

+ Spec 111:871 N 22 '13 1350w

GRAHAM, STEPHEN. With poor immigrants to America. il *$2 (2½c) Macmillan 14-15813

Stephen Graham did not come to America to be entertained by its metropolitan clubs and to meet its leading citizens; he came as an immigrant in the steerage, entered thru Ellis island, and saw the country as a tramp, walking from New York to Chicago. He arrived in America on Easter day 1913, one year from the time he had reached Jerusalem in company with the Russian peasant pilgrims of whom he wrote in an earlier book. He is an Englishman, but the country he knows perhaps better than his own is Russia, and he takes occasion to draw interesting comparisons between the most backward and the most forward countries in the world.

+ A L A Bkl 11:155 D '14 +

"Mr. Graham presents pictures which have vividness and reality. But his moralizings are not always so sound as such things should be, and his reasoning, even in matters which he has studied closely at first hand, is not altogether to be trusted."

+ Ath 1914,2:386 O 17 890w

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 4 '14 450w

"His impressions are gained by personal contact, and not by reading, and they are as interesting to read as they must have been to undergo. Admirably written and decorated with bits of natural description truly poetic in feeling."

+ Dial 57:304 O 16 '14 450w

"The result is the inadequate view of us that one would expect from so cavalier a mode of investigation, made a bit irritating by the evident fact that the writer is intelligent enough to draw a more lifelike picture if he only were not in so great a hurry to finish his articles and get back to Russia, which, whatever its deficiencies, is 'home once more.'"

+ Nation 99:584 N 12 '14 120w

"The American public, however, must find the sketches rather flimsy and unimportant—a series of photographs, and not a very good lens at that."

+ N Y Times 19:477 N 1 '14 100w

"We have been a good deal written about by foreigners other than Mr. Graham; and Mr. Graham, in his very readable and even enjoyable book, has written about us, as the others have done, well."

+ No Am 200:791 N '14 580w

+ R of Rs 50:634 N '14 20w

"An extremely interesting record, with many penetrating illustrations of the contrast between Russian and American ideals, and a good deal of criticism, in the main friendly, of the spirit of the new American people. Mr. Graham makes so many reservations as to lay himself open to the charge of inconsistency."

+ — Spec 113:463 O 3 '14 1800w

"It is altogether a very suggestive and very fascinating narrative; the sympathy which prompted the undertaking makes it read like romance not because it is embellished, but because sympathy is all that the romance of common life needs for its disclosure. The only thing to which one may offer a real objection is to the mistaken version of Lincoln's Gettysburg address."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 O 8 '14 1350w

Reviewed by K. H. Claghorn

Survey 33:266 D 5 '14 180w

GRANGER, ALFRED HOYT. Charles Follen McKim; a study of his life and work. il *$6 Houghton 13-25244

"Mr. Granger presents in a beautifully printed and strikingly illustrated imperial octavo volume a sympathetic and enthusiastic sketch of the life and work of one of the greatest leaders in the new American architecture. To Charles Follen McKim and the firm of McKim, Mead & White is due a large share of the nation-wide awakening to the glorious possibilities of this mother-art."—Boston Transcript

"It is unfortunate that occasional lapses from simple good English should mar so perfect a testimonial and memorial. It is a book to be treasured by every lover of architecture." N. H. Dole

+ — Boston Transcript p20 N 26 '13 2750w

Reviewed by S. F. Kimball

+ Dial 56:384 My 1 '14 1000w

"Biographically it is clearly too slight a sketch to have great value; and as a discussion of McKim's mode of work, and of the results accomplished by him, it can scarcely be said to be accurate. The book, however, has its value as an enthusiastic appreciation of a great architect, and we may, therefore, overlook the fact that it is defective in critical acumen."

+ — Nation 98:44 Ja 8 '14 480w

R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 80w

GRANT, ARTHUR. In the old paths. il *$1.50 Houghton A14-$67

"Mr. Arthur Grant brings together a score of papers already published in part in 'The Scotsman' and 'The Atlantic Monthly.' They are reminiscences of travel among favorite haunts of England. . . . Their style and their subtitle show them to be 'memories of literary pilgrimages,' and they conduct the reader through parts of Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, and Oxfordshire, to Shakespeare's Arden and Cowper's Olney, to the Cotswold country and elsewhere, as the author's fancy dictates."—Dial

"Agreeably written and appreciative, and interesting for their personal quality, the sketches yet lack the magic touch to reconstruct the scenes in the light of other days; the fine sense of adjustment and proportion which gives distinction."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:307 Ap '14

"Many tourists and literary enthusiasts have blazed the way for Mr. Grant along these paths, but he finds in them a charm and gives to them something of his own personality that makes them well worth the writing." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 18 '14 700w

"It is the human, definite, personal quality in these 'memories' of Mr. Grant's that one especially enjoys."

+ Dial 56:255 Mr 16 '14 210w

"The book is one which could have been written only by a man who knew the old paths, the old villages, with their dwellings and churches, and knew them well. At the same time he skillfully offers his reader a great deal of their charm."

+ Nation 98:472 Ap 23 '14 170w

+ R of Rs 49:629 My '14 110w

"Affable and communicative, if not always distinguished, are Mr. Grant's little pilgrimages."

+ Sat R 117:87 Ja 17 '14 220w

"Mr. Grant is a man of good taste, a sturdy ramblor, and an agreeable writer. The collocation of these qualities has enabled him to give us a very pleasant book."

+ Spec 112:104 Ja 17 '14 180w

GRANT, ARTHUR JAMES. History of Europe. 3 il *$2.25 Longmans A13-1737

"This is a text-book, pure and simple. Professor Grant starts with the history of Greece and ends with the 'present age.' His six hundred and fifty pages therefore cover some two thousand five hundred years of European history. . . . A student after using the book would have a useful idea of the outlines of the history of Europe, and of the relations of different periods and sections to the broad development as a whole. Professor Grant has been well advised to include Greek and Roman history in his plan, for he sees that to approach the study of modern Europe without some outline knowledge of the Greek states and the Roman empire is, to say the least of it, absolutely misleading. The mediæval empire is unintelligible without an understanding of the centuries from Augustus to Theodoric."—Sat R

"An excellent textbook, interestingly written and accurate. The author's mastery of his field is shown in his elimination of unnecessary detail, and by the economy of his style."

+ A L A Bkl 10:222 F '14 +

"Prof. Grant skillfully disentangles the chief movements in European history, and renders them clear and comprehensible without the usual superfluity of detail. Only a certain turgidity of style prevents our describing this as an ideal textbook."

+ — Ath 1913,1:126 F 1 90w

"After examining the book carefully we readily admit that Professor Grant has succeeded in some of the essential qualities of a good textbook. It is clearly and simply written; the proportions are sound; there is no attempt to squeeze too many facts into the respective chapters; and so far as our examination goes the statements are accurate."

+ — Sat R 116:369 S 20 '13 1350w

"A concise, comprehensive and accurate text, characterized by unity and good perspective."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:190 Jl '14 30w

GRATACAP, LOUIS POPE. Benjamin the Jew. 6 il *$1.25 Brentano's (Eng ed 14-3562)

"This novel relates the history of Benjamin Nassi, a Russian Jew, from his childhood to his untimely death. Its opening scenes are laid in Russia and describe a 'pogrom,' during which the worshippers in a small synagogue are attacked and many of them burned to death. This massacre crystallizes the already half-formed determination of Joseph Nassi, a wealthy gold-beater, to escape to America." (N Y Times) "Arriving in New York, Nassi settles on the East Side, and with the thrift and business acumen of his race, in two years is a rich man. The remainder of the story is chiefly occupied with the son Benjamin, who is described as of marvellous beauty and destined to be the 'Redeemer.'" (Boston Transcript)

"The story is extremely deficient in plot and sustained purpose; too feeble and incoherent in treatment to accomplish its obvious purpose of winning sympathy for the Jews in their struggle against oppression."

— Boston Transcript p25 Ap 29 '14 220w

"The first part of the story is not without interest, but the book is long, and the style and construction are crude."

— + N Y Times 19:88 F 22 '14 270w

GRAVES, ALFRED PERCEVAL. Irish literary and musical studies. *$1.75 Scribner (Eng ed 14-30426)

"The 'Studies' contained in this volume consist of revised versions of lectures, articles, and introductions. The subjects dealt with are sufficiently varied; generally, they concern the men and the conditions which, during the last century, produced the antecedents of the modern Irish literary movement. . . . Mr. Graves's 'Studies' enable us to grasp the underlying unity of Irish poetry. He approves of Matthew Arnold's phrase in which the Celtic feeling for nature is described as 'natural magic.' At all times Irish poets and romancers have expressed themselves as if the supernatural were indistinguishable from the natural. They are thus unconscious pantheists."—Ath

"Interesting and informing studies."

+ A L A Bkl 10:331 Je '14

"Though light of weight, Mr. Graves's book bears the marks of forty years of diligent labour among Irish texts. We will only say that the erudition is of the best kind—that is, entirely readable and by no means a stranger to laughter; while the purely reminiscent chapters, especially that on Tennyson, show a happy personal touch."

+ Ath 1914,1:750 My 30 470w

Cath World 100:266 N '14 90w

"A collection of pleasing essays."

+ N Y Times 19:589 D 27 '14 70w

"Quite illuminating volume."

+ Sat R 116:659 N 22 '13 200w

"The value of this book, apart from its literary charm, consists, we think, in the clear vistas which its sixteen brief essays open out, as it were, into a new, an almost unexplored, but assuredly a very notable and interesting world. It only remains to add that Mr. Graves's volume much needs a careful bibliography."

+ Spec 111:1124 D 27 '13 870w

GRAVES, ARMGAARD KARL, pseud., and FOX, EDWARD LYELL. Secrets of the German war office. il *$1.50 (2½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-14759

A revelation of the operations of the great German spy system made by a man who was a successful secret agent in the Kaiser's service for twelve years. The chapters are important for the details of secret missions that have had an influence upon the present war. A closing chapter pronounces war to be imminent in Europe. "And that the chances of peaceful and really sensible adjustment are thoroughly discounted among the German men of affairs must be pretty obvious to the careful reader. An intensely practical and saving people such as the Germans would not spend billions in money, a vast amount of time and labor, in perfecting and keeping up a fighting machine without being thoroughly convinced of the necessity of this investment."

"It is an absorbing story, but reveals little that is not already public property and can have no value as history."

+ A L A Bkl 11:98 N '14

"If we cannot approve of Dr. Graves's profession, we cannot but praise his gift of narration."

+ Ath 1914,2:387 O 17 220w

"His book is unquestionably interesting reading." G. G. Wyant

+ Bookm 40:317 N '14 400w

"Whether the book is history or romance it is fascinating reading." E. B. Krehbiel

+ Dial 57:380 N 16 '14 180w

"If any reader takes the book seriously he will often wonder why an emperor should resort to such devious and extravagant methods to get unimportant information or that which lay freely open to others. Dr. Graves lies impartially to all comers! those to whom he is sent as a spy, those by whom he is employed, and—the conclusion is irresistible—his readers. The volume is full of blunders and absurdities."

— Ind 79:384 S 14 '14 320w

"An amazingly interesting book. You are inclined to smile at some of the author's gay-dog adventures; you will frequently have terrible difficulty in swallowing. You do not see exactly what he discovered of value on several of his missions. His wisdom sounds like that which comes after the event." E. L. Pearson

— + Nation 99:277 S 3 '14 1100w

"The secrets of the German war office are by no means wholly concerned with fortifications and battleships, and military system; on the contrary, there is little enough mention of these, and more of demimondaines and big personalities, and a great deal of the author's own emotions, ambitions, tastes, habits—everything about Dr. Graves, in fact, except his origin, nationality and morals."

— + N Y Times 19:373 S 6 '14 950w

"In this book there is only one chapter, the one on 'The German war machine,' which has any weight. The rest is flimsy stuff, which any man with a smattering of recent history and with an imagination trained by reading Sherlock Holmes might write."

— + N Y Times 19:565 D 13 '14 1200w

"One almost hopes that the narratives are fiction, because they are so good as fiction. Mr. E. P. Oppenheim could not have done better! In fact, one suspects them of being a fascinating and exciting combination of fact and fiction."

+ Outlook 108:225 S 23 '14 300w

"Though his adventures and intrigues make entertaining reading and may be partly founded on fact, they are too extravagant to be taken seriously."

— + Pittsburgh 19:429 O '14 60w

"The author has a vivid and graphic style which enables him to make even figures and statistics, dull reading to the average reader, interesting." H. Dick

+ Pub W 56:812 S 19 '14 1100w

"Its chapters throw sidelights upon those unhappy international complications that led up to the final tragedy."

+ R of Rs 50:633 N '14 230w

"Whatever we may think of Dr. Graves personally for bartering German secrets for freedom and then entering the employ of a rival nation we cannot but believe that the majority of the statements in the volume are true."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 1 '14 1000w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:261 N '14 80w

GRAVES, CLOTILDE INEZ MARY (RICHARD DEHAN, pseud.). Cost of wings, and other stories. *$1.25 (1½c) Stokes. 14-7729

"Richard Dehan's book contains a thoroughly miscellaneous collection of short stories. It is safe to promise the reader that he will find between its covers almost any sort of tale he wants. Has he a taste for ghost stories? His demand may be supplied here. Does he search vainly through our modern literature for fable and for allegory? Here he has both. Does he want satire? That, too, is contained in 'The cost of wings.'"—N Y Times

"Apart from a few poignant scenes between a man and a woman, the volume is not distinguished work. The author appears to lack the zeal for concentration and selection of detail which the short story demands."

— + Ath 1914,1:sup474 Mr 28 120w

"In 'The cost of wings,' for instance, 'An ordeal by fire' reveals Miss Graves at her comic worst, and 'In the fourth dimension' in her most unsuccessful reachings after sensible sensations. It is a pity that Miss Graves has no competent adviser at her elbow to tell her what she should exclude when she is making up a compilation of her short stories."

— + Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '14 250w

Ind 79:72 J1 13 '14 17w

"There is not so much originality or robust humor in these tales as in an earlier volume, 'Headquarter recruit,' but there is a good deal more journalistic flippancy."

— + Nation 99:18 J1 2 '14 250w

"The collection is quite too 'miscellaneous.' But most of the stories are well told. The note of satire is the one struck most often in the book, and, by that token, it is what comes nearest to holding the stories together. 'The cost of wings' is, on the whole, a readable collection of tales."

+ N Y Times 19:219 My 3 '14 450w

"The collection is a very good one."

+ R of Rs 49:762 Je '14 70w

"There is no attempt to dazzle or surprise. The stories are simply told with an art that conceals itself. Here we have wit, humor, pathos and satire. And the contents are agreeably varied."

+ Sat R 117:407 Mr 28 '14 200w

"Many of 'Richard Dehan's' stories are exceedingly clever, in especial 'The delusion of Mrs. Donague,' with its Gilbertian humour. They are varied in tone and intensity, changing swiftly from tragedy to farce; but the fact remains that the short story by reason of its condensed plot and freedom from detailed drawing of character, may cover a multitude of sins in the way of careless workmanship."

+ Spec 112:750 My 2 '14 140w

GRAVES, FRANK PIERREPONT. History of education in modern times. *$1.10 (1c) Macmillan 14-557

"[With the publication of this book Dr. Graves completes his series of three volumes designed for the use of students in the history of education. The new book, like both its predecessors, is essentially a text-book. Beginning with Rousseau and Basedow and continuing through Madame Montessori it deals with the theories of all the great men and women who have left their imprint on modern education. But the treatment is largely of movements and not of men.] (Boston Transcript) The two preceding volumes were 'A history of education before the middle ages,' and 'A history of education during the middle ages and the transition to modern times.'"

"The main fault is in the method and content of the book." M. W. Jernegan

+ Am Hist R 19:889 Ji '14 500w

"An improvement over the earlier volumes and one of the best books on the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 10:391 Je '14

"A work of reference calculated to be of great service to all who are interested in the theory and practice of education in Europe and America, from Rousseau to our own day."

+ Ath 1914,1:261 F 21 450w

+ Boston Transcript p23 F 4 '14 100w

"It may serve as a text book or a work of reference. But whatever the particular purpose it may be made to serve, the liberal citation of sources and the selected lists of supplementary reading should prove of considerable value."

+ Chaut 72:509 F 28 '14 110w

"The book is well proportioned and well written and seems to us to be a distinct advance on the author's earlier volumes on the history of education."

+ Educ R 47:311 Mr '14 90w

+ Ind 77:419 Mr 23 '14 40w

+ Nation 98:541 My 7 '14 220w

Reviewed by A. E. Crawley

+ Nature 94:361 D 3 '14 230w

R of Rs 49:370 Mr '14 90w

"There are a great many useful facts and figures in this book. The eighteenth-century movement should have been more distinctly connected, perhaps, with that of the seventeenth, though the Port-Royalists are just mentioned."

+ Sat R 117:506 Ap 18 '14 1100w

GRAY, ALEXANDER. Principles and practice of electrical engineering. il *$3 McGraw 14-18538

"The book is based on a lecture and laboratory course given to the senior civil, mechanical and mining engineering students of McGill university. It is intended, therefore, for men who have but limited time in which to acquire a grasp of the fundamentals which are necessary for the understanding of electrical apparatus."

The higher theoretical and mathematical treatments customary in works intended expressly for electrical engineering students are, therefore, avoided. . . . The book leads up through elementary considerations of electro magnetism, magnetic circuits and the magnetic properties of iron to direct-current machinery."—Engin Rec

"Covers the field in a broad way, and emphasizes fundamental principles only."

+ A L A Bkl 11:202 Ja '15

"The treatment, it can easily be judged, is necessarily brief, but unquestionably a student who goes through the volume will be in a position to take up further study of electrical machinery, not too complicated, by himself, at least to the extent generally required of the civil and mining engineer."

+ Engin Rec 70:546 N 14 '14 220w

GRAY, PHOEBE. Little Sir Galahad. il *$1.35 (3c) Small 15-159

The friendship of the group of children who make up the characters in this story began when Mary Alice Brown, on her way to deliver a bundle of laundry for her mother, is befriended by Francis Willett. Francis on his own initiative has organized a band of Galahad knights who are pledged to deeds of kindness. Later Charles Thomas, a little crippled boy, is admitted as a member and the children who play together call themselves Sir Francis, Sir Charlie and Lady Mary Alice. The second part of the story follows their grown-up fortunes.

"Although the author has chosen to classify this volume as a novel, it is, strictly speaking, a study of child life throughout fully two-thirds of its extent. An innocuous little tale, but the sugar-coating over the underlying moral is a bit thin."

+ Bookm 40:685 F '15 170w

"Her book fails for us because it tries to be a mixture of two types of story. So long as she writes a story for children, she has a sympathetic and vivid manner of making them real to us. When, however, she tries in the last part of her book to have these same children grow up, she does not succeed in changing her viewpoint."

— Boston Transcript p20 D 23 '14 370w

"Waiving its probabilities, 'Little Sir Galahad' is a well-meaning, agreeable story of childhood and youth. It points out paths of 'love and service,' and will be specially welcomed by the anti-saloon propaganda."

+ N Y Times 20:22 Ja 17 '15 100w

GRAYDON, WILLIAM MURRAY. Campaigning with Braddock; or, Fighting allied foes; a tale of colonial days. (Boys of liberty lib.) il 50c (½c) McKay

The story follows the usual course of tales of its kind but it is well written and readable thruout. Roger Berkeley, at the opening of the story, is living with his uncle, an old trapper, on the English frontier. His uncle's death leaves him alone in the world and he joins Washington at Fort Necessity and thereafter, up to the time of Braddock's defeat, which brings the story to an end, fights with the colonial troops against the French and their Indian allies.

GREEN, ANNA KATHARINE (MRS. CHARLES ROHLFS). Dark Hollow. il *$1.35 (1½c) Dodd 14-2301

Twelve years after the commission of a crime, the wife of the accused and condemned man comes back to clear her husband's name. She has, she thinks, a clue, unthought of at the time of the trial, which will prove that her daughter's father was not a murderer, and thus leave the girl free to marry the son of the judge who pronounced sentence. She follows her clue and it leads her into strange ways and casts suspicion on the house where she had least dreamed of finding the real offender. In the end the confession that reveals the truth comes as a surprise to all, including the reader.

GREEN, ANNA KATHARINE—Continued.

"The mystery is well sustained and readable."
+ A L A Bkl 10:414 Je '14

"The portentous seriousness of speech, the long sentences and the formal phrases that the novelist puts into the mouths of her characters make its scenes anything but real. And of course there should be some illusion of reality even in a detective story."

— Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 170w

"'Dark Hollow' ranks well with the good stories of its kind. Its action is swift and terrible and sweeps the reader along so irresistibly that shortcomings of style and characterization are easily overlooked, or not even noticed, in the fascination exerted by a well-wrought plot. After all, where Queen Melodrama and her devoted handmaidens, Mystery, play their parts well, he who wants more may lay himself open to a charge of over-captiousness. And these two are certainly busy in 'Dark Hollow.'"

+ — N Y Times 19:45 F 1 '14 750w

GREENE, FRANCES NIMMO. One clear call. il
" *$1.35 (1½c) Scribner 14-17925

In an earlier novel "The right of the strongest" the author proved herself adept in the handling of a complicated plot. This story will sustain her reputation. Her hero, a young doctor of promise, has fallen in love with one of his patients, a young woman of whose antecedents nothing is known. He has at the same time endangered his career by befriending a social outcast, the son of one of the old families of the southern city in which they live, who has gone to the bad. He feels that the one thing which can save the man is the return of his wife, who for very good cause, had deserted him in another part of the country some years before, and insists strongly that it is the duty of the wife to return. He faces a crisis when he learns that, as the reader has long guessed, the wife is the woman he loves.

A L A Bkl 11:221 Ja '15

"The story is eminently worth reading. It is a strong, tender story, full of wholesome optimism, a staunch faith in the innate goodness of human nature." F. T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:678 F '15 900w

"An interesting story; it has several very human, very real characters, and an ably presented and sympathetic hero in the person of Dr. Alan Hamilton. But it is upon another man, Henry Garnett, that the plot of the novel turns, and Henry Garnett, to use a phrase for which one feels almost obliged to apologize, is not convincing."

+ — N Y Times 19:488 N 8 '14 400w

GREENE, HOMER. Handicapped: the story of a white-haired boy. il *$1.25 (2½c)
Houghton 14-18077

In the first place Paul Bolton was physically handicapped: in appearance he was of that abnormal type known as albino. In addition to this he had poverty to contend with and the disgrace of a bad inheritance and a childhood spent in the poorhouse. In the early chapters the story of the boy's pathetic desire to be like other children is touching; later when he conquers all obstacles it is easy to forget his misfortune. The action begins in the years just preceding the civil war but that conflict and Paul's part in it are passed over lightly. The story was published originally in Youth's Companion with the title "The albino."

"A strong and touching story of a boy's struggle to overcome fate." G. I. Colbron
+ Bookm 40:448 D '14 90w

GREENWELL, ALLAN, and ELSDEN, JAMES VINCENT. Practical stone quarrying, a manual for managers, inspectors, and owners of quarries, and for students. il *$4 Appleton (Eng ed GS14-28)

"After an adequate discussion of the occurrence of stone, the distribution of quarries in the United Kingdom, and divisional planes in rocks, there follows some excellent advice on the location of quarries and their proper development, a subject of the greatest importance. A large amount of space is devoted to methods of extraction, tools, blasting, cableways, and haulage systems. . . . A short chapter treats of the preparation of stone for the market, another with the dangers of quarrying, and the book concludes with some remarks on quarry legislation which may be commended to the notice of those in authority. The volume is very well illustrated, and there is a fair index."—Nature

+ A L A Bkl 10:391 Je '14

"An eminently satisfactory book on the subject, one for which there was a real need."

+ Nature 92:290 N 6 '13 400w

GREGORY, ISABELLA AUGUSTA (PERSSE), lady. Our Irish theatre. il *$1.50 Putnam 13-25624

"Lady Gregory gives us a chapter of autobiography. . . . She writes the book as an answer to the questions she whimsically imagines her grandson, Richard Gregory, might some day ask her about her wanderings and her work—'What were they for, the writing, the journeys, and why did she have an enemy?' So she has put the story down, that we may know her part in the making of the Irish theatre, the work of writing the plays and the fight with the 'Clan-na-Gael' over 'The playboy of the western world.'"—R of Rs

"An interesting, frank account."

+ A L A Bkl 10:222 F '14

"Written in a charming style and abounds in interesting reminiscences of the most definite literary movement of our time."

+ Ath 1914.1:324 F 28 750w

Reviewed by J. W. Tupper

Dial 56:177 Mr 1 '14 1000w

+ Ind 78:140 Ap 20 '14 310w

+ Nation 98:140 F 5 '14 900w

"Any one getting this book will find much to delight him, and a clear idea of just the what, why, and how of the Irish theatre." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 18:765 D 28 '13 1200w

"This is a very informal, somewhat intimate, and thoroughly interesting account of the enterprise which has so deeply engaged Lady Gregory's mind and heart during the last twelve or fifteen years."

+ Outlook 105:858 D 20 '13 450w

"Incidentally she has given us much that is valuable about Synge—much that no one else could give us regarding his struggle for success."

+ R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 210w

GREGORY, JACKSON. Under handicap. il
" *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 14-8241

At the outset this story promises to follow the usual course of the western novel in which the tenderfoot easterner is put out on the range to try his luck as a cowboy. Its course shifts, however, mid-way in the narrative, when John Crawford, ranch owner and promoter, learns that young Conniston has had an engineer's training and promptly cuts short his cowboy career by sending him over into the Rattlesnake valley to work on his pet irrigation project. Chance puts Conniston, young and untried as he is, in charge of the whole undertaking, and he carries it thru successfully, thereby winning not only the approval of his father who had thought him a ne'er-do-well, and the hand of the girl he loves, but also a new respect for himself.

+ A L A Bkl 11:31 S '14

"If there were fewer books of the 'Under handicap' type, more praise might fall upon this example."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Je 17 '14 250w

+ Nation 98:501 Ap 30 '14 300w

"Despite [one improbability] and its stereotyped and naively drawn women, Mr. Gregory's novel is much better than the average western story. Though the phrasing is occasionally careless, the book as a whole is well written."

+ — N Y Times 19:195 Ap 19 '14 500w

GREGORY, JOHN WALTER. Geology of today. il $1.50 Lippincott

"Prof. Gregory has written a very attractive introduction to the principles of geology, in which his special aim has been to set the science before the reader in its latest aspect, to present a view of geology as seen to-day by a vigorous worker and watchful observer. It is not usually an easy matter to make the ordinary reader understand the advanced opinions of scientific men, and in this respect the author is to be congratulated on his success."—Ath

"Prof. Gregory's work is noteworthy as being popular in the best sense of the term, yet possessing sufficient substance to render it serviceable in many ways to the mature student."

+ Ath 1915,1:12 Ja 2 600w

"An excellent summary."

+ N Y Times 19:491 N 8 '14 50w

"Very readable sketch of contemporary geological knowledge. Clear summary of established facts, with little attention to debatable problems."

+ Pittsburgh 20:17 Ja '15 20w

"[The book is] of the highest authority, written in clear and simple language, which may be strongly commended to the lay reader."

+ Spec 113:897 D 19 '14 40w

GREGORY, JOHN WALTER. Nature and origin of fiords. il $5 Dutton (Eng ed GS13-955)

"For many years Prof. Gregory has made a special study of fiords, never losing an opportunity of examining them in the course of his travels, whether in Europe, America, Spitzbergen, or New Zealand. Now he offers a powerful and well-sustained argument in favour of the view that all fiord-valleys are of tectonic origin."—Ath

"Prof. Gregory's volume on fiords is worthy of a place by the side of his well-known work on the Great Rift valley of East Africa."

+ Ath 1913,2:498 N 1 450w

+ Boston Transcript p20 Jl 29 '14 450w

"It will be a great boon to students for it is a veritable encyclopædia, full of important facts, the collection of which must have entailed long and patient labour, because they are scattered about many publications in sundry languages, and often not readily accessible." T. G. Bonney

+ Nature 92:662 F 12 '14 1150w

"A very interesting contribution to what may be called the higher geology."

+ Spec 112:24 Ja 3 '14 650w

GREY, ZANE. Light of western stars. il $1.35 (1½c) Harper 14-1111

The author has a fervid faith in the west, especially in his part of the west—that strip of the United States that borders on Mexico. He believes in its economic future and in the vigor and virility of its men and women. In this story he tells of an eastern girl who comes west, is enchanted with the country, and settles down as a westerner on her own account. She possesses unlimited means so is easily able to buy up and restock the largest ranch in the country. The love story of the book is dramatic, for the first meeting of hero and heroine takes place under unusual circumstances, and there is no slacking of intensity in the events that follow.

"Will not be as popular as 'Desert gold.'"

+ — A L A Bkl 10:370 My '14

"Of characterisation, there is none; of interest, there is almost less. But of all the characters, the heroine is easily the most unreal and absurd." W. L. Kilner

— Bookm 39:223 Ap '14 350w

"The story is full of adventures, stirring ones, and the author only barely escapes the charge of melodrama once or twice, but he does escape it, and we are allowed to see a complete metamorphosis wrought by the wide prairies and the high mountains, and the rough men who have dwelt in the teeth of adventures from their earliest childhood."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Ja 24 '14 220w

"It 'reads' from beginning to end and mingles a good deal of humor with its melodramatic plot." W: M. Payne

+ — Dial 56:121 My 16 '14 480w

"The story itself is far inferior to 'Desert gold.'"

+ — Nation 98:239 Mr 5 '14 220w

Nation 98:304 Mr 10 '14 140w

"It is a well-told tale, and the interest never flags."

+ — Nation 100:114 Ja 28 '15 170w

"As to Mr. Grey's competence in telling a story in which incident crowds incident, escapes, rescue, sudden death, mad devotion, and shameless perfidy follow page on page, there can be no doubt. The book is probably exactly the kind of book it was meant to be; and will be breathlessly read by people who want the colors laid on thick, and are not bothered because the composition as a whole is out of drawing."

+ — — N Y Times 19:38 Ja 25 '14 520w

GRIBBLE, FRANCIS HENRY. Life of the Emperor Francis Joseph. il $3.75 (4c) Putnam (Eng ed 14-9929)

This biography of the Austrian emperor turns out to be a very gossipy chronicle of the affairs of the house of Hapsburg and its members. The author says that, while there have been many books written on modern Austria, there is no life of Francis Joseph, and no history "in which the personal and political aspects of the subject are considered in their relation to each other. The assumption of writers who have previously treated the theme has been that tittle-tattle is tittle-tattle, and that history is history, and that the two can never meet. The two things, however, are liable to meet anywhere; and in the country and period here under review they are continually meeting." (Preface) Writing from this point of view it is inevitable that the author must give serious attention to matters often considered trivial.

"Mr. Gribble has that power to collect and arrange facts which enables him to produce many volumes, and by a skilful compilation of material, gathered from many sources, he has made 'The life of the emperor Francis Joseph' readable. The author does not appear to be sufficiently impartial to write history. His intensely anti-Austrian feelings have prevented him from being fair, and he is too fond of old scandals. The book is well illustrated, and is sure of readers; but much that is printed should have been left in obscurity."

+ — — Ath 1914,1:sup360 Mr 7 1350w

"Mr. Gribble has professed to follow Cromwell's instructions and paint the great man 'warts and all.' Sometimes it must be admitted that we feel it is the warts that interest him the most." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p10 Je 6 '14 1350w

"It is pitiful that such rubbish can find publishers and readers."

— Nation 98:574 My 14 '14 240w

"Mr. Gribble's distinctive talent as an author is his unequalled ability to make a single ill-odored phase in the life of any famous person appear to envelop, eclipse, and consume every other phase, feature, or achievement, until it would seem, to an otherwise uninformed reader, to be the whole life."

— N Y Times 19:323 Jl 26 '14 150w

"From both political and personal standpoints, it is a disappointing book."

+ — Outlook 107:564 Jl 4 '14 300w

"We do not greatly care for books of this class, but we are bound to say that Mr. Gribble has tried to be as inoffensive as possible."

+ — Spec 112:357 F 28 '14 80w

"Mr. Gribble gives an interesting and, upon the whole, a favorable picture of the old monarch now in his 84th year."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 My 14 '14 1050w

GRIBBLE, FRANCIS HENRY. Tragedy of Isabella II. il *$3.75 Badger, R; G.
(Eng ed A14-844)

"The history of modern Spain is very intimately concerned with the life of Isabella II, the queen who danced away her throne. It was due in part to the misrule of Isabella and her father and grandfather that Spain was in so weakened a condition that she was forced to part with her colonies." (Boston Transcript) "Although Mr. Gribble speaks of himself as the biographer of Queen Isabella, this book must, then, be considered as history rather than biography." (Spec)

"Mr. Gribble does not attempt to palliate Isabella's faults, or to make too many excuses for her folly. Nor does he err on the other side by giving needless details of her indecorous private life, as a less discreet biographer might easily have done."

+ Ath 1913,1:541 My 17 1050w

"Mr. Gribble is already well known as a writer upon romantic history, and he brings to this book his usual store of enthusiasm and knowledge of his subject."

+ Boston Transcript p25 N 26 '13 500w

"Mr. Gribble writes entertainingly and with many flashes of wit; but the question that intrudes itself is whether the book was worth writing, and whether it is altogether courteous to a friendly nation to drag the skeleton so relentlessly out of its closet."

+ Ind 76:95 O 9 '13 200w

"The events of the nineteenth century in Spain, as seen from the palace windows or behind the doors of diplomats, add their value to this record of a gay and reckless queen."

+ Lit D 47:824 N 1 '13 380w

"In his use of sources Mr. Gribble is wholly uncritical. He relies in large part upon the back-stairs gossip printed in the partisan press of the day and upon the lively imaginings of contemporary foreign tourists. Many of these narratives are obviously false, but they serve to make history readable. A few errors and misprints have crept into the text."

+ Nation 97:487 N 20 '13 240w

"He has contrived to make the book dull."

+ N Y Sun p5 O 18 '13 100w

"Her story presents just the right sort of material for Mr. Gribble's gossiping, slightly malicious pen."

+ N Y Times 19:16 Ja 11 '14 1050w

"To those who can take no interest in history unless it is vivacious rather than thorough, clever rather than original, and presented in illustrated volumes gaily bound in red and gold, 'The tragedy of Isabella II may be recommended as a readable, lively, and in the main accurate account of Queen Isabella's reign.'"

+ — Spec 111:24 Jl 5 '13 850w

GRIFFEN, CHARLES LEWIS, and ADAMS, CHARLES CLYDE. Machine drawing. il $1.50 (3c) Am. technical soc. 14-18354

"It is the aim of the publishers of this volume to put in the hands of those who are only moderately schooled in the art of mechanical drawing the means of developing themselves in the broader art of machine drawing." (Intro.) The book is divided into three parts. Part 1 takes up Working drawings; Part 2 Mechanism drawing; Part 3 Working shop drawings. Part 3 is subdivided into two parts taking up respectively the working drawings for a duplex pump and for a direct-current generator. The book is fully illustrated.

"The arrangement is excellent and the work is very skillfully handled."

+ Engin Rec 71:56 Ja 9 '15 200w

GRIFFITH, WILLIAM ELLIOT. Hepburn of Japan, and his wife and helpmates. il *$1.50 (4c) Presbyterian bd. 14-2319

The author tells the story of a life devoted to missionary endeavor. Dr. Hepburn, with his wife, went to Singapore in 1846 to work among the Chinese in Siam. After five years of service they returned to America where he settled down to the practice of his profession in New York, but the missionary call again reached them and they went out to Japan in 1859. The author says in his preface: "Of the four pioneers of the gospel and Christian civilization in Japan, Verbeck, Brown, Hepburn, and Williams, this volume completes the biography of that one who was second on the ground and possibly the first in general usefulness."

"The career of Dr. Hepburn and his plucky wife well deserve to be made known to the world. Dr. Griffith's style is often rather sophomoric and flamboyant, with a tendency toward the argot of cant; it is not always marked by the simplicity of correctness, but his enthusiasm for his subject is contagious, and he writes of Dai Nippon as one having the authority of knowledge." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 D 31 '13 2250w

"Rich in varied incident, and covering almost a century of time, Dr. Hepburn's life was well worth recording, and its story is well worth reading. A number of chronological inconsistencies, some in quoted passages, others from the author's own pen, perplex the reader, but need not seriously interfere with his enjoyment of the book."

+ — Dial 56:149 F 16 '14 250w

Outlook 106:153 Ja 17 '14 200w

R of Rs 49:122 Ja '14 60w

+ R of Rs 49:368 Mr '14 400w

Reviewed by M. R. Gaines

+ Survey 32:200 My 16 '14 650w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

Yale R n s 4:407 Ja '15 300w

GRIFFITHS, ARTHUR GEORGE FREDERICK. Life of Napoleon. il *$1.75 Lippincott

A15-33

This life of Napoleon "is hardly a biography in the modern sense; rather a story pleasantly retold." (Nation) "It is touched here and there with the lingering sentiment of British conservatism but Major Griffiths is not a detractor for all that. He proves his impartiality by criticising Wellington's strategy in the Waterloo campaign as erroneous and based on misunderstanding of his great opponent's movements, a misunderstanding for which it is difficult to account. He thinks that there was one stage of the battle when victory was almost within Napoleon's grasp. Major Griffiths is one of many Englishmen who cannot read the St. Helena, chapters of Napoleon's life without regret." (Boston Transcript)

"Major Griffiths, writes frankly and gives us an easily-to-be-read narrative. Major Griffiths' estimate of Napoleon does not differ from that commonly encountered in non-French Napoleonomana." E. W. H.

+ Boston Transcript p22 N 18 '14 270w

"Several contradictions and useless repetitions in the text have escaped correction. The book contains many excellent portraits."

+ — Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 50w

Nation 99:719 D 17 '14 100w

+ N Y Times 20:1 Ja 3 '15 90w

GRIGGS, EDWARD HOWARD. Philosophy of art. *$1.50 (2½c) Huebsch 14-1464

"The aim of this study is to show what art is, how it comes out of the life of man, and what specific function each of the great ideal arts fulfills in relation to the human spirit." This is the author's own statement of his purpose. In carrying it out he first devotes himself to the clearing away of certain errors: one, that art is a luxury to be indulged in after ease and leisure have been achieved; another, that art is justified only when it serves a moral end; a third, and this the error of the artist himself, that art exists for the sake of exhibiting technical skill. He then attempts further to answer three questions: What is art? What does art do to the artist who creates? What does art do to the student who appreciates? Four types of art are dealt with: sculpture, painting, music and poetry.

A L A Bkl 10:308 Ap '14

"Such a work has been a desideratum. Now that we have it, it should be welcomed by lovers of art, and it should create a love for art in those who lack it."

+ Boston Transcript p27 D 17 '13 520w

"Being very readable, and presenting a multiplicity of ideas, such a book cannot fail to stimulate thought." L: I. Bredvold

+ — Dial 56:343 Ap 16 '14 450w

"No one, we believe, can read such a volume as this without feeling anew the intimate relation of the arts to one another, and what specific function each fulfils in relation to the human spirit."

+ Outlook 106:322 F 7 '14 200w

R of Rs 49:113 Ja '14 60w

"Foremost among the latest books in this field must be placed 'The philosophy of art.' This book dealing with four of the major arts, is thoroughly characteristic of Mr. Griggs, and like his lectures is entertaining, instructive, and filled with references to things that a person of culture is supposed to be familiar with."

+ — School Arts Magazine 13:481 F '14 300w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:259 N '14 50w

GRIGGS, EDWARD HOWARD. Self-culture through the vocation. (Art of life ser.) *50c (5c) Huebsch

A little book that might well be read along with a number of recent works on vocational guidance. The author holds that "the problem of life-culture through the work itself is, 'though little recognized, even more important than that of the education equipping for the work.'" There are chapters on: The vocation; our problem; Action versus dreams; Dead work; Sham and sincerity; Vocation and avocation; Work: a way of life.

GRIMSHAW, BEATRICE ETHEL. Sorcerer's stone. il *$1.20 (2½c) Winston 14-6237

"Once more Miss Grimshaw leads us into the mysterious regions and among the barbarous peoples of New Guinea. . . . In 'The sorcerer's stone' she tells a series of seven short stories all having to do with the theft from a Papuan conjurer of a diamond of wondrous beauty and fabulous value. The participants, in adventures that bring them more than once within close distance of violent death, are an Englishman who is the supposititious narrator, and his companion, a French marquis."—Boston Transcript

"The atmosphere of the tropic regions, the reality of life at the uttermost ends of the earth, the fantasies of genuine humor, the spirit of the undaunted quest of wealth and adventure are all Miss Grimshaw's to command. As a novel that mingles its sheer entertainment with revelations of strange scenes and strange people, 'The sorcerer's stone' is exceptional." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 11 '14 1050w

+ N Y Times 19:183 Ap 12 '14 450w

"Truly thrilling story."

+ Spec 112:1040 Je 20 '14 20w

GRISWOLD, LATTA. Deering at Princeton. il *$1.35 (2c) Macmillan 13-20348

This story, a continuation of "Deering at Deal," carries Anthony Deering thru his four years at Princeton. The first part of the story, which covers Tony's freshman year, is much like other tales of its kind, taken up with hazing episodes, athletics, and allied interests. In the latter half a deeper note is struck; college clubs come in for serious criticism, and there is some consideration of life's wider problems. College never quite wins Tony away from his old school, and at his graduation, he goes back to Deal as a master.

"Clean athletics, democracy of attitude, and worthy scholarship characterize the book. Adult in viewpoint, it will be found readable where college stories are needed."

+ A L A Bkl 10:243 F '14

"Deserves to be read by every one, both young and old, to whom a well-written college story appeals."

+ — Ath 1913,2:703 D 13 180w

"He has done a number of things so well that his work is outstanding." M. C. Anderson

+ Bookm 38:441 D '13 100w

"It is a capital college story." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p26 N 26 '13 30w

GRISWOLD, LATTA. Winds of Deal. il *$1.35 (1½c) Macmillan 14-15185

Anthony Deering, hero of two earlier stories by Mr. Griswold, returns to Deal as master after his graduation from college. This story of his two first years in this position is concerned with his relations with the boys, in particular with George Erroll, a boy whose early training has not tended to eliminate the weaknesses in his character. The story differs from the other school-boy tales in that athletics play a minor part and that emphasis is placed on other phases of school life.

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:449 D '14 60w

"A book that started out well and thruout maintains an excellent level of style."

+ Ind 80:418 D 14 '14 60w

"Here is an author who has just escaped writing a distinctive story. His style is agreeable, and the constructive part of the plot particularly well done. But the tone of the book is disappointingly vulgar at times, even tho a strong counter-current is set against the negative elements in the hero's life."

+ — Lit D 49:1129 D 5 '14 200w

"A story of particular value for fathers although young chaps will find none the less engaging its graphic account of busy and happy school days."

+ N Y Times 20:22 Ja 17 '15 500w

"Here is clever, intimate work, and a value and depth which are not common to school stories."

+ Spec 114:23 Ja 2 '15 210w

GRUBB, MARY B. When mother lets us make gifts. il *75c Moffat 14-16184

A book in which "scores of pretty, useful objects are illustrated and described so that children can understand. The materials required are inexpensive."—School Arts Magazine

"There is nothing very new in this little book, but the suggestions are practical, simply presented and the designs are good."

+ A L A Bkl 11:224 Ja '15

"An attractive and practical illustrated book."

+ N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 30w

+ N Y Times 19:524 N 29 '14 80w

+ School Arts Magazine 14:218 N '14 40w

GRUNDY, GEORGE BEARDOE, ed. Ancient gems in modern settings. *$2 Oxford 14-2055

"Dr. G. B. Grundy, of Corpus Christi, Oxford, has got together a volume of metrical versions from the Greek anthology. . . . A considerable number of the epigrams are translated by the editor himself, and with no mean skill."—Nation

"The selections are admirably made, are usually in idiomatic English, and are better adapted to give a clear notion of the minor Greek poets to those unacquainted with the language than any other collection."

+ A L A Bkl 10:308 Ap '14

"Mr. Grundy has been well advised in the method of his attractive little volume of versions. His sense of selection, too, is on the whole admirable, except where his own work is concerned."

+ — Ath 1913,1:540 My 17 800w

"The reviewer becomes querulous when he finds Theocritus represented by one epigram as against twenty epigrams of Leonidas; Phillimore's translations in the 'Dublin review' and

GRUNDY, GEORGE BEARDOE, ed.—Cont.
Paton's in his 'Erotica,' though both these translators are hardly more than poetasters, might have been drawn upon to enlarge the contribution from the Hellenistic period. One misses Edmund Gosse's 'After many a dusty mile,' and wonders if the English editor might not have made a place for a few American versions, those for example of Lilla Cabot Perry." H. W. P.

+ — Class J 9:79 N '13 400w

"The result as a whole is perhaps the most satisfactory presentation of the anthology now available in English. It seems to us that the translators' names should have been appended to their work; one does not like to have to refer constantly to a table of contents for information of this sort. But we can find no other ground for criticism of what is altogether a charming little book."

+ — Dial 55:57 J1 16 '13 140w

"It is an attractive little book, though it must be confessed that very few of the translators have been able, like William Cory, with his wonderful version of Callimachus, to catch the real spirit of the anthologists, with their undertone of delicate pathos."

+ — Nation 96:552 My 29 '13 210w

"Dr. Grundy says in his preface, with great truth, that the poets of the anthology are never wearisome. Neither is Dr. Grundy." C.

+ — Spec 110:804 My 10 '13 2250w

GRUNDY, MABEL SARAH BARNES. Patricia plays a part. $1.35 (1c) Dodd 14-4300

Patricia was at once a charming girl, a very wilful young person, and a possessor of great wealth. During a single year, as she puts it, seven men had proposed to her fortune; seven men had made love to her gold; and seven men had murmured honeyed words to her estates. She was very tired of it all, and in spite of the protests of a shocked aunt, she ran away from it, alone and unchaperoned, to live in second-rate European hostels and find out what it is like to be poor. Of course she never really found out, for as David Wroxham said, she never looked the part, and it is the looking poor that hurts. David Wroxham, as one may readily guess, is the man who made love to Patricia herself, rather than to her fortune, her gold and her estates.

"A pleasant, light story."

+ A L A Bkl 10:325 Ap '14

"This tale is clean and healthy, though wholly superficial."

+ Ath 1913,1:307 Mr 15 50w

"It is certainly rather too long. Nevertheless, none but a cordial welcome should be given to a novel so healthful and agreeable, a thoroughly companionable book."

+ — N Y Times 19:113 Mr 8 '14 240w

"Fairly interesting, amusing tale."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:129 My '14 40w

GUÉRARD, ALBERT LÉON. French civilization in the nineteenth century. $33 (3c) Century (Eng ed A14-1060)

This book is the outgrowth of a series of lectures delivered at Stanford university during the academic year 1912-13. The contents is made up of chapters on: The country, the race, and the traditions; Napoleon; Constitutional monarchy; Napoleon III, 1848-70; The third republic, 1870-1913; The social question; Education; Religion. Each chapter is preceded by a synopsis, and chronological and genealogical tables, and working bibliographies are added at the close. "The aim of these," the author says, "as of the whole book, is not to be exhaustive but to point out the next step—the most available and clearest account of the subject, and especially the bibliographic instruments for further investigation."

+ A L A Bkl 10:392 Je '14

"M. Guérard's volume is full of facts and solid writing, which should help all who care for France to a better understanding of that country."

+ — Ath 1914,1:191 F 7 1750w

Reviewed by Stuart Henry

Bookm 39:560 J1 '14 1050w

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 20 '14 420w

"A highly instructive and interesting survey."

+ Cleveland 6:78 S '14 40w

+ Nation 99:284 S 3 '14 430w

+ N Y Times 19:359 Ag 23 '14 210w

"M. Guérard reveals a brilliant power of descriptive generalization, but keeps clear of the dogmatism to which the faculty of seeing things in the abstract too commonly leads."

+ No Am 200:302 Ag '14 950w

+ Outlook 107:265 My 30 '14 80w

+ R of Rs 49:636 My '14 50w

"As an aid to the study of the social, artistic and political development of France during the last century, M. Guérard's book can be recommended. His opinions will not commend themselves to all, and it would be possible to subject many of them to sharp criticism, but the general outline of his work is admirable. M. Guérard's last chapter contains an attack on militarism which is scarcely in keeping with his usual sane and impartial criticisms, but more surprising is his statement as to the alarming growth of alcoholism."

+ — Sat R 117:408 Mr 28 '14 300w

"M. Guérard's thoughtful and highly instructive work will have performed a very useful function if it leads politicians in this country to take stock of the sentiments and aspirations now uppermost in French society." C.

+ Spec 112:226 F 7 '14 1650w

+ Springfield Republican p5 My 28 '14 700w

"Evidences keen insight and discrimination."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:190 J1 '14 40w

"Excellent book." A. L. Cross

+ — Yale R n s 4:391 Ja 15 1750w

GUERBER, HÉLÈNE ADELINÉ. Book of the epic; with an introd. by J. B. Esenwein. il $2 (1c) Lippincott 13-25907

The author has retold in prose the stories of the world's great epics with generous quotation from the poems themselves or from standard translations. Greek, Latin, French, Spanish, German, Scandinavian, Finnish, and British sources are drawn upon; the stories of the Iliad, the Odyssey, the Cid, the Luciad, the Divine comedy, Beowulf, the Volsunga saga, the Kalevala, are retold. Later chapters are devoted to Hebrew, Arabian, Persian, Indian, Chinese and Japanese, and American epic literature.

"Simple, straightforward, narrative style. To some people it may serve as an introduction to the poems."

+ A L A Bkl 10:184 Ja '14

"This book will prove especially useful to teachers on the lookout for good material for oral language work."

+ Cath World 99:404 Je '14 90w

"It is Miss Guerber's habit to turn out good work and the present synopses are no variation from this rule."

+ Chaut 72:363 Ja 3 '13 130w

"A simple, straightforward, narrative style has been adopted by the author, whose success in packing so much excellent matter into so small space is to be commended."

+ Dial 55:533 D 16 '13 120w

"For the summaries alone, undistinguished as their style is, many a student will be grateful; they should serve as a most convenient work of reference."

+ — Nation 97:621 D 25 '13 300w

"The translations seem to have been made with care and intelligence."

+ N Y Times 19:37 Ja 25 '14 80w

"One of the most valuable books of the year."

+ R of Rs 49:253 F '14 110w

"Good for high school or general reference."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:59 Mr '14 40w

GUILLAUME, CHARLES EDOUARD. Mechanics. (Thresholds of science) il *50c (½c) Doubleday 14-11236

Part 1 of this book takes up Preparation for the study of mechanics; Part 2, Exposition of principles; Part 3, Development and application. A few pages of notes and problems bring the work to a close. As in other books in the series, the treatment of the subject is popular.

"Mechanics is dealt with by M. Guillaume in a way that should hold the interest of any reader. The author's frequent digavations into history, fiction, &c., have the charm of the unexpected, and are always of value and sometimes amusing."

+ Ath 1913,2:234 S 6 100w

"The work, which contains numerous illustrations, is well worth the attention of those whose knowledge already includes far more than is here presented."

+ Nation 99:329 S 10 '14 100w

+ N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 80w

GUIMERA, ANGEL. Marta of the lowlands (terra baixa); with an introd. by J: Garrett Underhill. (Drama league ser. of plays) il *75c (3½c) Doubleday A15-129

Marta of the lowlands is a Spanish play that came to America by way of Mexico. It was played first in Mexico City at a benefit for the Galveston flood sufferers, and was put on the stage in New York in 1903. Marta, a peasant girl of Catalonia, has been wronged by Sebastián, the landed proprietor whom all the others call master. In order that he may be free, he marries her to Manelich, a shepherd from the mountains. A beautiful love develops between the two who are thus wedded, and when later Sebastián again makes advances to Marta, Manelich kills him as he had killed the wolf that prowled about his sheepfold. The play was written in the Catalan dialect, translated into Spanish by José Echegaray, and from this Spanish version into English by Wallace Gillpatrick.

R of Rs 51:118 Ja '15 450w

GULICK, SIDNEY LEWIS. American Japanese problem. il *$1.75 (3c) Scribner 14-5771

The author believes that the threatened collision between the races of the East and West can be averted by right treatment at the present time. "The yellow peril may be transformed into golden advantages for us, even as the white peril in the orient is bringing unexpected benefits to those lands." Some of the phases of the situation that he discusses in detail are: California's Japanese problem; Japanese efforts to solve the problem; Are Japanese assimilable; The real yellow peril. In a closing chapter he outlines a new American oriental policy.

"The author writes from full understanding of both the American and Japanese points of view and is moderate and suggestive in his conclusions."

+ A L A Bkl 10:352 My '14

Reviewed by P. J. Treat

+ Dial 56:418 My 16 '14 450w

"It throws light on many dark and difficult questions and it answers a good many sedulously circulated untruths."

+ Educ R 49:105 Ja '15 60w

"A fair-minded, closely reasoned survey."

+ Ind 79:105 Jl 20 '14 650w

"This is an eminently judicious handling of a perplexing question."

+ Nation 98:754 Je 25 '14 1950w

+ New Republic 1:28 D 26 '14 830w

"Dr. Gulick's book is not only important from the educational point of view, but it is also very readable."

+ Outlook 107:423 Je 20 '14 1350w

"A new work which shows a detailed familiarity with Japanese, as well as American conditions."

+ R of Rs 49:623 My '14 230w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams
+ Yale R n s 4:406 Ja '15 380w

GUTHRIE, KENNETH SYLVAN. Spiritual message of literature: a manual of comparative literature, with topical outlines, and lists of useful books for school, college and private study. $1.60 (2½c) Comparative literature press 14-610

The author states that this book has grown out of an introduction to "an as yet unprinted anthology which was to introduce to the English speaking reader a comparatively comprehensive survey of the more valuable works of literary religion and of religious literature which yet are, and may long remain, inaccessible and untranslated." Part 1 of the book takes up the question What is comparative literature? part 2 discusses Racial prophetic elements; part 3, Spiritual message of lyric prophecy; part 4, Message of great dramas.

"For school and college use its view is perhaps too wide and its spirit too philosophic for any but rather advanced students of literature. Teachers who wish to get away from the microscopic method of dealing with literature will find in it much that will help them."

+ N Y Times 19:287 Je 21 '14 220w

"It is an interesting, and in many ways an inspiring, study, but it would be more effective if the introductory chapters were written in a more simple and direct style."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 9 '14 300w

GUTIERREZ DE LARA, L., and PINCHON, EDGCUMB. Mexican people: their struggle for freedom. il *$1.50 (1½c) Doubleday 14-8758

That the struggle which has now come to a head in Mexico is one of long duration, and that it is and has always been at bottom a struggle for the possession of the land, is the substance of this book's teaching. It has been a fight between the wealthy land owners on the one hand and the common people on the other, and this book is written from the point of view of the common people. "We have long wished to tell of this struggle," say the authors. "It constitutes one of the most exalted dramas of the social process. If by this book . . . we shall awaken the spirit of brotherhood and understanding in the hearts of some, for the battling proletariat of Mexico, our work will not have been without reward." (Preface)

— Am Hist R 19:968 Jl '14 150w

+ A L A Bkl 11:21 S '14

"Heatedly partisan and glaringly inaccurate, it is valueless as history; and it presents only in a confused and vague way the Constitutionalist cause which it champions." A. M. Chase

— Bookm 39:551 Jl '14 400w

Reviewed by Wallace Rice

+ Dial 56:502 Je 16 '14 670w

"In spite of its bitter partizanship, or rather because of it, 'The Mexican people' is a book which should be read by all who want to become acquainted with the forces involved in the present revolution."

+ Ind 78:324 My 25 '14 550w

"The book is simply a rabid campaign document, absolutely untrustworthy and without historical value."

— Nation 98:667 Je 4 '14 670w

"It is an interesting narrative, and assuredly partisan, and unbalanced."

+ N Y Times 19:205 Ap 26 '14 1950w

"It is a painstaking effort to present the viewpoint of the intellectual Mexican revolutionary, and it is incidentally a compilation of historical data of no little interest."

+ Outlook 108:656 N 18 '14 530w

"The author presents a point of view which deserves thoughtful consideration." R. R. Hill

+ Poi Sci Q 29:713 D '14 670w

"An exceedingly interesting volume."

+ R of Rs 49:754 Je '14 330w

GUTIERREZ DE LARA, L., and PINCHON, E.
—Continued.

"A striking, at times almost a brilliant, resume of Mexican history interpreted throughout from an extreme, even a fanatical, socialist standpoint."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 My 7 '14 700w

GUYOT, YVES. Where and why public ownership has failed; tr. from the French by H. F. Baker. *$1.50 (1½c) Macmillan 14-4754

The author is an opponent of public ownership. He makes in this book a study of the many experiments in state and municipal ownership that have been made in various countries with a view to determining the reasons for their failures. In the four books into which the work is divided he takes up: Public and private trading operations; Financial results of government and municipal ownership; Administrative results; Political and social consequences of public operation. For the American edition all facts and figures have been brought up to date to June, 1913.

"An able if not always convincing argument."

+ — A L A Bkl 16:392 Je '14

"The facts which he selects point strongly to the superiority of private ownership, but the strength of his argument is somewhat lessened by the tone of the book, which is distinctly partisan."

+ — Am Pol Sci R 8:294 My '14 160w

Reviewed by Eliot Jones

+ — Ann Am Acad 55:287 S '14 400w

+ — Ath 1914.1:816 Je 13 800w

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 470w

"The book contains an invaluable collection of data."

+ Elec World 63:1507 Je 27 '14 140w

"The treatment is marred somewhat by an evident bias." W: J. Cunningham

+ — Engin Rec 69:713 Je 20 '14 570w

"A very biased and partisan statement."

R. P. Farley

+ — Hibbert J 13:432 Ja '15 50w

"It should provide interesting controversial data for the opponent of public ownership and may be summed up as stimulating rather than scientifically exact. Its actual positive effect in preventing further government activity in the economic field will doubtless be insignificant, but it may be of value in pointing out some of the prime weaknesses of government ownership and administration." C. R. Nesbitt

+ — J Pol Econ 22:592 Je '14 1400w

Outlook 107:426 Je 20 '14 250w

"Opponents of every form of public ownership will find in this volume an arsenal of facts and deductions to support their arguments."

+ R of Rs 49:507 Ap '14 80w

+ — Spec 113:466 O 3 '14 620w

"An important book for students of the subject and useful for debate purposes."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:258 N '14 70w

H

HABERLANDT, GOTTLIEB. Physiological plant anatomy. il *$6.50 Macmillan
Agr14-1280

"The author, who is professor of botany at Berlin, has a high reputation in his native country, and the great work which he first published thirty years ago has been brought fairly up-to-date. The present English translation of the fourth German edition has been satisfactorily accomplished by Mr. Montagu Drummond. . . . Starting with cytology, Dr. Haberlandt surveys the whole of plant-structure, and developments the physiological side, on which he is eminently an authority. The notes with references to authorities are consigned to the end of the volume."—Spec

"Few other books have had the same stimulating effect and educational value for botanists."

+ — Ath 1914.1:691 My 16 780w

"The English translation is accurate and readable. The translator has succeeded in the difficult task of preserving the style of the original, which is chatty, confidential, and very attractive. But, owing to the fact that the treatise is primarily designed for advanced students, extremely technical terms are employed even at the outset, which may cause difficulties for the general reader."

+ — Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 1700w

"It is a great book, and the fact that it has passed through four German editions, each an improvement on its predecessor, is a testimony to its intrinsic value." J. B. F.

+ — Nature 93:477 J1 9 '14 470w

+ Spec 113:205 Ag 8 '14 150w

HADOW, GRACE ELEANOR. Chaucer and his times. (Home univ. lib.) *50c (1c) Holt
14-13588

Chaucer is a poet to be read, not one to be studied merely in college classes. Perhaps a reading of this little book may make that truth more evident; for it is the human-interest side of Chaucer's poetry that is emphasized by the author. She presents chapters on: Chaucer's life and times; Chaucer's works; Chaucer's treatment of his sources; Chaucer's character-drawing; Chaucer's humour; Chaucer's descriptive power; Some views of Chaucer on men and things; Chaucer's influence.

"Brief and elementary, but the work of a scholar, readably written."

+ A L A Bkl 11:110 N '14

"Barring an occasional banality, Miss Hadow gives a satisfactory summary of Chaucer and his poetry. It is not easy to write of so vast a subject in such small compass, and she has done well in judiciously keeping within her narrow bounds." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 J1 25 '14 450w

"Good for supplementary use with high school students."

+ Cleveland 6:77 S '14 50w

"A workmanlike and readable little treatise. In all the Chaucerian literature there is no other volume of exactly the same plan and scope, and this one is decidedly worth having."

+ Ind 80:27 O 5 '14 130w

"The book is the work of a scholar, and pleases by its nice discriminations and power of analysis; at the same time, it is anything but pedantic."

+ Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 130w

HAFERKORN, HENRY ERNEST. War with Mexico, 1846-1848: a select bibliography on the causes, conduct, and the political aspect of the war. $1; pa 50c Professional memoirs, Washington barracks, D. C. 14-5368

"This is not only a select bibliography on 'The war with Mexico, 1846-1848,' but also a carefully chosen list of books and other printed material on the resources, economic conditions, politics, and government of the republic of Mexico and the characteristics of the Mexican people."—Nation

"As a source-book it is indispensable to students of the Mexican problem."

+ Ind 79:106 J1 20 '14 90w

"The publication will be serviceable to librarians and to students in general."

+ Nation 98:760 Je 25 '14 120w

"The annotations make this bulletin a valuable guide to all the most important literature of the subject."

+ R of Rs 49:755 Je '14 140w

HAGEDORN, HERMANN, jr. Faces in the dawn. *$1.35 (1½c) Macmillan 14-15363

A story of the Kinder, Küche, Kirche ideal of German womanhood and of its overthrow in one family by the return from America of a beautiful and lovable young baroness who has imbibed all that is best in the modern spirit. Pastor Adam Samuels had loved Gudrun von Hallern from the days when as a child she had been prepared by him for her confirmation. But Gudrun, the baron's daughter, was a star too far above him, and he married Esperanza, who obediently made herself into the drudge and slave he expected a wife to be. Then Gudrun returns from America bringing with her Jimmie Hammerdale, to whom she has become engaged, and Adam's traditional ideals receive several jolts, and Esperanza too, is awakened out of her placid acceptance of a humble rôle in her husband's house and life, with the result that to both new possibilities of happiness are revealed.

+ A L A Bkl 11:122 N '14 +

"Faces in the dawn" is a pretty story, but it is Mr. Hagedorn's courageous and wholesome idealism in which we are most interested." R. T. P.

+ Boston Transcript p9 O 24 '14 600w

"The outcome of the comedy is never in doubt, but its conduct is sufficiently interesting." H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:462 O 15 '14 200w

"The average 'Christmas story' is a sticky mess compounded of trite moralizing and treacly sentimentality—which sad fact makes this charming tale of Mr. Hagedorn's all the more unusual and welcome."

+ N Y Times 19:447 O 18 '14 330w

"It is not likely that a more vivacious and tender Christmas story will appear this season."

+ Outlook 108:844 D 9 '14 180w

HAGEDORN, HERMANN, jr. Makers of madness. *$1 Macmillan 14-21740

A play in one act of three scenes showing how war is made. One of the two countries concerned is a monarchy in which a king, humane and reasonable, is pictured as helpless in the hands of his ministers who demand war, not that there is cause for it but because the time is ripe; it is a question of birth-rate, death-rate, revenue, and so on. The other country is a republic and its warmakers are the manufacturer of armaments, the contractor for army supplies, the jingo politician and the sensational press.

Ath 1914,2:658 D 19 110w

"Timely, severe in its arraignment of how modern war is promoted, Mr. Hagedorn's little play is the most significant appeal to public opinion that has been made to understand and avert the causes of war." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 9 '14 1800w

"Mr. Hagedorn has used no circumlocution, no rhetorical embellishments. He has told his story swiftly and dramatically, making his points without flourish or gesticulation."

+ N Y Times 20:16 Ja 10 '15 700w

HAGERTY, JAMES EDWARD. Mercantile credit. *$2 (3c) Holt 13-22690

"This volume represents an attempt to discuss one branch of the credit family, mercantile credit. The theory of credit and the different kinds of credit are considered only in so far as the treatment of these subjects makes clear the nature, scope and functions of mercantile credit." (Preface) The author has attempted to view the problems of mercantile credit from the business man's point of view. He has treated bankruptcy legislation at some length because it has largely to do with those who give and receive mercantile loans. Part one is devoted to the Origin, development and present status of mercantile credit; Part two to Legislation.

"As a matter of fact, it is really two books. The two parts have no organic connection." P. T. Cherrington

+ Am Econ R 4:148 Mr '14 750w

"Though designed for students in colleges and schools of commerce, contains many practical suggestions, forms, and guides for the credit man."

+ A L A Bkl 10:309 Ap '14

Reviewed by E. M. Patterson

+ Ann Am Acad 54:338 Jl '14 430w

"On the whole, the book is rather thin, and is not to be compared with Prendergast either in point of subject-matter or style of presentation. The book should prove useful as a ready reference for factual material and as a companion to Prendergast; but it in no sense supplants the latter as the best volume in the field."

+ J Pol Econ 22:601 Je '14 220w

Nation 98:98 Ja 22 '14 250w

+ N Y Times 18:734 D 14 '13 130w

"The book on the whole is a valuable piece of work which will prove useful to students and teachers of business administration."

+ Pol Sci Q 29:561 S '14 200w

HAGGARD, HENRY RIDER. Wanderer's necklace. ii *$1.35 Longmans 14-3287

"The wanderer's necklace" is a story of reincarnation, although reincarnation has little to do with it, except to serve as a medium, enabling the author to put into the first person, with more verisimilitude and impressiveness than he could otherwise have done, his tale of travel and adventure. The person who tells the story, exploring into his subconsciousness, has become aware of a past existence, lived many centuries ago. As one might delve into the earth for the skeleton of an extinct animal, he has dug into his reviving memories and brought forth and patched together scenes and events until he has made an almost complete whole." (N Y Times) "Back to the ninth century goes the mind of the reader as he turns the opening pages. The first scenes are in Scandinavia, the later ones in Byzantium and Egypt." (Boston Transcript)

"Readable adventure not equal to the author's earlier work."

+ A L A Bkl 10:371 My '14

"The numerous admirers of 'She' will find much to their taste in 'The wanderer's necklace.'"

+ Ath 1914,1:sup469 Mr 28 150w

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Book M 39:218 Ap '14 550w

"The story is sheer romance from beginning to end. It is the sort of tale that we read for the joy of the reading. If Sir Rider Haggard is given the praise his due he will receive the highest award due the story-teller. He knows and he practises his art with the assured skill of a master, and what more can any man do?" E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 1150w

+ Ind 78:54 Ap 6 '14 90w

"It is a fascinating tale of adventure, and in its telling lacks nothing of that persuasive charm of which Mr. Haggard has so many times shown himself a master."

+ N Y Times 19:72 F 15 '14 650w

Reviewed by H. Dick

+ Pub W 85:1339 Ap 18 '14 430w

+ R of Rs 49:761 Je '14 450w

"It is refreshing, then, after a course of modern novels, to read a new romance by Sir Henry Rider Haggard. How well it compares with the work of later writers in this particular field of fiction!"

+ Sat R 117:179 F 7 '14 900w

+ Spec 112:617 Ap 11 '14 30w

HAINES, CHARLES GROVE. American doctrine of judicial supremacy. *$2 (1½c) Macmillan 14-1940

The fundamental characteristic of constitutional law in the United States, says the author, is the practice of all departments of deferring to the courts and abiding by their decisions. In "the control of courts over legislation, combined with the notion of the supremacy of law as embodied in Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence" he finds the basis of the American doctrine of judicial supremacy. To trace the history of the development of this judicial control over legislation and to point out its results is the purpose of his book. He discusses first in part 1, The nature of the American doctrine; in part 2, Development of judicial supremacy; in part 3, Practice of declaring laws invalid.

HAINES, CHARLES GROVE—Continued.

+ A L A Bkl 10:352 My '14

"An excellent treatise."

+ Ann Am Acad 55:279 S '14 250w

"The clearness and calmness of the review, emphasized by the abundance of references and quotations, makes the work an almost necessary adjunct to the working library of any lawyer, teacher or student of government."

+ Boston Transcript p9 F 21 '14 600w

"It is safe to say that no treatise has yet appeared which deals with the subject in a spirit characterized by so much impartiality, scholarship, and breadth of view."

+ Dial 56:348 Ap 16 '14 280w

+ Nation 98:500 Ap 30 '14 1100w

"Scholarly and competent research."

+ N Y Times 19:281 Je 21 '14 1500w

+ No Am 199:625 Ap '14 850w

"This work is both timely and valuable."

H. L. McBain

+ Pol Sci Q 29:513 S '14 1400w

R of Rs 49:636 My '14 60w

HAINES, DONALD HAMILTON. Last invasion. 19 il $1.25 (2c) Harper 14-18116

A boys' story of an imagined invasion of the United States. Tom Blakesley and Jack Ranney, two young boys who have started out from their native city in an automobile to take their mothers to a place of safety, run directly into a line of battle and are given a chance to play an important part in the war. The maneuvers of aircraft are described in detail and the author has attempted to paint a true picture of warfare as it might be carried on in our own land at the present day.

Reviewed by G. I. Colburn

Bookm 40:451 D '14 50w

Ind 80:413 D 14 '14 70w

"Many a young reader will be excited by the story."

+ Lit D 49:1130 D 5 '14 210w

Nation 99:665 D 3 '14 60w

N Y Times 19:417 O 4 '14 110w

HALDANE, JOHN SCOTT. Mechanism, life and personality. *$1 Dutton

(Eng ed 14-14932)

"This little book consists of four lectures delivered to senior students at Guy's hospital, and forms, as the author says, an attempt to bring the great biological movement of the nineteenth century into definite relation with the main stream of human thought." (Spec) "Dr. Haldane has two fundamental theses: (1) The mechanical theory of life cannot possibly be applied to certain biological phenomena; (2) the universe is spiritual (or personal). According to Dr. Haldane, these two theses are very closely related, the considerations that prove that life cannot be explained mechanically leading inevitably to the doctrine that the universe is spiritual." (Int J Ethics)

A L A Bkl 11:60 O '14

"The book is not arresting as a whole, and chooses a devious way to enunciate the doctrine that 'personality is the great central fact of the universe.'"

+ Ath 1914:1782 Je 6 350w

"The lectures make good reading for any thoughtful person, but especially good for medical students."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 18 '14 180w

"Lucid criticism of the mechanistic theory."

O. W. Griffith

+ Hibbert J 12:706 Ap '14 1800w

"The book should be read in connection with Loeb's 'Mechanistic conception of life.' One cannot but admire the breadth of view with which Dr. Haldane always argues his contentions." Bernard Muscio

+ Int J Ethics 24:364 Ap '14 2000w

"The lectures are marked throughout by an admirable conciseness, and the restraint of the author who can compress to so brief a compass a discussion of many fundamental problems is as noteworthy as the originality of his ideas."

+ Nation 99:638 N 26 '14 1900w

+ Nature 94:194 O 22 '14 1300w

"Dr. Haldane's little book is written with exceptional clearness and distinction. The illustrations from his own branch of science are skillfully chosen, and the whole argument is a model of what philosophical argument should be. The book deserves to be read and re-read by all who are interested in the modern relations of philosophy and the natural sciences."

+ Spec 112:191 Ja 31 '14 650w

HALE, MRS. BEATRICE FORBES-ROBERTSON. What women want; an interpretation of the feminist movement. *$1.25 (2c) Stokes 15-185

Only one chapter in this book is given to the question of suffrage. The author is concerned with those larger interests of women that are comprised within the term Feminism. It is a word often misunderstood and misinterpreted. Her own definition of it is a contribution to the controversy concerning it: "Feminism is that part of the progress of democratic freedom which applies to women." The subject matter of the book is divided into four parts. Part 1, The awakening of women, is historical, giving a brief review of the progress of the woman movement from Mary Wollstonecraft onward. Part 2, Signs and symbols, points out signs of the times that show the changed and changing status of women, with two interesting chapters on fiction and the drama. Part 3 takes up present problems; part 4, The future vision.

"There are many admirable qualities in Mrs. Hale's study of women in this age and 'What women want' will be found to certain keen observation and sober thinking, which results in a work of much interest to the reader, irrespective of his or her stand upon the suffrage question." F. A. G.

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 13 '15 1100w

"'What women want' is earnest and sincere; it sums the feminist movement to date, and though not so pretentious as some of the efforts which have been made to persuade the world to a more modern point of view, it has the virtue of being wisely moderate."

+ N Y Times 20:37 Ja 31 '15 470w

HALE, PHILIP LESLIE. Jan Vermeer of Delft. 3 il $10 (12½c) Small 14-9

"This book is written to make the name and the work of Jan Vermeer of Delft better known to Americans," says the author in his brief preface. To this end he includes in the volume reproductions of all of the artist's known paintings together with examples of the work of certain of his contemporaries. The nine chapters that make up the text are: The art of Jan Vermeer; Holland in Vermeer's day; Vermeer and his times; Characteristics of Vermeer's technique; Values in Vermeer's painting; Composition and design; Old Masters; Vermeer and modern painting; Vermeer's pictures. The last chapter, which takes up nearly a third of the book, consists of brief descriptions, with critical comments, of each picture.

+ A L A Bkl 10:392 Je '14

"The most elaborate stylistic analysis ever applied to any artist." F. J. Mather, jr.

+ Nation 99:202; 231 Ag 13; 20 '14 4000w

"An extremely valuable, popular account."

+ Outlook 106:271 Ja 31 '14 450w

R of Rs 49:378 Mr '14 150w

"It is with special interest and confidence that one reads a book on art by a well trained painter, when the painter writes as well as does Mr. Hale." J. H.

+ School Arts Magazine 13:715 My '14 30w

HALE, WALTER. Ideal motor tour in France. il 7 *$1.50 (2c) Dodd 14-11314

The author says that planning an ideal motor tour in France is like picking an all-American football eleven; that any one can do it and there is no limit to the allowance for individual opinions. He, however, has been guided in his choice of an itinerary by nine years' experience in motorizing on the highways and byroads of Europe. A preliminary chapter is devoted to instruction concerning shipping the car, securing licenses and becoming familiar with the road rules. The itinerary itself with a good map as guide has Havre as its starting point, leads south to Paris, thence southwest thru the châteaux country to Bordeaux, Biarritz, the Pyrenees, across the south of France, over the Alps to Aix-les-Bains, thru the Vosges and back to Paris, covering altogether 2359 miles.

"His book is the motorists' Baedeker for France, for it holds a vast store of information."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 11 '14 370w

+ N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 50w

HALL, ALFRED DANIEL. Pilgrimage of British farming, 1910-1912. *$1.50 Dutton A14-1514

This book, by a former director of the Rothamsted experimental station is made up of articles originally contributed to the London "Times." "It describes a series of expeditions undertaken during the years 1910-1912—particularly trying years for the British farmer—among the farms of England, Scotland, and Ireland. The conclusion to which this careful first-hand observation leads the author is that British farming is in a sound and normal condition. No wholesale reforms are necessary: There is nothing revolutionary in sight; America and the colonies, so often quoted as examples of modern farming, have nothing to teach us." . . . The British farmer, in short, knows his business; what he needs is to pay a little stricter attention to it, to take more care with his bookkeeping, to cooperate more, to give that unremitting attention to detail which is necessary for success in other businesses." (Nation)

"It is excellent alike in style and knowledge, the work of an expert who can write."

+ Ath 1913,2:662 D 6 100w

+ Ath 1914,1:sup181 Ja 31 250w

"His observations are valuable not only for his specialized information, but also for his breadth of vision."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Jl 11 '14 400w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 12:693 Ap '14 60w

"The present book is solid without being wooden."

+ Nation 99:330 S 10 '14 530w

"Mr. Hall's book is written by one who knows what he is talking about, and presents a very faithful picture of British agriculture and rural conditions." E. J. Russell

+ Nature 94:1 S 3 '14 800w

+ Sat R 116:S20 D 27 '13 170w

HALL, BOLTON. Mastery of grief. *$1 (2½c) Holt 13-23204

A little book made up of a series of talks to the afflicted. There are chapters on Separation; Regrets; The medicament of grief; The course of nature; Taking up life again; Earthly immortality; The necessity of change; The persistence of life, and kindred topics. The book is notable for its tone of unaffected common sense and for its freedom from sentimentality.

"That Mr. Hall has wholly extracted the secret of mastering grief, we do not say; but that he helps us to it, there can be no doubt to whoever reads his little book with earnest courage and determined will."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 13 '13 190w

"The fact that Mr. Hall is a man of affairs rather than a preacher gives his book a certain weight and value that it might not otherwise have."

+ Dial 56:390 My 1 '14 250w

"Each chapter discusses, sanely and constructively, the lesson for the individual heart and soul in the tragedies wrought by death and life."

+ N Y Times 19:53 F 1 '14 150w

"A book of intelligent comfort and common sense for times of sorrow, with a very sane view of joy, pain, life and death."

+ R of Rs 48:761 D 13 50w

HALL, CYRIL. Modern weapons of war. il 2s 6d Blackie, London

"Mr. Cyril Hall gives some account of the making of guns, explosives, the guns of the army, the guns of the navy, torpedoes and torpedo craft, submarines, mines, and aircraft. The book is illustrated by recent photographs, and includes reports of actual fighting in the present war."—Ath

"It is written in clear and simple language, and should be attractive to youngsters."

+ Ath 1914,2:sup609 D 5 100w

"For those who want to know—and all certainly ought to know—what modern war is like, this book is to be recommended."

+ Sat R 118:sup7 D 5 '14 180w

"This book cannot fail to be read with interest at the present time, especially as its author has been able to incorporate in it facts revealed by the actual experience of the present war."

+ Spec 113:sup781 D 5 '14 80w

HALL, FLORENCE HOWE. Good form for all occasions. *$1 (2c) Harper 14-10610

A handy little manual of manners, dress and entertainment for both men and women by the author of "Social usage at Washington." It touches upon etiquette and dress for the week-end visitor; afternoon teas and receptions for the debutante; breakfasts, luncheons and dinners; bridesmaids' luncheons; bachelor dinners; wedding anniversaries; house and church weddings; public dinners and receptions; balls and dances; automobile trips; bridge parties and evening receptions; hotels, restaurants and roof gardens; the theater, opera and concert-hall.

"A simple, sensible and reliable little book for those without much social experience."

+ A L A Bkl 11:55 O '14

N Y Times 19:375 S 6 '14 50w

"More helpful than some larger, more pretentious books."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:301 D '14 30w

HALL, JAMES. With pen and ink. il $1.50 Prang 13-18644

The volume consists of twenty-two full-page plates, each illustrative of a particular problem in pen drawing, with accompanying explanatory text. The author has rewritten the part of his earlier work "With brush and pen," now out of print, which dealt with pen drawing. He says, however, that all of the first work that has been kept is "a very little of the original matter, two or three of the illustrations, and the semblance of the old name." Two kinds of pen drawing are considered, pictorial and decorative, and the book is designed for the high school teacher of drawing and for the art student.

"Easily understood, and full of suggestions for high school teachers or art students."

+ A L A Bkl 10:393 Je '14

"For illustrators and teachers of pen drawing this is an indispensable book."

+ School Arts Magazine 13:161 O '13 280w

HALL, MAY EMERY. Dutch days. il *$1 Moffat 11 14-8699

An account of the visit of an American family to Holland. "Mr. and Mrs. Lane, with their children, Richard and Shirley, visited the Hague, Delft, Leiden, Rotterdam, Gouda, Amsterdam and its diamond factories, Alkmaar and its cheeses, Hoorn, Zaandam, Valendam, Middelburg and Leeuwarden. Richard and Shirley had a chance to eat hoppes, Haarlem halletjes, maastengels and sprits; they liked the Ys very much. They saw wooden shoes, windmills, carts drawn by dogs, roofs rising in steps, strange costumes, head-dresses, foot-warmers, houseboats; and the book is illustrated by photographs taken by the children." (Boston Transcript)

HALL, MAY EMERY—Continued.

"A pleasant, natural account of a visit to Holland."

+ A L A Bkl 11:34 S '14

"We feel the charm of Holland as we read these pages—a simple, natural, interesting account of travel, acceptable to those who have seen Holland and to those who plan to visit it."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '14 180w

"To the child whose itinerary abroad this year includes Holland, Miss Hall's little book will especially appeal, while to the armchair traveler the photographs accompanying the text should lend added attractions."

+ N Y Times 19:462 O 25 '14 230w

HALL, MIRIAM. Tennis for girls. il 75c (12c) Robertson 14-589

The author says that the suggestions in this book "presuppose a working knowledge of the rudiments of lawn tennis. They have particularly in view the girl aspirant for tennis honors, and are largely the outcome of experiences in coaching the game." Illustrations from photographs help make clear the directions for different positions and strokes.

HALL, REV. NEWTON MARSHALL. Civic righteousness and civic pride. il $1.25 (3c) Sherman, French & co. 14-20526

A series of sermons on civic and economic problems. These are all at bottom, the author holds, moral problems. They cannot be settled by schemes and projects alone. "The final factor is the human factor, the redeemed man in the redeemed city, and no solution is possible which does not take into consideration the teaching of the Master of men." Contents: Civic righteousness and civic pride; America: the melting pot; Civic responsibility; The battle against evil; The city of the blind; The public schools and civic righteousness; The ideal citizenship; The saloon; a public nuisance; Civic rights and civic duties; The follies of civic adolescence; A righteous machine; The city of friends; The city and the nation; Woman and the ultimate democracy; The city of visions.

"While the sermonic tone pervades the book, it embodies the ideals, economic and moral, of our present municipal strivings."

+ Nation 99:780 D 31 '14 50w

"The volume is not limited in interest or application to the particular congregation that listened first to these chapters, nor to the whole city; wherever men and women are interested in the working out of civic problems, in town or city, this book may carry inspiration and evoke enthusiasm. The man who hasn't been to church for 30 years because the preaching is so poor ought to read this book and then resolve that if this is preaching he wants to go to church again."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 950w

HALL, THORNTON. Romances of the peerage. * $3.75 Brentano's

"Nearly all of the stories are from the lore of the English aristocracy, and very many of them have to do with the famous sons of the house of Stuart and their love affairs. . . . The most interesting tale of the family in Mr. Hall's chronicle is that of the two men who claimed to be the grandsons of Bonnie Prince Charlie, John Sobieski Stuart and Charles Edward Stuart, and the reader is fully presented with the various theories that tend to confirm the contentions of the two handsome princes. Another and perhaps the most interesting of these stories is that which is supposed to account for the plainly plebeian appearance of Louis Philippe."—Boston Transcript

"In spite of fanits of technique, the stories themselves have the charm of gossip."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ji 11 '14 430w

"A prosaic document."

+ Nation 98:701 Je 11 '14 150w

"This is a good example of modern attempts to supply the snippet-reading public with what passes for history in its application to the personal immoralities of decadent members of British and foreign titled families."

— Sat R 11:7680 My 23 '14 110w

HALLECK, REUBEN POST. Halleck's new English literature. il $1.30 Am. bk. 13-20132

A revised edition of a work published in 1900. The author has brought the work up to date by the addition of a new chapter on "Twentieth century literature." "Beginning from the dim period preceding the Norman conquest by five hundred years, he comes down in treatment to such contemporary novelists as Conrad, Bennett, Galsworthy and Wells; in poetry, Yeats, Masfield, Gibson and Noyes; in drama, Pinero, Jones, Shaw and Synge." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 10:253 F '14 ✱

"The author's critical judgments are often far wrong, and his bibliographical and reading references though considerable, often omit works on the subject that should be included as the most authoritative."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 22 '13 110w

"Useful in its way."

+ Educ R 46:531 D '13 30w

School R 22:211 Mr '14 70w

HALSEY, FREDERICK ARTHUR. Handbook for machine designers and draftsmen. il $5 McGraw 13-25304

"This reference-data book is the product of Mr. Halsey's exceptional experience in machine design and in technical journalism. The oblivion into which many permanently useful contributions to engineering journals fade soon after publication prompted him years ago to classify articles of this type with the purpose of printing a handbook supplying the basic facts used in the design of all kinds of machinery. The book contains, besides the groundwork of standard practice and contributions to the technical societies and press, much data supplied by specialists. . . . Much of the description is supplied by working formulae and tables and by sketches and diagrams, the source of information being indicated in each case. In many instances several methods are offered, the author wisely limiting himself to a comparison of the applications of these to differing conditions. . . . The handbook is completed with twenty-four mathematical tables, including logarithmic and functional data."—Engin Rec

"An excellent reference book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:399 Ap '14

"Both author and publisher are to be congratulated on the excellence of this exceptional work."

+ Elec World 63:1266 My 30 '14 320w

"So little can be found to criticize in this work that the reviewer would be tempted to make his commendation unqualified, were it not for the fact that the publishers have particularly invited suggestions and corrections." R: A. Smart

+ Engin N 71:158 Ja 15 '14 1600w

"The text is admirable throughout for its concise and adequate comment."

+ Engin Rec 69:84 Ja 17 '14 420w

"The author and publishers have done a great service to engineers and designers in producing this unique book which will no doubt become a standard work of reference."

+ Indust Engin 14:39 Ja '14 730w

HALSEY, FREDERICK ARTHUR. Methods of machine shop work, for apprentices and students in technical and trade schools. il $2.50 McGraw 14-12597

"The author" says in the preface: "While the printed page cannot take the place of personal experience, there is nevertheless, a great fund of information regarding tools, methods and processes that can be acquired from the printed page more effectively than from any other source." . . . The scope of the book is shown by the chapter headings, which are as follows: The two systems of machine production (making and manufacturing); Precision work and workmanship, measures of length; The measurement of errors; Gages; Fits and limits; Driving systems for machine tools; Turning and boring; Floor-plate work; Drilling; Milling; Gear cutting; Grinding."—Indust Engin

"A practical book for students and actual workmen."

+ A L A Bkl 11:103 N '14

"The title is too modest, for the book should be read by machinists and machine-shop foremen as well as by apprentices and students."

+ Indust Engin 14:379 S '14 300w

HAMEL, FRANK. Lady Hester Lucy Stanhope; a new light on her life and love affairs. il *$5 Funk 14-3181

"Mr. Hamel tells the story of Lady Hester's life—its happy childhood and girlhood, the disillusionment of her young womanhood, her departure from the England she was never to see again, her journey to the Holy land via Malta, Constantinople and Egypt, and then the long years in Palestine, filled at first with triumphs never before accorded an English woman, but ending in disappointment, loneliness and poverty."

The book has new viewpoints, which bring to us more vividly than has hitherto been done, a personality woven of the most conflicting characteristics."—Boston Transcript

Ath 1913,2:sup436 O 18 40w

Ath 1913,2:490 N 1 40w

"Mr. Hamel's researches have thrown a flood of new light upon many of Lady Hester's extraordinary vagaries, previously inexplicable."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 750w

Lit D 48:1259 My 23 '14 1350w

Nation 98:211 F 26 '14 1250w

"Mr. Hamel's book is thoroughly satisfactory. He has gone to every imaginable source for his material. This wealth of material has been carefully gone over, and is presented in a delightfully readable manner, with all the romance and character of its heroine retained and countless anecdotes given. The result is immensely human, amusing and even exciting." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ N Y Times 19:305 J1 12 '14 1000w

"The volume contains much that is well worth reading."

+ Spec 112:485 Mr 21 '14 850w

HAMEL, GUSTAV, and TURNER, CHARLES
C. Flying: some practical experiences. il *$3.50 Longmans War14-63

The authors "present interesting accounts of their aerial experiences and a good deal of information with respect to flying machines and their management. The volume includes chapters containing instruction and advice for those who desire to become skillful navigators of the air. One of the most interesting portions of the work is that in which the authors show how the aeroplane and other air craft may be used in war; this exhibit is based largely on the operations of the flying men in the recent Balkan war."—N Y Times

"It embraces the actual experiences of the authors, and for that reason, perhaps, is likely to make a more popular appeal than many of the works on aviation that have preceded it."

+ Ath 1914,1:452 Mr 28 550w

+ N Y Times 19:383 S 13 '14 100w

"This is quite the best book on flying that we have yet seen."

+ Spec 112:530 Mr 28 '14 180w

HAMILTON, CLAYTON MEEKER. Studies in stagecraft. *$1.50 (2c) Holt 14-3277

The papers collected here are reprinted from "The Bookman" and other periodicals, and the book is published as a companion volume to "The theory of the theatre." In the former work, the author says, the principles outlined "were derived from a study of dramatic art in general, without particular reference to any single period; but the principles outlined in the present work have been derived mainly from a study of the drama of to-day." (Preface) Some of the chapter titles are: The new art of making plays; The pictorial stage; The decorative drama; The modern art of stage-direction; The undramatic drama; The plays of yesteryear; A new defense of melodrama.

+ A L A Bkl 10:352 My '14

"Mr. Hamilton's discussions, though incomplete, are sufficiently provocative of thought to be well worth reading."

+ Ath 1914,1:455 Mr 28 450w

"Mr. Hamilton is at his best when he stops trying to measure the present by the past (the thing which he says is the purpose of this volume not to do) or by the future; and when he brings his stimulating mind down from its lofty Procrustean labours of fitting artistic history snugly into a moral generalization, to the task (only apparently humbler) of beholding old things at new angles." Graham Berry

+ Bookm 39:85 Mr '14 1250w

Cath World 99:839 S '14 370w

"Very little exception may be taken to the ideas set forth; they are in accord for the most part with the best modern criticism."

+ Dial 56:388 My 1 '14 380w

Ind 78:492 Je 15 '14 100w

"Mr. Hamilton should retrench or renovate his philosophy; to philosophize for the uncritical is futile; and if, as we gladly concede, he has written a good book in spite of all deductions, it is because his opinions are the outcome of his sound instincts rather than of his fallible analysis."

+ Nation 98:672 Je 4 '14 900w

"If there were any compulsion to select one adjective as descriptive of Mr. Hamilton's criticism, the word would probably be 'sound.'"

+ N Y Times 19:194 Ap 19 '14 300w

+ R of Rs 49:503 Ap '14 90w

HAMMOND, JOHN MARTIN. Colonial mansions of Maryland and Delaware. il *$5 Lippincott 14-17964

"The charm of this book is enhanced by sixty-five illustrations which help to attain the end for which the book was planned. The author describes the mansions, one by one, the location and the architectural scheme, and gives the history of different families who have planned, owned, inherited, or enjoyed such homes. Incidentally we get many interesting bits of colonial history and many suggestions which would increase the beauty and comfort of any houses over which we had any influence. Delaware shows decided evidence of Dutch influence, Maryland the English adaptation of classic models."—Lit D

Dial 57:459 D 1 '14 250w

+ Ind 80:211 N 9 '14 80w

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 150w

"Its only defect is a slight tending toward overattention to historical detail on the part of its author."

+ N Y Times 19:530 N 29 '14 50w

"A book of elegance in form, illustration, and subject."

+ Outlook 108:789 D 2 '14 90w

+ R of Rs 50:758 D '14 120w

HAMMOND, MRS. LILY (HARDY). In black and white; an interpretation of southern life; with an introd. by James H. Dillard. il *$1.25 Revell 14-7095

"Mrs. Hammond is a southerner who has an intimate knowledge of working class conditions, both north and south, and she makes the keynote of her book the assertion that the negro problem is primarily not a negro problem at all but a poverty problem, and that the colored people have suffered grave injustice from the failure of the south to understand this fact. The book deals therefore with poverty among the negroes and its amelioration,—with health, housing, delinquency, education, civil rights."—Survey

"Her viewpoint is that of the philanthropist; she knows working-class conditions North and

HAMMOND, MRS. LILY—Continued.

South intimately, and discusses her subject in a sane, sympathetic way."

+ A L A Bkl 11:9 S '14

"As an impartial study of questions that continually demand solution the volume should have the widest circulation both North and South."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 160w

"Written in forceful terms of logic and restrained human appeal."

+ Ind 78:289 My 18 '14 20w

"It is a plain, homely volume, full of happy illustrations and a clear understanding of human nature, breathing a spirit of good will towards everybody, and distinguished by true religious feeling." O. G. Villard

+ Nation 99:740 D 24 '14 800w

"Few books by southern writers have dealt so frankly and convincingly with the negro question."

+ R of Rs 49:756 Je '14 110w

"Will meet with a warm response among the many thoughtful southerners who desire to meet the race problem in the spirit of humanity; and the northerner will find it full of interest, and written with a delightful humor that makes it one of the most readable of our sociological books of today." M. W. Ovington

+ Survey 32:201 My 16 '14 480w

"A very sane, readable and useful book."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:301 D '14 60w

HAMSUN, KNUT. Shallow soil; tr. by Carl Christian Hyllested. *$1.35 (1½c) Scribner 14-4740

The first English translation of a novel by a writer who has won a dignified place in the literature of his own country, Norway. The story is a study of "Young Norway," of a group of minor writers, poets and artists in Christiania which can be duplicated in any large city of any country. Contrasted with them are two sterling young business men, unconscious of their own worth, who allow themselves to be imposed on by the impetuous members of the "clique," and a clear-seeing philosopher from the country who sees the sham of it all. The group of characters is completed by two women, one of whom deteriorates under the influence of her associates, while the other, after a bitter experience, is saved.

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup740 My 23 160w

"The book is sadly uneven, but there are moments in it of monumental bigness." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 39:326 My '14 450w

"The book has a certain poetic charm and beauty and a finished artistic form which proclaim its place among important books immediately." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 1100w

"Not a propaganda novel in the bad sense." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:20 Jl 1 '14 230w

+ Nation 98:363 Ap 2 '14 480w

"It is full of passages of rare beauty and must possess a true lyric note in the original which is necessarily somewhat dimmed in translation, good as that is. There is not an uncertain moment, the interest moves steadily forward, the development of the different characters, each on his own particular little track, is wonderfully accomplished."

+ N Y Times 19:136 Mr 22 '14 950w

"In many ways it is an admirable piece of work. It is not a pleasant story, and the life which it describes in Christiania is far from wholesome or attractive, but it is informing, it has freshness of style and human interest."

+ — Outlook 107:134 My 16 '14 500w

"In big and powerful strokes Mr. Hamsun presents Christiania, and in so doing shows us modern Norway and modern Europe."

+ R of Rs 49:625 My '14 700w

"The book is clever, if not very pleasant and the translation passable."

+ — Spec 113:240 Ag 15 '14 20w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 S 3 '14 550w

HANDCOCK, PERCY STUART PEACHE.

"Latest light on the Bible lands. il *$2.40 Gorham

"This volume constitutes an excellent summary of the more important results of recent excavations and discoveries in the orient. The first five chapters follow the history of Israel through from the patriarchal age to the Maccabean period. The next two take up the excavations in Palestine itself. One appendix summarizes the contribution of the North-Semitic inscriptions; another makes a concise statement of what is known regarding the Hittites." (Bib World) "No prejudice is shown, but scarcely any controversial matter is introduced. Mr. Handcock is content mainly to let facts speak for themselves." (Ath)

"Thoroughly good and evinces both learning and careful research."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup249 F '14 100w

"The whole work forms a very useful manual which can be highly recommended to those not having time to look up the special reports and more extended monographs. On disputed points, Handcock's judgment is usually good."

+ — Bib World 43:141 F '14 450w

"The book is an excellent introduction to Mesopotamian and Egyptian archaeology, though its particular bias may lead the novice to a wrong perspective." A. E. Crawley

+ — Nature 93:82 Mr 26 '14 150w

+ Nature 94:59 S 17 '14 320w (Review of 2d ed)

HANKIN, ERNEST HANBURY. Animal flight, a record of observation. il *12s 6d Iliffe & sons, London

"The [author's] observations, for the most part, were made at Agra, India, and the majority of them on the kite, or cheel, 'Milvus go-vinda,' though they include the adjutant and three species of vulture, all experts in soaring."

Special consideration is given to what the author terms the soarability of air, the condition that enables it to furnish energy for soaring flight, and the state of the weather as to sun, shade, wind, heat or cold are carefully recorded, as well as the time of day at which birds begin to soar. . . . Great attention is paid to the use of the wings and tail, and careful records are given of their varied motions, positions and relative angles to the body in directing, accelerating or checking flight; all of which are most valuable. An extremely interesting chapter is devoted to the Flight of flying fishes."—Science

"This 'record of observations' forms a worthy sequel to the works of Pottigrew, Marey, and other previous writers." G. H. B.

+ Nature 94:172 O 15 '14 1450w

+ Science n s 40:278 Ag 21 '14 850w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIRMINGHAM, pseud.). Bad times. *$1.20 (1½c) Doran

This book forms a chapter in the story of Ireland's long struggle for freedom. It is a serious study of Irish character. In 1800, the year of the union, Stephen Butler, gentleman and devoted patriot, took an oath never to yield obedience to the laws of England. This oath he imposed on his young son, and on all the heirs to follow him. The present story deals with another Stephen Butler, of the third generation, who returns to Ireland from years spent abroad, knowing nothing of this oath. His natural sympathies however are with the people, and he gladly throws in his lot with theirs, taking part in the activities of the Land league. But the feeling between gentry and peasantry is too strong; he can accomplish little, and in the end loses his life in an outbreak of violence on the part of his tenants.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 9 '14 170w

+ N Y Times 19:231 My 10 '14 60w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIR-
 12 MINGHAM, pseud.). From Dublin to Chicago:
 some notes on a tour in America. $*1.50
 (2½c) Doran 14-18569

A friendly book about America by a genial and kindly man who came to visit us and liked us. He didn't mind our newspaper interviewers, and he didn't find us a nation of hustlers, and he can look with respect on Chicago's ambition to become the world center of literature, music and art. If, on the other hand, he found the country between New York and Chicago dead-ly monotonous, and our sleeping cars impossible, and the lack of privacy in our houses unpleasant, his criticisms are always courteous, and his own pleasing modesty robs them of any sting.

+ A L A Bkl 11:169 D '14

"Canon Hannay seems to have been particularly fortunate in the selection of his informants. The volume, although frankly journalistic, and disclaiming profundity, with only an occasional note of grave eloquence (as in the last chapter), contains a large number of interesting facts and highly suggestive observations. Both are, in the main, strikingly fresh."

+ Ath 1914.2:473 N 7 700w

"In common with all foreign writers Mr. Birmingham frequently assumes the most obvious custom to be universal."

+ Boston Transcript p8 O 24 '14 1000w

"He is certainly utterly mistaken when he dares tell us that the Irish in the United States have never been thoroughly Americanized."

+ Cath World 100:684 F '15 160w

+ Ind 80:290 N 23 '14 70w

"A pleasant, wandering, often witty, and sometimes merely garrulous, series of jottings and reflections apropos of some weeks in America."

+ Nation 99:610 N 19 '14 350w

+ Outlook 108:788 D 2 '14 180w

+ R of Rs 50:759 D '14 40w

+ Spec 113:sup697 N 21 '14 30w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIR-
 6 MINGHAM, pseud.). Hyacinth. $*1.20 (1½c)
 Doran (Eng ed A14-1631)

A story of modern Ireland and the conflicting forces that battle there. Young Hyacinth Conneally comes to Dublin from Connaught to enter the Divinity school. He is an ardent nationalist and is taken up by radical members of that party. Events lead to his expulsion from college, and as it is the time of the Boer war and his sentiments are decidedly pro-Boer, he is on the point of going to South Africa to fight in the cause of freedom. He is deterred from his purpose, and the next stage of his career takes him to a quiet country place where he learns to love a simple life. Here after two years he is offered a choice. He may go to Dublin as editor of a radical weekly, or he may be ordained into the ministry. The choice he makes may or may not have been the better one, but it did not bring him happiness.

"There are touches of humor and good character drawing. More interesting than 'The bad times.'"

+ A L A Bkl 11:31 S '14

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 9 '14 170w

+ N Y Times 19:231 My 10 '14 100w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIR-
 8 MINGHAM, pseud.). Lost tribes. $*1.20 Doran
 14-4462

"The scene is laid in the picturesque but unimportant village of Druminawona in County Galway. Upon the stagnant calm of this secluded spot bursts the effervescent figure of Mrs. Nathan P. Dann, of New York, a wealthy widow who is determined to help her late husband's Irish relations and incidentally to liven things up in Druminawona. In the physiognomy of the villagers Mrs. Dann finds confirmation of her husband's theory that the Irish people were descendants of the ten tribes of Israel. . . . She sees money in the idea, and determines to organise a miracle play. . . . Mrs. Dann tries in vain to win over the parish priest and the Protestant clergyman to her scheme, and the whole book is taken up with a description of how they circumvent her and turn her amazing energies into other channels."—Sat R

+ A L A Bkl 11:122 N '14

+ Ath 1914.1:sup872 Je 20 300w

Boston Transcript p11 My 16 '14 620w

"The book is light-hearted. There is a good deal of flippancy, not always in the best of taste, about religious matters, and some of the situations are genuinely funny. But Mr. Birmingham should tap another source, as there seems grave peril of his humour running dry."

+ Sat R 117:678 My 23 '14 350w

"As usual, Canon Hannay excels in his digressions, sidelights on Irish character, and digs at officialdom."

+ Spec 112:877 My 23 '14 1450w

HANNAY, JAMES OWEN (GEORGE A. BIR-
 5 MINGHAM, pseud.). Seething pot. $*1.20
 (1½c) Doran (Eng ed 14-4468)

This is one of G. A. Birmingham's serious stories, very different in character from the rollicking tales that first made his name known to us. It is a story of modern Ireland and its political turmoil. Gerald Geoghegan, son of an exiled rebel, is called from Australia to Ireland to assume a title and the headship of an estate in Connaught. He comes, full of patriotism and devotion to the Ireland of his dreams, only to find a very different Ireland. He finds himself between two fires; nominally he belongs to the aristocracy, in sympathy he belongs to the people, and he learns that a compromise is impossible. He comes to see Ireland as a "seething pot," but as one of the characters puts it: "Far better it is to be sitting beside a seething pot than a stagnant pool."

"The blithesome spirit of Canon Hannay that has made the name of George A. Birmingham famous pervades the entire story. It loses none of its wit because that wit is applied with true wisdom to the discussion of a great problem. Here and there also he girds at and makes comic the Gaelic movement and much else that enters into the intellectual Irish life of the moment. 'The seething pot' is a story to be read with the keenest enjoyment." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 10 '14 1050w

+ N Y Times 19:39 Ja 25 '14 470w

"The first part of the story is rather heavily done, but as the tale proceeds it grows in interest."

+ Outlook 106:270 Ja 31 '14 170w

HANSHEW, THOMAS W. Cleek of Scotland
 4 Yard. il $*1.25 (1c) Doubleday 14-4584

Cleek, the detective of this story, is the one-time crook known as "The man of the forty faces," or as "The vanishing cracksmen." "His inspiration to abandon his old habits and take up the new profession is of a kind that adds a touch of romance to the greswome tales of mystery and murder. . . . The story is a series of tales of crimes of many kinds; but through them all a band of Parisian Apaches and a very skilful woman spy, a Russian, of course, run along with intrigue and inventions of evil, their chief purpose being to bring about the death of their former colleague." (Boston Transcript)

"If he had been less anxious to crowd all the puzzle-pieces of his various crimes into so small a compass, the result would have been better reading. But Mr. Hanshaw aimed at popular success, and secured it."

+ Ath 1914.1:sup741 My 23 200w

"Cleek is quite as skilful as a detective as he was as the 'Vanishing cracksmen,' and he is equally original and startling in his methods. The account of his adventures is one of the best among the many detective stories."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 21 '14 280w

"The book is entertaining and often clever, though the epilogue, with its revelation of Cleek's identity, strains the reader's credulity past the breaking point."

+ N Y Times 19:100 Mr 1 '14 350w

HANSHEW, THOMAS W.—Continued.

"Mr. Hanshew has not the artistic sense, the power of execution, of Conan Doyle. 'Cleck of Scotland Yard' is, so to speak, overwritten. The writer has invention and audacity. There is a little too much audacity in the 'dénouement'; it is not convincing. Cleck's disposition is overdone."

+ — Outlook 106:819 Ap 11 '14 200w

HANSON, JOSEPH MILLS. Trail to El Dorado. il *$1 (2½c) McClurg 13-23023

A story of overland travel in the days immediately following the civil war. Charlie and Zeb Bartlett, two young brothers, join an emigrant train going from Minnesota to Washington territory. They endure hardships, and face perils but reach the end of their journey in safety and are greeted by their father who had gone ahead to make a new home for them.

N Y Times 18:649 N 28 '13 90w

HANUS, PAUL HENRY. School efficiency: a constructive study applied to New York city. $1.20 (3c) World bk. co. 13-25103

This volume of the "School efficiency series" is a summary and interpretation of the report on the educational aspects of the school inquiry made by the Board of estimate and apportionment in 1911-12. Contents: Introduction; Plan, purpose and method of the report as a whole; Standards in education; Elementary schools; Certain problems in the administration of the elementary schools; Vocational schools; High schools; The system of general supervision and the board of examiners; The board of education and the local school boards.

A L A Bkl 10:393 Je '14

"The whole study, while deeply critical, is essentially constructive."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '13 100w

+ Nation 98:541 My 7 '14 70w

HARADA, TASUKU. Faith of Japan. *$1.25 (3½c) Macmillan 14-3305

The author, who is president of Doshisha university, Kyoto, delivered this series of lectures at Hartford theological seminary in 1910 as the lectures for that year in the Lampson series on "The religions of the world." He defines his subject as follows: "By the faith of Japan I have in mind not Shinto, Confucianism, Buddhism or Christianity, or any other religion, but that union of elements from each and all that have taken root in Japanese soil and moulded the thought and life of her people." Following an historical sketch are chapters devoted to: Kami; the conception of deity; Michi: the way of humanity; Satori: the law of enlightenment; Sukui: the doctrine of salvation; Chugi: the spirit of loyalty; Mirai: the idea of the future life. The work closes with a chapter on The faith: old and new, in which the Japanese attitude toward Christianity is discussed.

"The book, without being technical, explains the inmost thought of the Japanese people in a very lucid way and gives a masterly insight into their faith."

+ A L A Bkl 10:353 My '14

"The volume cannot be said to add particularly to a scientific knowledge of the religious attitude of the Japanese, but it has the virtue of setting forth sympathetically and clearly what might be called the common divisor of the Japanese religions, in so far as such a common element can be said to exist."

+ Bib World 44:294 O '14 200w

"The book will prove of special interest to American ministers and all interested in the higher life of Japan."

+ Ind 78:493 Je 15 '14 70w

"The whole is a weighty contribution to a live subject."

+ — Nation 98:639 My 28 '14 1250w

"Perhaps the only authoritative study of the faith of the Japanese people."

+ N Y Times 19:66 F 8 '14 120w

N Y Times 19:215 Ap 26 '14 80w

"Dr. Harada's book will fill an unoccupied place in the large literature which interprets Japan on the many sides of its life."

+ Outlook 106:866 Ap 18 '14 400w

R of Rs 49:624 My '14 120w

Spec 112:530 Mr 28 '14 150w

Reviewed by F. W. Williams

+ Yale R n s 4:405 Ja '15 450w

HARBEN, WILLIAM NATHANIEL (WILL N., pseud.). New Clarion. il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 14-15182

This Georgia story is concerned with a young man's adventures in country journalism. When young Howard Tinsley is about to leave home for the far west because there is no opening for a young man in his native town, Abner Daniel, who will be remembered from an earlier story, persuades the boy to stay and go into partnership with him in running a newspaper. The old run-down "Clarion" becomes the "New Clarion" and thrives under its new management, even tho a charge of murder is at one time brought against one of its editors. The two girls of the story are Cora Langham, an Atlanta beauty, and Mary Trumbley, Howard's loyal childhood friend.

A L A Bkl 11:76 O '14

"It is a story to make glad the heart of of the realist, but at the same time it is a story in which the romantic elements of life are by no means pushed into the background." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 930w

"The dialect spoken by many of the characters is no doubt the one used in the Georgia mountains, but that part of the dialogue which is in ordinary English, like the conversations between Howard and Cora Langham, is stiff and unnatural. And Mr. Harben certainly has a curious idea of the methods of a flirtatious young woman."

— N Y Times 19:389 S 20 '14 200w

Reviewed by W. D. Howells

+ — No Am 200:920 D '14 500w

"In 'The New Clarion' Mr. Harben is at his best."

+ Outlook 108:393 O 14 '14 180w

HARBISON, EDITH GWENDOLYN, comp. Low cost recipes. *75c (1½c) Jacobs 14-12591

A cook book for the housekeeper of moderate means. The author gives directions for preparing soups, fish, meats, vegetables, salads, cheese dishes, breads, rice, eggs, desserts and cakes.

"Contains especially good chapters on cereals and cheese dishes."

+ Cleveland 6:75 S '14 10w

HARCOURT, CYRIL. First cousin to a dream. *$1.25 (2c) Lane 15-702

This story, so slight and airy that it seems almost like the figment of a dream, is well-named. It carries on the life of Jerry and Ursula, characters in "The world's daughter," after their marriage. The two wander together about Europe—Italy, Switzerland and England are scenes of their wanderings. They meet delightful people, have interesting, if not exciting, adventures, and adore one another. But in the heart of each is a secret regret over their childlessness. Then a child is born to them—and that is all the story.

"Mr. Harcourt writes with an infectious animation and a whimsical gaiety that are attractive. Neither his humour nor his delicate touches of pathos are exaggerated."

+ Ath 1914,2:649 D 19 160w

"The story is cleverly told, so cleverly indeed, and with such whimsical wit and tenderness, that the truly modern frankness in reference to subjects discussed with much reserve, if discussed at all, in the 'old-fashioned' novel, is not repellent, although at times, to many readers, it must seem inartistic."

+ — Boston Transcript p22 D 26 '14 230w

"Mr. Harcourt has made a very lifelike toy in 'First cousin to a dream,' and it should amuse those who like toys. Only he has not been entirely frank; he seems to suggest deeper meanings and more poignant emotions than belong with toys, as who should say, 'This is not machinery, but a beating heart. That is why his book is irritating rather than amusing.'

+ N Y Times 20:6 Ja 3 '15 600w

+ Sat R 119:31 Ja 23 '15 250w

HARDY, ARTHUR SHERBURNE. Diane and her friends. il *$1.25 (2½c) Houghton 14-18303

The eleven stories with their French background are graceful and charming and some of them are tinged with a tender pathos. Many if not all of the stories have had magazine publication and one of them, Aurélié, was published by itself in a small volume for the holiday season of 1912. Contents: The defense of Diane; The confession of the Countess Anne; The way of Diane; The three experiences of Le Vieux; The twelve green Russian garnets; Aurélié; Célimène's diamonds; The real birthday of Dorante; The silver pencil; How Dorante crossed the Rubicon; The ambassador.

A L A Bk 11:173 D '14

"If a leisurely style results in a somewhat nebulous solution of mystery, one forgets it in appreciation of the quaintness of sentiment and setting."

+ Ind 80:172 N 2 '14 70w

+ Nation 99:582 N 12 '14 530w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:654 D 3 '14 90w

"The stories are all written in a rather graceful, fastidious, and undramatic style, quite appropriate for many of them, but somewhat out of place in those which might properly be called detective stories."

+ N Y Times 19:476 N 1 '14 280w

+ Outlook 108:604 N 11 '14 190w

HARDY, THOMAS. Satires of circumstance. 2 *$1.50 Macmillan

"The name 'Satires of circumstance' is applied by Mr. Hardy in strictness to a series of fifteen pieces in this volume, in which he selects for poetic representation events or coincidences that show with poignant clearness the helplessness of human love, trust, hope, before the play of mechanical forces. . . . The lyrics, reveries, and miscellaneous pieces of which the remainder of the volume is composed, are almost all in the same strain, and we are reminded that the central thought of Mr. Hardy's last volume, 'Time's laughing stocks,' was identical. . . . Among incidental pieces a poem commemorating the death of Swinburne, one called forth by the loss of the Titanic, and the recently composed 'Marching song for Kitchener's army,' will be particularly remembered and re-read with pleasure."—Ath

+ Ath 1914,2:552 N 28 500w

"Mr. Hardy is bound to tell his story in each of these many short poems, just as he was bound to tell it in any one of his larger novels, and he tells it more than once at the expense of rhyme and metre. Every one of these 'fifteen glimpses' at life that he calls 'Satires of circumstance' is a story complete in itself, and so, too, is each of the other poems in the volume." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 30 '14 1650w

+ Lit D 50:200 Ja 30 '15 620w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins

Nation 100:139 F 4 '15 630w

"It would be unjust to Mr. Hardy, however, to leave the impression with the reader that 'Satires of circumstance' is dyed through and through with this dark tint. Most of the poems in it, it is true, deal with disaster, else the title would not be as accurate as it is, but many of them have the searching humor, verging on grimness, which we are accustomed to in the Wessex novels, and others are of a really extraordinary beauty, considering the things Mr. Hardy tries to make the English language do in the way of expressing his thought. He steadily refuses to entreat it gently, he always compels it, sometimes even with violence. And then, after a period of recalcitrance, it bends to his hand in phrases of pure loveliness."

+ N Y Times 20:25 Ja 24 '15 1300w

"There is some of Mr. Hardy's best verse in this last book. We are certainly not sensible of any faltering of his genius."

+ Sat R 118:535 N 21 '14 1400w

"Viewed in relation to his predecessors and contemporaries, Mr. Hardy is a strangely isolated figure. His poetry is eminently his own, but it is not 'a poor thing.' He 'standeth alone,' but not 'as the nightingale sings,' for the element of charm and melody is so intermittent as to be negligible. His technique is often halting and clumsy and his style lacking in distinction. Yet he has at least this justification for adopting the medium of verse, that he says what he means with a force and concentration unattainable in prose."

+ Spec 114:19 Ja 2 '15 1320w

HARE, CHRISTOPHER, pseud. (MRS. MARIAN ANDREWS). Maximilian the dreamer: Holy Roman emperor, 1459-1519. il *$3 Scribner (Eng ed A13-2306)

"The hero of Christopher Hare's latest biographical study belongs to the small company of men and women who hold sway over the imagination of posterity, as they commanded the interest of their contemporaries, by the force of sheer personal charm." (Ath) "Maximilian is a poetic, though sometimes fantastic, figure of chivalry with a glamour to his memory. Emperor without men or money, he dreamed of a united Christendom, the Holy Roman empire, only to find his dreams break upon the rocks of financial necessity. He was a splendid failure so far as he himself was concerned, but he secured for the house of Hapsburg the reversion of Burgundy, the Netherlands, Spain, Hungary, and the New World. He was a soldier, statesman, scholar, patron of learning, and courteous gentleman." (Sat R)

"The book is lacking in humor and is not well balanced; too much attention has been given to the magnificence of triumphal entries, feasts and weddings, and the good qualities of the man have been over-emphasized."

+ A L A Bk 10:140 D '13

"A book which hardly reflects as it ought to do the brilliant, many-sided, and occasionally absurd figure of its subject. In spite of its drawbacks—of which a constant gravity is perhaps the most serious—"Maximilian the dreamer is pleasant reading."

+ Ath 1913,2:222 S 6 1300w

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 19 '13 400w

+ Nation 97:537 D 4 '13 80w

N Y Times 19:314 Jl 19 '14 400w

"A very readable book."

+ Sat R 116:466 O 11 '13 130w

"His book is neither pure history nor pure biography, but a not entirely satisfactory blend of the two."

+ Spec 111:sup495 O 4 '13 550w

HARE, CHRISTOPHER, pseud. (MRS. MARIAN ANDREWS). Men and women of the Italian reformation. il *$3 Scribner (Eng ed 14-10469)

"A great common cause—that of the reformation in Italy—connects the diverse elements of this collection of brief biographies. It is not a history of the reformation in Italy, but a history of the men and women who influenced the reformation. . . . The stories of Vittoria Colonna, Caterina Cibo and Giulia Gonzaga are told very fully in this book. Of the men whom the author discusses fully, the most interesting chapters are those which have to do with the English cardinal, Reginald Pole, and the one of Calvin's visit to Ferrara. One impression is left clearly from this account and that is of the extent of the reformation in Italy."—Boston Transcript

+ Boston Transcript p11 My 16 '14 330w

Ind 78:256 My 11 '14 35w

+ Nation 99:286 S 3 '14 180w

HARE, CHRISTOPHER, pseud.—Continued.

"Mr. Hare has been tireless in consulting authorities for this work, and seems to have spared no pains to be true to the historic facts. But this is no dry-as-dust compilation, it is a romance, a story, a picture, put before us with enthusiasm." Hildegarde Hawthorne
+ N Y Times 19:341 Ag 9 '14 1100w

"Mr. Hare's reputation as a historian should be emphasized by the present volume, and its reading should be an inspiration to every one."
+ Outlook 107:371 Je 13 '14 130w

"Mr. Hare has drawn a vivid portrait of the unfortunate Renée, but with his other characters he has been less successful. The reformers were a small and closely connected circle of friends, and therefore the author has been forced to make use of cross references to an extent which can hardly fail to bewilder the reader and detract from the literary merit of the book."
+ — Sat R 117:444 Ap 4 '14 230w

"He has procured a great deal of valuable material, which is practically unknown to the average English reader, and tells many stories of strong human interest."
+ Spec 112:530 Mr 28 '14 130w

HARRIS, DAVID FRASER. Nerves. (Home univ. lib.) il $50c (1c) Holt 14-2043

The author characterizes this book as a pioneer effort. It attempts "to explain in non-technical language the place and powers of the nervous system. . . . [It is] an exposition, limited as to its space and illustration, of the capabilities and peculiarities of the nervous system, more particularly of those regions whose activities are not associated with the rousing of consciousness." (Preface)

"A readable, non-technical treatise, by an authority."
+ A L A Bkl 10:309 Ap '14

+ Ath 1913,2:563 N 15 60w

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 25 '14 170w

"Excellent for the reader untrained in physiology."
+ Wis Lib Bull 10:188 Jl '14 20w

HARRIS, FRANK. Great days. $1.35 (1½c) Kennerley 14-13259

A stirring tale of the years of the French revolution and the rise of Napoleon. It is concerned with the adventurous undertakings of Jack Harris, the son of a smuggling inn keeper. "Jack becomes master of a privateer, has his successes, becomes a prisoner in France, and wins a French mistress whom he later marries, although he really loves another. That other is, not unnaturally, a maiden of high lineage, and they are not destined to be apart forever, since it is the easiest thing in the world for the author to kill off the wife at the convenient moment. There is a good deal of spirited writing in the book, sea-fray and land adventure." (Nation)

"A discursive tale of Napoleonic days, relieved by flashes of real insight, and marred by unnecessary passages. The character-drawing is good, though the author's swans would be accounted but ducks if judged wholly from the context."
— + Ath 1913,2:658 D 6 37w

"Here is a book that ought to find a widespread popularity." F: T. Cooper
+ Bookm 40:98 S '14 670w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary
Dial 57:19 Jl 1 '14 230w

— Ind 80:30 O 5 '14 50w

"It is hard to guess at what sort of audience the author has meant to aim this book. It might have been taken as an adventure book for boys but for the passages of sexual realism which leap here and there from a perfectly inoffensive context."
+ — Nation 98:727 Je 18 '14 350w

"For the sake of those vivid glimpses of the revolution, the stir and color and vitality of its opening portion, and above all, the characters of old Morgan, Mr. Harris's tale is well worth reading."
+ — N Y Times 19:242 My 21 '14 570w

"It is a romance that lacks nothing—excitement, thrills, adventure, love—to provide the reader with an hour's absorbed diversion."
+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 470w

HARRIS, GEORGE. Century's change in religion. $1.25 (2c) Houghton 14-20864

The author has set himself to determine the extent to which religious beliefs have been affected by modern knowledge of the universe and human nature, and as a method has chosen a comparison between the religious opinions and practices of one hundred years ago and those of today. His chapters consider: Religion a century ago; The waning of Calvinism; Evolution and theology; Biblical criticism; The person of Jesus Christ; Redemption and conversion; The spiritual man; Eternal life; The kingdom of God; The church: worship and preaching; Religious practice; The heritage of the faith; The enlargement of the faith.

HARRIS, NORMAN DWIGHT. Intervention and colonization in Africa; with an introd. by James T. Shotwell. (World diplomacy, v. 1) il $2 (2c) Houghton 15-1463

This is the first volume in a study of the efforts of European nations to secure territory and economic concessions in other lands. It is devoted wholly to the continent of Africa. A second volume will take up European intervention and competition in Asia. Contents: European expansion and world politics; the founding of the Congo independent state; Transition to the Belgian Congo; German colonization in southwest Africa; British and German east Africa, and Uganda; French colonial expansion in west Africa, the Sudan and the Sahara; Nigerian enterprise; South African expansion and union; The reoccupation of northern Africa (6 chapters devoted to Algeria, Oran, and Constantine; Tunisia; Morocco; Tripolitania; Egypt; and the Sudan). One map, a bibliography, appendices giving tables of revenues, etc., and an index complete the volume.

HARRISON, EARLE. Panama canal. il $*1 Moffat 13-25948

"This little volume of Mr. Harrison—it contains thirty eighteen pages of descriptive matter and seventeen full-page photographs—will find its chief admirers among those who delight in good pictures and just enough reading matter to make their meaning clear. Mr. Harrison has sought to let the photographs tell their own story for the most part, and to utilize his prose as a mere trimming." (N Y Times) The pictures appeared last summer in "Scribner's magazine."

A L A Bkl 10:310 Ap '14

"Few better examples of color-photography have been published."

+ Dial 55:531 D 16 '13 100w

Reviewed by C. E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:512 D 11 '13 50w

+ N Y Times 19:200 Ap 19 '14 200w

HARRISON, HERBERT. Lad of Kent. il $*1.25 (1c) Macmillan 14-11801

A tale of the Kentish coast during the first decade of the nineteenth century when wary smugglers cleverly evaded excisemen on land and the king's press-gang at sea. Against this background is traced the early life of a lad of mysterious parentage. He is introduced to the reader as the shabby and neglected ward of an absent-minded clergyman who spends day and night poring over unfinished manuscripts. Upon the death of the guardian the lad is taken in hand by an uncle whose succession to certain property, which it seems the nephew is heir to, would be undisputed if the boy could be gotten rid of. It is the series of pitfalls planned by the jealous uncle for the innocent lad that opens the way for varied and thrilling adventure. And thanks to some pretty loyal friends—smugglers tho they be—the boy sees his enemies outwitted and brought to justice.

"Will be liked by boys who enjoy Stevenson and Cooper."
+ A L A Bkl 11:32 S '14 *

"We congratulate the author on an excellent and stirring tale of a most interesting epoch."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup874 Je 20 280w

"There is something about it so individual, so sincere, so sterling that one feels compelled to speak a kinder and more urgent word on its behalf than on that of many another tale of larger calibre." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:168 O '14 280w

"His tale has gusto if not consistency."

+ — Nation 99:255 Ag 27 '14 400w

"There is material here for a thoroughly interesting story, and the author does not make it nearly absorbing enough. As it is, 'A lad of Kent' is readable; it ought to be vivid."

+ — N Y Times 19:282 Je 21 '14 260w

"The action is vigorous and the incidents are varied and exciting."

+ Outlook 108:53 S 2 '14 40w

"Mr. Harrison has written a real story of adventure, a capital book for a boy—all the more so because it really was not written for boys. It is in the form of autobiography, and written well, too—the action crisp, decided and vivid with the stirring spirit of youth and high adventure. If we sometimes feel inclined to cavil at the plot, we say to ourselves in sympathy with the author, 'Well, let's pretend!' and feel young again ourselves."

+ — Sat R 118:21 Jl 4 '14 180w

+ — Spec 113:368 S 12 '14 130w

"Mr. Harrison has written a diverting tale, but he neglects many opportunities to inject further thrills entirely consistent with the nature of the plot."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Jl 30 '14 420w

"Will interest all live boys and many grown-ups."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:262 N '14 50w

HARRISON, PELEG DENNIS. Stars and stripes and other American flags. il *$2 (1½c) Little A14-2976

This is the fifth edition of Mr. Harrison's work. It is brought down to date to the present time, and ends with an account of the Mexican incident of 1914.

+ A L A Bkl 11:185 D '14

HARRY, GÉRARD. Man's miracle. il *$1.35 4 Doubleday 14-30185

"The 'miracle' of which M. Gérard Harry writes is that which has been accomplished by science aided by the patient effort used in overcoming the physical disabilities of Laura Bridgman, Helen Keller, and the two French sisters, Marie and Marthe Huertin. He pays special attention to the case of Miss Keller, since, as she is so highly endowed by nature, the results in her case are the most brilliant and amazing. He seems to have gained all of his information of the two Americans from print, but he has himself visited the institution where the two French girls are being educated, and he presents some interesting personal impressions of his visit there."—N Y Times

"An interesting and stimulating book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:269 Mr '14

"If so much can be done for those with but two senses, it seems that man should never despair of any of those who have five senses. This is the greatest lesson this little book brings to the reader."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ja 7 '14 300w

+ N Y Times 19:95 Mr 1 '14 280w

"It would do every discontented man and woman good to read his pages."

+ Sat R 117:118 Ja 24 '14 130w

HART, ALBERT BUSHNELL. War in Europe; its causes and results. *$1 (2c) Appleton 14-18727

The author says that he himself "has felt a personal need of some knowledge of those conditions of Europe which bear upon the origin of the great war of 1914. Thence it was a short road to the thought that other Americans might be interested in a brief but systematic statement of the resources, aims, and difficulties of the European powers; the manner in which they became involved in the war; and the probable results of the struggle to America and to the rest of the world." (Preface) It is such a statement that he aims to give in this book. Part 1 of the book is made up of the following chapters: Significance of the European war; Minor powers of Europe; The six great powers; Non-political divisions of Europe; International rivalries and strains. Part 2: War in the Balkans; The war becomes European; Psychology of the European war; Questions of neutrality; Methods of warfare; Effect of the war on the United States; Outcome of the war.

"Sane and informing, but its use is greatly hampered by the lack of an index."

+ A L A Bkl 11:112 N '14 +

"On the whole the book remains a very fair and substantially accurate piece of work." F: A. Ogg

+ — Dial 58:46 Ja 16 '15 320w

+ Ind 80:242 N 16 '14 90w

"It is well packed with accurate information clearly conveyed, and is just about what the traditional intelligent reader will want to have at hand as he reads his papers."

+ — Nation 99:635 N 26 '14 300w

"Interesting book."

+ N Y Times 19:457 O 25 '14 1750w

+ Outlook 108:817 D 9 '14 80w

R or Rs 50:763 D '14 40w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:304 D '14 70w

HARTE, BRET. Stories and poems and other uncollected writings; comp. by C: Meeker Kozlay, with an introd. account of Harte's early contributions to the California press. il *$6 Houghton 14-9558

"Many newspaper files have been searched to fill the four hundred pages of the volume. They cover a period of forty-two years, from 1860 to 1902, and they represent their writer in all stages of immaturity and maturity. . . . Arranged by Mr. Kozlay in chronological order in seven sections, the contents of this volume are successively divided as Stories (1860-1865); Miscellaneous (1860-1870); Later prose; Early poems (1857-1865); Poems of local interest (1857-1865); Civil war poems (1862-1865); and Later poems (1871-1902)."—Boston Transcript

"Its contents, taken just as they are, do him no discredit, and in them may be found his characteristic range of humor and pathos." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p21 Jl 8 '14 900w

"The prose in this collection is more valuable than the verse, and of this the early sketches and tales are most important."

+ — Dial 57:142 S 1 '14 430w

"The book is attractively bound, beautifully illustrated, and is a great addition to our Bret Harte bibliography."

+ Lit D 49:25 Jl 4 '14 180w

"It is very likely that if it had been feasible to consult Bret Harte before the present collection of his early pot-boilers, gleaned from newspapers whose very names are now well-nigh forgotten, had been printed, he would have heartily vetoed the whole undertaking. In his case, though, as with most writers whose works live after them, such a collection is justifiable not only for whatever intrinsic merit it may possess, but also for the light it casts upon the history of the author's development."

+ — N Y Times 19:285 Je 21 '14 1200w

"An exceedingly interesting collection."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 1000w

HARTMAN, LEE FOSTER. White sapphire. 2 il *$1.25 (1½c) Harper 14-30181

A good mystery story in which all distressing details of murder and sudden death, which too often provide the plots for tales of the kind, are avoided. The action opens in a country house where a young man guest entertains a week-end party with his theories of crime detection. The next morning, when it is discovered that the library safe has been opened, he is given a chance to put his theories to the test. The family, wishing to avoid publicity in the matter, put the case entirely in his hands, and interest deepens as one after the other of the members of the household comes under suspicion. The processes of radio-activity and the peculiar properties of the white sapphire are involved in the solution of the problem.

HARTMAN, LEE FOSTER—Continued.

"It is an amiable, well-constructed story written in easy, natural style and it holds the reader's attention pleasantly until the end even if it is hardly likely to keep him sitting up nights."

+ Bookm 39:337 My '14 300w

"A detective story of interest because of its swift action and unexpected ending rather than because of its complications."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 31 '14 180w

"The story has the merit of an unexpected climax, with still another climax for the final page."

+ Nation 98:160 F 12 '14 150w

"The interest is well sustained and the complications of the plot are managed with cleverness. There is also a charming heroine, who sees to it that the love story has an opportunity to blossom out before it is too late."

+ N Y Times 19:38 Ja 25 '14 250w

HARTSHORNE, HUGH. Worship in the Sunday school: a study in the theory and practice of worship. $1.25 Teachers college 13-19012

The author bases his work "upon psychological investigations and his own experiences in the Union school of religion in New York. The place of worship in child life and the manner and method of the culture of the emotions in religious education are quite fully discussed, and many suggestions are made for the fruitful application of the theories advanced."—Ind

"Valuable to all workers in religious education."

+ A L A Bkl 10:269 Mr '14

"The book is an able treatment of the subject; and it ought to be in the hands of all mature Sunday-school workers."

+ Bib World 42:321 N '13 150w

"There is much in the book to challenge careful study."

+ Educ R 47:423 Ap '14 70w

"The book is practical as well as scholarly and full of wisdom and suggestiveness for every thoughtful minister and Sunday school superintendent."

+ Ind 77:314 Mr 2 '14 170w

Reviewed by E. L. Talbert

+ Psychol Bull 11:478 D 15 '14 250w

HARTT, ROLLIN LYNDE. Understanding the French. il $1.50 (2½c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-17658

Mr. Hartt, who once wrote of ourselves in a book called "The people at play," writes with the same good nature in this volume of the French. He is prone to question certain accepted premises, such as, for instance, that the French are a degenerate Latin race. He is not so sure that the French are a race, that the race is Latin, or that they have degenerated. Later he questions their gaiety, their politeness, their cleverness and their immorality. He writes too of the life of the art student, of the seeming contradiction in the French love of children and the declining birth rate, of the position of the church, and of government.

"Fair and sympathetic without being unmixed eulogy."

+ A L A Bkl 11:169 D '14 *

"Mr. Hartt, with all his vivacity of style, goes deeply into his subject, and it is apparent that he has had ample opportunity to investigate and to understand the people." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p24 N 11 '14 1300w

"A clear, entertaining, and illuminating survey."

+ N Y Times 20:47 F 7 '15 60w

+ Outlook 108:$18 D 9 '14 30w

"Entertaining and amusing observation of French life and character from the standpoint of an American."

+ Pittsburgh 19:563 D '14 15w

"This volume is very heartily recommended for intending tourists, for it supplies a line of information that is not obtainable from the encyclopedic Baedeker. It is a book of live people seen through the eyes of a live man."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 350w

HARVEY, ALEXANDER. The toe, and other tales. $1.25 (3c) Kennerley 13-26608

A group of obviously clever tales reprinted from the "Smart set," "Town topics" and other like periodicals. The titles are: The toe; The raft; The fools; The finishing touch; The finger of fate; The measure of all things; The mustache; Miss Dix; The forbidden floor; The frou-frou; The golden rat.

"His stories have the qualities esteemed by a certain group of writers in New York. There is a good deal of straining after novelty of theme, and a kind of eroticism prepared for a special audience of bachelors—lingerie eroticism, it may be called."

— Nation 98:111 Ja 29 '14 160w

"Those who have read Mr. Harvey's strange and interesting short stories in the English and American periodicals will be glad of this opportunity to possess them in more permanent form."

+ N Y Times 19:28 Ja 18 '14 50w

HASKIN, FREDERIC J. Panama canal. il $1.35 (1½c) Doubleday 13-22768

"The primary purpose of this book is to tell the layman the story of the Panama canal. It is written, therefore, in the simplest manner possible. . . . The temptation to turn aside into the pleasant paths of the romantic history of ancient Panama has been resisted; there is no attempt to dispose of political problems that incidentally concern the canal; in short, the book is confined to the story of the canal itself, and the things that are directly and vitally connected with it." (Preface) The book has many illustrations from photographs, and Colonel Goethals, who read the chapters dealing with the engineering features, adds a note testifying to their accuracy and dependability.

"Better and more complete on the engineering features of the canal than Scott."

+ A L A Bkl 10:394 Je '14

"He has justified his work by giving in the simplest language the best and clearest account that we have seen of the difficulties overcome, and of the machinery to be used for passing ships through the canal."

+ Ath 1914,1:370 Mr '14 800w

+ Engin N 72:164 Jl 16 '14 130w

"Within its limits can be taken as reliable."

+ Engin Rec 69:457 Ap 19 '14 90w

+ Ind 80:104 O 19 '14 60w

"Deserves commendation as perhaps the best and most thorough all-round account of the canal that has yet appeared. But the telling of the story would have been improved by a little toning down of the superlative mood in which the author wrote."

+ N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 330w

"Interesting and instructive. Popular in style, but accurate in statement."

+ Pittsburgh 19:308 Jl '14 10w

"Of the various books on Panama and the Canal Zone which we have noticed from time to time in these pages, none has a better claim on the hurried reader's attention than this compact volume."

+ R of Rs 49:506 Ap '14 90w

+ Spec 112:445 Mr 14 '14 130w

Wis Lib Bull 10:128 My '14 50w

HASTINGS, REV. JAMES, ed. Encyclopaedia of religion and ethics. v 6 Fiction-Hyksos. subs $7 Scribner (8-35833)

Descriptive note in December, 1909.

+ — Ath 1914,1:264 F 21 1400w (Review of v 6)

"It should be in the hands of every careful student."

+ Bib World 45:54 Ja '15 350w (Review of v 6)

"For the volume as a whole nothing but praise is due to Dr. Hastings and his collaborators." G. A. Johnston

+ Int J Ethics 24:457 J1 '14 700w (Review of v 6)

"Taken as a whole, very good value is offered by this series. Whoever has interest in man, in human history, in human development, whether physical, mental, or spiritual, will find this work a thesaurus of facts, possession of which he will prize."

+ Lit D 48:921 Ap 18 '14 370w (Review of v 6)

+ Nation 99:80 J1 16 '14 630w (Review of v 6)

"Considering its varied contents, Dr. Hastings has indeed shown striking powers of organization in turning out volume after volume of novel, learned, and otherwise inaccessible information at a comparatively speedy rate." Joseph Jacobs

+ N Y Times 19:322 J1 26 '14 1350w (Review of v 6)

+ Outlook 107:424 Je 20 '14 100w (Review of v 6)

"The accuracy of the whole book is admirable."

+ Sat R 117:315 Mr 7 '14 200w (Review of v 6)

HASTINGS, REV. JAMES, ed. Greater men and women of the Bible. v 1 *$3 Scribner 14-30360

v 1 "This new series helps the preacher and the popular lecturer to discover and use the rich illustrative material in the Bible. . . . The volume before us takes up the outstanding characters in the Book of Genesis, from Adam to Joseph. A great deal of the text is supplied by the editor; but the larger part of the volume consists of quotations from the best modern writers."—Bib World

"Will be valuable in sermonic work or Bible study."

+ A L A Bkl 10:353 My '14 (Review of v 1)

+ Bib World 44:292 O '14 200w (Review of v 1)

HATTON, FREDERICK, and HATTON, FANNIE LOCKE. Years of discretion. il *$1.25 Dodd 13-24110

A novel made from the play of the same name. "The novel follows closely the plot of the play, but develops the ending a little more by means of a number of letters. Both novel and play are entertainingly at issue with one of the assumptions—or shall we say convictions?—of modern life. The idea has been advanced a number of times that a woman at fifty is at her most charming age, and the newspapers are quite agreed upon speaking of men in the forties and fifties as 'young.' The Hattons are really quite old-fashioned when they make their fascinating heroine feel, or admit, that she is 'old' when she is only forty-eight." (N Y Times)

"Skill in reviewing nightmares or a gift for appraising the literary value of delirium is the kind of equipment required for satisfactory estimation of this novel. Yet the literary style of the book is above the average of ordinary novels, and with all its impossible folly the delineation of character leaves an impression of living people."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup468 Mr 28 220w

"This very successful comedy loses none of its charm in its translation from stage to book."

+ N Y Times 18:764 D 28 '13 170w

HAUGHTON, HENRY LAWRENCE. Sport and folk-lore in the Himalaya. il *$3.50 Longmans (Eng ed 14-2970)

"The author of this book, like so many Anglo-Indians, kept a journal while on duty, and after long hesitation has been persuaded to come into print." (Nation) "Apart from the story of the chase, he gives us, in the 'Gilgiti legends,' a veritable series of Arabian nights' entertainments, which he gathered from the Shikaris around camp-fires, and which have the distinct advantage of being entirely new." (Lit D)

+ A L A Bkl 10:394 Je '11

+ Ath 1914,1:846 Je 20 600w

"Captain Haughton has given us an entertaining story of his haunts with rod and gun. The photographic illustrations add to the value of the book."

+ Lit D 48:389 F 21 '14 200w

"The author is a keen observer, and has made many notes of really novel interest. An exhaustive index would have made this book thoroughly worth while. By far the weakest portion is the so-called folklore, which hardly deserves this name, so local and circumscribed are most of the tales."

+ — Nation 98:165 F 12 '14 650w

"The human interest of the book is as great as its merit from the point of view of the naturalist sportsman. It is not often that a book which will, we suppose, be necessarily classified as one of the innumerable 'works on India,' contains so much that appeals to the lover of folklore, the naturalist, the big-game shot; and it is less often that out-of-the-way information is conveyed in such a readable form."

+ Sat R 117:22 Ja 3 '14 250w

+ Spec 112:353 F 28 '14 230w

HAULTAIN, THEODORE ARNOLD. Goldwin Smith, his life and opinions. il *$3.75 Duffield (Eng ed 14-2190)

Mr. Haultain acted for a number of years as Goldwin Smith's secretary, playing the while the part of Boswell, keeping copious notes of his employer's conversations. "This volume is in fact a collection of the casual conversations and table talk of Dr. Smith during the last few years of his life, supplemented by a series of 'United States notes' printed from a manuscript found among his papers after his death. The personal note is dominant throughout and gives every page of the book its own peculiar appeal." (Boston Transcript)

+ A L A Bkl 10:394 Je '14

"Mr. Haultain has done well by his subject. The personality which impressed itself upon him as possessing greatness is depicted as it really was through years of closest intercourse, and the record is a worthy addition to knowledge already given to the world in published letters."

+ Ath 1913,2:618 N 29 950w

"The interest of the volume is unquestioned, but it deserves a more expert editorial hand." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 28 '14 1700w

+ Dial 56:146 F 16 '14 400w

"Altogether the book is one to be read with interest and enjoyment. Occasionally Mr. Haultain is betrayed into an indiscretion by way of anecdote or criticism."

+ Lit D 48:385 F 21 '14 2300w

"Mr. Haultain is often given to moralizing in his diary himself when we would fain have heard more from Goldwin Smith. Nor is he always quite accurate."

+ Nation 98:401 Ap 9 '14 750w

"The secretary has been fairly discreet in his selections from his notebook, and though his book contains paragraphs to the publication of which his chief would have objected, there is nothing in it that will hurt anybody."

+ N Y Times 19:60 F 8 '14 1250w

+ Spec 112:393 Mr 7 '14 750w

HAUPTMANN, GERHART JOHANN ROBERT. Dramatic works; ed. by Ludwig Lewisohn. v 3-4 ea $1.50 Huebsch 13-35061

v 3 The third volume of this edition of Hauptmann's plays is made up of four domestic dramas: The reconciliation; Lonely lives; Colleague Crampton; and Michael Kramer. The first three were written, the editor points out, during the author's naturalistic period, and bear evidences of the influence of Ibsen. The fourth belongs to a later stage in his development.

HAUPTMANN, GERHART J. R.—Continued.

v 4 Three symbolic and legendary dramas form the contents of volume 4. They are: The assumption of Hannele; The sunken bell; and Henry of Auß.

+ A L A Bkl 10:394 Je '14 (Review of v 3 and 4)

"The editorial introductions, though they insist perhaps too strongly upon the personal element in Hauptmann's plays are to be commended."

+ Ath 1914,2:87 J1 18 830w (Review of v 3 and 4)

+ N Y Times 19:307 J1 12 '14 700w (Review of v 3 and 4)

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ag 20 '14 780w (Review of v 2-4)

"Read them. If you have any feeling for work that is always artistic in intention, and almost always in result, you will not be disappointed."

L. W. Dodd

+ Yale R n s 4:420 Ja '15 1250w (Review of v 1-4)

HAVELL, HERBERT LORDE. Republican
12 Rome. il $2.50 Stokes A14-2973

"'Republican Rome' is the second in the 'Great nations series,' in which 'an attempt is made to tell the stories of the great nations from the modern historical standpoint.' The manuscript was completed by its author, H. L. Havell, just before his fatal accident, and the necessary illustrations, maps, etc., were left to other hands, whose work in this department deserves all praise. . . . If we have a fault to find with the volume . . . it is that it lacks balance. The endless wars of the early republic are treated in detail more suited to a textbook than to a work of wider outlook; the social and political matter, while well stated, is often inadequate."—Nation

"A solid, scholarly work. Needed only in large collections."

+ A L A Bkl 11:165 D '14

"The notes on the various well-selected pictures throughout the book are extremely interesting, though crammed into a few pages at the outset. So is the appendix on Roman coins. These are the features which distinguish this volume from its rivals, and give it distinct interest and value."

+ Ath 1914,2:276 S 19 850w

"Briskly written and handsomely illustrated."

+ Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 30w

"The work on the whole presents an excellent epitome of Roman history for the period which it embraces."

+ Lit D 50:250 F 6 '15 150w

"An eminently readable and scholarly history of the Roman republic, well worth the perusal of the layman who would fain renew his touch with ancient Rome."

+ Nation 99:585 N 12 '14 330w

+ N Y Times 19:523 N 29 '14 80w

"Is no superfluous addition to recent works on the same general subject."

+ Outlook 109:237 Ja 27 '15 200w

+ Spec 113:599 O 31 '14 70w

HAVENS, MUNSON. Old valentines. il $1 (1c)
2 Houghton 14-3103

A pretty love story in which a box of old valentines, treasured by the girl heroine as the only remembrance she has of her father and mother, play a part. The marriage of Phyllis to John Landless, the penniless young poet, means an estrangement with the crusty old uncle of whose house she has been the life. It means, too, a period of pinching economy, very bravely faced, in London lodgings. It is then that the old valentines come in; for they not only make possible the publication of John's first book of poems, they contrive, too, to find the way to old Uncle Peter's heart.

+ A L A Bkl 10:325 Ap '14

"A pleasant little tale."

+ Bookm 39:343 My '14 300w

"A delightful little romance."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 250w

"It is dainty and pretty and has a charming mellowness in its general tone of calm, genial, tolerant acceptance of humanity."

+ N Y Times 19:65 F 8 '14 200w

"It is wholesome, and its romantic atmosphere will harm nobody."

+ Outlook 106:651 Mr 21 '14 40w

HAVERFIELD, FRANCIS JOHN. Ancient town-planning. il $2 Oxford 14-8596

"Mr. Haverfield has expanded a lecture given at the University of London (Creighton lecture, 1910), and later presented to the London conference on town-planning, into this interesting volume. He describes it as a scholar's contribution to a modern movement. After sketching the Babylonian models which influenced the Greeks, he outlines the rise of the town-planning idea in Greece in the fifth century, its rapid development in the Macedonian age, and the analogous Italian and Roman movements. It is interesting to observe how in the middle ages, with their turbulent conditions, the straight, open streets of the Roman architects gave way to crooked, narrow lanes, while modern times have witnessed a return to the statelier ancient city types, so appropriate to conditions of security and industry."—Am J Theol

"This highly suggestive book should be in the hands of all city-planners, while for students of ancient civilization it is an excellent monograph on a significant phase of ancient life. The possible influence of Egypt might have been more fully treated and the place of the single principal street as the dominating feature of sound Hellenistic cities has less recognition than one might have expected."

+ Am J Theol 18:477 J1 '14 400w

Ath 1913,2:701 D 13 30w

"In spite of great learning, he achieves lucidity in the exposition of his subject—a lucidity which may even prove a source of danger to the student, by obscuring from him the fact that many of the conclusions reached are based upon debatable details."

+ Ath 1914,1:56 J1 10 700w

"It is not surprising that writers and lecturers on this subject merely succeed in wearying their readers and hearers; and the fact that Professor Haverfield's readers escape the usual fate is a remarkable testimony to his power of vivifying knowledge as he imparts it."

W. A. G.

+ Eng Hist R 29:392 Ap '14 270w

+ Nation 99:636 N 26 '14 480w

HAVILAND, MAUD D. Wood people and others.
2 il $1.40 Longmans

"Many of the stories deal with bird life along the Atlantic coast of Ireland and Scotland, narrating the comedies and tragedies and the ordinary happenings of bird housekeeping when they seek these lonely places by the sea where they nest and rear their young. . . . Other stories deal with rabbits at their matchmaking frolics, with squirrels and badgers and the doings of certain rats. The thirty-three tales cover a very wide variety of subject and all are treated with knowledge and with skill in setting forth the material in story form as well as with a strong sense of the dramatic values of incidents and situations."—N Y Times

"It is as if Elinor Glyn had written 'The jungle book,' without Kipling's sense of humor. To young readers, for whom it is obviously intended, this is a pernicious book."

+ Nation 100:86 Ja 21 '15 400w

"Written with literary skill and with much knowledge of the habits of birds and beasts,

Miss Haviland's book will prove enjoyable for all lovers of the outdoors who take an interest in animal life."

+ N Y Times 19:569 D 13 '14 200w

HAWKINS, CHAUNCEY JEDDIE. Ned Brewster's caribou hunt. il *$1.20 (2c) Little 14-17923

In this story, the third in the "Ned Brewster series," Ned and his father make a trip to Newfoundland. In these stories most of the hunting is done with a camera, but they are not without exciting adventures for all that. The book is illustrated with photographs taken by the author.

"It can safely be recommended as stirring reading for any boy who likes the great outdoors." G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:450 D '14 90w

"All in all it is a capital book of adventure." H. L. Reed

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 10 '14 130w

HAWKS, ELLISON. Boys' book of astronomy. 2 il *$1.75 (2c) Stokes

A book in which the author, a noted English astronomer, writes of the heavenly bodies in a way that will appeal to young people. He has chapters on: The history of astronomy; The amateur's telescope; The sun; Observing the sun; Eclipses of the sun; The moon; Eclipses of the moon; The solar system; Mercury; the smallest planet; Venus; the evening star, etc. The book is illustrated with four plates in color, and eighty in black and white.

"Boys with a liking for science will find this book a real treasure."

+ Ath 1914,2:sup607 D 5 140w

+ Ind 80:417 D 14 '14 40w

"Appears to be a complete treatise for the young investigator."

+ Nation 99:635 D 10 '14 20w

+ N Y Times 19:571 D 13 '14 20w

"The illustrations are a good feature of this excellent book."

+ Sat R 118:sup12 D 5 '14 180w

"Excellent work."

+ Spec 113:sup780 D 5 '14 40w

HAWLEY, WALTER AUGUSTUS. Oriental rugs, antique and modern. il *$7.50 Lane 14-6

"The book is of especial importance to American readers because of its reference to the carpets on exhibition in the Metropolitan museum of art, New York city. But the book has a far wider practical importance in the chapters on 'How to distinguish rugs' and on 'Purchasing rugs.' With regard to the latter, Mr. Hawley calls our attention to certain facts not generally appreciated. He distinguishes three qualities to be considered in buying a rug: rarity, artistic beauty, and utility." (Outlook) "There are eleven full-page color plates, beginning with the Ardebil carpet, and eighty half-tone cuts. Especially useful are the diagrammatic tables of typical border stripes of the various weaves." (Nation)

"It covers much the same ground as Mumford but in a more detailed and technical way, with a view to the needs of those who wish to purchase or identify rugs, or the student of rugs. Its peculiar contribution is a close analysis of the weave."

+ A L A Bkl 10:310 Ap '14

"Excellent work."

+ Ath 1914,1:600 Ap 25 730w

"In a word, his book is a little monument of scholarship, a storehouse of valuable information, and a narrative of high literary charm—a text book, an addition to the study of the arts and a genuine contribution to the literature of human progress." B. K.

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 18 '14 730w

"This well illustrated volume will be found of great value in enabling students and collectors to appraise the especial characteristics in design and make of the varied productions of Eastern carpet looms."

+ Int Studio 53:S1 J1 '14 280w

"A book that to the connoisseur will be a delight, to the student an invaluable acquisition, and to the one who has regarded the values of oriental rugs as fictitious and the admirers of them either faddists or poseurs, an enlightening revelation."

+ Lit D 49:523 S 19 '14 400w

"Covers familiar ground, but with more thoroughness than any previous English work on the subject."

+ Nation 97:628 D 25 '13 330w

"Its text is detailed and informative, and is well enforced by full-page plates in color and by many half-tone engravings."

+ Outlook 106:48 Ja 3 '14 230w

+ R of Rs 49:378 Mr '14 140w

"It satisfies most of the canons of perfection."

+ Sat R 118:227 Ag 22 '14 530w

"Pictorially alone the book would thus be a notable production in its field. But its text is notable as well."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 700w

"Seems to be upon the whole the most satisfactory treatise in English on this subject." Helen McAfee

+ Yale R n s 4:197 O '14 880w

HAWTHORNE, JULIAN. Subterranean brotherhood. *$1.50 (2c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-16467

A book inspired by the author's recent experience in the federal prison at Atlanta. The author's position in regard to imprisonment is uncompromising: "My business in this book was to show that penal imprisonment is an evil, and its perpetuation a crime; that it does not reform the criminal but destroys him body and soul; that it does not protect the community but exposes it to incalculable perils; and that the assumption that a criminal class exists among us separate and distinct from any and the best of the rest of us is Pharaiseal, false and wicked." The proposal toward which the argument tends is that penal imprisonment for crime be abolished. In a final chapter, if not prisons—what? the author presents his own theories as to the treatment of offenders against the law.

"His book is a notable, and should prove a not unfruitful, contribution to the literature of penology."

+ Dial 57:346 N 1 '14 300w

+ Ind 80:26 O 5 '14 20w

"It is a contribution to the literature of the prison problem which legislators and penologists would do well to ponder."

+ Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 150w

"While a valuable addition to penological literature in general, it is doubtful if the average lay reader will peruse the book to its end, due to the fact that there is scarcely a page, some portion if not the whole of which is not devoted to caustic moralizing, intemperate recriminations, sweeping generalities, covert innuendoes, or moth-eaten hearsays." Donald Lowrie

+ Survey 33:463 Ja 30 '15 400w

HAY, J. MACDOUGALL. Gillespie. *$1.40 (½c) Doran 14-17994

A story of a Scottish fishing village and of a man who made himself a power in it, moving forward slowly, step by step, grasping here and grasping there, until the whole village and the lives and destinies of all its people are his. Yet as we watch his advance in riches and power we are never allowed to doubt for a moment that he is moving to meet his own doom. The ancient highland tales told by Gillespie's mother at the opening of the story cast a shadow over all that follows. The reader waits for the promised curse to fall, as it does in the end, with unerring stroke.

Reviewed by H. Dick

+ Bookm 39:334 My '14 1050w

HAY, J. MACDOUGALL—Continued.

"In 'Gillespie' we have distinctly a novel that comes upon us overwhelmingly. The reader of it will sup full of horrors, for Mr Hay is relentless in his revelation of details, and he infuses the story with a humor that is so grim that it is scarcely able to arouse even the suggestion of a smile. Gillespie is in many ways a human monstrosity, yet his creator never fails to make him plausible. Not since 'The house with the green shutters' has there been told so terrible a story of Scottish life." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 980w

"This is a harrowing story of the kind which can only be excused on the ground of its 'truth-to life.'"

— Nation 98:528 My 7 '14 450w

"It sometimes happens, though not often, that an author 'arrives' with a first book, and that is what will certainly occur to Mr. Hay. A tale of woe and degradation, pulsating with a shuddering horror which ends in an unspeakably terrible climax, 'Gillespie' is a remarkable novel, a novel which no one who is interested in contemporary literature should fail to read."

+ — N Y Times 19:132 Mr 22 '14 1050w

"A grim, powerful story which grips the reader to the end." H: Phillips

+ — Pub W 85:1343 Ap 18 '14 450w

HAYES, HAMMOND VINTON. Public utilities: their cost new and depreciation. *$2 Van Nostrand 13-19301

The author deals with the subject of public utilities from the engineer's point of view. He "has endeavored to set forth the principles, as far as they have been established by engineers and commissions who have been engaged upon this work, which must form the basis of a just valuation of a public utility undertaking, together with quotations from decisions rendered by courts and commissions in many important cases bearing on the subject." (Indust Engin)

"The author's presentation of his subject is remarkably clear and concise, and this book is a most important contribution to the study of the general question of determining fair value for rate purposes." R. H. Whitten

+ Am Econ R 4:384 Je '14 670w

"Will help in enlightening public opinion on the rights of private capital invested in public utilities."

+ A L A Bkl 10:353 My '14

"Much of the discussion of the author is admirable and, although every treatment of the great topics involved is open to question from some standpoint, the work is an important contribution to public-utility literature."

+ — Elec World 63:888 Ap 18 '14 350w

"While the reader may be inclined to question individual paragraphs or statements contained in the book, its complete perusal will be certain to leave the impression of its essential fairness and of the desire of the author to do full justice, not only to the corporation, but to the public. The book will prove a valuable addition to the library of managers of public utilities, engineers, accountants and students of this important subject." Leonard Metcalf

+ — Engin N 71:381 F 12 '14 700w

Indust Engin 13:441 O '13 180w

"The reviewer has no fault to find with Mr. Hayes's discussion of the purely engineering and accounting questions in connection with valuation. But in his treatment of 'increased land values' he makes it clear that there is some confusion in his mind as to the matter of 'unearned increment'—so-called—in valuations for rate-making purposes."

+ — Nation 98:137 F 5 '14 1000w

"A book that should be found useful by the numerous public-service commissions now at work in various states and cities."

+ R of Rs 49:250 F '14 100w

HAYNES, EDMUND SIDNEY POLLOCK. Belief in personal immortality. (Science ser.) *$1.25 Putnam 13-16143

"The author first offers a sketch of the soul in savage religions, largely based on Tylor and Crawley, the beliefs of Egypt, Greece, and Rome, Christian conceptions of immortality till the time of Kant, and philosophical and religious views of the nineteenth century. He then turns to science, psychical research, and spiritualism to ascertain their attitude toward this question, and closes with a discussion of the current arguments and ethical considerations by which the customary beliefs are supported. He confesses that he has himself lost belief and even hope of personal immortality."—Am J Theol

"Among the many recent books on immortality spanning the stretch from primitive faiths to theistic and Christian belief and even agnosticism, Mr. Haynes's vigorous and somewhat unconventional work deserves recognition. Many readers will feel that the author is unduly pessimistic, that he is unsympathetic and unnecessarily rough in handling cherished Christian convictions, and they will not accept all his criticism of the reasons for their faith, or his estimate of such writers as Wordsworth, Tennyson, and Browning concerning their advocacy of immortality. This is a live book and will provoke thought." C. A. Beckwith

+ — Am J Theol 18:308 Ap '14 250w

"His views on the problem of poverty are expressed with excellent clearness and good sense."

+ Ath 1913,1:589 My 31 100w

Boston Transcript p9 O 18 '13 370w

N Y Times 18:519 O 5 '13 100w

"The book will probably offend the religious susceptibilities of some readers. Its interpretations of facts seem to us at times incorrect; but it presents emphatically the sort of questions about immortality that are characteristic of this day, and in doing so is likely to set the reader to thinking for himself."

+ — Outlook 105:330 O 11 '13 100w

HAYWARD, RACHEL. Letters from Lâ-Bas. *$1.35 (2½c) Luce, J: W.

"Lâ-Bas," the writer of these letters explains in one of them, is Paris slang for "the lower regions." She writes the first letters from Lyons where, in company with an archaeologist grandfather, she is leading a dull, drab existence. Later there is a happy period spent in a tea shop in Nice, a few days in Paris, a season of drubbing at literary work in London, and a return to the grandfather in France. Her letters are written to an English fiancé who proves so unresponsive that one wonders not at all when, at the end, she turns to a more passionate lover, even tho it is easy to foresee disaster ahead.

"The whole book is full of a natural and human feeling, and the warm imaginativeness of the heroine makes her letters animated. The various French phrases with which the book is liberally besprinkled certainly give it an air of vivacity and charm, but it is a pity that numerous misspellings, misplaced accents, and wrong genders have been allowed to remain."

+ — Ath 1914,1:227 F 14 450w

"The book has unusual quality, amounting at times to real distinction, and despite the fact that the story is told in letter form, it is vivid and dramatic. Those who read 'The hippodrome,' a remarkably colorful and intense story of anarchists and the circus in a Spanish city, will welcome this new but very different story in a lighter vein by its author."

+ N Y Times 19:121 Mr 15 '14 500w

+ — Sat R 117:118 Ja 24 '14 40w

HAYWARD, WALTER BROWNELL, ed. Com-muter's garden. il *$1 (2½c) Crowell

14-5779

These chatty, readable garden chapters appeared originally, a prefatory note tells us, in the New York evening Post where they were published "for the purpose of fostering and developing the gardening spirit among suburban dwellers whose daily work lies in the city." Some of the chapters tell how to handle bulbs;

how to care for the lawn; how to make hotbeds, cold frames, etc. Others relate to the care of chickens, bees, and the cow.

"Friendly, animated advice, given by one who has some imagination and much common sense."
+ A L A Bkl 10:353 My '14

"Our country would have many cities both beautiful and useful if suburban dwellers would follow the advice and instruction given in this readable volume."
+ Chaut 72:743 My 23 '14 110w

"A little book on gardening that combines a good many merits. It contains a large amount of information that will not mislead."
+ Nation 98:460 Ap 23 '14 230w

"Another one of those encouraging, and often perfectly useless, books on gardening, which will awaken hopes in the minds of people who are quite unwilling to put real work into their garden beds and lawns."
— Outlook 107:135 My 16 '14 50w

HEAD, RUTH (MRS. HENRY HEAD). How to enjoy pictures (Eng title, Simple guide to pictures). il *$1.50 (2c) Stokes

"How to enjoy pictures' is practically a history of famous painters of the world from the thirteenth to the nineteenth century, given in chronological order, told in short stories. There are excellent reproductions of the works of the master artists, many of them in colors." (N Y Times) The book is divided into eight parts, taking up: Italy and her painters; Early Flemish painters; The German painters; Later Flemish painters; Dutch painters; The Spanish painters; French painters; The English school of painters.

"We fear that, in spite of all efforts to conceal her erudition, Mrs. Head is too scholastic for her audience. We note some curious omissions in the list of painters mentioned. The illustrations, though nearly all in colour, are excellent; indeed, some of the plates are the best achievements of colour-printing we have come across lately."
+ — — Ath 1914,2:537 N 21 800w

"Schools would find a book of this character well suited to advanced classes."
+ Nation 99:695 D 10 '14 70w

+ N Y Times 19:524 N 29 '14 40w

+ N Y Times 19:571 D 13 '14 50w

R of Rs 51:250 F '15 90w

"We think that while this book, with its various inaccuracies and misspellings, might fairly be called an unpretentious guide to certain painters, it cannot be seriously regarded as a guide to the important qualities in pictures. The coloured illustrations are not good, the half-tones are too dark."
+ — — Sat R 119:92 Ja 23 '15 180w

HEARNshaw, FOSSEY JOHN COBB, ed.
* King's college lectures on colonial problems.
*$1.40 Macmillan 14-16902

This volume "contains six lectures, delivered last year at King's college, in which experts of the highest authority deal with certain aspects of the great imperial problem. Sir Charles Lucas discusses 'The influence of science on empire'; Mr. Sidney Low 'The problem of an imperial executive'; whilst the other lecturers are Dr. T. J. Lawrence, Sir Everard im Thurn, Sir John A. Cockburn, and Professor H. E. Egerton."—Spec

Am Hist R 20:229 O '14 110w

"The six lectures constitute the most noteworthy contribution of their class to the literature of the British colonial system since Prof. W. J. Ashley edited the lectures on economic and commercial conditions in the overseas dominions that were given at Birmingham university in the winter of 1910-11."
+ Nation 99:18 J1 2 '14 950w

Outlook 106:818 Ap 11 '14 150w

"We can heartily commend this book to every reader who wishes to understand the kind of problems that imperial statesmen are called upon to face to-day."

+ Spec 112:1041 Je 20 '14 110w

HEFFNER, WILLIAM CLINTON. History of <sup>10</sup> poor relief legislation in Pennsylvania, 1682-1913. ltd ed *$1.25; pa *$1 Holzapfel pub.; for sale by W. Bains, 1215 Market st., Phil. 13-22778

"Dr. Heffner has given us in his study of the poor relief legislation in Pennsylvania, a much needed summary of the situation in that state. He has done more than this. He has laid the basis for constructive and unifying legislation and has pointed out the need of similar careful studies in other states." (Survey) "This book touches on such matters as the old yet new questions of large versus small poor law areas; the over-pressing pettinesses of settlement; dangers of granting public money to private agencies; the effects of immigration." (Am Econ R)

"Is one of the theses for the doctorate in philosophy which deserve to be in print." J. R. E.
+ Am Econ R 4:695 S '14 120w

"The style is unfortunately cumbersome, however, and it is at times exceedingly difficult to understand. The study might also be improved by the addition of a bibliography and a list of statutes. In spite of these minor weaknesses, it is a valuable historical study, and is recommended to all who administer the poor law or who are interested in its efficient administration." Alexander Fleisher

+ — Survey 31:365 D 27 '13 430w

HEGERMANN - LINDENCRONE, LILLIE (GREENOUGH) DE. Sunny side of diplomatic life, 1875-1912. il *$2 (2c) Harper 14-18397

A volume of letters to follow those published in "In the courts of memory." The series begins in 1875, shortly after the author's marriage to M. de Hegermann-Lindencrone, then Danish minister to the United States and later the representative of his country at Rome, Stockholm, Paris, and Berlin. The letters are written with much of the same brightness and vivacity of those in the earlier volume. Time seems not to have dimmed at all their author's zest for life. There are reminiscences of kings and queens, of statesmen and men of letters, and in particular of musicians, for the writer was in close touch with the musical life of the capitals in which she lived.

"In the informal, entertaining style of the former volume."
+ A L A Bkl 11:170 D '14

"At times these letters are more than clever; they are brilliant."
+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 6 '15 500w

+ Ind 80:341 N 30 '14 70w

"The greatest charm of the book is its naturalness, its evident sincerity, and its freedom from artificiality of all kinds."
+ Lit D 49:1016 N 21 '14 200w

+ — Nation 99:634 N 26 '14 1300w

"It is a pity that a book so full of good things should have its surface marred by errors which could have been avoided by a little care in editing or proofreading."
+ — Nation 99:634 N 26 '14 1300w

"She possesses in a high degree that supreme art of the descriptive letter-writer—the art of making her readers feel themselves a part of the occurrences described. Whatever she tells us is marked with that stamp of unity which is conferred by a clear intelligence and a lively, independent personality."
+ No Am 200:946 D '14 930w

"The letters are lively, though somewhat over-egotistic."
+ — Outlook 108:658 N 18 '14 150w

"Gives an interesting view of the less formal side of diplomatic life."
+ Pittsburg 19:568 D '14 50w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

HEITMAN, FRANCIS BARNARD. Historical register of officers of the Continental army during the war of the revolution. April, 1775, to December, 1783; rev. ed. il $8.10
Rare book shop pub. co., 813 17th st., Washington, D. C. 14-3424

"The 'Historical register' was first published in 1893 and included the names of about 8000 officers of the Continental army. . . . Since then the records in the War department have been made more accessible and much additional material has been gathered into the department or has been made available elsewhere, and although the record is still incomplete, the new edition of the 'Register' lists about 14,000 names, and individual records have to a considerable extent been corrected and enlarged."—Am Hist R

"The usefulness of the work has been much enhanced by its greater completeness and regard for authenticity."

+ — Am Hist R 19:931 J1 '14 400w

"The book will be especially useful to the members of patriotic societies."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 22 '14 280w

HELSTON, JOHN. Aphrodite, and other poems. 2 $1.25 Macmillan 13-24783

It is in the longer narrative poems that this new English poet is at his best, altho he tries his hand too, at other poetic forms. He deals very frankly with sex problems, and has evidently withstood criticism on that account, for, following his poem "Aphrodite at Leatherhead," which gives the book its title, he has placed lines addressed "to those who imputed impurity to him in regard to the preceding poem."

"Whatever view may be taken as to the author's professed ideals in art and morality—and they are nothing if not controversial—there can be no dispute as to his poetical force and originality, nor any doubt that added restraint would enhance both."

+ — Ath 1913,2:sup640 N 29 350w

"In spite of much raggedness of present performance, he is a young poet of considerable promise and power." W: A. Bradley

+ — Bookm 39:194 Ap '14 450w

"It is a good stout volume which Mr. Helston gives us, but it would have been much better if a great deal of it had been left out." W: S. B.

+ — Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 350w

"At present Mr. Helston seems to be classifiable as a neo-Swinburnian. But he is a young man, and he may in time acquire his own accent. This is to be hoped for, since his poetical gift is clearly out of the common." W: M. Payne

+ — Dial 56:65 Ja 16 '14 550w

"Much of Mr. Helston's work is marred by his insistent didacticism, and by his fondness for archaic and 'poetic' terms. He is at his best when he describes wild nature."

+ — Lit D 48:115 Ja 17 '14 420w

"Mr. Helston is not without strong phrases, good lines, and imaginative touches, particularly in landscapes of the bosky, dense, implicate type; but his rejection of clearness is absolute, and his slender evocative and rhetorical power is no compensation for his obscurity."

+ — Nation 99:248 Ag 27 '14 200w

"He has vivid imagery, at times degenerating into amusing exaggeration of the emotional vocabulary, possibly a mere fault of youth."

+ — N Y Sun p27 N 29 '13 60w

"Every lover of fine poetry should find fresh delight in this new singer."

+ — R of Rs 49:116 Ja '14 160w

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Ag 6 '14 380w

HELSTON, JOHN. "Thracian Sea." il $1.35
" (1c) Macmillan 14-15560

When an author writes a foreword or a preface to a novel it is proof that he takes his work seriously and is not writing merely to please. "In offering this book to the public," writes the author, "I would like to say that I have endeavored to depict the truths of life in certain of its phases as they are being lived to-day and as they appear to me, a socialist. . . . It is not written for children, but is an earnest attempt to visualize, for thinking men and women, the truths of some aspects of the life of the day as they have appeared to a writer for whom the old order of society is already condemned and waiting sentence." The story is a frank treatment of the sex problem and of the relationship between men and women as it is affected by arbitrary distinctions of money and class. He makes no predictions as to what conditions might prevail in a different social order, but leaves one to infer that if James had been free to marry Margaret in the beginning and if Helen had not been reared to look upon marriage as a trade, this story need not have been written.

"The book is full of good characterization, and a genuine study of the social conscience of to-day."

+ — Ath 1914,2:531 N 21 350w

"The book is not without distinction and certainly has the courage of its convictions."

F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:437 D '14 730w

+ — Boston Transcript p22 D 26 '14 950w

"The trouble with 'Thracian Sea' is that its author believes that he is doing one thing when he is really doing another. He thinks he is writing as a socialist, indicting the modern middle-class world. He is really a poet of Keatsian descent, and he has written an old-time sentimental novel in modern phraseology with flashes of genius."

+ — N Y Times 19:539 N 29 '14 1250w

HEMMEON, MORLEY DE WOLF. Burgage tenure in mediaeval England. (Harvard historical studies, v. 20) $2 Harvard univ. press 14-3935

"Dr. Hemmeon's careful and scholarly work on 'Burgage tenure in mediaeval England' is a welcome contribution to the history of the mediaeval borough. As the title implies, it is concerned with the economic and legal aspects of landholding, and very rarely does the author step beyond his limits. . . . Except in the shortest chapter of his book, the author confines himself to the method of description and enumeration. He groups under three chapters, each appropriately subdivided, the facts he has collected in regard to the incidents of burgage tenure, burgage rents, and the mobility of real property in the mediaeval borough."—Ath

"Dr. Hemmeon's monograph will prove a valuable addition to the literature of mediaeval institutions." L. M. Larson

+ — Am Hist R 19:866 J1 '14 580w

"We would conclude by commending this study to the regard of all serious students of mediaeval economic and legal history, and, if perchance our words may weigh with them, also to future writers of English town histories; they will find for their assistance a good index and a good bibliography."

+ — Ath 1914,1:649 My 9 880w

"He is able sometimes to correct, and sometimes to enlarge the conclusions of other writers who have devoted themselves less exclusively to burgage tenure. His strength lies in detailed knowledge rather than in generalization. This being so, his attitude towards writers from whom he has learned much, and perhaps has something still to learn, is unduly pontifical."

H. W. C. Davis

+ — Eng Hist R 29:748 O '14 1050w

"As the subject has been far from adequately dealt with in the past, Dr. Hemmeon's monograph, despite its somewhat ungratifying style, supplies a genuine want."

+ — Nation 99:196 Ag 13 '14 250w

HEMMING, EMILE. Molded electrical insulation and plastics. il $3 Ward Clausen co., N. Y. 14-6580

"The author describes the advances which have been made, particularly in late years, in molded insulations for all sorts of electrical service, and then classifies the products of the present day under nine heads—organic hot-molded, organic cold-molded, inorganic cold-molded, ceramics, rubber compounds, organic plastics, synthetic resins, hardened fibers, molded mica. Before discussing the several classes in further detail, some forty-five pages are devoted to a description of the raw materials which enter into all of these various classes."—Engin N

"The concise yet thorough treatment of the subject by the author and the practical nature of its contents make the book a valuable addition to the library of the electrical engineer."

+ Elec World 63:837 Ap 11 '14 420w

"Mr. Hemming has succeeded in producing that modern rarity in technical literature, an entirely new book."

+ Engin N 72:423 Ag 20 '14 470w

"Concise, authoritative work."

+ Pittsburgh 19:398 O '14 30w

HENDERSON, ARCHIBALD. Changing drama; contributions and tendencies. *$1.50 (2c) Holt 14-20752

It is with the real contributions of the modern school of dramatists that the author has to do in this well unified study. The contemporary drama as a great movement, "exhibiting the evolutionary growth of the human spirit and the enlargement of the domain of esthetics," is Mr. Henderson's theme. The scope of the work reaches out to "the evolution of form and technic, the re-alignment of criticism in regard to dramatic, esthetic, and ethical values, the general widening of outlook, the enlarged social content, the appraisal of genuine contributions, and the analysis of prevailing tendencies in the drama."

"Authoritative, full of information, furnishes a good background for study but not for the beginner, as it presupposes familiarity with the dramatic literature of the world."

+ A L A Bkl 11:211 Ja '15

"There is no question of Professor Henderson's erudition, but he writes over the heads of many a reader quite capable of understanding what the author has wished to say, but has unfortunately wrapped up in obscurity." Calvin Winter

+ Bookm 40:568 Ja '15 80w

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 2 '15 500w

"In spite of over-emphasis of the social theme, however, and in spite of needless protests against the poor old unities and art for art's sake," which no one has insisted on for a long time now, and against a really no longer tyrannous 'person called Aristotle,' in Mr. Granville Barker's phrase, Mr. Henderson's volume is full of thoughtful and illuminating criticism on the drama as art, and deserves high praise." Grant Showerman

+ Dial 58:76 F 1 '15 750w

"In his handling of tendencies Mr. Henderson, though by no means unintelligent, is wholly uncritical."

+ Nation 100:123 Ja 28 '15 750w

+ R of Rs 51:246 F '15 170w

"One is impressed with Mr. Henderson's ability to back up his broader statements with a multitude of examples, if need be, and always with enough to make his point sufficiently clear."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 3 '14 900w

"Thorough, often brilliant, in treatment, but not too profound or technical for those interested in this significant movement."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:303 D '14 50w

HENDERSON, ARCHIBALD. European dramatists. il *$1.50 (2c) Stewart & Kidd 13-26713

Six critical essays on Strindberg, Ibsen, Maeterlinck, Oscar Wilde, Bernard Shaw, and Granville Barker, make up the contents of the volume. The essay on Strindberg appears here in print for the first time; the four that follow it are revised and reprinted from "Interpreters of life and the modern spirit," now out of print. The final essay, on Granville Barker, is reprinted from the Forum. It is with the attitude of each of these men toward social phenomena and the present changing social order that the author is chiefly concerned. Especially illuminating are his studies of the two contrasted Scandinavians, Strindberg and Ibsen.

A L A Bkl 10:423 Je '14

+ Chaut 72:430 Ja 31 '14 200w

"Mr. Henderson shows much skill in making clear the personality of the man and the individuality of the artist. The criticisms of their work are keen and lucid, and have the advantage of coming from one who has studied the plays exhaustively and in some cases in their native environment."

+ Dial 56:253 Mr 16 '14 280w

+ Nation 98:309 Mr 19 '14 530w

"The paper on Strindberg amounts to a monograph."

+ R of Rs 49:247 F '14 90w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:127 My '14 40w

HENDERSON, CHARLES HANFORD. What is it to be educated? *$1.50 (1c) Houghton 14-11291

A thoughtful and far reaching discussion of what it is to be educated in which education is made to rest upon religion and economics, the only logical foundations, as the writer views the subject. The definitions of education which are accepted are (1), the author's, that education is the unfolding and perfecting of the human spirit; and (2), Herbart's, that education is the setting-up in the soul of the child of a moral and esthetic revelation of the universe. In the unfolding and perfecting there must be not only the subjective inner change which is set up in the child's soul, but also the objective change brought about thru a genuine and accurate knowledge of the great outer world of men and things. One of the most valuable chapters is that on "The life force," in which Mr. Henderson earnestly arraigns the conspiracy of silence which, a generation ago, was entered into by parents and teachers to prevent a child's knowledge of the sacred drama of family life, and contrasts with it the present day movement, aided by biological discoveries, toward frank, unashamed sex instruction.

+ A L A Bkl 11:55 O '14 +

"Mr. Henderson has a good thesis, which is that education must rest upon religion and economics; but he treats the subject in an altogether too general way. His negative treatment degenerates into such sweeping denunciation as we have quoted above, and his positive treatment is intolerably dogmatic."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 500w

+ Dial 57:257 O 1 '14 550w

"His treatment of the subject is in essay form and is agreeable and stimulating without being very convincing."

+ Educ R 48:534 D '14 40w

"It is not to be expected that the radical views in this book will be quickly or widely accepted."

+ Ind 79:444 S 28 '14 450w

"Amidst the waste of formal pedagogical literature it is refreshing to find a document so human and genial."

+ Nation 99:320 S 10 '14 500w

HENDERSON, CHARLES RICHMOND. Cause and cure of crime. (National social science ser.) *50c (1½c) McClurg 14-18490

The editor of the series in his brief prefatory note says: "The emphasis of Professor Henderson upon the fact that crime is not a disease is refreshing in view of many recent utterances, and indicates the sane view of the author upon the cause and cure of crime." The author in his introductory chapter attempts to answer the question What is a criminal? and considers some representative cases. In the chapters that follow he takes up: Criminal nature and causes of crime; Social reactions against crime and criminals; Methods of criminal procedure; The prison; Reformatory methods; Prisons and

HENDERSON, CHARLES RICHMOND—Cont. prison administration; Prevention of crime; Constructive measures; The power of religion. A list of references and an index complete the small volume.

"A convenient, clearly written handbook by an authority."

+ A L A Bkl 11:199 Ja '15 4

"The purpose which is evident throughout the book is not to startle the scholar with a new theory, but to attempt to overcome the worst of all the enemies of progress, the inertia of good men." Ellsworth Faris

+ Int J Ethics 25:271 Ja '15 230w

"The author discusses his problem with unusual knowledge of criminals, prisons, and legislation relating to crime, and from a modern and liberal point of view."

+ N Y Times 19:555 D 6 '14 60w

HENDERSON, ERNEST FLAGG. Germany's fighting machine. il *$1.25 (5c) Bobbs 14-18662

Written from a pro-German point of view. The author contends that to blame the German emperor for the events which followed the assassination of the Serbian king is "the attitude of the uninformed." Germany has seen the war coming on for a long time and has prepared for it "in self-defense." Of England he says her present alliance with Russia "is the most monumental act of folly in modern history." The book is divided into three parts: The war; The army; The navy. There are many illustrations from photographs.

"Some of the photographs of manoeuvres are highly interesting."

+ N Y Times 19:492 N 8 '14 37w

"A well-illustrated, popular, encyclopaedic account of Germany's army and navy."

+ Outlook 108:815 D 9 '14 10w

"A compact and useful informational book."

+ R of Rs 50:762 D '14 90w

HENGELMÜLLER VON HENGERVÁR, LADISLAS, baron. Hungary's fight for national existence, or the history of the great uprising led by Francis Rakoczi II, 1703-1711. *$3.25 Macmillan A14-637

The author "tells the first half of the life-story of the second Francis Rakoczi. . . . Rakoczi assumed the lead of the Hungarian revolution which began in 1703, and continued until 1711, and was thus almost contemporaneous with the war of the Spanish succession." (Ath) "Baron Hengelmüller only brings the story of the rebellion up to the time of the end of the rise of Rakoczi's power. In his introduction he states his hope to write another volume which shall carry the story to its close of defeat for Hungary." (Boston Transcript) James Bryce and Theodore Roosevelt each contribute a preface to the work.

"It would be difficult here to do justice to the many excellences of this admirably written and thoroughly interesting book." K. H. Lord

+ Am Hist R 19:392 Jl '14 630w

A L A Bkl 10:395 Je '14

+ Ath 1914,1:86 Ja 17 820w

"For the first time Baron Hengelmüller has put into the hands of English-speaking peoples a history of one of the most important and thrilling periods in the history of a country which is one of the least known in England and America but over which the mantle of romance has always hung." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 11 '14 930w

"As an historical investigator, Baron Hengelmüller certainly has achieved a notable success. It is to be hoped that the second volume will have the benefit of more careful proof-reading than the first, which contains numerous misprints."

+ Nation 98:574 My 14 '14 350w

+ Outlook 107:319 Je 6 '14 260w

"The publication of Baron Hengelmüller's work on the Hungarian rising of 1703-1711, which is really a biography of Francis Rakoczi II, affords a good opportunity for adding to this somewhat slender stock of knowledge. Lord Bryce and Mr. Roosevelt are very fully justified in recommending this book to the special attention of English and American readers, for the story is one of special interest to the English-speaking race." C.

+ Spec 112:480 Mr 21 '14 1800w

HENNESSEY, DAVID. The outlaw. *$1.25 13-16340
Doran

A story of early bushranging days in Australia. "The outlaw" is Jack Salathiel, a brilliant young man, in part a Jew, connected with one of the best families of Sydney. For a boyish indiscretion, rather than a crime, he received a penal sentence, and when, by reason of his good conduct, the period of his servitude was near its close, the convict, by the tyranny of a brutal ruler, was changed into an outcast and a bushranger. The book is henceforth concerned with the deeds and the perils of 'Salathiel's gang,' who instituted what may be called a beneficent reign of terror, for their leader was, in truth, a 'Robin Hood of the bush.'" (N Y Times)

"A stirring story of bushranging with a fearless and gallant hero."

+ Ath 1913,1:522 My 10 30w

+ N Y Sun p4 S 27 '13 100w

"From the first to last it is a good story, one which will hold a special fascination for boys from 18 to 80."

+ N Y Times 19:776 Ja 4 '14 220w

Spec 110:1066 Je 21 '13 20w

HEPBURN, ALONZO BARTON. Story of an outing. il *$1.50 (5c) Harper 14-367

This is a modest account of an unpretentious expedition into Central Africa, undertaken quietly, without advertisement and newspaper publicity. The author is a New York banker who last year, 1913, found the opportunity to gratify a life-long desire by going to Africa in the track of big game. The party of five, three of them boys just out of college, had as guides the world-famed naturalist, R. J. Cunningham and Major Kirkwood. The hunt was successful; Mr. Hepburn's account of it is entertaining, and the photographs used as illustrations are good.

"We would have missed much, in not sharing with Mr. Hepburn his outing filled with that hunting adventure to which real and grave danger adds its incomparable zest."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 21 '14 580w

"This is a book for the sportsman and the big game hunter and it tells, in a very readable style, the story of how he went last winter to British East Africa, trekked out beyond Nairobi and killed his license limit of buffalo and eland, hippo and lion, and other of the African beasts whose mere names are enough, nowadays, to whet the zeal of the ambitious huntsman."

+ N Y Times 19:770 Ja 4 '14 850w

HERBERT, ALICE. Garden oats. *$1.30 Lane 14-2273

This is "the story of an English girl of rather unusual life and many vicissitudes from her birth through childhood and adolescence, until a few years after marriage. After the usual manner of the English novel, it studies each passing phase with meticulous attention and sends psychologic search-lights across action and into motive and emotion until the girl's mind, heart, and soul are laid utterly bare before the reader's eye. . . . The plot, what little there is, as is also usual in English novels, is of the slightest consequence. It does tangle up a number of people in human relations whose outcome, every now and then, is problematical."—N Y Times

"There is good material in the book, but the earlier chapters grow tedious, because they seem to be leading up to something and merely telling incidents by the way, whereas presently one discovers that there is nothing to lead up to, and the string of incidents is the story itself."

+ — Ath 1914:1:sup467 Mr 28 150w

"The story is adroitly written, instinct with style, amusing at times, absorbing in its keen insight and judgments. Its nominal writer is both original and witty, and her shrewd comment upon people and affairs is a continual delight. Above all, she is sincere. Hence one's regret, well nigh annoyance, that the insincerity of her two incredible escapades should have been allowed to blur outcomes else so vividly convincing."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 220w

— Nation 98:467 Ap 23 '14 450w

"Mrs. Herbert's cleverly told tale is as intimate, as realistic, and as sincere in tone as if it were in truth the autobiography whose form it assumes."

+ N Y Times 19:64 F 8 '14 350w

"Mrs. Herbert writes in short staccato sentences that give the effect of gasps. She has a sprightly wit and might produce a good novel were she not so obviously obsessed by the sense of sex. Her book belongs to what is called the fleshy school of fiction."

— + Sat R 117:150 Ja 31 '14 150w

HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH. Lay Anthony: a romance. *$1.25 (2c) Kennerley 14-14537

A story of which the publisher has not spoken extravagantly when he calls it "a fine piece of work." It has an idea. Anthony Ball has grown up in a country village and, largely by accident the author fairly states, has escaped actual physical contamination in an atmosphere of vicious influences. He is ashamed of his chastity and not for worlds would he have confessed his clean record to his cronies of Allhop's drugstore; then love meets him unawares, and he goes out to conquer the world for his beloved one. Temptations present themselves to him in various forms, but not even the rather splendid temptation in the form of Annot Hardinge has power to swerve him from his ideal. Then comes suddenly the news of Eliza's death and in the madness of grief, he plunges into what is to be a night of debauchery. But in the thick of it he thinks he hears her voice, and, after all, it is not wholly by accident—the accident of his death—that he remains the pure in heart.

"Briefly, 'Lay Anthony' has a great theme, but a theme that needs the hand of a master to maintain its greatness."

— Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 140w

"He is not satisfied with the stuff he has in his head; he must dress it up with the stuff that he has found in yellow newspapers and in the speeches of romantic social workers." Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:204 S 16 '14 180w

"The author has a delicate fancy, genuine power of characterization, and a happy discrimination between essentials and non-essentials."

+ — Nation 99:349 S 17 '14 320w

"Summarized, there is a strong element of the absurd in Mr. Hergesheimer's book. But it is not absurd. There is room for a great novel (though this is not it) upon the subject of that hoary lie that normal and healthy-minded women prefer men with a speckled past. 'The Lay Anthony' is a faint indication that the synonymy of Galahad and sissy is passing. It is a pity, though, for the sake of the impressiveness of the argument, that Anthony died so young."

+ — N Y Times 19:363 Ag 30 '14 400w

HERRICK, MRS. CHRISTINE (TERHUNE). My boy and I. *$1 Page 13-16892

"Mrs. Herrick's book shows how a sensible mother is educated and developed as she follows her boy along, standing by him always, but changing her points of view to meet his changing requirements. It is in no sense biographical or autobiographical, Mrs. Herrick writes in an explanatory preface out of justice to the boys to whom she dedicates the book, and whom she does not wish to 'pillory either as prigs or martyrs.' Some of the incidents described did occur in her own family, others in the households of friends, and still others are what she classes as 'plausible fiction' explaining her point of view."—N Y Times

"The inexperienced mother will find helpful suggestions in her conclusions."

+ A L A Bkl 10:184 Ja '14

"An appealing little book, which should be in the possession of everyone who has to do with the bringing up of children, so filled is it with suggestions as sensible as it is sympathetic."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 20 '13 270w

+ Lit D 47:1122 D 6 '13 140w

"Is tempered with a sense of humor."

+ Nation 97:544 D 4 '13 50w

"It is a book that every mother of a boy should read, particularly if she is to have no masculine help in bringing up her little man child."

+ N Y Times 18:581 O 26 '13 450w

HERRICK, GLENN WASHINGTON. Insects injurious to the household and annoying to man. (Rural science ser.) il *$1.75 Macmillan 14-18474

The author, a professor of economic entomology in the college of agriculture at Cornell, has prepared an important and timely work. Insects have always been looked upon as annoying, and, so far as they were the enemies of growing crops, injurious; it is only within our own generation that we have learned to look upon them as dangerous to the health of man. The author considers the common pests, flies, mosquitoes, roaches, fleas, etc., and outlines the best methods for their extermination. He then takes up insects injurious to clothes and carpets; insects injurious to cereals and preserved fruits, etc. Each chapter is provided with a list of reading references. There are numerous illustrations and an index.

"The book contains authoritative information."

+ N Y Times 19:535 N 29 '14 50w

"Clear and popular account."

+ Spec 113:334 D 26 '14 30w

HERRICK, MYRON TIMOTHY, and INGALLS, R. Rural credits, land and coöperative. *$2 (1c) Appleton 14-19655

"The purpose of this book is to throw light upon the subject of rural credits and to lay before the American people the customs and laws in operation in other countries, so as to prepare the way for more enlightened plans for improving land and agricultural credit facilities in the United States." (Preface) During his residence in France as American ambassador, Mr. Herrick has availed himself of the opportunity of studying agricultural conditions and credit systems in that country and in other countries of Europe. His book presents a study of what Germany, France, Great Britain, Russia, Switzerland, Denmark and the Scandinavian countries are doing, and there is also a chapter on Land credit outside of Europe. Part 1 of the book is devoted to Land credit; Part 2 to Coöperative credit.

"Particularly useful in agricultural states and communities."

+ A L A Bkl 11:199 Ja '15

HERRICK, ROBERT. Clark's field. *$1.40. (1c) Houghton 14-11043

A family heritage, a fifty acre plot of ground, known as Clark's field, supplies the force back of the incidents of this story. The field is intricately interwoven, almost symbolically, with the personal life of a girl, the sole heir. During her thirty years portrayed here she develops from a meek and puny mite of humanity, forlorn and poverty ridden, thru days of prosperity that provided education in a fashionable school and thru lavish years abroad ending in an unfortunate marriage with dark days of discipline ahead, into a woman who discerns the rightness of things and human justice. Finally she devotes her strength and her fortune to releasing the field, sordid in its tenement poverty, from its evil spell and makes it a fitter place for the bearing of human burdens.

HERRICK, ROBERT—Continued.

A L A Bkl 11:32 S '14

+ Atlan 114:527 O '14 170w

"It is a provoking book, a book that leaves the impression that it just missed being a very big achievement indeed." F: T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 39:675 Ag '14 1200w

"If 'Clark's field' were continued and completed as it begins, it would be a masterpiece not only of Mr. Herrick's fiction, but of American fiction. That there is so much good in it makes clear the fact that after all it is possible for Mr. Herrick to return to his first and his highest estate." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jo 13 '14 2250w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:18 Jl 1 '14 500w

Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 40w

"It is, perhaps, the best thing Mr. Herrick has done."

+ Lit D 49:199 Ag 1 '14 300w

+ Nation 99:409 O 1 '14 650w

Reviewed by H. W. Boynton

+ Nation 99:653 D 3 '14 300w

"If for no other reason than for its big imaginative idea, it is well to be thankful for Mr. Herrick's latest novel, 'Clark's field.' But there are other reasons in addition, and the book is one that is worth reading and worth thinking about as a study of America life and as an extremely interesting depiction of the development of a human soul. Mr. Herrick is somewhat given to a scolding attitude in regard to many things now accepted with a good deal of equanimity as the best that can be expected; but when you examine this attitude carefully it is difficult to find him in the wrong, though he is undoubtedly disagreeable. Perhaps the book is longer than need be; there is too much of the leisurely review of rich idleness, and there is too little contrast." Hildegard Hawthorne

+ — N Y Times 19:281 Je 21 '14 1000w

Reviewed by W. D. Howells

+ — No Am 200:915 D '14 1350w

"A somewhat monotonous story in atmosphere."

+ — Outlook 107:758 Jl 25 '14 120w

"For big imagination and deep study of American national life 'Clark's field' is in all ways a noteworthy book."

+ — R of Rs 50:247 Ag '14 300w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 16 '14 1150w

HERVIEU, PAUL ERNEST. Labyrinth (Le dédale); auth. tr. by Barrett H. Clark and Lander MacClintock. *$1 Huebsch 14-2337

A problem drama in five acts. Of the author of the play, Barrett H. Clark in his introduction writes: "He and Brieux are the greatest living exponents of the 'thesis' play; neither ever wrote a play without having some distinct and immediate purpose in view. If this purpose was not the righting of a wrong, it was at least the illustration of some law of nature bearing directly upon some social abuse." The particular problem around which the present play is built is that of remarriage following divorce with its inevitable complications.

"A harrowing tragedy of great emotional power, considered the author's masterpiece, but so French in conception and execution, as to seem in its English translation, somewhat theatric and unreal."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:354 My '14

"It must be said that separated from the neat turns of French idiom the play seems theatric."

— Nation 98:116 Ja 29 '14 400w

"As to its human side, the personages of the play are so exceedingly French that the whole situation appears more foreign than human—that is to say, they seem to behave like French people of a certain class and tradition rather than as men and women who are thrashing out a big problem."

— N Y Times 19:21 Ja 18 '14 880w

"Dramatically the structure is excellent."

+ R of Rs 49:124 Ja '14 250w

HERZIG, CHARLES SIMON. Mine sampling and valuing; with a chapter on Sampling placer deposits, by Chester Wells Purington. il $2 (3c) Mining and scientific press 14-4561

A discussion of the methods used in sampling and valuing ore deposits with special reference to the work of valuation by the independent engineer. Aside from a few fragmentary articles of a more or less elementary nature nothing has been written before on this subject.

"Where there is so much that is praiseworthy in a volume, it may seem captious to single out defects for special mention, but errors of statement and typography are present, and are probably indicative of hasty preparation, but they detract little from the usefulness of a book that is deserving of much commendation." G. M. Butler

+ — Engin N 71:1165 My 21 '14 500w

"Concise, elementary work."

+ Pittsburgh 19:308 Jl 14 '14 40w

HERZOG, RUDOLF. Sons of the Rhine (Die Wiskottens); tr. by Louise T. Lazell. *$1.25 FitzGerald 14-20113

"The story, despite its industrial setting, is not one in which industrial problems figure save incidentally. It is a family history. The Wiskottens, father, mother and six sons, are proprietors of a mill which has become a thriving establishment largely through the aid of the dowry of the eldest son's wife. Man and wife become estranged, a trivial episode bringing matters to a head and precipitating the inevitable separation. The youngest of the Wiskottens, and the most inflammable of temper, leaves home early in the story to study art in Düsseldorf, his departure following the breach that occurs when he refuses to enter the ministry at the behest of his pious and patriarchal mother. The reunion of husband and wife and mother and son forms the story."—Springfield Republican

"The plot of the story is good and the various little domestic difficulties and the subsequent joy of the busy Gustav in making peace are entertainingly set forth."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 13 '15 200w

"The character studies are well done and the translation excellent, except for the numerous scriptural quotations, where Miss Lazell might have used the English authorized version to advantage."

+ — Dial 58:85 F 1 '15 280w

"There is much warmth and even humor in this picture of German family life; in spite of an English version which too often fails in escaping the original idiom."

+ — Nation 99:774 D 31 '14 600w

"An absorbing story."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 14 '15 250w

HERZOG, RUDOLF. Story of Helga; authorized English version by Adele Lewisohn. *$1.35 Dutton 13-25400

"The story of Helga' is an account of the private life of a great opera singer. Helga's public triumphs play a comparatively small part in it, and though it is of course a musical novel, it is so only in a spiritual, never in a technical, sense. . . . The German title of the book is 'Das lebenslied'; and it is the true 'Song of life' which the heroine at last learns to understand and to interpret."—N Y Times

"Readable though sentimental story. Characters are well drawn and the musical atmosphere well sustained."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:243 F '14

"It is all very charming and the gentle sentiment of the original is well rendered into English. If it gives nothing absolutely new, it gives a great deal that is very agreeable." Cornelia Van Pelt.

+ Bookm 38:687 F '14 530w

"The characters of the world of music within the book are realities, and the study of student life in Germany is fresh and appealing. The verisimilitude of the picture which the novel presents of the sacrifices as well as the triumphs of great artists, its stimulating reaction from modern pessimism, the forceful simplicity of its diction, its penetrating analysis of character, and the sterling quality of its craftsmanship, witness once more the author's pre-eminence among German novelists."

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 3 '14 530w

Ind 77:170 F 2 '14 50w

"It is a pretty and rather ingenuous story. The book, in this translation at least, is thoroughly clean."

+ N Y Sun p3 D 13 '13 300w

"It must be admitted that in Franz the author has evidently fallen far short of his own conception. Franz lacks the vividness, the flesh and blood quality of the others."

+ N Y Times 18:750 D 21 '13 880w

+ Outlook 106:271 Ja 31 '14 70w

HEWLETT, WILLIAM. Telling the truth: a novel of analysis. $1.25 (2c) Duffield

An autobiographical novel whose hero, with all the intolerance of youth, early rebels against his parents' cramped and conventional notions of life and conduct and is cast out of his home for his revolutionary ideas. He becomes a journalist, an actor, and, finally, a successful novelist. Thru-out his career he tries to find happiness. Like the prodigal he eats husks before his goal is reached. Then it is attained by entering another man's sanctuary and appropriating his wife. His excuse seems to be that the woman never loved her husband and that she did love him and had shown him what he had been groping for from boyhood, namely, the meaning of life and religion.

"Although it is probable that many readers will disagree with the 'moral' standards of the book, judged by those outwardly accepted by the 'civilization' of our day, none can deny the originality, interest and analytical skill of this 'absurdly true' narrative."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 270w

"Its flippancy of tone strikes one at once as annoying rather than as amusing." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:106 Ag 16 '14 530w

"The author evidently thinks this book very daring."

+ Nation 99:224 Ag 20 '14 280w

+ N Y Times 19:387 S 20 '14 270w

"Mr. Hewlett might be a good novelist if he had a little more humour."

+ Sat R 116:465 O 11 '13 250w

HICKMAN, ALBERT. Canadian nights. il $1.30
* (1c) Century 14-14363

Short stories which may be characterized by the use of that much over-worked term "red-blooded." There are seven of them in the collection, with titles as follows: Overproof; The man with the horse's neck; The a-flat major polonaise; Compensated; The new power; Oriented; An unofficial love-story.

"Deeds of violence and feats of daring are vividly phrased, each with emphasis laid on its comic side, and the reader will certainly be blasé if he fails to read them all in the high spirit of glee in which they are written."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 250w

"If Mr. Hickman's plots were less invertebrate, the freshness of the scenes and the vigor of his style might sometimes strike out a short story of rare quality."

+ Nation 99:283 S 3 '14 220w

"The stories lack something of that most desirable sense of literary value which makes so much of the difference between literature and mere writing. And the author has a way of drowning humor incident, and the course of the story in a flow of words that add nothing to the effect he wishes to produce and induce in the reader the deplorable habit of skipping."

+ N Y Times 19:360 Ag 23 '14 300w

HICKS, AMY MALI. Craft of hand-made rugs. il $2 (4c) McBride, Nast & co. 14-3915

It is the author's purpose in this book to revive some of the handicrafts of our grandmothers, "to revive and refresh them by careful planning in color and design and to add to them the art feeling of our own times." Her chapters take up: Old-time rugs; A word about dyes; The braided rug; The scalloped doormat or tongue rug; The knitted rug; The crocheted rug; The hooked rug; The needle-woven rug; The colonial rag-rug; Some applications; Newer methods of stencil making; The tufted counterpane; Old-time lights; The batik or wax resist process.

"A practical book and timely because of the present interest in old-time crafts."

+ A L A Bkl 10:310 Ap '14

"The quiet and sometimes humorous beauty that their early originators got into these weavings of parti-colored rags Miss Hicks has fully shown, and she imparts the secret of their easy manufacture clearly and completely in brief compass." B. K.

+ Boston Transcript p25 Mr 13 '14 200w

Ind 78:212 My 4 '14 110w

"One wishes that she had given a recipe for knotting the drawn rug. With possibly a few other minor defects of this character the book is, nevertheless, one of the most useful of its kind yet published."

+ Nation 99:531 O 29 '14 230w

+ N Y Times 19:327 Jl 26 '14 130w

"A good book for any library, but too expensive."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:88 Ap '14 40w

HIGGINS, ALEXANDER PEARCE. War and the private citizen: studies in international law; with an introd. note by the Rt. Hon. Arthur Cohen. 5s P. S. King and son, London 12-22858

"This is no. 27 in the series of monographs edited by Hon. W. Pember Reeves, director of the London school of economics and political science, by writers connected with that school. The work is an octavo of 200 pages. Chapter 1 devotes 70 pages to 'The laws of war in relation to the private citizen.' This portion of the book is quite general in its type with limited citations and some of them to minor authorities. The second chapter of but 16 pages is devoted to 'Hospital ships and the carriage of passengers and crews of destroyed prizes. The third of 13 pages to 'Newspaper correspondents in naval warfare.' The fourth of 52 pages to 'The conversion of merchant ships into warships' and the fifth and last of 25 pages to 'The opening by belligerents to neutrals of closed trade.'"—Am Pol Sci R

"The connection between the several chapters is not as intimate as it might be and the book impresses the reader as a rather casual collection of magazine articles written on current topics without the ripest reflection or research. However the four later chapters are certainly stimulating and modern discussions of the matters mentioned, well worth examination and although not final, must be deemed meritorious contributions to questions now up for settlement." C. N. Gregory

+ Am Pol Sci R 7:498 Ag '13 600w

"This is another of those admirable English books clearly written for the general reader, yet full of instruction for all students of international law and naval warfare." E. C. Stowell

+ Ann Am Acad 50:276 N '13 850w

"An exceedingly valuable work on one phase of international law. The book is written clearly and interestingly. It has none of the turgid style nor technical phraseology which characterize most law books. The subject is one of general interest and is treated in a manner which while not descending to what may be called a popular style is exceedingly readable." Emanuel Sternheim

HIGGINS, ALEXANDER PEARCE—Continued.
+ Survey 32:544 Ag 25 '14 430w

HIGGINSON, MARY POTTER (THACHER)
" (MRS. THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON). Thomas Wentworth Higginson: the story of his life. il *$3 (3c) Houghton
14-5339

Mrs. Higginson's biography of her husband is full of the intimate little details of his life. She has been able to give much of the story in his own words, since he belonged to a generation that wrote fully and frankly in letters and in private journals. We follow his career as a teacher, student at Harvard, young minister, leader of colored troops in the civil war, writer, lecturer and reformer. There are accounts in his letters of the beginnings of the woman suffrage movement, with glimpses of Lucy Stone, Lucretia Mott, and other leaders.

+ A L A Bki 10:395 Je '14

"The pleasant volume is permeated with that reticent gentlemanliness which so distinguished its subject." Graham Berry

+ Bookm 39:330 My '14 1100w

"Mrs. Higginson has wisely chosen and followed the Boswellian method. As far as possible, she lets him speak for himself. The task was no easy one, for Colonel Higginson's energy carried him into many fields, his circle of acquaintance was wide and he lived so full a life that its records furnished his biographer with a mass of material that had to be carefully and judiciously selected." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 25 '14 1750w

"The memoir is by no means superfluous. Avoiding, so far as possible, duplication of what Colonel Higginson had written in his autobiographic papers, she tells the story of his life with commendable brevity, in a tone so delicately personal that it seems almost impersonal, and, mainly by skilful quotation from his journals, she succeeds in placing before us one of the most active and benevolent and brave figures of American life in the nineteenth century." Norman Foerster

+ Dial 56:414 My 16 '14 1050w

+ Lit D 49:896 N 7 '14 250w

"Mrs. Higginson's memoir of her husband, though in good taste, is not altogether without the defects which seem almost inevitable when a biography is undertaken by one of closest relationship to the subject thereof. It is also apparent that it adds little new matter to what he himself recorded in 'Cheerful yesterdays.' Yet the volume has considerable charm and was well worth doing."

+ Nation 98:502 Ap 30 '14 780w

"It is largely the interest of association which gives its charm to the story of Thomas Wentworth Higginson, so admirably told by his wife." J. B. Rittenhouse

+ N Y Times 19:221 My 3 '14 1000w

+ No Am 200:304 Ag '14 1400w

"Her volume will take its place with the Norton 'Letters' and with 'Hawthorne and his publishers' among the books of literary reminiscence which have recently brought back the atmosphere and the quality of the most notable group of men of letters that has appeared in this country."

+ Outlook 107:560 Jl 4 '14 1150w

"This biography contains much historical material of exceptional interest and value."

+ R of Rs 49:532 My '14 200w

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 4 '14 580w

HIGGS, HENRY. Financial system of the United Kingdom. *$1.60 Macmillan

"Beginning with the preparation of the estimates, Mr. Higgs shows how, in theory, parliamentary control is exercised over the whole supply of the year, and gives a valuable explanation of how the Audit office works, under the great act passed by Mr. Gladstone, as the agency for authorising and checking all expenditure.

Specially useful is the series of appendices, containing most of the statutes and standing orders germane to actual financial administration, and also the formulæ of such documents as treasury bills and warrants and exchequer bonds."—Sat R

"This book will be of considerable use to that small number of publicists and students who desire exact knowledge of the routine by which the financial organization of the United Kingdom is administered."

+ Ath 1914,2:139 Ag 1 670w

"Authoritative manual."

+ Sat R 118:274 S 5 '14 450w

+ Spec 113:175 Ag 1 '14 50w

HILL, DAVID JAYNE. History of diplomacy in the international development of Europe. 6v v 3 *$6 Longmans (5-20905)

"The third volume of Dr. David Jayne Hill's 'History of diplomacy' considers the 'diplomacy of the age of absolutism.' This considers diplomatic development and history from the peace of Westphalia to the French revolution. 'For more than a hundred years,' says Dr. Hill, 'the destinies of Europe were determined by a half dozen in each generation, and their motives of action were largely personal.' The task of diplomacy was to perpetuate the system they established, and it was a long, long struggle with the new forces appearing on the horizon."—R of Rs

"It is decidedly a better volume than its two predecessors. Dr. Hill is able to tread a fairly easy path across the tangled maze of diplomatic endeavor of many lesser men. His style is simple and direct, and is enlivened by apt quotations from others and by happy phrases of his own. On the other hand, his authorities are often a little dusty."

+ Nation 99:227 Ag 20 '14 470w

+ N Y Times 20:24 Ja 17 '15 600w

"Perhaps it would seem too much to say that the present volume is fascinating in style, and yet to the student of history it is hardly less than fascinating. On every page one feels the hand not only of the scholar but of the gentleman."

+ Outlook 107:682 Jl 18 '14 530w

+ R of Rs 50:249 Ag '14 150w

"If any reader fond of history conceives the idea that this is a dry and technical study suited only as a professional textbook for the budding under-secretaries who dream of one day becoming ambassadors themselves, the mistake is complete."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 30 '14 1400w

HILL, FREDERICK TREVOR. Washington, the man of action. il *$5 (27c) Appleton
14-17629

The number of books about Washington is out of all proportion to the amount of information they contain, says the author in his Foreword. "And the value of such facts as they do record is, only too often, hopelessly impaired by a gross alloy of eulogy and fiction." The scholarly research has done much to restore the real man, its results are not very familiar to the public, and this book has been prepared with a view to making it so. It is based largely upon Washington's own writings, his journal, diaries and private correspondence. There are chapters on: A country boy and his people; A surveyor in the saddle; Opportunity; A call to arms; In the face of disaster; Six years of peace; The commander-in-chief; Surprise and escape; Fighting chances; Across the Jerseys; A night attack; A bold maneuver; The fight for the Hudson; Valley Forge; The battle of Monmouth; Treachery; Yorktown; Peace; Home days; The presidency; Home.

"A trustworthy, straightforward, succinct account of our foremost national hero."

+ Dial 57:461 D 1 '14 130w

"Very readable."

+ Ind 80:415 D 14 '14 30w

+ Nation 99:666 D 3 '14 40w

"A book likely to cause a patriotic glow in the heart of every American who reads it."

+ — N Y Times 19:528 N 29 '14 120w

"Despite the fact that it is meant for boys, one feels inclined to resent the big and heavy volume, the elaborate page decoration, and the colored pictures which are so primitive in their method as to verge unintentionally on caricature."

+ — Outlook 108:789 D 2 '14 110w

HILL, GEORGE BRADBURY. Young farmer. il
$ *$1 Penn 13-7516

This story "shows a sturdy boy's success with an abandoned farm, in the intervals of which he finds time for some sport with baseball and ice-boating."—Bookm

"Does not give such detailed descriptions of method as 'Joe, the book farmer,' but is a little more readable as a story."

+ A L A Bkl 10:247 F '14

Reviewed by M. C. Anderson
Bookm 38:447 D '13 30w

HILL, JANET MCKENZIE (MRS. BENJAMIN M. HILL). American cook book: recipes for everyday use. il. *$1 Sully & Kleinteich (14-2046)

"Janet McKenzie Hill begins her 'American cook book' by remarking that our cuisine has become cosmopolitan in character, the New England cookery having been superseded by cookery that has culled the best from every land and clime. This change is exemplified in her book, which does not, as its name might suggest, confine itself to specialties of the country. She begins with appetizers, and each of her chapters (on soups, fish, vegetables, meats, etc.) is prefaced by a few pages of general remarks, which all cooks should know by heart."—Nation.

"Not so elaborate as the author's 'Practical cooking and serving,' and so more useful to the average housekeeper."

+ A L A Bkl 10:395 Je '14

+ Nation 98:273 Mr 12 '14 150w

HILL, MARION (MRS. CHARLES R. HILL). Sunrise valley. il. *$1.25 (2c) Small 14-6195

A pleasantly-told story of simple plot and happy outcome. Blanche Dering, city bred and used to luxuries, goes to a little Pennsylvania village to earn her living as a school teacher, feeling herself quite superior to the simple people with whom she is to live. A year in Sunrise valley works a change in her. Hannah Aldrich and her two children are indeed simple people, but they possess a beautiful and cultured simplicity that is new in Blanche's experience. When in the first chapter she bids good-bye in New York to Stanley Ballentyne, tailored and immaculate, to be greeted a few hours later in Sunrise valley by Oscar Aldrich, coatless and collarless, the end of the story can already be foreseen.

"Kate Douglas Wiggin must indeed look to her laurels. Here is a book with all the sweetness we have learnt to expect from her, but far less cloying."

+ — Ath 1914,1:791 Je 6 180w

"It is a story of true hearts and noble minds, is not lacking in spontaneity, and carries the reader without a moment of tedium to an eminently happy and satisfying conclusion."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ap 23 '14 100w

"A surprisingly gay little story. It has been stretched to include a legend of hidden treasure and one incongruously heavy love scene, both of which seem mistakes, though more forgivable ones than the thinly disguised didacticism that crops out from time to time."

+ — Nation 98:574 My 14 '14 200w

"This pretty and pleasing story, with its note of youthful optimism and its frankly romantic purpose, gives much promise of future good work by its author. Her present achievement has many excellent qualities, but as a whole is marred by artificiality in its conception and its working out and by the evident conventional walls, inside which she has kept her fancy."

+ — N Y Times 19:132 Mr 22 '14 350w

HILLIS, REV. NEWELL DWIGHT. Story of Phaedrus; how we got the greatest book in the world. il. *$1.25 (2½c) Macmillan 14-7074

The author gives an imaginary account of the bringing together of the books of the New Testament. Phaedrus, a Greek slave, is taken to a secret meeting of the Christians of Ephesus. Seeing a way to achieve his liberty, he steals some gold and silver plate and rolls of papyrus and escapes to Rome. Here curiosity leads him to read the records in his possession which prove to be the story of Jesus as told by Luke. He is converted to the Christian faith and returns to Ephesus to confess his crime. To make reparation he accepts the task of collecting all the records of the life and teaching of Jesus.

"It is a simple, direct account with a convincing atmosphere, and both the story and the verifying notes are interesting."

+ A L A Bkl 10:413 Je 14

"A lively story, full of incident, and as a new book of recreation for the idle can be commended. But, unfortunately, the author has laid the scene in a period of which his knowledge is insufficient."

+ — Ath 1914,2:47 Jl 11 350w

"A very interesting novel."

+ Bib World 45:55 Ja '15 40w

"The story might very well be true, but as Dr. Hillis tells it, the mere framework of legend matters little, for in his graphically recounted religious fable the spirit of the actual truth lies behind the words."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ap 25 '14 120w

"A story that is mainly fiction, but is both plausible and readable. Throughout the tale there are many dramatic situations, and the whole is ingeniously imagined and woven together."

+ N Y Times 19:195 Ap 19 '14 330w

HILLQUIT, MORRIS, and RYAN, REV. JOHN AUGUSTINE. Socialism, promise or menace? *$1.25 (1½c) Macmillan 14-7881

The discussion of socialism between Morris Hillquit, lawyer and socialist, and John A. Ryan, priest and economist, which appeared in "Everybody's magazine," is reprinted, with slight revisions in this book. The authors take up Social evils and remedies; The socialist industrial state; The philosophy of socialism; Socialism and morality; Socialism and religion. Each states his case and then in a rejoinder answers the arguments of the other. And in a final chapter each presents his summary and conclusions.

"The work, as a whole, makes delightful reading on the most debatable points of socialism." J. L. Leonard

+ Am Econ R 4:949 D '14 190w

"This is probably the best statement of the socialism of the socialist parties yet made." W: E. Walling

+ Am J Soc 20:534 Ja '15 1300w

+ A L A Bkl 10:395 Je '14

"The discussion does not add to the scientific literature of this interesting subject."

+ — Ann Am Acad 56:175 N '14 110w

"Both debaters are to be congratulated for fairness, courtesy and ability."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 20 '14 430w

Cath World 99:827 S '14 200w

Reviewed by W. J. Ghent and T. N. Carver
+ Ind 79:282 Ag 24 '14 2300w

"The arguments presented are, for the most part, clear-cut and logical. Some inconsistencies, however, might be noted."

+ — J Pol Econ 22:1023 D '14 300w

"A great deal of information is packed in these pages, and the argument, it will be admitted by the reader, is well put."

+ R of Rs 50:120 Jl '14 80w

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 800w

HINCKLEY, GEORGE WALTER. Roughing it with boys. il *75c (1c) Assn. press 14-877

A series of informal papers on camp life, written from the experience of many summers spent in camp and on the trail with boys. The author believes in roughing it and has little sympathy with the so-styled "camp" in which all the comforts of a house in town are provided.

"This is plainly the book, or one of the books, for boys to read in preparation for their summer's camping."

+ Dial 56:308 Ap 1 '14 150w

"This revelation of a real man living with and not just for his boys gives its chief value to the book." H: W. Thurston

+ Survey 32:201 My 16 '14 300w

HINCKLEY, JULIAN. E., the complete and somewhat mad history of the family of Montague Vincent, esq., gent. *$1.35 (1c) Duffield 14-7873

A great deal happens in the first chapter. Montague Vincent is thrown from his horse and is carried unconscious into the old house at the crossways. He recovers, marries the daughter of the house and assumes its headship. His daughter Edith, to be known as E, is born, and Langdon Wallace comes to make a visit. It is from a tip given by Wallace that Vincent's fortune is made, and from this point on the story is concerned with the adventures of the family in Newport society. From an attractive little girl E grows up to be a charming young woman and you will have to wait until the very last chapter to be sure which of two persons she is to marry; which will show that the story is readable clear thru to the end.

"The largest part of the story is satirical, though it lacks the necessary brilliancy to make it highly effective."

— Boston Transcript p8 My 23 '14 200w

"The effect of the book as a whole is of a well-meaning and too facile writer struggling to make use of sufficiently good materials."

— Nation 99:45 Jl 9 '14 270w

"In 'E' Mr. Julian Hinckley has achieved both a satire and a story. As a novel the book is exceedingly interesting; it is a delightfully readable tale of the romance of a charming, and very real, heroine. The book's satire is very delightful. Nor is it lacking in epigram."

+ N Y Times 19:206 Ap 26 '14 500w

HINKSON, MRS. KATHARINE (TYNAN). <sup>1</sup> Mésalliance. *$1.25 Duffield 13-22871

"When the book begins its hero, Ralph Bretherton, is still very indignant over his elderly cousin's 'mésalliance.' How he presently comes to look upon this marriage, and especially upon the woman in the case, from a totally different point of view, forms the main thread of the plot. Interwoven with it are the fortunes of Avis Bourne, only child of Bretherton's first love, whom he meets by chance at a time when both mother and daughter are sorely in need of a friend. . . . Avis is a sweet and natural girl, but it is the older woman, Lizzie Harding, who holds the reader's interest."—N Y Times

"A simple English story written in a pleasant easy style."

+ A L A Bkl 10:201 Ja '14

Reviewed by P. G. Hubert, Jr.
Bookm 38:563 Ja '14 110w

"The occasional roughnesses apparent in her earlier work are seldom detected in her later writing, and the narrative in the present book is entertaining throughout."

+ Boston Transcript p12 D 8 '13 110w

"Out of simple materials Katharine Tynan has concocted a pretty and agreeable story, with several people in it who have life, a story that would have been better if she had not felt obliged to provide excitement toward the close."

+ N Y Sun p3 N 29 '13 160w

"A charming story whose characters are all normal and most of them very agreeable people."

+ N Y Times 18:768 D 28 '13 280w

+ Outlook 106:96 Ja 10 '14 90w

R of Rs 49:375 Mr '14 330w

HINKSON, MRS. KATHARINE (TYNAN). <sup>6</sup> Twenty-five years: reminiscences. il *$3.50 Devin-Adair 14-1401

In this book, which is the first of a series of three volumes, the author "discusses the large part she has taken, both as a participant and an on-looker, in literary and political movements during the period between the late sixties and the early nineties." (Boston Transcript) "Her reminiscences have few dates and scarcely a pretence at arrangement. At one moment they deal with the past of Irish nationalism. At another they carry the reader into the atmosphere of the Gaelic league. At a third they place him in the London of the later 'eighties.' And then in the final chapters the whole passion of the writer's nature comes out in the tragedy of Mr. Parnell's death." (Spec)

+ A L A Bkl 10:396 Je '14

Ath 1913,2:sup396 O 11 80w

Ath 1913,2:491 N 1 40w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 29 '13 450w

"Fascinating volume."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 25 '14 1800w

"We enjoyed it for its fund of good stories, its love of fun, its abounding charity, and good will toward men, and its love for the church and Ireland."

+ Cath World 99:396 Je '14 480w

"It is first and last a book for Irishmen of the 'Parnell times,' written without restraint as intimately as a diary, wherein great and small, tragic and trivial, mingle and jostle as in a crowd."

+ Nation 98:334 Mr 26 '14 1100w

"There is much of interest to readers of any nationality. It is, however, first and last a book for Irishmen of the Parnell times, written as intimately as a diary, with not much literary form, but with a directness and naturalness that is charming."

+ R of Rs 49:632 My '14 140w

"Her reminiscences are as chatty and human as the rest of the work."

+ Sat R 116:624 N 15 '13 150w

"A volume which is as difficult to describe as it is delightful to read. We have dealt only with the Irish part of Mrs. Hinkson's volume because it is the most original element in her reminiscences. But readers who care more for literary matters will find much that is interesting about them both in Dublin and in London."

+ Spec 112:sup673 Ap 25 '14 1600w

HINTON, JAMES. Mystery of pain. *$1 (5c) Kennerley 14-13964

"Bodily pain and pain that serves as a punishment for sin concern only the one who suffers. While we look only at that which directly concerns the individual who suffers, no real explanation of suffering, no satisfaction that truly satisfies can be found. We must look beyond and see in our sufferings, and in the sufferings of all, something in which mankind has a stake." From this statement the author proceeds to show that love alone is capable of overruling our natural feelings of pain and turning painful things to sources of joy; that our mental condition controls and alters our feelings. Pain is latent in our highest state. It lies hidden and unfelt in the form of devoted sacrifice; but it is there, and it would make itself felt as pain if the love which finds joy in bearing it were absent. Therefore a world in which so much pain is present is adapted—was altogether made—to be the scene of an overpowering, and absorbing love. This love can conquer and must conquer all pain as the individual struggles thru his stages of evolution.

Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 300w

"There is little in his essay to recommend it to the contemporary reader except its excellent style."

+ Dial 57:261 O 1 '14 50w

HIRSCHFELD, IMANUEL H. Heart and blood-vessels; their care and cure, and the general management of the body. *$1.25 (1½c) Funk 13-15747

The subtitle of this book more accurately describes its contents than does its title: it is a handbook on the general care of the body with special emphasis put upon the heart and blood vessels because of their close association with all bodily functions. Contents: The folly of ignorance; The story of the heart: The sick heart; The physician's examination and workshop; Prevention; Food; Air, climate and home; The inseparably interdependent trinity of work, rest and sleep; Sexual life; The skin as a protector; Mind; Care and cure; Facts to be considered in the choice of physicians, nurses, hospitals, and vacation trips.

"A medical work that may be recommended as a manual of personal hygiene to the average intelligent reader. It is bristling with up-to-date facts regarding the care and cure of the circulatory system."

+ Lit D 47:437 S 13 '13 220w

HIRSHFELD, CLARENCE FLOYD, and UL-<sup>6</sup> BRICHT, TOMLINSON CARLILE. Farm gas engines. il *$1.50 Wiley 13-19183

"According to the preface of this book, the authors have written it to serve as a guide to farmers contemplating the purchase of a farm engine." (Engin N) The authors point out the strong and weak points of the various designs and discuss the characteristics which adapt certain types to special uses.

"Popular and scholarly, it furnishes just the information needed by a prospective engine buyer."

+ A L A Bkl 10:354 My '14

"An excellent elementary treatise on the design and construction of small sizes of internal-combustion engines intended for farm use."

+ Engin N 70:1600 N 13 '13 450w

+ Nature 93:265 My 14 '14 150w

HISSEY, JAMES JOHN. Leisurely tour in England. il *$3 Macmillan 14-30278

The author's leisurely tour was taken in a motor car. "A sketch map is supplied of his meanderings, as described in these pages, from which it appears that Mr. Hissey's headquarters are at Eastbourne, whence he passed through a diversity of well-known places in Hampshire, Wiltshire, Worcestershire, and Shropshire, and hence through North Wales to Aberdovey. On the return journey another route was taken, passing through the usual tourist places in the counties of Stafford, Leicester, Oxford, and Buckingham, and following a diversity of roads in Hampshire and Sussex until Eastbourne was regained." (Ath)

+ A L A Bkl 10:310 Ap '14

"Mr. Hissey is at his best when he is describing old coaching inns, and chatting with local landlords or with poorly informed parish clerks. He certainly has the pen of a ready writer, and his gossiping style makes fairly pleasant reading. The anecdotes he occasionally interpolates are, however, distinctly of a threadbare character. If he had selected a well-known series, compiled for the most part by experts who have a thorough knowledge of the county they describe, his tour would have been far more enjoyable and instructive to himself, and he would not have fallen into the blunders which disfigure his pages."

+ Ath 1913,2:722 D 20 1100w

"If we say in closing that we like Mr. Hissey the author rather better—or let us put it even better—than Mr. Hissey the artist, we hope that any slight offense given to the latter will be more than balanced by the implied compliment to the former."

+ Dial 56:254 Mr 16 '14 200w

Reviewed by C. E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:508 D 11 '13 190w

"It is a very pleasant book to read, full of the author's personality and prejudices."

+ Nation 97:622 D 25 '13 400w

"The charm of the book is increased by the numerous appropriate illustrations." B. C. W.

+ Nature 92:498 Ja 1 '14 100w

"Altogether the book is eminently enjoyable to all lovers of the quiet life and the old times."

+ Outlook 105:860 D 20 '13 90w

"Amiability and simplicity are not virtues enough for four hundred pages of description and reflection."

— Sat R 116:464 O 11 '13 700w

HITCHCOCK, ALBERT SPEAR. Text-book of grasses, with especial reference to the economic species of the United States. (Rural text-book ser.) il *$1.50 Macmillan 14-16456

"The present work is primarily a text-book, but some technical information is included that might more properly be consigned to a reference book." (Preface) Part 1 of the book gives a brief outline of Economic agrostology, including the clovers and other forage crops not belonging to the grass family. Part 2 takes up Systematic agrostology. "The reader will observe that by the plan adopted the information on a given grass is not found segregated in a single paragraph or chapter but is scattered to meet the necessities of the classification used. The index makes these scattered paragraphs readily accessible." (Preface)

HJERTBERG, ERNEST W. Athletics in theory and practice; ed. by S. S. Abrahams. il *$1.25 (3c) Putnam A14-1059

The author is famous as a coach. He held such a position at Columbia and in 1910 was called to Sweden as athletic director for the Olympiad held in 1912. In his book, which is very complete, he deals with every event on the Olympic program. In Part 1 he discusses General rules for training, with two chapters on the conduct of an athletic meeting. Part 2 is devoted to Running, hurdling and walking; Part 3 to Jumping and throwing. There are seventy illustrations from photographs.

+ A L A Bkl 10:396 Je '14

"A body of information which should be in the hands of every athlete."

+ Ath 1913,2:453 O 25 100w

"Mr. Hjertberg has no romantic prejudices in favour of some sport which particularly appeals to him or in which he himself excelled. All events are of the same importance that can score the same number of marks. As to diet Mr. Hjertberg's advice is perfectly rational."

+ Spec 111:919 N 23 '13 700w

HOAG, CLARENCE GILBERT. Theory of interest. il *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 14-4906

The author believes that much of the bitterness between socialism and capitalism is due to misunderstanding, and that this misunderstanding is based on the acceptance on the part of socialists of the Marxian doctrine of interest. He has written this book to present a new doctrine. He says, "The keystone of economic theory is the conception of value. Without a correct theory of value, it was impossible to work out correct theories of price and of distribution." He has formulated a new theory which he calls "the nominal value theory."

"The book is an interesting variation of the current discussion of the subject." D. R. Scott

+ Am Econ R 4:608 S '14 620w

"The masterly handling of English, the clear-cut treatment, and the method of demonstrating a proposition in two or three different ways make Mr. Hoag's book valuable to the student of interest theories. Especially well done are the hundred pages devoted to a critical analysis of interest theories, other than the author's own." E. L. Little

+ Ann Am Acad 55:288 S '14 1300w

"Mr. Hoag has added little to the theory of interest."

— Ath 1914,2:140 Ag 1 330w

HOAG, CLARENCE GILBERT—Continued.

"The book is the most noteworthy contribution of recent years to a much-discussed subject and one on which writers find it very hard to agree."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 2 '15 430w

R of Rs 49:507 Ap '14 100w

HOAG, DR. ERNEST BRYANT, and Terman, Lewis Madison. Health work in the schools. (Riverside textbooks in education) il $1.60 (2c) Houghton 14-14247

A volume dealing with the problems involved in health supervision, health examination and hygiene teaching in schools. Chapters: Social responsibility for the health of school children; The scope and administration of health supervision; Plans for organization for health work; The school nurse: including suggestions for health supervision by the "Nurse alone" plan; The health grading of school children by teachers; A demonstration clinic for instruction in the observation of defects; The school medical clinic; School dentistry; Transmissible diseases; Open-air schools; School housekeeping; The teaching of hygiene; The teacher's health; What the world is doing for the health of school children.

+ Boston Transcript p24 D 2 '14 100w

"We have seen no better book than this in its field and we commend it warmly to superintendents, principals and teachers."

+ Educ R 49:98 Ja '15 50w

"The treatise is well written and admirably arranged."

+ N Y Times 19:367 Ag 30 '14 70w

"The treatment is clear and concise, and the book is well balanced and very attractive. If every school teacher and principal could have a copy of this volume and make good use of it, incalculable benefit would result to the millions of children in the public schools." G: L. Meylan

+ Survey 33:270 D 5 '14 400w

HOBSON, HARRIET MALONE. Comrade of Navarre; a tale of the Huguenots. il $1.25 (1c) Am. Bapt. 15-157

The hero, who tells the story, is Marsac de Brunnetere, a Huguenot and a faithful friend and loyal henchman of Henry of Navarre, who when Henry finally gives over to the Catholic faith breaks his sword rather than serve a Papist king. A touching element in the story is the devotion between Marsac and his younger brother, Berthon, who turns Catholic. Both brothers love the same woman and each is willing to make a sacrifice for the happiness of the other.

"This is the kind of book that makes a laughing stock of historical romance. It is costume, and nothing else—costume of the flimsiest and most grotesque sort, hired for the occasion. The style of the whole narrative is froth and fustian, a jargon of quasiarchaisms and modern vernacular."

— Nation 100:52 Ja 14 '15 480w

HOBSON, JOHN ATKINSON. Work and wealth. il $2 (2c) Macmillan 14-11023

A valuation of economic goods and services estimated in terms of human-welfare rather than in the ordinary terms of money. The first half of the book is occupied with the general exposition and illustration of the method of human valuation. The second part applies the humanist principles established in the first, and discusses some of the practical issues of social-economic reconstruction in the fields of business and politics. A final chapter points out the limitations of the scientific and quantitative methods in the interpretation and direction of social-economic life. The contention is that the art of social as well as of individual conduct must always defy exact scientific guidance, the methods of science being incompetent to predict or direct the creative element in organic processes.

"While the author's conclusions may fail to convince, all will appreciate his fresh and interesting method of approach to the subject and the high plane on which the discussion is conducted."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:56 O '14

Ath 1914,2:139 Ag 1 200w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley

+ Hibbert J 13:430 Ja '15 200w

"No person who is seriously concerned with the great economic problems of the day can afford to ignore Mr. Hobson's analysis, unless, indeed, he has already gone thru the process himself."

+ Ind 80:63 O 12 '14 450w

"On the whole, Mr. Hobson's book is comprehensive and stimulating, and deserves to be widely read. But some of his arguments are very vulnerable." Hugh Dalton

+ Int J Ethics 25:265 Ja '15 1150w

"In that it lays much more stress upon the 'spiritual' side of personality than is customary in discussions of these matters, Mr. Hobson's book should be particularly welcome to the economic student who, whether or not he agree with the conclusions expressed, can hardly fail to be refreshed by the atmosphere in which the subject is immersed."

+ — Nation 99:225 Ag 20 '14 1350w

Psychol Bull 11:477 D 15 '14 80w

"Although we have questioned some of Mr. Hobson's arguments, we would not give an unfair impression of his very thoughtful and suggestive book. Much of what he says on the loss to humanity involved in many modern processes, and on the advantages of craftsmanship and art and leisure and sport, requires to be constantly emphasised to-day."

+ — Sat R 118:373 O 3 '14 1500w

+ Spec 113:676 N 14 '14 30w

HODGES, GEORGE. Battles of peace; new, rev. ed. $1.25 (1½c) Macmillan A14-2811

The inspiration for many of these sermons is drawn directly from the life and teachings of the "Prince of peace." Some of the titles are: John the Baptist's sermon; Into the way of peace; The Christmas goodness; On the eighth day; The wise men's gifts; Jesus in subjection; The fact of the resurrection; The abolition of death.

+ Ind 79:74 J1 13 '14 30w

HODGES, GEORGE. Christianity between Sunday; new, rev. ed. $1.25 (1½c) Macmillan 14-20133

The first sermon of this collection takes the stand that "the credentials of Christianity are not creeds but deeds." In those that follow this principle is further emphasized. Some of the subjects taken up are: Business on Christian principles; The holiness of holidays; The simplicity of religion; The great commandments; Serving God for naught.

"A vital collection of sermons."

+ Bib World 43:418 Je '14 380w

"The vitality of his utterances makes the sermons of more than twenty years ago, with but little revision, still fresh and stimulating."

+ Ind 79:74 J1 13 '14 30w

HODGES, GEORGE. Heresy of Cain; new, rev. ed. $1.25 (1½c) Macmillan

A group of some twenty sermons, all more or less concerned with the problems of practical Christianity. A partial list of contents follows: The new philanthropy; To help the poor; The gospel and poverty; The church and the labor movement; Business and religion; The gospel of the kingdom; The Christian family; Ethics of the parish; The church at work; Our duty to Cæsar; War and politics.

HODGSON, MRS. WILLOUGHBY. Old English china. il $10 Macmillan (Eng ed A14-756)

The author "has treated her subject as simply as possible, avoiding the use of highly technical terms; and, in addition to an historical sketch of the work of each factory, she gives valuable advice to the amateur on the housing and arrangement of his collection. The illustrations, which form an important feature of the book (there being 16 plates reproduced in colour, in addition to 65 in black and white), having been carefully chosen with a view to the adequate representation of every important class of English porcelain; while, for the further guidance of the collector, reproductions of the various makers' marks are appended to each section."—Ath

+ Ath 1913,2:sup433 O 18 160w

Ath 1913,2:630 N 29 50w

+ Ath 1913,2:761 D 27 140w

"A very interesting work."

+ Int Studio 52:169 Ap '14 220w

"Mrs. Hodgson is a fine collector and critic. She is not a hunter of bargains, and does not cherish a specimen for its market or fictitious value. Yet Mrs. Hodgson is expert to the last degree. She has the equipment of a specialist without the specialist's insanity."

+ Sat R 117:84 Ja 17 '14 950w

HOFMAN, HEINRICH OSCAR. General metallurgy. il *$6 McGraw 13-17262

"The present volume aims to cover the field of general metallurgy as a whole, under the following heads: Properties of metals, Alloys, Metallic compounds, Ores, Fuel, Refractory materials, Pyrometallurgical, hydrometallurgical and electrometallurgical processes and apparatus, Mechanical metallurgical operations, Metallurgical products, Economic considerations. To the metallurgist and advanced student the book will be welcome as a fitting introduction to the detailed study of the metallurgy of iron, copper, lead and silver, gold, zinc, etc."—Engin N

"The most complete recent work."

+ A L A Bkl 10:270 Mr '14

"It is well illustrated and printed and a distinct contribution to metallurgical literature." W: Campbell

+ Engin N 70:788 O 16 '13 450w

HOFMAN, HEINRICH OSCAR. Metallurgy of copper. il *$5 McGraw 14-10460

"This second volume in Hofman's new metallurgical series is maintaining the high standard of the first number on 'General metallurgy.' . . . Matters are discussed in very great detail and the illustrations, in many cases dimensioned, could be used as working drawings. Much valuable information is condensed in the numerous tables. The more important chapters are those on smelting and on leaching of copper ores and on electrolysis."—Engin N

"The best, most comprehensive treatment of the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 11:104 N '14

"The author has given a very complete review of the subject and the work will serve many metallurgists as a handy compendium on the subject. Numerous typographical errors mar the work." F. W. Traphagen

+ Engin N 72:421 Ag 20 '14 320w

"Treats the whole subject more fully than any other work published."

+ Pittsburgh 19:406 O '14 20w

HOGARTH, WILLIAM. William Hogarth, his original engravings and etchings; ed. by Arthur M. Hind. il *$0c Stokes 13-25933

This volume in the "Great engravers series" contains sixty-four illustrations, fifty-seven from the work of Hogarth, seven by Blake and others. The editor furnishes an introduction and explanatory notes.

A L A Bkl 10:311 Ap '14

Ath 1913,2:761 D 27 60w

HOLBEIN, HANS, THE YOUNGER. Hans Holbein, the Younger; his Old Testament illustrations, Dance of death and other woodcuts. (Great engravers) il *$0c Stokes 13-15767

A brief critical introduction precedes the reproductions of examples of Holbein's work as an engraver. Of these ninety-one are from his Old Testament illustrations, fifty-eight from his "Dance of death."

A L A Bkl 10:185 Ja '14

+ Ath 1912,2:529 N 2 90w

+ Sat R 110:368 Mr 22 '13 70w

+ Spec 109:sup787 N 16 '12 20w

HOLDEN, HORACE. Young boys and boarding-school; the functions, organisation and administration of the sub-preparatory boarding-school for boys. *$1 (2½c) Badger, R: G. 14-160

The author discusses the education of boys between the ages of seven and fourteen. He believes that the private boarding school is the ideal institution in which to give such education, and considers its advantages over the public school. Contents: The lower school; The boy from seven to fourteen; Physical education; Intellectual education; Moral education; Social education; The day's work; The curriculum; The personnel of the staff; Location and equipment; The economics of the school; Special problems in the school.

"As a frank expression of the views of the writer and, indeed, as a candid appreciation of the practical condition of our social system, the book is both refreshing and instructive. It is a pioneer contribution to the bibliography of the subject and takes up the whole question of elementary education in a new way." H. T. C.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 470w

"An efficient and interesting manual."

+ Ind 78:258 My 11 '14 60w

HOLDER, CHARLES FREDERICK. Game fishes of the world. il *$5 (3½c) Doran (Eng ed A14-661)

A book with Dr. Holder's name on the title-page needs no introduction to fishermen. The present book is a large volume of 400 pages, with many illustrations, describing the principal game fishes of the world. Some of the chapter titles, selected at random, are: Salmon fishing in England; Some game fishes of India; The Santa Catalina island swordfish; Some game fishes of Spain, France and Portugal; Some game fishes of the Scandinavian peninsula; The Pacific coast salmon; The Canadian lakes and streams. Among the illustrations are a number of remarkable photographs taken of living fishes in the water.

A L A Bkl 10:354 My '14

+ Ath 1913,2:sup437 O 18 60w

"It is best to say at once that Dr. Holder's book might easily have been better had he taken more pains. Those portions which deal with the great sport at Santa Catalina island, with the records of the Tuna club (founded, as we all know, by Dr. Holder), with salmon fishing on the Pacific coast, with rainbow trout in their native haunts, with tarpon fishing at Aransas Pass, and other angling matters across the Atlantic contain so much that is interesting that it is unfortunate that Dr. Holder should open with three consecutive chapters, each inadequate and unsatisfactory, on British salmon, grayling and trout."

+ Spec 112:sup162 Ja 31 '14 800w

HOLDSWORTH, JOHN THOM. Money and banking. il *$2 (1c) Appleton 14-22360

A book covering the whole subject of money and banking, designed primarily as a textbook for students beginning the subject, but prepared also with the general reader and the business man in mind. In part 1, which follows the lines of other standard works, treating of Medium of exchange, Functions of money, History of United States coinage, etc., an effort has been made to be as concise as possible, thus leaving the major part of the book for the discussions of principles and practices of banking which form part 2. The final chapter of this part is given to an analysis of the leading provisions of the Federal reserve act, and the complete text of the act is given in an appendix.

HOLDSWORTH, JOHN THOM—Continued.

"The book is intended primarily as a textbook for students, but it is so well written that its appeal is much wider than that of the ordinary textbook."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 16 '15 200w

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 170w

HOLL, KARL. Gerhart Hauptmann, his life<sup>5</sup> and his work, 1862-1912. il *$1 McClurg (Eng ed W13-68)

"The most valuable thing about this book is the information concerning the many points of contact between Hauptmann's life and his works. The author has gone carefully into this matter and has brought to light a number of facts which even students of Hauptmann may not have known before. A short summary is given of the contents of the plays, which are divided for sake of convenience into social dramas, family dramas, and fairy dramas."

—Nation

+ A L A Bkl 10:311 Ap '14

"A brief but enlightened study. Dr. Holl displays the utmost enthusiasm for his man, but does not allow his admiration to obscure his critical faculties, although on at least one occasion—his notice of the recent novel 'Atlantis'—he slurs over its almost essential entanglement in the lowest of human passions."

+ —Ath 1913,1:706 Je 28 100w

"Professor Holl elucidates the symbolical dramas for English readers in an admirable manner, and he succeeds in bringing out the sheer poetic beauty of realism, when it serves truth,—as it does in all that Hauptmann has written."

+ Dial 56:307 Ap 1 '14 200w

"A succinct and fairly readable account of the most prominent of contemporary German dramatists. On questions of general criticism Dr. Holl is less satisfactory. The book is furnished with a very serviceable bibliography."

+ —Nation 98:341 Mr 26 '14 330w

HOLLAND, A. W. Germany. il *$2 Macmillan (Eng ed A14-275)

A volume in the "Making of the nations" series "describing Teutonic developments from the time of the folk-wanderings to the foundation of the modern German empire." (Spec)

"He would have been wise if he had selected a few interesting threads for connected treatment and focused on a few of the great personalities. Instead, he chronicles multitudinous events; dates and names abound." S. B. F.

—Am Hist R 20:189 O '14 270w

"A popular, not wholly satisfactory history."

+ —A L A Bkl 11:113 N '14

"Mr. Holland is admirably impartial, and his book, if due allowance is made for its brevity, must be pronounced a good piece of work."

+ Ath 1913,2:108 Ag 2 280w

"It is difficult to imagine how a scholar of Mr. Holland's standing could be betrayed into so many inaccuracies as this book contains."

—Ath 1914,2:208 Ag 22 520w

+ Ind 79:346 S 7 '14 580w

+ Nation 99:719 D 17 '14 90w

"The entire book is admittedly only a summary, a framework upon which to build, but the material for it has been selected with excellent judgment and no little evidence of scholarship. Mr. Holland's intimacy with his subject has enabled him excellently to proportion the various blocks of material before him and to throw them into a perspective which assembles a long and widely scattering train of events within the vision of the average reader."

+ N Y Times 19:355 Ag 23 '14 700w

"A notably valuable book because it is the first to recount German history from the earliest times to the close of 1913."

+ Outlook 107:681 Ji 18 '14 110w

"His picture of Germany is doubtless accurate, but it is not impressive. It lacks amplitude and atmosphere."

—Outlook 109:236 Ja 27 '15 160w

"Mr. Holland has not been wholly successful in surmounting the difficulties which beset the path of the writer of popular histories."

— + Sat R 118:118 Ji 25 '14 250w

"Mr. Holland is a painstaking, though pedestrian, student of history, and has successfully accomplished his laborious task."

+ Spec 112:1000 Je 13 '14 80w

HOLLAND, BERNARD HENRY. Fall of protection, 1840-1850. *$3.50 Longmans (Eng ed 14-158)

The author tells in this book the story of England's conversion from a protective to a free trade policy. "It is a study of empire rather than of trade, and is a book for statesmen rather than politicians. Its title is misleading. If the author's sentiments are not misjudged he laments the disorganizing effect of free trade upon the British empire, and would like to see the colonies which are drifting from the motherland restored to it in renewed bonds of interest as well as of affection." (N Y Times)

Reviewed by C. W. Wright

+ Am Hist R 19:900 Ji '14 1100w

"A well-rounded and, in the main, a trustworthy account of the political events in England between 1840 and 1850 which led to the repeal of the corn laws and adoption of the free trade principle."

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:293 My '14 100w

"The author of this book states in the preface that though he has not exerted himself to be 'impartial,' yet he has tried not to be unfair, in the sense of suppressing or misstating facts and arguments which support opinions not his own. This purpose has been steadily maintained in the main part of the work." Eliot Jones

+ Ann Am Acad 52:249 Mr '14 530w

"The book is very far from a political pamphlet; it is a conscientious and laborious piece of work, well planned and well executed."

+ Ath 1913,2:453 O 25 150w

"If any wearied American has vowed that he would never read another book on the tariff he is cordially recommended to reconsider and try one more which is certified as 'different.' If he brings to this book the qualities which enable appreciation he will find it of entrancing interest regarding the relations of the United States to England and Canada, and as giving a perspective in the study of protectionism such as is not afforded by its history in the United States."

+ N Y Times 19:29 Ja 25 '14 2100w

Reviewed by H. R. Mussey

+ Pol Sci Q 29:148 Mr '14 630w

"Though we are unconvinced by most of Mr. Holland's arguments and disagree with the conclusions that he draws, it must be admitted that he has written an attractive book."

+ —Spec 112:792 My 9 '14 800w

HOLLAND, RUPERT SARGENT. Historic heroes of chivalry. (Historic ser. for young people) il *$1.50 (2c) Jacobs 14-17833

"Heroes of chivalry belong to no one age nor land," says the author and he has accordingly chosen his heroes from any age or any place in which he happens to find them, beginning with Roland and Oliver and ending with Gordon of Khartoum. Those who come between are the Cid, St. Louis of France, William Tell, Bertrand du Guesclin, Giovanni dei Medici, Gustavus Vasa, Sir Francis Drake, the Marquis of Montrose, and Louis Grandpré.

HOLLAND, WILLIAM JACOB. To the River<sup>2</sup> Plate and back. il *$3.50 Putnam 13-24333

The author is a paleontologist who last year made a journey to Argentina for the purpose of setting up in the National museum at La Plata a replica of the Jurassic diplodocus, discovered in Wyoming in 1899. "But it must not be imagined that the diplodocus or his probable age on the globe we inhabit forms the chief part of the volume. Although the peg on which the narrative is hung, the greater part of the volume has nothing to do with prehistoric things. It is intensely of the present day. Dr. Holland is a discriminating observer, and in the places visited—Brazil, Argentina, and several of the West Indian islands—on the homeward journey, he describes the conditions, modes of life, business progress and possibilities, modern conveniences, the food, and pastimes of the people in a delightful manner varied with a pleasant humor." (N Y Times)

"Scientific information is slight and the analysis of South American conditions not to be compared with that of Bryce in 'South America.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:270 Mr '14

"The whole book is eminently clear and readable as well as informative."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup435 Mr 21 1000w

"It is for its natural history that the book is most valuable."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 4 '13 550w

"The narrative is detailed enough to be vivid, yet not so detailed as to be tiresome; it is based not only on the actual experiences of the voyage, but also on much reading and thought." T. D. A. Cockerell

+ Dial 56:138 F 16 '14 480w

"Dr. Holland has eyes all around his head and he misses nothing of interest whether it is politics or paleontology, menus or mosquitos."

+ Ind 78:326 My 25 '14 220w

"Very interesting book."

+ Lit D 48:387 F 21 '14 270w

"If Dr. Holland had cut out two-thirds of the book, including familiar topics already better done elsewhere, and most of the trifling personal details, his book, even though smaller, cheaper, and less striking, would have been far more acceptable."

+ Nation 98:115 Ja 29 '14 300w

"With the increasing interest in South American affairs, this volume is a most timely publication, combining sound information, good sense, and delightful description. The book is admirably illustrated."

+ N Y Times 19:32 Ja 25 '14 820w

"Dr. Holland is an agreeable writer."

+ Outlook 105:935 D 27 '13 180w

"We do not greatly like the descriptive parts. Much of it is commonplace, but the scientific pages in which the author discusses the butterflies of the country—on which he is an authority—and the diptodocus will be useful to naturalists."

+ Sat R 117:151 Ja 31 '14 100w

HOLLANDER, JACOB HARRY. Abolition of poverty. *75c (3c) Houghton 14-19190

The purpose of this little book is to set forth the needlessness of poverty. Poverty is an economic ill that may be controlled as preventable disease is controlled. In explaining his use of the term poverty, the author points out that it is loosely made to cover three distinct conditions: economic inequality; economic dependence; and economic insufficiency. The first condition usually implies "modest circumstances." The second is pauperism; the third is the condition to which the terms "poor" and "poverty" apply. There are chapters on: The nature of poverty; The social surplus; The distribution of income; The rate of wages; The underpaid; The unemployed; The unemployable; and a Conclusion which gives a summing up of the argument.

"Brevity, abundance of well-sifted data, skillful defense of his constructive proposals, and frank abandonment of time-honored economic theories unite in Professor Hollander's statement of the salient aspects of a central problem in applied economics." E. L. Talbert

+ Am J Soc 20:549 Ja '15 470w

"He believes that poverty is needless, and this hopeful tenet brightens a sane and succinct discussion. Such books as the modest study before us deserve the warmest welcome."

+ Dial 58:23 Ja 1 '15 300w

Ind 81:214 F 8 '15 110w

"Lucid and authoritative book."

+ Int J Ethics 25:273 Ja '15 200w

"In this work the author has, in a short space, thrown new light upon an old problem." + J Pol Econ 23:96 Ja '15 430w

HOLLINGWORTH, HARRY LEVI. Advertising and selling. il *$2 Appleton 13-25656

The author is instructor in psychology in Columbia university, and lectures in business psychology at New York university. He treats his subject in the following chapters: Measuring the strength of an appeal; The nervous basis of mental processes; The analysis of task and media; The first task: catching the attention; Mechanical incentives; Interest incentives; An experimental test of the relative attention and memory value of the mechanical and interest devices; The second task: holding the attention; Feeling tone of form; Feeling tone of content; The third task: fixing the impression; The fourth task: provoking the response; Instincts, their nature and strength; The relative strength of the chief instincts and interests; Sex and class differences of interest to business men. The illustrations show practical devices used by advertisers.

"Practical, interestingly technical, with theories proved by tests and discussions of familiar advertisements."

+ A L A Bkl 10:354 My '14

"There is much in the book that would be of value to writers and placers of advertising, but, unfortunately, the writer is not always clear, and what he has to say seems written more for the psychologist than for the business man."

+ Boston Transcript p9 D 27 '13 270w

+ Educ R 47:530 My '14 70w

"On the basis of personal experience of its merit, we can therefore recommend the book to every man who has to do with either the buying or selling of advertising."

+ Indust Engin 14:82 F '14 320w

"Each chapter is worthy of study by both the practical business man and the professional psychologist." W. D. Scott

+ J Philos 11:249 Ap 23 '14 350w

"The book will greatly interest wide-awake business men, and they will not fail to profit through reading it."

+ N Y Times 19:51 F 1 '14 110w

HOLME, CHARLES, ed. Art of the book: a review of some recent European and American work in typography, page decoration and binding. il *$3; pa *$2.50 Lane 14-16745

Issued as the special spring number for 1914 of the "International Studio." The contents is made up of the following chapters: British types for printing books, by Bernard H. Newdigate; Fine bookbinding in England, by Douglas Cockerell; The art of the book in Germany, by L. Deubner; The art of the book in France, by E. A. Taylor; The art of the book in Austria, by A. S. Levetus; The art of the book in Hungary; The art of the book in Sweden, by August Brunijs; The art of the book in America, by William Dana Orcutt.

A L A Bkl 11:61 O '14

"The art of book-making, typography, decoration and binding, as practised in Europe and America, have hardly been better or more interestingly presented than in this profusely illustrated volume."

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 9 '14 320w

+ Nation 99:723 D 17 '14 580w

"To those who are professionally interested in the making of books this work is almost indispensable; to lovers of the art side of the printed volume it will be at once educative and delightful."

+ Outlook 108:284 S 30 '14 70w

"America might better have been left out, for the niggardly amount of space allotted to it made impossible any adequate or satisfactory account of this country's advance in the arts connected with printing."

+ R of Rs 50:756 D '14 70w

"To one who loves fine art and craft to turn the pages is delight; to read them and to make use of them in teaching to gather from them a perennial harvest."

HOLME, CHARLES, ed.—Continued.

+ School Arts Magazine 14:304 D '14 80w

HOLMES, ARTHUR. Principles of character making. $1.50 Lippincott 13-22486

This book is published as volume 11 in Lippincott's educational series. "Recognizing the paramount importance of character-making as an end of school work, the author presents the subject of child-training from the genetic point of view, and sets forth with scientific accuracy the commonly accepted principles of physiological psychology applicable to moral training and moral instruction. Of especial worth are his chapters devoted to 'Instincts'; 'The making and breaking of habits'; 'The impulses and ideals of youth'; and the last chapter of some forty pages, 'The psychological basis of moral education.'" (School R)

"Optimistic, readable, helpful to parents and teachers."

+ A L A Bkl 10:311 Ap '14

N Y Times 18:712 N 30 '13 80w

"This book is a worthy contribution to the literature of a subject which seems to be full of promise for the early future. The volume is so full of little errors of a grammatical, rhetorical, or typographical nature as to suggest unwarranted haste in its preparation. The student of psychology will find nothing new in the book, but he will find much that ought to make more rational the treatment of children by the parent or teacher who seeks to develop their moral nature rather than to impose upon them moral codes good for adults but foreign to the life of the child in his particular stage of evolution." E. O. Engleman

+ — School R 22:204 Mr '14 380w

"Its excellences are due to the sound scholarship, wide experience with children and charming lucidity of style which are found together scattered throughout the book. The defect seems to me to be chiefly due to the failure of the author to recognize that his own digest and restatement of scores of extracts from other authors would be far more interesting and useful to the ordinary reader than are the quotations." H: W. Thurston

+ — Survey 31:806 Mr 28 '14 600w

HOLMES, EDMOND GORE ALEXANDER. In defence of what might be. $1.50 Dutton

"It is inevitable that 'In defence of what might be' should be highly controversial. Mr. Holmes has had to take up the cudgels against theologians, Herbartians, believers in competition, disbelievers in the Montessori idea, Prof. Eucken, supporters of examinations, teachers in preparatory schools, rigid disciplinarians, and others. He persists, in spite of certain clerical disclaimers, in believing that the doctrine of original sin is at the root of our distrustful attitude to the nature of the child, and our consequent reluctance to give him the freedom that is his due." (Ath) "The book is professedly not a manual of pedagogy. To those who find Mr. Holmes impracticable he makes answer that it is not his business to be practicable. He is out to explore causes, not to suggest remedies." (Sat R)

"This new book is as much a survey and a criticism of our national ideals and beliefs as of our national education. Hence the width of its appeal. On both subjects there will be many who differ from his conclusions; but all may appreciate his exposition of the constant interaction of life and education. Though, as may be inferred, Mr. Holmes at times hits out a little wildly, he has struck some notable blows on behalf of what we believe to be the just claims of the children of this nation, and consequently of the generations which are to follow us."

+ — Ath 1914,2:74 Jl 18 900w

"A draft of fresh air into static pedagogy."

+ Ind 80:338 N 30 '14 30w

"Mr. Holmes has set us thinking. And whether we think for ourselves or whether we belong to that class which likes its thinking done for it, we ask to hear him again."

+ Sat R 118:19 Jl 4 '14 480w

"In this new volume Mr. Holmes has done very little practically to promote the interests of education."

— Spec 113:930 D 26 '14 1500w

HOLMES, EDMOND GORE ALEXANDER.

Tragedy of education. $1 Dutton

(Eng ed E13-1365)

"In an earlier book [What is and what might be] which outlined for us an educational Utopia this gifted English author proved conclusively that all his sympathies were with the new education. Now he is writing again, this time in a negative rather than constructive way. Instead of telling us what might be, he tells us what ought not to be. The dogmatism of present educational methods is sharply criticised and the contention made that it stunts rather than encourages the mental growth of the pupil."—Boston Transcript

Ath 1913,2:5 Jl 5 400w

Boston Transcript p22 F 4 '14 120w

"It would not be easy to speak with too great enthusiasm concerning this heart-searching little volume." T: P. Beyer

+ Dial 56:338 Ap 16 '14 1850w

"Mr. Holmes falls into the illusion universal among educational reformers of supposing that he is alone in desiring to cultivate in children spiritual independence and thoughtfulness."

+ — Nation 98:541 My 7 '14 350w

N Y Times 19:31 Ja 25 '14 80w

"The argument set out by Mr. Holmes is an argument of deep interest, treated by the author with much earnest attention."

+ Spec 110:1122 Je 28 '13 350w

HOLT, EDWIN BISSELL. Concept of consciousness. $3.25 Macmillan A14-1408

"This volume, from the pen of a Harvard professor, is the latest production of the school of philosophers known as the new realism. . . . Mr. Holt's theory of consciousness is an elaboration of the theory of James embodied in the essay 'Does consciousness exist?' which may be said to have begotten the new realism." (Nation) "The chapters,—'The renaissance of logic,' 'Memory, imagination, and thought,' and 'The emancipation of physiology from philosophy,'—are notable for their breadth of treatment and freedom from intellectual bias." (R of Rs)

"It is a brisk and pleasantly abusive piece of work, showing great vigour and independence of thought, and a considerable power of illustration and exposition—such a work, in fact, as the best of the younger American philosophers have now accustomed the world to expect of them. When all is said, the conclusions are original enough to be interesting, and the book stirs up the mind to think about some of the theories which we unconsciously take for facts. That is more than we can say of many books of philosophy."

+ Ath 1914,1:783 Je 6 600w

Reviewed by G. D. Hicks

— Hibbert J 13:422 Ja '15 450w

"Mr. Holt's special brand of realism belongs in general with the airy mathematical Platonism (in Mr. Holt rather Neoplatonic) of Mr. Bertrand Russell, whose magnificent manner he seems to imitate in his style. But he lacks the Jovian self-assurance of Mr. Russell, his tone is often petulant and shrill, and his repetitious emphasis upon the finally 'neutral' character of all 'entities' betrays a certain sense of hollowness."

— Nation 99:411 O 1 '14 850w

"While in the main this book is for the scholarly, for the person with the philosophical turn of mind, its dialectic is simply expressed, and the real lover of knowledge will be amply rewarded for reading it."

+ R of Rs 50:119 Jl '14 150w

HOLT, GEORGE EDMUND. Morocco, the bizarre. il *$2 (3c) McBride, Nast & co.
A14-1679

This intimate sketch of life in "sunset land" is especially authoritative on account of the author's years of official connection with Morocco. He has had opportunity to know the city of Tangier in all its striking aspects, to study the Moor in his native surroundings and to become familiar with his manner of living and with the peculiarities of his philosophy, superstitions, religion and oriental trickery. A closing chapter reflects upon the power of Islamism if it should be aroused to assert itself; if Europe should awaken it to action. Many fine illustrations accompany the text.

"After reading Bullard's 'Barbary coast' this seems light, owing partly to the humorous, often trivial and egotistical style."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:72 O '14

"If Mr. Holt is rather frequently facetious, he is as frequently shrewd. If he will permit us to say so, he does not really know his Morocco, or its people; but he has brought much common sense to bear, and this with his sympathetic disposition has led him to several conclusions which are worth noting."

+ — Ath 1914.1:848 Je 20 750w

"The author's style is most easy and agreeable."

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 29 '14 400w
Ind 79:31 J1 6 '14 50w

"On the side of facts observed, Mr. Holt offers much to inform and interest the reader, were it not injured in the telling by occasional descent into a cheap newspaper type of expression more often tiresome than humorous."

+ — Nation 99:20 J1 2 '14 500w

+ — Nature 94:3 S 3 '14 300w

"To its colorful picturing of curious and interesting scenes to be found nowhere else, its keen study of types and individuals, and its graphic portrayal of hidden byways and out-of-the-way corners it adds the salt of humor."

+ N Y Times 19:266 Je 14 '14 180w

+ — Outlook 107:370 Je 13 '14 130w

"Mr. Holt's reminiscences of his life in Morocco are very readable."

+ Spec 113:102 J1 18 '14 80w

HOLT, HENRY. On the cosmic relations. 2v
* $5 Houghton 14-20555

"By 'the cosmic relations' Mr. Holt means 'the interactions between soul and universe,' however those terms be conceived or defined; but he believes that both 'soul' and 'universe' signify in reality vastly more than modern science admits, he marshals a formidable array of empirical evidence to prove that they do, and gives in outline a tentative general synthesis or system of philosophy which has room for the new knowledge and yet essays to employ so far as possible principles accepted to-day. This new knowledge relates to the phenomena which the English society for psychical research has for the past thirty years made peculiarly its own."—Nation

"Into it Mr. Holt has put so much of his own personality that the reader—even if he is not primarily interested in psychical subjects—must find a great deal that is enjoyable, especially in the humanness of the book and its author's earnest search for truth." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 16 '15 1100w

"Serious inquirers . . . will find Mr. Holt's book the most notable contribution since the appearance of Myer's 'Human personality'; partly because it offers a convenient summary of the evidence for survival, including that accumulated since Myer's death, and by its acute criticism of rival theories makes any other interpretation of that evidence difficult, partly because it endeavors to adapt to the needs of the day a system of philosophy which has approved itself to many minds in all ages, and, last but not least, because of the sincerity which pervades it all."

+ Nation 100:53 Ja 14 '15 1650w

"The book is as wise, sane, unstrained, and thorough as anything yet written on these vague yet important subjects, and is also companionably human, owing to Mr. Holt's own personality, with which it is a privilege to be as closely associated as such a work permits. Whether or not one agrees with him, one is sure to like him, and sure to enjoy this clear exposition of his conception of life and its possible extension." Hildegard Hawthorne
+ N Y Times 20:1 Ja 3 '15 2050w

HOLT, WINIFRED. Beacon for the blind. il
* $2.50 Houghton 14-30983

A biography of Henry Fawcett, the blind postmaster-general of England. "He was accidentally blinded by a shot from his father's gun when he was only twenty-five, but he never complained, and after the first shock was over readjusted his life to meet the exigencies of the occasion, and from that time never allowed his blindness to prevent his steady advancement. He forced himself to walk, ride, skate, fish, and always talked as tho he could still see the beauties of nature that he loved so well, and his invariable cheerfulness, sunny spirit, and indomitable courage, prevented any one from pitying him." (Lit D)

"An inspiring record of an informal and personal kind, which adds, perhaps, few important facts to Leslie Stephen's more formal account of his public life."

+ A L A Bkl 11:218 Ja '15 +

"Well-written and fascinating biography."

+ Ind 81:101 Ja 18 '15 70w

"It is a wonderful story of a beautiful life."

+ Lit D 49:1016 N 21 '14 350w

+ N Y Times 20:47 F 7 '15 90w

"One of the most inspiring biographies that has been published in many a day."

+ R of Rs 50:753 D '14 170w

HOLTZ, FREDERICK LEOPOLD. Principles and methods of teaching geography. il
* $1.10 (1½c) Macmillan 13-18776

"This book is designed for the experienced teacher and for teachers in training. It presents an analysis of the nature of geography as a science, and of the pedagogical principles involved. Upon this is based the discussion of the special method of the teaching of geography. The treatment is rendered concrete by examples from classroom experience." (Preface) In his discussion of the content of geography as a school subject the author begins with home geography, and proceeds to physical, mathematical, political and descriptive geography, and the geography of industry and commerce.

"Written in a simple, interesting style, and distinguished everywhere by commonsense."

+ A L A Bkl 10:225 F '14

Ath 1913.2:622 N 29 40w

"As a guide to the teacher the book will prove of great value."

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 6 '13 110w

"No teacher of elementary geography can read this book without profiting thereby. There are some minor inaccuracies in the book . . . but in general the treatment is good, the advice sane, and the proffered suggestions helpful." D. W. Johnson

+ Educ R 48:408 N '14 370w

+ Nation 98:552 My 7 '14 230w

"Although it sometimes dwells unnecessarily on the perfectly obvious, and is not free from repetition, it is full of suggestions and practical hints. The chapters on cartography and the history of geography are the least satisfactory by reason of their brevity, but the book is a stimulating one, written by one who is evidently a geographer as well as a teacher of geography." R. N. R. B.

+ Nature 92:sup10 F 5 '14 200w

HOOD, MARY GOULD. For girls and the mothers of girls. il *$1 (3½c) Bobbs 14-5795

A book of simple and sane sex talks. The author begins with chapters on the beginnings of plant and animal life and leads up naturally to the life processes of higher forms and man. Sarah Louise Arnold of Simmons college writes an introduction, commending the book.

HOOD, MARY GOULD—Continued.

"One of the best of its kind, more explicit on the physical side though not less idealistic in feeling than Smith's 'Three gifts of life.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:396 Je '14 +

"The subject-matter of Dr. Hood's book is well presented, but the good effect is vitiated by a series of poor illustrations and bits of interpolated verse." Harriet Anderson

+ Survey 33:278 D 5 '14 270w

"An excellent book."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:162 Je '14 50w

HOOLE, CHARLES. New discovery of the old art of teaching school; copied from manuscript in the British library, with introd. and notes by Thiselton Mark. il $3. Barden 13-19432

"This book was first published in 1657, but written 23 years earlier. The present edition is due to the efforts of Thiselton Mark, of Manchester university, who has copied it from manuscripts in the British library and written an introduction and notes. . . . It is not likely that all modern teachers will agree with all that Mr. Hoole says. That is not to be expected; but every reader will be surprised to find that so much we have come to think new is, after all, some two hundred and fifty years old. Mr. Hoole writes from the point of view of one who is fully aware of the teacher's part in education and who is proud of his profession."—Chaut

"The book has qualities to make it worth while for the student of history and the student of the history of education and for the general reader." C. E. Rhodes

+ Chaut 72:301 D 13 '13 250w

"The book, of course, is an indispensable classic of educational literature and we rejoice to see it in this accessible form."

+ Educ R 47:422 Ap '14 80w

Spec 112:135 Ja 24 '14 450w

HOOPER, JOHN, and SHIRLEY, ALFRED J. Handcraft in wood and metal. il $3. Manual arts press (Eng ed A14-997)

"The authors 'have endeavored to show the possibilities of craftwork as an educational subject, and to briefly indicate its cultural aspects.' The historical notes on craftwork, Historic craftwork and its application to classwork and Tools: their early forms and historical development, are the titles of three all too brief chapters, that will commend the book to the more thoughtful and clear-eyed teachers of handcraft."—School Arts Magazine

Ath 1913,2:501 N 1 40w

"The text has been winnowed; it is all of value to the student, and to the teacher. No other book in this field presents the 'art' in handcraft so convincingly or so alluringly."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:144 O '14 160w

HOPE, WILLIAM HENRY ST. JOHN. Grammar of English heraldry. (Cambridge manuals of science and literature) il *40c (3c) Putnam 14-138

"This little book begins with the origin and grammar of heraldry, and proceeds with its subsequent history. It includes explanations of heraldic language, which was clear enough in early rolls and records, but became obscure and elaborate during the decadence of heraldry in the Tudor period."—Ath

+ Am Hist R 19:943 Jl '14 40w

+ A L A Bkl 11:28 S '14

"The volume is well illustrated, and should prove most valuable to beginners in the subject before they pass on to the documents suggested by the author in the last chapter."

+ Ath 1913,2:532 N 8 70w

"Though the smallest book on heraldry that has come to our notice, Mr. Hope's manual is of value out of all proportion to its size. The author makes wise suggestions regarding the modern use of heraldry and a revision of its archaic nomenclature."

+ Dial 56:510 Je 16 '14 90w

+ Eng Hist R 29:412 Ap '14 200w

HOPKINS, ALBERT ALLIS, and BOND, AL-
EXANDER RUSSELL, eds. Scientific American reference book. Ed. of 1914. il *$1.50 Munn & co. 13-22787

This is the fourth edition of this work. It has been brought up to date to 1914 and errors occurring in the 1912 edition have been corrected. Part 1, Statistical information has been compiled by Mr. Hopkins; Part 2, Scientific information, by Mr. Bond.

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '13 210w

"For condensed information on a wide variety of topics of scientific and popular interest this handbook is probably the best available."

+ Engin N 70:1001 N 13 '13 130w

"This happy faculty of presenting technical information in a form understandable by the layman, retaining the while a fair degree of accuracy, is well illustrated in the discussion of 'Time.'"

+ Engin Rec 68:648 D 6 '13 80w

"Those who have used the book can readily believe the assertion of the editors that they have found little to correct in their last issue; the changes are such as time brings about."

+ N Y Sun p6 N 1 '13 80w

"The graphic presentation of statistics in this volume is particularly successful."

+ R of Rs 49:125 Ja '14 110w

HOPKINS, JOHN CASTELL. French Canada and the St. Lawrence. il $3 (3c) Winston 14-305

French Canada comprises the province of Quebec. Mr. Hopkins who writes of it here has not attempted to provide a guide book to places and scenery. He has endeavored "to portray the conditions of the past in their association with the places of the present, rather than to provide an exact and consecutive record or a geographical study." (Preface) Unusually good illustrations are provided.

"An interesting historical and descriptive account of one phase of life in the Dominion."

+ Dial 55:528 D 16 '13 200w

"Much important information is presented in a compact form. The splendid photographs are real works of art."

+ N Y Sun p5 D 13 '13 100w

+ N Y Times 19:313 Jl 19 '14 200w

Outlook 106:154 Ja 17 '14 40w

HOPKINS, TIGHE. Romance of fraud. il *$2.50 Dutton

"Prisons and prison customs of the past, criminals and their ways, the desperate game that the felon plays against the constituted authorities of law and order, the triumphs of detective skill, the horrors of the Spanish inquisition, the butcheries of the Reign of terror, the history of Botany bay, the relation between crime and superstition—these and kindred themes are treated with an abundance of illustrative anecdote by Mr. Hopkins. In the sixteen chapters of the book none is more readable than that describing some of the time-killing devices of the incarcerated. . . . Mr. Hopkins devotes a chapter to the escape of Colonel Rose and his companions from Libby prison, a tale more fully told by American chroniclers, but not out of place as an instance of justifiable fraud on the prisoners' part."—Dial

"On the whole Mr. Hopkins has added something to the theory or the philosophy of crime—if there is such a thing—and for that much we are his debtors."

+ Boston Transcript p20 Ag 5 '14 400w

Dial 57:81 Ag 1 '14 260w

"The author is qualified by nature as well as learning for this kind of writing."

+ — Nation 98:729 Je 18 '14 550w

"There is nothing didactic about his book, nothing to deter the lover of the lightest reading. He has found, as he examined the records of the criminal and the prison side of life, many unusual facts and conditions, and he has had too keen a sense of the value of a story to permit them to run to waste."

+ N Y Times 19:354 Ag 23 '14 650w

+ Sat R 117:314 Mr 7 '14 320w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. Burbury Stoke. 2 $1.25 (1½c) Houghton 14-3176

A story of the kind that W. J. Hopkins knows best how to write; a story of boats and rocks and singing reefs, with a bit of romance added that is pleasant and whimsical and wholly satisfying. Indeed, there are three such romances in the present story: that of Felicia and Burbury Stoke which is definitely settled very near the beginning, shortly after Burbury appears on the scene; that of Peter, who tells the tale, which isn't definitely settled until the last chapter, and a third concerning two other young people which promises to settle itself later. Other characters who are actively important are Chief, a one-time fire horse who has not forgotten his early training, and the Emperor of the Germans, a dog who always seems ready for a fight, but never gets into one, and a very engaging foreigner whose name and nationality one never really learns.

"Readers who enjoyed 'The clammer' will be sure to like this."

+ A L A Bkl 10:325 Ap '14 †

+ Atlan 114:527 O '14 90w

"The average reader will put the book down with a feeling of pleasure tempered with exasperation. And he will be right. After all, a story-teller should have a story to tell." Mason Church

+ — Bookm 39:224 Ap '14 306w

"There was a spontaneity and freshness in 'The clammer' that the succession of novels which have led the way to 'Burbury Stoke' have lost for the author. Another disappointment in this story is the rush and tumble with which the tangle of the two Marys is cleared up. The author does not seem to know just what to do with his plot."

+ — Boston Transcript pS F 28 '14 250w

Nation 98:332 Mr 26 '14 250w

"It is a clever story, written 'with much artistic feeling for the uses of detail and skill in construction. The author has a pleasing, sly sense of humor, which he indulges chiefly in the unconscious revelations of his thoroughly New Englishish bachelor, and he gets into his narrative, without making any display of it, a wholesome tang of sea air."

+ N Y Times 19:82 F 22 '14 270w

+ Outlook 106:603 Mr 14 '14 70w

HOPKINS, WILLIAM JOHN. Doers. il $1 (3c) 2 Houghton 14-18304

Some nice little stories about a boy named David who was almost five years old. He had no other children to play with so he kept quite busy and happy playing by himself and watching the men who were building a new house in the field next to his own home. He made friends with them all, from the men who dug the cellar and the masons who laid the wall to the moving men who brought the furniture and things in their moving vans. Then when the new house was all finished and the excitement was all over, he found fun was just beginning, for a new little boy named Dick, who was almost five years old, too, came to live in it.

HOPPER, JAMES MARIE. Coming back with 3 the spitball. il $50c (4c) Harper 14-4065

Tom Carsey had been a star pitcher of the National league. For years he had pitched the Giants to victory. Then he began to slow up; and before he knew what was happening, he found himself a "has been" pitching for the "Prune pickers" of the Inland league in California. He lost heart and lost his nerve and drank more than was good for him. Then an Irish widow and a wooden-legged boy took him in hand. He started to practice; he learned to throw a new and marvelous ball with a wicked drop at the end of it; he "came back." That is all, but it makes a story that will delight every follower of the national game.

"It is a little tale with no particular point, unless ball players learn from it that to be good athletes they must be good men, and they knew that before."

— Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 150w

"Mr. Hopper tells the story in rapid, graphic, narrative style, and with thorough knowledge of the game and of its management as a business."

+ N Y Times 19:101 Mr 1 '14 270w

HORNADAY, WILLIAM TEMPLE. Wild life 2 conservation in theory and practice. il $1.50 (3c) Yale univ. press 14-21594

A series of lectures delivered before the Forestry school of Yale university. In a forceful little preface the author urges upon the universities of our country the duty of advocating and advancing methods of conserving its wild life, saying: "The training of a grand army of embryologists and morphologists is all very well; but what about saving from annihilation the species that our zoologists are studying?" The subjects of the lectures are: The extinction and preservation of valuable wild life; The economic value of our birds; The legitimate use of game birds and mammals; Animal pests and their rational treatment; The duty and power of the citizen in wild life protection. To these is added a chapter by Frederic C. Walcott on Private game preserves as factors in conservation, and there is a valuable bibliography, also prepared by Mr. Walcott, on wild birds with special reference to their preservation.

"It is really a full technical treatise which should be owned and constantly used by every man and woman who is alive to our needs in this matter." Theodore Roosevelt

+ Outlook 109:160 Ja 20 '15 650w

HORNE, CHARLES SILVESTER. Romance 2 of preaching; with an introd. by C: R. Brown, and a biographical sketch by Howard A. Bridgman. $1.25 Revell 14-16564

A series of lectures delivered before the divinity students of Yale university. "In successive lectures Mr. Horne reviews the romance of preaching in the Apostolic age; in the royalty of the pulpit as illustrated by Athanasius and Chrysostom; in such rulers of peoples as Savonarola, Calvin, and Knox; in such founders of freedom as John Robinson and the Pilgrim fathers; in the passion of evangelism seen in Wesley and Whitefield; finally, the romance of modern preaching. Here Mr. Horne rises to an impassioned climax. He sees that we are on the eve of new applications of Christ's teaching, destined to call into existence a truly Christian civilization, in which poverty shall become extinct, militarism end, and the Church's early ideal of internationalism be realized." (Outlook)

+ A L A Bkl 11:196 Ja '15

"Apart from its nobility of intent, and its practical common-sense, this book exercises a special charm by virtue of its grace and vigor of literary style, its rich and apt quotation, and its complete freedom from sentimental gush. The most hardened skeptic on the subject of divine inspiration could scarcely doubt either the wisdom or the practicability of its social philosophy."

+ Nation 99:503 O 22 '14 500w

"Inspiring volume."

+ Outlook 108:902 D 16 '14 350w

HORNUNG, ERNEST WILLIAM. Crime doctor. 9 il $1.35 (2c) Bobbs 14-13374

Mr. Hornung has created a new type of hero who rather offsets his ingenious "amateur cracksmen." In the eight stories of the volume

HORNUNG, ERNEST WILLIAM—Continued.
there figures a crime doctor whose belief in the theory that crime is a disease and that the wrong doer is a lunatic has impelled him to devise medical and surgical treatment for the correction of the mental deficiency of criminals. His experiments, involving a good deal of detective work, are as diverting, even exciting, as they are scientifically interesting.

"The stories are by no means of equal merit, the best being 'One possessed,' a fine effort in the ghastly. 'A schoolmaster abroad' is good, but the rest do not rise above mediocrity—being saved from the banal by the hand of a practised writer."

+ Ath 1914,2:sup98 J1 18 90w

"Collection of ingenious and diverting yarns." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:96 S '14 670w

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 26 '14 250w

"The half-dozen stories are sufficiently readable to beguile pleasantly an idle hour."

+ Nation 99:194 Ag 13 '14 300w

"The crime doctor" has a value outside the fulfillment of its ostensible purpose of providing lively entertainment."

+ N Y Times 19:347 Ag 16 '14 680w

"The idea is a good one, but the stories themselves are far from being equal to 'Raffles.'" + Outlook 107:877 Ag 8 '14 60w

"Just a wee bit more of simplicity of style might be asked for. The reader who likes stories of action does not care to be halted in his enjoyment to unravel obscure sentences." J. Marchand

+ Pub W 86:808 S 19 '14 500w

"Amusing, but far inferior to the writer's earlier work."

+ Spec 113:368 S 12 '14 17w

"Mr. Hornung's somewhat involved style and tendency to soliloquizing often takes the edge off the thrills that should go with his story."

+ Springfield Republican p5 J1 30 '14 420w

HORTON, EDITH. Group of famous women; stories of their lives. il 50c Heath 14-7502

"A few of the biographies deal with women whose stories are part of the history of the world—Joan of Arc, Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, and Queen Victoria. The others represent types of American women, individuals who have shared in all phases of the development of our own country. The list includes Dolly Madison, Lucretia Mott, Mary Lyon, Dorothea Dix, Margaret Fuller, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Maria Mitchell, Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe, Susan B. Anthony, Mary A. Livermore, Clara Barton, Harriet Hosmer, Louisa M. Alcott, and Frances E. Willard. The final chapter tells, with many anecdotes and brief personal sketches, what American women have done 'On the battlefield and in pioneer life.'"—N Y Times

"Will be specially helpful in work with foreign girls, as presenting through concrete examples, a standard of American womanhood."

+ A L A Bkl 11:127 N '14

"Intended for the use of sixth, seventh, and eighth year classes in the schools this little book will afford a needed and very commendable aid in the teaching of history."

+ N Y Times 19:248 My 24 '14 450w

HOSKING, W. H. South African year book, 1914, with a commercial map. *$3.50 Dutton

14-30867

"South Africa has hitherto had no year-book devoted to it, and Mr. Hosking tells us that, as a working journalist, he has often felt the need of such a collation of information about the Union as he here undertakes to supply."—Spec

"Very complete and compiled from official sources."

+ A L A Bkl 11:101 N '14

Dial 58:89 F 1 '15 80w

"The pages devoted to Races and Languages appear to us to be inadequate, and information concerning the Boer element in South Africa is scanty. Doubtless, these and other deficiencies which use of the book may reveal will be supplied in subsequent editions. Meanwhile, 'The South African year book' will form a welcome addition to the reference library."

+ Nation 99:167 Ag 6 '14 180w

"Mr. Hosking has produced what seems, so far as we can test it, to be a trustworthy, and will certainly be a useful, compilation."

+ Spec 112:963 Je 6 '14 110w

HOUSDEN, C. E. Riddle of Mars. *$1.20 Longmans

"To meet the doubt certain astronomers have thrown on Professor Lowell's assertions and his photographs and observations the testimony of another scientist working in a different way is necessary. This is the purpose of Mr. Housden's book. Instead of starting with the peculiar markings to be seen upon the planet, he starts at the other end of the problem, merely taking as his thesis the colorings of the planet that have been granted for many years—the white snow caps at the poles, now generally conceded, the ochre streaks and the blue-green areas that join the snow caps, and that cover a large portion of the surface of the planet. . . . At the time of the Martian summer the snow caps melt, and the blue-green areas are flooded. Mr. Housden explains how by a process of engineering such as that by which Coolgardie, Australia, receives water, this water might be conserved and used for maintaining the vegetation."—Boston Transcript

"The book may be considered as an answer to another criticism made by Wallace, that the engineering feat would be too great for any but a dense and intelligent population, and from this point of view it may be considered a reasonable contribution to the Martian problem."

+ Ath 1914,1:858 Je 20 500w

+ Boston Transcript p19 Ag 12 '14 500w

Nature 93:294 My 21 '14 270w

N Y Times 19:407 S 27 '14 80w

Sat R 118:sup2 N 14 '14 1850w

"Mr. Housden's argument will be of great interest to all who wish to believe in the plurality of worlds."

+ Spec 112:sup1066 Je 27 '14 120w

HOUSE of deceit. *$1.35 (1c) Holt 14-17621

The story of the rise and fall in politics of Maurice Sangster, one of those young men from the provinces who come to London with the conviction that they are "born to make a conflagration of the Thames." Altho his novel is political in its main outlines, the author's chief interest seems to center on certain aspects of modern religion. Maurice to begin with is a nonconformist; he marries Phoebe Champness, daughter of a nonconformist family of the strictest type, but as he advances in his political career he comes under other influences, both Anglican and Catholic.

"There is no mistaking the inherent force of this story any more than its sincerity and its importance as a picture of the social and political conditions of England to-day." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 40:438 D '14 480w

"The book is really full of truth and humor, but unfortunately it bites, as well. The author's satirical circumlocution, moreover, has prevented us from clearly understanding whether Maurice was a humbug at the outset, or merely developed into one. With this exception, the unknown has written carefully and effectively, and could write even more effectively if he would not try so laboriously to be reputed clever."

+ Boston Transcript p22 O 14 '14 500w

"As a political pamphlet this novel is a bitter satire upon the hypocrisy and nothingness of modern English liberalism. Its picture of Catholicism is an unfair and stupid caricature."

+ Cath World 100:686 F '15 240w

"Whoever the author may be, he knows the situation into which he has put Maurice Sangster, and he describes it in an admirable, though not at all a precious style." Lucian Cary

+ Dial 57:341 N 1 '14 330w

"It is a book of possibilities, much discussion, plenty of ideas, and little satisfaction."

+ Lit D 50:158 Ja 23 '15 170w

"A story which commands the reader's respectful interest—at least till near the three-quarter post."

+ Nation 99:552 N 5 '14 370w

"All of which might be interesting were Maurice Sangster a real person."

+ N Y Times 19:448 O 18 '14 220w

HOUSTON, ALEXANDER CRUIKSHANK.
Studies in water supply. il *$1.60 Macmillan
A14-1051

"Houston, the bacteriologist and director of water examination of the Metropolitan water board of London, has produced a book in which he has explained his views as to the extent of the danger to be apprehended from polluted river water and how that danger is avoided without filtration by London. . . . The American arguments . . . which seek to account for much of the excessive prevalence of typhoid in American cities as caused by polluted surface water are declared to be inconclusive and not in consonance with ascertainable facts. . . . There are eleven short chapters. The topics include water and disease; the financial value of pure water; sterilization processes; storage in relation to purification; the question of abstraction; sources of water; bacterial methods."—Science

A L A Bkl 10:397 Je '14

"The material in this book is presented in an attractive way; much of it is new and all of it is valuable. Altogether it is a very satisfactory addition to the library of those who are interested in the quality of public water-supplies." G: W. Miller

+ Engin N 71:877 Ap 16 '14 900w

"The more technical parts of the book will chiefly interest experts in the sanitary treatment of potable water, but by far the greater part of what Dr. Houston has written may well interest all intelligent persons who are users of public water supplies."

+ Nation 99:557 N 5 '14 750w

"The author is to be congratulated, not only upon the good work to which the volume bears testimony, but also upon bringing it together in this monograph, and presenting it in a condensed and readable form."

+ Nature 93:133 Ap 9 '14 500w

Reviewed by G: A. Soper

Science n s 39:873 Je 12 '14 350w

"Valuable monograph."

+ Spec 112:sup679 Ap 25 '14 150w

HOWARD, CLARE MACLLELEN. English travellers of the renaissance. il *$2.50 Lane
14-2021

"The main business of Miss Howard's book is a review of Elizabethan travel-manuals, those curious little works on the art of journeying which preach the duty of foreign travel to a gentleman who would be what Anthony Wood calls 'a compleat person.' . . . The author's survey of her subject begins where, for the reader of fiction, Charles Reade left it in 'The cloister and the hearth.' She takes up the tale of travel at the period when pilgrimages had become largely a matter of business or a source of dissipation, as Erasmus roundly declared, and were becoming the means of satisfying that desire for knowledge which was the chief characteristic of the renaissance."—Ath

+ Ath 1914.1:127 Ja 24 400w

"The book is readable as well as valuable." Graham Perry

+ Bookm 38:677 F '14 1050w

Reviewed by H: C. Shelley

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 29 '13 500w

"The reader of this book is rewarded with a clear understanding of the conditions of society in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Though it is academic in the sense that great care has been given to accuracy, to authority and detail, the style lacks the usual stiffness of the thesis, and reads delightfully." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 F 14 '14 1000w

"Miss Howard has done well the task she set herself."

+ Lit D 48:923 Ap 18 '14 200w

+ Nation 99:382 S 24 '14 280w

"'English travellers of the renaissance' has nothing in common with attempts to make a little romantic or humorous capital out of a slender historic theme. It is breezy, accurate, not pedantic, but adequately respectful in tone toward the more serious aspects of the subjects of which it treats."

+ No Am 199:787 My '14 680w

"Very interesting book. The book has bearing on old English education, old English social life, and old English politics."

+ Outlook 106:426 F 21 '14 170w

"A delightful book of travel of an age when travel was a kind of difficult but very exciting thing."

+ Sat R 116:690 N 29 '13 180w

HOWARD, GEORGE ELLIOTT. Family and marriage; an analytical reference syllabus. pa *75c Univ. of Neb. A14-586

In this syllabus, which has been used as a basis for college courses, the author makes a very full analysis of the family and related subjects. He begins with the various theories as to the origin of the family, takes up The rise of the marriage contract, Early history of divorce, The rise of free marriage, Rise of civil marriage, etc., and proceeds to the very modern problems of the family as affected by industrial conditions, child welfare, eugenics, education for parenthood. References are provided for each topic, and there is a general bibliography at the end.

HOWARD, GEORGE ELLIOTT. Present political questions; an analytical reference syllabus. pa 75c G: E. Howard, Lincoln, Neb. 13-3332

The author has prepared a syllabus on seventeen topics of present-day interest. Each topic is subdivided, with bibliographical references given for each subdivision, and with a longer list of references at the end for the topic as a whole. At the end of the syllabus there is a general bibliography of some sixty pages. Direct legislation, The American party system, The direct primary, Equal suffrage, and Commission government are some of the topics.

"The syllabus bears evidence of patient and careful work and will no doubt be of considerable value to both teachers and students."

+ Am Pol Sci R 8:102 F '14 130w

HOWARD, GEORGE FITZALAN BRONSON.
Red light of Mars; or, A day in the life of the devil: a philosophical comedy. (Modern drama ser.) *$1.25 Kennerley 13-26586

"The good angel of [the play] is our old friend the Devil, who now figures as a benevolent agent engaged in the work of preparing mankind for ultimate translation to a loftier sphere of existence in Mars. The personages include a brilliant young chemist, who believes himself on the verge of the discovery of the secret of immortality; a multi-millionaire, who would bribe him to devote his science to mere money-making purposes; an anarchic socialist who believes in bombs as the sole means of social regeneration; a cultivated widow who loves the millionaire, but will not marry him because she detests his business principles and methods, and her daughter, a frivolous, selfish girl, who refuses to marry the chemist, who worships her, unless he will abandon philanthropic experiment to earn money to keep her in fashionable luxury."—Nation

HOWARD, G. F. BRONSON.—Continued.

"An exceedingly clever skit, in which a number of old theatrical ideas are employed with notable ingenuity. It is not only very amusing reading, but is admirably adapted to effective dramatic representation. Although in the nature of extravaganza, it deals vigorously and satirically with many questions of present interest and tells a good human story."

+ Nation 98:409 Ap 9 '14 550w

"It is an unfortunate hodge-podge, a signal instance of the penalty one pays for trying to be too original. Yet there are plenty of good lines; to adapt Macaulay, the same words used differently might have made a play."

— N Y Times 19:209 Ap 26 '14 400w

HOWARD, KATHARINE. Candle flame. *$1
Sherman, French & Co. 14-9946

A short play for reading only. "On the surface 'Candle flame' is a pleasing fantasy of carefully wrought word-music; in reality it is a mystic allegory of deep spiritual significance. Genevieve and the revengeful 'Woman,' who meet in the Druid wood at the shrine of the Mother of God, seem to typify the two women incarnate in the race memory of every woman,—Lilith and Eve." (R of Rs)

"There seems to be little meaning in the whole play."

— Cath World 100:261 N '14 100w

"In 'Candle flame,' Miss Howard has not reached the level of 'Eve.' The playlet, nevertheless, has as much prettiness as its fragility will support." O. W. Firkins

+ Nation 100:140 F 4 '15 24w

"Those who know and love the prophetic books of William Blake will sincerely appreciate 'Candle flame.'"

+ R of Rs 50:250 Ag '14 200w

HOWE, DANIEL WAIT. Political history of secession, to the beginning of the American civil war. *$3.50 (1½c) Putnam 14-19187

The author traces the development of the causes of the civil war—of which slavery was the chief, but not the only, cause. His first chapter is a discussion of the Entrance of slavery into American politics. Slavery became an active political factor during the administration of Monroe, when the territory added to the union by the Louisiana purchase became a matter of contention between the slavery and anti-slavery forces. From this point the author follows the growth of antagonism up to the election of Lincoln and the opening events of his administration, culminating in the call to arms.

"It will be of value as a supplementary work to text-books less exhaustive."

+ Ind 80:244 N 16 '14 50w

"It is readable, yet shows the care the author has taken to make his narrative truthful and accurate, noting and discussing the causes of dissension as they arose in both sections."

+ N Y Times 19:523 N 29 '14 330w

HOWE, JULIA WARD. Julia Ward Howe and the woman suffrage movement: a selection from her speeches and essays with introd. and notes by her daughter, Florence Howe Hall. il *$1 Page 13-25963

"In her brief introduction—a summary of Mrs. Howe's work for women—Mrs. Hall tells how her mother first became interested in the woman suffrage movement, when she 'was nearing the half-century mark.' . . . The essays selected as defining most clearly Julia Ward Howe's position in the modern feminist movement are 'The position of women in Plato's "Republic,"' 'The change in the position of women,' describing her own work and experiences; 'The duty of women,' written when she was eighty-three years old; and 'What the nineteenth century has done for women.' Her speeches from which selections are made were given at various suffrage hearings before the legislature of Massachusetts, and include the one so widely famous, 'Let there be light.'"—Boston Transcript

A L A Bkl 10:271 Mr '14

"All the excerpts breathe that high patriotism and altruism which found immortal expression in 'The battle hymn of the Republic.'"

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ja 7 '14 480w

+ Lit D 48:842 Ap 11 '14 120w

"The woman suffragists will be grateful to Mrs. Hall for the admirable exposition that she makes of her famous mother's attachment to their cause, and of the work done in support of it."

+ N Y Times 19:69 F 15 '14 270w

HOWE, MALVERD ABIJAH. Foundations: a short text-book on ordinary foundations, including a brief description of the methods used for difficult foundations. il *$1.25 Wiley 14-15394

"In this book the author has treated in an elementary manner both the fundamental principles involved in the design of foundations and also standard methods of carrying out the actual work. Special treatment is given of the footing courses of structures, these being considered apart from the foundation proper."—Nature

A L A Bkl 11:202 Ja '15

"The book is elementary, concise and will be of some use to the student—though a monostich on so broad a subject can be of but doubtful value." C. S. Rindsfoos

+ Engin N 72:1044 N 19 '14 420w

"Many important topics are briefly and, of course, very inadequately touched upon. The text and numerous illustrations are clear and pleasing." F. H. Constant

+ Engin Rec 71:117 Ja 23 '15 250w

"The book possesses the merit of presenting a fairly complete exposition of a rather difficult subject without unnecessary profusion of detail, and will be welcomed by many students who desire more information regarding foundations than is to be found in the text-books dealing with the theory and design of structures generally."

+ Nature 94:449 D 24 '14 380w

"Very brief and presents nothing new, but is concise and practical."

+ Pittsburgh 20:19 Ja '15 40w

HOWE, MARK ANTONY DE WOLFE. Boston symphony orchestra: an historical sketch. il *$2 (4c) Houghton 14-22628

The author, who writes as "an editor and annalist" not as a musical critic, tells the story of the Boston symphony orchestra from the time of its founding in 1881 under Georg Henschel to the present, with Karl Muck serving as conductor. A brief preliminary chapter sketches the life of Henry Lee Higginson, the founder and supporter of the orchestra.

"A happy balance is observed between statistics and illustration in letters, interviews, and anecdotes, making the book readable and useful in libraries where local or musical interest warrants its purchase."

+ A L A Bkl 11:207 Ja '15

"The present volume shows an admirable grasp of its subject."

+ Dial 57:507 D 16 '14 200w

"Several valuable appendices have been contributed." H. T. Finck

+ Nation 100:88 Ja 21 '15 1150w

"His narrative is authoritative as well as readable."

+ R of Rs 51:249 F '15 220w

HOWE, PERCIVAL P. Dramatic portraits. *$1.50 (2c) Kennerley A14-1153

Those who expect to find personalities pictured in this series of studies of dramatic authors will be disappointed. Mr. Howe prefaces his work with a quotation from Butler's "Way of all flesh"—"Every man's work, whether it be literature or music or pictures or architecture or anything else, is always a portrait of himself"—and such portraits as he gives are only those which are reflected from the work of the men of whom he writes. The dramatists whose work he studies are Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, Oscar Wilde, Barrie, Bernard Shaw, St. John Hankin, Granville Barker, Hubert H. Davies, and John Galsworthy.

A L A Bkl 11:111 N '14

Ath 1913,2:sup398 O 11 50w

"When he warms up to his subject Mr. Howe provides very entertaining reading, and his dogmatizings are consistently healthy, suffering, in fact, from their excess of energy."

+ — Ath 1913,2:428 O 13 120w

+ Boston Transcript p6 J1 11 '14 620w

"The essays do not differ in plan from ordinary dramatic criticism, but excel most of it in scholarship, in felicity of style, in aptness of quotation and illustration, in ingenuity of special pleading, and general consistency."

+ — Nation 99:442 O 8 '14 1550w

"He talks delightfully about our principal dramatic authors; and he talks the best kind of sense—sense tempered with taste and a feeling for all that matters and all that is sincere in the people he discusses. As pleasant chat about dramatic figures of the day this book of studies is quite delightful. But these are not dramatic portraits. At most they are silhouettes. Mr. Howe must take care that he does not become too nice. We sometimes feel he would be a better critic if he were less fastidious."

+ — Sat R 116:531 O 25 '13 230w

HOWELLS, WILLIAM DEAN. Seen and unseen at Stratford-on-Avon: a fantasy *$1 (2½c) Harper 14-9949

Mr. Howells visited Stratford during the Shakespeare festival season, and there met the disembodied shades of Shakespeare himself and his friend Francis Bacon. In the course of many conversations with these two he is put right in the matter of Anne and the second-best bed, and of course the Baconian heresy is successfully controverted, with Bacon as the chief witness.

+ A L A Bkl 11:69 O '14

"The whole book is captivating from beginning to end, and will long be memorable because he actually makes Shakespeare and Bacon live for us in their own thoughts and opinions." W: S. E.

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 16 '14 1700w

+ — Cath World 100:550 Ja '15 750w

"Mr. Howells has seldom if ever written in happier vein than in this fantasy."

+ Dial 56:470 Je 1 '14 300w

"As amusing, human and sympathetic as most of Howells."

+ Ind 78:324 My 25 '14 40w

"The little volume is a bewitching literary gem, whose only fault is its brevity."

+ Lit D 49:519 S 19 '14 120w

"The book would have been an agreeable book even if no ghosts had come from the grave—but I am glad they did come." E. L. Pearson

+ Nation 98:630 My 28 '14 900w

"It is a delicious fantasy, and Mark Twain himself could not have given it a droller realism. Mr. Howells mingles fact with fancy. Not all their remarks are intended merely to amuse the reader; there is a definite purpose back of Mr. Howells's excellent fooling. He succeeds not in destroying the Baconian heresy, but in making it appear, more than ever, an absurd and negligible thing, and he succeeds—a higher achievement—in accomplishing what a certain brilliant English journalist has long and vainly attempted; he makes the mysterious drama-turge step from the obscuring clouds of time and show himself in the likeness of mankind." Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 19:225 My 10 '14 1550w

"The story of Shakespeare's life is told with such an air of casual reference that one is not conscious that he is reading one of the most intelligent biographies of the poet that has appeared."

+ Outlook 108:281 S 30 '14 1300w

Spec 112:1041 Je 20 '14 140w

HOWES, BENJAMIN A. Building by a builder: practical and economical considerations for the man about to build. il *$1.20 (2½c) Doubleday 14-30395

A handbook for those about to build, with chapters on: How to approach the question of building; Choosing your house; The unburnable house; Those plans; From the ground up; Arteries of the house; Details and their value; The building committee; Counsels of perfection. A few clear photographs are reproduced to illustrate points in the text.

+ A L A Bkl 10:397 Je '14

+ — Engin N 71:1163 My 21 '14 300w

"A work that will appeal to a very wide audience; for its author speaks with the authority given by broad experience and without a trace of bias in relation to matters that must interest all who are concerned with building operations, whether as owners of dwellings small or large, or as responsible members of building committees."

+ Nation 98:462 Ap 23 '14 280w

"Written in a pleasant, familiar style, and interesting even if a little indefinite."

+ Pittsburgh 19:306 J1 '14 50w

"The book should be of real help to anyone about to undertake a house-building operation, however modest."

+ R of Rs 49:765 Je '14 100w

HOYT, REV. ARTHUR STEPHEN. Vital elements of preaching. *$1.50 (2½c) Macmillan 14-16566

A volume made up of a series of lectures delivered to the senior class of Auburn seminary, and during the summer term of 1912 to the students of the University of Chicago. The lectures are concerned with the psychology of preaching, and all aim to give some answer to the question: How shall we speak so as to help men into the largest life? Contents: The called man; The open door; The vision of man; The secret of the heart; The human touch; The ministry of comfort; The children's portion; A man's gospel; The preacher's growth; The preacher and his age; Simplicity of speech; The cost of preaching; The sense of message; Positive preaching; The Master's method.

"This volume compares favorably with his preceding books on 'The work of preaching' and 'The preacher.'"

+ Bib World 44:429 D '14 60w

"These lectures will be welcomed by all interested in preaching."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 16 '15 320w

"The book is one which, on account of its spiritual breadth and evident sincerity, every student for the ministry might study with profit."

+ Nation 100:120 Ja 28 '15 300w

"Prof. Hoyt has not said many new things in this volume, but he has stated old truths with a new voice and from the viewpoint of his own personality and experience; and it is good for men long past their seminary days to read such volumes for their inspirational value if not for informational results. There is a literary touch to these lectures that will make them interesting to other besides preachers."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Ja 7 '15 450w

HUBBARD, THOMAS O'BRIEN, and TURNER, CHARLES CYRIL. Boys' book of aeroplanes; with a chapter on model aeroplanes, by E. W. Twining. il *$1.75 Stokes A14-1962

This book, written by two practical aviators, "gives theoretical and practical instruction in all that pertains to flying in the heavier than air machines, from the building of the aeroplane to the intricate study of air currents; and is written so that any boy of normal intelligence can understand it. The authors approach the use of technical terms by easy stages, so that while at first only a little of the jargon appears in quotation marks and is explained by the context, yet as the reader progresses he comes to acquire gradually all the vocabulary." (Ind)

HUBBARD, T. O., and TURNER, C. C.—Cont.
 A L A Bkl 11:127 N '14
 "A convenient book of reference."
 + Ind 77:169 F 2 '14 170w
 "Is unusually well done and will be found fully as valuable for general use as for youth."
 + N Y Sun p5 D 13 '13 110w
 "An excellently and accurately scientific book."
 + N Y Times 18:756 D 21 '13 140w
 + R of Rs 49:381 Mr '14 140w
 Spec 109:sup938 D 7 '12 120w

HUCKEL, REV. OLIVER. Richard Wagner:
 the man and his work. il *75c (2½c) Crowell
 14-30422
 Oliver Huckel, well known for his expositions of Wagner's music-dramas, has given in this little book, which is made up in uniform style with those volumes, a brief outline sketch of the composer's life and work. In Part 1 he gives
 The outline of the life; in Part 2 he presents Characteristics and estimates; and in Part 3 he describes briefly the great music-dramas.

+ A L A Bkl 10:397 Je '14
 Chaut 72:664 Ap 25 '14 70w

"The work is characterized by simplicity of treatment and accuracy of statement, and is well written and beautifully printed."
 + Ind 78:216 My 4 '14 70w

"The few lines devoted to Wagner's first wife and his relations with Cosima von Bülow give what seems to be a deliberately false impression.
 In other matters relating to Wagner's views on philosophy and politics the uncritical position of the thick-and-thin Wagnerite is accepted. That, too, is the point of view from which his artistic theories and his practical embodiment of them in the music dramas are estimated."
 — N Y Times 19:317 Jl 19 '14 220w

HUDSON, CHARLES. History of the town of Lexington, Middlesex county, Massachusetts.
 2v il *$10 Houghton 13-11709

"Sparing neither labor nor expense, the Lexington historical society has issued a revised and enlarged edition of Charles Hudson's history of that famous town, continuing the chronicle from 1868, when Hudson dropped it, to 1913, the close of the second century of Lexington's history as an incorporated town. In its present form this history fills two octavo volumes, the first being devoted to the history proper and running to nearly six hundred pages, the second confining itself to genealogies and falling only three pages short of nine hundred."—Dial

"The revision has been thorough and the historical method closely followed. The work is one of the best of its kind that has been issued in recent years."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Jl 23 '13 550w
 + Dial 56:471 Je 1 '14 230w

"Both in content and in appearance the issue stands among the first on local history."
 + Nation 98:88 Ja 22 '14 350w

HUDSON, O. F. Iron and steel. (Outlines of industrial chemistry) il *$2 Van Nostrand
 A13-2062

This book, designed as an introductory textbook for engineers and metallurgists, "provides in simple language descriptions of the various irons and steels, their modes of manufacture, and their chemical and mechanical properties.
 An appendix offers an interesting section on 'Corrosion,' by Dr. Bengough, the editor of the series." (Ath)

A L A Bkl 10:98 N '13
 Ath 1913,1:287 Mr 8 80w

"It is written in a clear and concise manner, and deals very ably with recent scientific investigations and theories regarding the constitution of iron and steel."

+ Nature 92:4 S 4 '13 250w

HUDSON, WILLIAM HENRY. Man Napoleon.
 il *$1.50 (3c) Crowell 14-15158

The author tells the story of Napoleon's personal life. He says: "His biography is, indeed, part of history. But so far as possible it will here be disengaged from history, which will be treated only as the background and setting of his career." The story begins with an account of his childhood and youth, early struggles and early successes. Then come chapters on: Napoleon and Josephine; The expedition to Egypt;
 The first consul; Napoleon I, Emperor of the French; Napoleon and Marie Louise; Russia and after; Elba and the hundred days; Waterloo and St. Helena; Napoleon the man. The book is illustrated with sixteen pictures in color by Baron Myrbach.

"The chief merit of Mr. Hudson's book is its combination of impartiality with vivid interest—a blend not common in biography."

+ Dial 57:461 D 1 '14 120w

"His narrative is candid and judicial throughout."

+ Nation 99:719 D 17 '14 100w
 N Y Times 20:1 Ja 3 '15 160w

"The narrative is condensed and young readers will find it an excellent résumé of the essential facts in Napoleon's career, with only so much history as is required for a background."

+ R of Rs 50:753 D '14 120w

HUEFFER, OLIVER MADOX (JANE WAR-
 DLE). Hunt the slipper. *$1.25 (1½c) Lane
 14-11361

A lively story told in the first person by several people. "The object of the tale is somehow or other to find Sir Edward Fanhope's lost granddaughter, to provide young Ivo Talboys with a wife, to rescue Kitty Williamson and give a home to her child and at last to marry her to a charming burglar, by the way to reform the burglar, and finally to bring a shiftless young Englishman back to industry and his wife's forgiveness. There is also another 'thread of incident' about a rich manufacturer and a corrupt politician, and there is something about a family disgrace." (N Y Times) New York furnishes the scenes for many of the hero's adventures.

"The author is more successful with his men than his women, for one or two of the latter are a trifle wooden; but as a whole, the book is a pleasant piece of work."

+ Ath 1913,2:12 Jl 5 100w

"Mr. Hueffer has the fortune to see nearly always a situation humorously, and he adds the art of giving just the touch to it that renders it humorous to the reader."

+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 12 '14 150w

"The plot is flimsy, but is ingeniously worked out."

+ Nation 99:135 Jl 30 '14 270w

"Humor the book has; some characterization it undoubtedly possesses; of plot it has none."

+ N Y Times 19:299 Jl 5 '14 400w

HUGHAN, JESSIE WALLACE. Facts of socialism. *75c Lane 13-23606

"Dr. Hughan has set for herself the task of presenting in simple form 'the data as to the movement in our country calling itself socialism, its relation to Marx, labor unionism, the family,
 the church, the state; its ultimate program, its immediate platform, its leaders, organization and present policy.' She has done this well and has written an interesting little volume defending socialism. Each chapter is followed by a short list of suggested readings and a number of suggested topics for reports and discussions."
 —Ann Am Acad

"Like many other writers on this subject the author sees only the darker side of industrial life. The book will probably be of more value to the general reader who wishes a guide for his own private study than to the college student."
 P. L. Vogt

+ Am Econ R 4:432 Je '14 200w

"Almost a handbook on the subject."

+ A L A Bkl 10:225 F '14 *

"As a book for beginners and as text book for courses in socialism it should prove valuable."

+ Ann Am Acad 52:231 Mr '14 100w

"A very excellent little study book."

+ Boston Transcript p11 D 13 '13 180w

J Pol Econ 22:716 J1 '14 160w

"Partisan but unprejudiced and not too technical for the average reader."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:56 Mr '14 30w

HUGHES, ARTHUR LLEWELYN. Photo-electricity. il *$2 Putnam A14-2891

"An interesting and full résumé of researches made during the last few years into the nature of the photo-electric effect. . . . The book relates to the following topics; Ionization of gases and vapors by ultra-violet light; the velocities of emission of photo-electrons; the total photo-electric effect; the photo-electric effect as a function of the frequency and state of polarization of the light; photo-electric properties of thin metallic films; photo-electric effects of non-metallic elements and inorganic compounds; photo-electric effects of dyes, fluorescent and phosphorescent substances; positive rays produced by light; sources of light used in photo-electric experiments."—Elec World

"The new facts imparted by it are interesting, if not very numerous."

+ Ath 1911:1598 Ap 25 730w

"The book will be of interest to students of optical physics and of photometry. It is clearly written and shows the mark of careful study."

+ Elec W 63:1459 Je 20 '14 150w

"The account of photo-electric phenomena given by Dr. Hughes is lucid and concise."

+ Nature 94:278 N 12 '14 230w

Reviewed by Ernest Merritt

+ Science n s 40:597 O 23 '11 480w

HUGHES, RUPERT. Last rose of summer. il *50c (2c) Harper 14-18648

A little story of the long-delayed romance of an elderly spinster. Deborah Larrabee had never been pretty and so had missed all the joys of girlhood. Her girl friends had all married and with their growing families about them were pitying her in her unlovely and lonely middle age. The change in Debby's fortune came when she lost her money and had to go to work. New interests outside her self brought color into Debby's cheek; whitening hair began to soften her harsh features. So it happened that while Josie and Birdaline, her old friends, continued to grow portly and old, Debby grew young; and in due time came the lover and the love story denied her in youth.

"The story is told with skill and humor."

+ N Y Times 19:517 N 22 '14 200w

"A sympathetic little story."

+ Springfield Republican p5 F 11 '15 150w

HUGHES, RUPERT. What will people say? il *$1.35 (1c) Harper 14-7563

A story of New York's fastest society, in which the one standard of morality and the one guide for conduct seems to be What will people say? Harvey Forbes, a young army officer, returns from years of exile in the Philippines to find New York in the throes of the tango mania. He is shocked and horrified at the sights he sees, but promptly becomes a victim himself and furthermore falls madly in love with one of the fastest and most daring of the set into which he is introduced. Disaster is evident from the beginning for his income is only the salary of an army officer. The girl marries a man of wealth and then gives way to her love for Forbes. When her husband, discovering her infidelity, has stabbed her, she dies trying to keep the truth from her servants, mindful to the end of what people will say.

"The author is obviously capable of performances so much finer than the judicious are entitled to grieve a little over this one."

+ — Atlan 114:526 O '14 320w

"The story should have ended as the knife was driven home; yet even the egregious blunder of the inquest and the order for disinterment of the body cannot alter the fact that Mr. Hughes has done a rather big piece of work and has incarnated a certain social aspect which, even though a fleeting one, will not soon be forgotten." F; T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 39:411 Je '14 880w

"Rupert Hughes has struck a deeper note than is to be found in most of these novels of conditions of society." D. L. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 My 6 '14 650w

Lit D 48:1494 Je 20 '14 200w

"It is word-slinging, nothing less, and often of the rudest sort, but suprisingly deft in conveying a lively impression of New York, characteristic sights and sounds, sensations of speed and danger, costly perfections, ostentations, crudities, and always the smell of money in the air."

+ — Nation 98:636 My 28 '14 260w

"Mr. Hughes's novel has something of the effect of a sermon printed in red and yellow headlines. Sometimes he seems to be moved by the desire to sermonize his novel and sometimes by the purpose of novelizing his sermon. The descriptions of street and theatre and restaurant scenes are written with vivid coloring and striking effect, and, because of their underlying philosophy, they are more interesting than such descriptions usually are."

+ — N Y Times 19:195 Ap 19 '14 600w

HUGHES, TALBOT. Dress design: an account of costume for artists and dressmakers. il *$3 Macmillan A14-731

"Mr. Talbot Hughes, whose own fine collection of costumes has been recently acquired by the firm of Harrods for presentation to the Victoria and Albert museum, can write with authority upon this fascinating subject. His historical survey of dress and fashions in Great Britain from earliest times up to the Victorian era, is fully illustrated by numbers of line drawings made by the author and thirty-five pages of colotype reproductions of photographs of costumes, shown for the most part, as is surely the only really satisfactory way, upon the person. A number of patterns drawn to scale and reproduced at the end of the volume add practical and technical value."—Int Studio

"An authoritative handbook."

+ A L A Bkl 10:355 My '14

Ath 1913:2:630 N 29 34w

"Useful handbook."

+ Int Studio 51:333 F '14 130w

"As a reference book for the makers of pageants, and plays involving historic characters the book is of unusual value." H. T. B.

+ School Arts Magazine 13:714 My '14

110w

"Interesting and useful little book."

+ Spec 112:sup165 Ja 31 '14 250w

HUGHES DE RAGNAU, RT. REV. EDMOND. Vatican: the center of government of the Catholic world. il. *$4 (3c) Appleton 13-26167

The author has written an account of the organization and government of the Catholic church. The contents of the book is made up as follows: Part 1. The palace of the Vatican; The pope; The pope's chief collaborators; The Roman curia. Part 2. The organization of the Catholic world; The politico-religious history of Catholicism; The Catholic faith. Part 3. Catholicism and education; What the Catholic church teaches; The spiritual and practical sides of Catholicism.

"A useful compendium of information concerning the Roman Catholic church."

+ A L A Bkl 10:355 My '14

"The present work is most valuable to those interested in the subject."

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 24 '13 200w

"It covers too wide a field to be of any value to the student, and is gotten up in too costly a fashion to reach the man in the street, to whom it is primarily addressed."

+ Cath World 99:115 Ap '14 70w

HUGUES DE RAGNAU, EDMOND—Cont.

"That his work is authentic and 'semi-official' we have ample internal evidence."

+ N Y Sun p5 D 20 '13 3150w

"The work is not of one color. While much of it is well done and there is a great quantity of valuable information to be derived from its perusal, the style is often careless and unkempt."

H: A. Brann

+ — N Y Times 19:154 Ap 5 '14 2150w

N Y Times 19:184 Ap 12 '14 70w

"The author writes with a full knowledge of his subject and with an unaffected admiration of the mighty historical machine which he serves. If we say a good deal in criticism, it is because we write frankly and with conviction from the standpoint of Protestants."

+ — Spec 112:834 My 16 '14 1750w

HULME, EDWARD MASLIN. Renaissance, the Protestant revolution, and the Catholic reformation in continental Europe. il *$2.50 (1c) Century 14-16961

The author covers three great periods of history, bridging the time from the end of the thirteenth century to the beginning of the seventeenth. His treatment is broad; in each of the periods studied he considers both political and religious aspects, with considerable attention given to personalities, and the position and importance of arts and letters. What interests him most through the centuries studied is the development of individuality, which he calls "that most potent of all the forces of all the ages." The book is supplied with maps, genealogical tables and an index.

"Professor Hulme has written a work that reveals wide knowledge of a period peculiarly difficult to master. And if at times he reads into it ideas and motives which we do not perceive therein, we cannot but recognize the serious scholarship and breadth of sympathy which keep him from that sort of writing which at one time was associated almost with the very idea of a non-Catholic historian of the reformation."

+ — Cath World 100:257 N '14 1850w

"For the use of students a book must be either a guide to other books or it must be sufficient in itself. This book, because it aims to be both, is neither the one nor the other. Its philosophy goes over the heads of students; its narrative is spread out too thin over a vast surface to be quite satisfactory anywhere."

+ — Nation 100:116 Ja 23 '15 680w

HUME, FERGUS W. Lost parchment. *$1.25 (1½c) Dillingham 14-9409

An ingeniously constructed story built up about the theft of a will to possess which a lawyer commits murder. How the net tightens about the criminal; how the man who was thought murdered comes to life; and how young Rupert Hendle, the hero, and the girl he loved are made happy in the end brings the tale to a satisfactory close after, Hume fashion, trying to place the burden of the drama's crime successively upon the shoulders of each person of the cast.

"It is quite a good story of its kind, conventional enough in style and in the speech of the characters, but never dragging in its movement. Nor is the mystery unnecessarily obscure or complex, as is sometimes the case in such tales."

+ Ath 1914,1:sup876 Je 20 200w

"The plot of this new story of Fergus Hume's is by no means a probable one. It must be granted, however, that it is very exciting, and that excitement continues well up to the denouement."

+ — Boston Transcript p8 Je 20 '14 200w

"The tale is ingenious."

+ — N Y Times 19:246 My 24 '14 120w

"The plot offers abundant opportunity for an exciting story, but Mr. Hume falls far short of getting the most out of his own creation."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 Je 4 '14 150w

HUMPHREY, ZEPHINE. Edge of the woods, and other papers. *$1.25 Revell 14-2049

"The title of the book is that of the first essay—a plea for the preservation of that 'mystery'—for mystery is our common birthright—which lurks within all of life's 'edge-of-the-woods' experiences. Among the most charming of essays that carry each its irresistible appeal are: 'On the love of places,' 'The passing of in-doors,' 'Trisa Minor,' 'Wood magic,' 'Hoosick Junction,' 'Cave dwellers or the hall-bedroom,' 'In praise of everyday' and 'The church and the mountain.' Each has a message of good will, each contains originality, cleverly expressed."

— Boston Transcript

+ A L A Bkl 10:397 Je '14

"Witty and sane and kind, these brief essays bring not only delight but refreshment, infusing into our 'progressive' days an expressed appreciation of those 'former things' of daily living which, indeed, at times, seem to have 'passed away,' and for which the 'unprogressive' ones of the world long, either openly or in secret."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 18 '14 370w

"She faces the humdrum of life with a fine courage, and her penetrating glance goes at once to the hidden meaning of things commonly held insignificant."

+ Dial 56:255 Mr 16 '14 200w

"Zephine Humphrey in some new essays extracts from the simplest things of life the maximum of conscious pleasure; finds a richness in the commonplace, a romance in 'Everyday' and a joy in the restful aspects of out-of-doors, which make 'The edge of the woods' an inspiration."

+ Ind 77:280 F 23 '14 70w

"The author is always restrained without being sober, animated without being garrulous, and emotional without being sentimental. Her style is eminently that of an educated woman."

+ Nation 98:608 My 21 '14 300w

"Gay, gentle humor, true pathos, noble ideals, a certain grace, and a sure touch please the reader of these pages; and, best of all, their cheerful tone restores to his sometime questioning spirit firm faith in the ultimate good and strong hope for the 'New generation' so wisely warned and tenderly regarded by the author."

+ Outlook 106:505 F 28 '14 90w

"This is a book to be read silently first, and then to be shared with friends in a social reading."

+ Springfield Republican p5 S 3 '14 430w

HUMPHREYS, MRS. PHEBE WESTCOTT. Practical book of garden architecture. il *$5 Lippincott 14-8586

"In this work, the result of much diligent study of garden architecture both at home and abroad, Mrs. Humphreys gives the reader many glimpses of the effective manner in which natural beauties may be enhanced or plainness eliminated. . . . Throughout the book the author discusses many subjects, from the building of an artistic bird-house to the erection of ornate Grecian or Egyptian temples and belvederes. Chapters are devoted to walk-paving, outdoor swimming-pools, transforming garden buildings, the practical side of the tennis-court, ornamental wells and well-houses, etc."—Lit D

+ A L A Bkl 11:17 S '14

"Mrs. Humphreys's book is characterized by convincing good taste and common sense. It points out the pitfalls to which extravagance and rivalry may lead the incautious. It is true to its name—Practical."

+ Boston Transcript p23 S 16 '14 350w

+ Ind 78:106 Ap 13 '14 60w

"To any one who is looking for ideas on how to beautify the surroundings of a home—old or new—this book with its wide variety of illustration, provides many helpful hints."

+ Lit D 48:1122 My 9 '14 200w

"The park department of a city that makes unlimited appropriations will find 'The practical book of garden architecture' much more practical (than will the individual owner.)"

+ — Nation 98:462 Ap 23 '14 250w
+ N Y Times 19:321 Jl 26 '14 380w

"So far as it goes the author's facts seem authoritative and suggestive, and practice and photographs, almost without exception, are in notable good taste." Fremont Rider

+ Pub W 85:1349 Ap 18 '14 530w
+ R of Rs 50:124 Jl '14 110w
+ — Springfield Republican p5 Je 11 '14 300w

HUNEKER, JAMES GIBBONS. Old Foggy: his musical opinions and grotesques. $1 Presser 13-11983

"Behind the mask of 'Old Foggy' with its flat Hungarian nose and mustaches covering the sardonic mouth, can be seen the sly mischievous face of the epigrammatic, sententious, Nietzschean, Schopenhaueresque Huneker himself." (Boston Transcript) "This irascible old gentleman abuses and worships Bach, 'pounds' Liszt, attacks Wagner with unappeasable fury, promulgates harsh judgments on Tschaiowsky and Strauss, says good-bye to Schumann's music, admires Hummel and adores the tinkling of Dussek. And he does not mind contradicting himself." (N Y Times)

"'Old Foggy' is a book to read with great caution, lest one be deceived. It carries with it not a little sound criticism; but is rather the expression of rapidly varying moods, and one might fairly say, prejudices. Mr. Huneker has undoubtedly had in mind a real individual who said many of the smart things attributed to 'Old Foggy.' We have all met him; he is ourselves on certain occasions." N. H. D.

+ — Boston Transcript p11 D 6 '13 770w
+ N Y Sun p4 D 13 '13 60w

"A great number and variety of musical subjects are discussed with fine irony, superb denunciation, virtriotic bitterness, and magnificent sarcasm by Mr. Huneker—beg pardon, Old Foggy—and there are mingled some fine descriptions of moving events. If France has Berlioz's 'Grotesques de la Musique,' America may now claim the fantasies of Old Foggy as showing a similar sardonic imagination and instructive value."

+ N Y Times 19:84 F 22 '14 400w

HUNGERFORD, EDWARD. Personality of American cities. il *$2 (1½c) McBride, Nast & co. 13-26260

In the chapters of this book the author has tried to "give something of the flavor and personality of typical American towns." Sometimes he has been able to express something of this personality in his very titles, as when he writes of: Our ancient hub; The monumental city; The city of the seven hills; Where romance and courtesy meet; Steel's great capital; The city of the little squares, and The city that never grows young. There are other cities which need no characterization other than that expressed by their own names, and of these is Chicago. The author has not limited himself to the cities south of the Canadian border line; Toronto, Montreal and Quebec are given a place with New York, Chicago and Seattle.

"He is a keen observer and does not lack humor."

+ A L A Bkl 10:225 F '14

"Three dozen good pictures from photographs show attractive features of the many cities and contribute to the general excellence of Mr. Hungerford's unique volume." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p22 D 31 '13 1350w

"The author has been successful in catching and conveying certain picturesque or salient features of some twenty-five American cities."

+ — Nation 98:404 Ap 9 '14 200w

"There is plenty that is entertaining and characteristic."

+ N Y Sun p5 D 20 '13 110w

"Mr. Hungerford's impressions of the American and Canadian cities he has visited accord fairly well with known characteristics of the places and peoples to which they relate. They are presented vivaciously with literary skill and pleasing humor."

+ N Y Times 19:92 F 22 '14 300w

"This volume fully meets several of the requirements of a good book: an object, the accomplishment of the object, and good workmanship."

+ Outlook 106:773 Ap 4 '14 290w

Spec 112:963 Je 6 '14 120w

HUNT, GAILLARD. Department of state of the United States; its history and functions. *$2.25 (2c) Yale univ. press 14-14205

The author says: "My object has been to show the formation and development of the Department of state and what its chief duties are and have been. I have written no diplomatic history of the United States, or biographical sketches of the Secretaries of state. My concern has been with the machine of which the foreign service is part and whose movements the Secretary of state directs." (Preface) Contents: The committee for foreign affairs; The department of foreign affairs; The creation of the department of state; The new department; Some duties of the department; Subdivisions of the department; The seal; The laws; The constitution; The diplomatic and consular service; Passports; Authentications; Treaties; Buildings occupied; Bibliographical note; Index.

+ A L A Bkl 11:155 D '14

"To the knowledge gained by long service within the Department, and a zealous study of every step in its history, Dr. Hunt adds the selective sense and the literary self-control which could alone prevent such a work from spilling over into several volumes."

+ Ath 1914,2:451 O 31 1750w

"The first part of the book has more interest to the general reader, though the latter part has its own value to the student of affairs." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p20 S 2 '14 750w

+ — Dial 58:86 F 1 '15 680w

+ — Educ R 49:212 F '15 630w

"An authoritative study."

+ N Y Times 19:407 S 27 '14 90w

Reviewed by C. A. Beard

+ — Pol Sci Q 29:710 D '14 470w

+ Spec 113:503 O 10 '14 50w.

"It is a careful and detailed study of the department as an organization, but is not for that reason dry reading for anyone who has a real interest in national history, since in the steps by which the department has been developed there are suggested various stages through which the nation has passed as a whole."

+ Springfield Republican p5 O 1 '14 1500w

HUNT, GAILLARD. Life in America one hundred years ago. il *$1.50 (2c) Harper 14-18735

A survey of the life and manners of the American people at the opening of the past century written at the request of the committee of one hundred to celebrate one hundred years of peace between Great Britain and the United States. The author takes into account the forces of development and portrays the character of the people operating them; nor does he omit to communicate the invigorating atmosphere that was created by the prime movers in America's independent national growth. The book, not without its picturesque side, is chiefly of an historical nature.

"In general not more than fairly interesting except to readers for whom the subject has a special attraction."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:169 D '14

"A learned book is often uninviting to the general reader, but the present volume by Gaillard Hunt is both learned and delightful. It is a fascinating picture of life in our country one hundred years ago. Its detail and intimacy are such as only a master could have handled."

+ Cath World 100:386 D '14 550w

"While the book shows haste, it gives an idea of the state of the country at the time, and the preface on the treaty and its results should have wide reading."

HUNT, GAILLARD—Continued.

+ — Ind 80:506 D 28 '14 90w

"The subject sounds prosy, but the author makes it anything but that for his manner of telling the facts."

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 220w

"Mr. Hunt's pages are readable, but that quality will not compensate for the misplaced emphasis on certain individuals and subjects and the want of a philosophic weighing of facts and tendencies."

+ + Nation 100:85 Ja 21 '15 300w

+ R of Rs 50:761 D '14 130w

+ Spec 113:808 D 5 '14 90w

+ + Springfield Republican p5 D 17 '14 400w

HUNT, THOMAS FORSYTH, and BURKETT, CHARLES WILLIAM. Soils and crops, with soils treated in reference to crop production. il $*1.50 Judd 14-S80

A textbook for classes in agriculture. "The lessons, forty-eight in number, carry the student from the food requirements of plants through various important steps to the kind of crops suited to various climatic conditions. At the end of every three chapters a number of practical examples are given, from which the teacher may select at discretion." (Nation)

A L A Bkl 11:203 Ja '15

"Covers a wide field and is particularly well ordered."

+ Educ R 47:532 My '14 40w

"This book is interesting and useful."

+ Nation 83:462 Ap 23 '14 100w

Reviewed by E. J. Russell

+ Nature 94:2 S 3 '14 200w

"An admirable school book."

+ N Y Times 18:763 D 28 '13 50w

"A good book for the small public library."

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:161 Je '14 40w

HUNT, MRS. UNA A. ATHONTON (CLARKE). Una Mary. $*1.25 (1½c) Scribner 14-17931

The author explains this book in the preface, saying: "This is the true story of the inner life of my childhood." For the inner self, felt to be a personality distinct from the outer self known to other people, she invented the name Una Mary, but says: "It was hardly a case of dual personality, I did not feel that I was two people. She was the rest of me, the deep, inner, real part that no one else seemed to know was there." Una Mary lived in a country of her own, made her own friends, pondered on the mysteries of life and death, and worked out her own religion. This continued up to the age of fourteen; after that the two, Una and Mary, became fused into one.

"Charming reminiscences, true and compelling."

+ A L A Bkl 11:173 D '14

"There are many lovely and true incidents told well, but the simplicity of real, uncontaminated child thought is lacking."

+ — Outlook 108:788 D 2 '14 90w

"The story makes a fascinating chronicle, in which the reader catches frequent fleeting glimpses of his own youth. But not alone because she holds the mirror up to nature, hers or yours, but also because the story is so charmingly told. Una Mary should be one of the favorite characters in the literary world this season."

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 17 '14 650w

HUNT, VIOLET. Celebrity's daughter. $*1.35 Brentano's

"The story is told by Tempe Vero-Taylor as a contemporaneous record of events covering two years—from the time she is eighteen until she is twenty. Her father, the celebrity, an author whose books no longer sell, is living with Lady Scilly on an allowance from his wife's earnings as a variety actress. Mrs. Vero-Taylor refuses him the luxury of a divorce and its consequent 'righting' of Lady Scilly, and Tempe, who is very fond of her father, tells of her tortuous efforts to secure his freedom. This precocious young busybody, equally well versed in literary thought, slang and worldly scandals, paints a vivacious and egotistical picture of upper middle class life in England."—Boston Transcript

"Dull vulgarity and meretricious glitter characterize both the theme and treatment of this book."

— Ath 1913,1:97 Ja 25 50w

"Miss Hunt has over-reached herself in this novel to maintain her reputation for 'clever' fiction. 'The celebrity's daughter' is undeniably clever and original, but it has attached other qualities by the way which are less pleasing and commendable. In spite of some artificially girlish phrases and considerable discordant slang, the attitude of the book is not the attitude of a young girl, however precocious and worldly wise, and the incongruity between the youthful narrator and her unsavory history is too unlovely to be even funny."

+ + Boston Transcript p10 My 2 '14 300w

— Nation 99:164 Ag 6 '14 350w

"'The celebrity's daughter' belongs in the same class with the back-stairs memoirs; it is fiction for Abigails—except that the characterization bears too hardly on Abigails, some of whom may be supposed to have either manners or morals or literary taste, any of which qualities would be offended by the book."

— N Y Times 19:246 My 24 '14 250w

"Being entirely without prejudice, we admit that it is one of the most amusing books we have read for a long time past, and that its heroine, Miss Tempe Taylor, would amuse us vastly had we had the pleasure of her acquaintance."

+ — Sat R 115:306 Mr 8 '13 550w

"No doubt there is a goodly measure of satire on political and social happenings that the foreign reader fails to recognize and appreciate. The story is well written, but the mock ingenue manner of its telling (an ingenue manner may, of course, be anything but unsophisticated), does not seem to be the best that could have been adopted."

+ + Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 400w

HUNTER, GEORGE LELAND. Home furnishings. il $*2 Lane 13-22529

This book "consists of chats, in a popular vein, about furniture, rugs, carpets, lamps, and other lighting fixtures, wall papers, window shades and draperies, potteries and tapestries."

The author knows the foolishness of many amateur home makers and the unscrupulousness of some purveyors to their needs and tastes."—Nation

"An uncommonly good book."

+ A L A Bkl 10:185 Ja '14 +

"Mr. Hunter's book is very instructive and helpful to anyone who loves attractive and comfortable surroundings."

+ Boston Transcript p9 Ja 17 '14 300w

Reviewed by A. B. McMahan

+ Dial 56:298 Ap 1 '14 500w

"A very valuable book of its kind."

+ Nation 97:548 D 4 '13 320w

+ N Y Times 18:611 N 9 '13 200w

HUNTER, GEORGE LELAND. Inside the house "that Jack built. il $*1.35 (4c) Lane 14-8787

Problems that beset every home builder are solved helpfully and practically in this story of how Jack and Mary, Cousin Tom and Harriet built and furnished their houses. The house of the title is on the summit of a hill overlooking the Hudson; the builder is a commuter; his problems are those that confront everybody who makes blossom in a bit of secluded countryside a habitation equipped with all of the modern comforts. Skill and good taste are important factors in achieving his success. These elements show in the net results that are revealed in paragraph and picture.

+ N Y Times 19:330 Ag 2 '14 70w

"Many excellent hints regarding house furnishing are conveyed in this book."

+ R of Rs 49:765 Je '14 80w

+ School Arts Magazine 14:146 O '14 30w

HUNTER, ROBERT. Violence and the labor movement. *$1.50 (1c) Macmillan 14-4908

A serious study of some aspects of the labor problem, called forth by the recent manifestations in America of syndicalism. "This volume is a contribution to the study of the reactions that affect various minds and temperaments in the face of modern social wrongs. If one's point of view is that of the anarchist, he is led inevitably to make his war upon individuals."

... If one's point of view is based on what is now called the economic interpretation of history, one is emancipated, in so far as that is possible for emotional beings, from all hatred of individuals, and one sees before him only the necessity of readjusting the economic basis of our common life in order to achieve a more nearly perfect social order. In contrasting these two antagonistic minds, I have been forced to take two extremes, the Bakouninists anarchist and the Marxian socialist." (Preface)

"A painstaking first-hand study, as impartial as the author's sympathies will permit."

+ A L A Bkl 10:355 My '14

"On the whole, this volume is a very valuable contribution. It throws much-needed light on the struggles of the various elements in the radical wing of the labor movement." Alexander Fleisher

+ Ann Am Acad 54:338 Jl '14 220w

Ind 78:564 Je 29 '14 390w

"The work has a valuable bibliography and index attached and is written incisively and with an impartial mind."

+ Lit D 48:1127 My 9 '14 120w

"The sketch of Bakounin, his associates, and his activities generally is interesting and instructive. Mr. Hunter will do well to verify his references, if another edition of his book is required. It is not safe to rely upon Lombroso for historic facts."

+ Nation 98:434 Ap 16 '14 900w

"There is no tragedy comparable to the slaying of a beautiful theory by cruel facts. Mr. Hunter has written a beautiful book as it will seem to many, but it is buried in facts such as those which slew the theory of socialism."

— N Y Times 19:237 My 17 '14 1750w

R of Rs 49:637 My '14 70w

HURD, ARCHIBALD S. Fleets at war. (Pocket 12 books) il *50c Doran

This little book, published after the beginning of the European war, presents "a conspectus of the great navies engaged in war when hostilities opened, and . . . of the events of singular significance in the naval contest between Great Britain and Germany which occurred in the years immediately preceding the war." (Preface) Contents: The opening phase; The relative standing of the British and German fleets; The British navy; The German navy; Admiral Jellicoe; Officers and men of the British navy; The commander-in-chief of the German fleet; Officers and men of the foreign navies; German naval bases; The Kiel canal; The great fleets engaged.

"Is of great use as presenting concisely and clearly the factors, merits, and demerits of the various great fleets, with details of each class of ship throughout."

+ Ath 1914:277 S 19 150w

"Authoritative and timely."

+ Ind 80:140 O 26 '14 30w

"Mr. Hurd's book is a manual for any one who wants to have in a handy form the essential facts about the navies at war. But it is more."

+ Spec 113:362 S 12 '14 1750w

HURD, ARCHIBALD S. Our navy; with a preface by the Earl of Selborne. (Imperial lib.) *50c (1c) Warne 14-30798

A brief history of the British navy from the time of its founding in 872 to the present day. Contents: The creation of the navy; Sea-power under the Tudors; The seventeenth-century navy; The fight for empire in the eighteenth century; Nelson's early victories; Trafalgar—before and after; The Victorian renaissance; The blue water gospel; The reform movement 1904-12 and the sequel; Composition and distribution of the fleet; Manning the fleet; How the navy is administered; The navy and imperial policy.

A L A Bkl 11:56 O '14

"The book is a valuable addition to naval literature."

+ Boston Transcript p24 Ap 1 '14 200w

+ Sat R 117:87 Ja 17 '14 170w

"Useful book."

+ Spec 112:445 Mr 14 '14 180w

HURLL, ESTELLE MAY. How to show pictures to children. il *$1 Houghton 14-10383

"Parents and teachers who have felt the need of help in selecting pictures and using them effectively in the training of children, owe a debt of gratitude to Mrs. Estelle M. Hurll. How pictures are made; how they tell stories; how they may be utilized in tableaux, in the decoration of children's rooms, of schoolrooms, and in school work; these are a few of the topics the author discusses with insight and good sense. There are chapters on Animal pictures, Pictures of children, and Story pictures. An appendix gives well classified lists of books for a working library."—School Arts Magazine

"A clear, practical book, suggestive to librarians, mothers, and teachers."

+ A L A Bkl 11:207 Ja '15 +

"Excellent book."

+ Boston Transcript p7 S 12 '14 180w

"If one wishes to know what picture study really means, and how to go at it, this is the book to begin with. It is a scholarly, sympathetic, and readable presentation of the entire subject."

+ School Arts Magazine 14:66 S '14 140w

HURST, FANNIE. Just around the corner; romance en casserole. il *$1.35 (1½c) Harper 14-30793

A collection of short stories, most of them reprinted from the Saturday evening post. The author knows the New York working girl and writes of her with sympathy and humor. The stories are: Power and horse-power; Other people's shoes; The other cheek; Marked down; Breakers ahead; The good provider; Superman; The paradise trail; The squall.

"Brevity would have made the stories better yet."

+ Ind 80:174 N 2 '14 60w

"The workmanship is uneven, and the tales are sometimes too strongly reminiscent of their models; but, if the author will be simply herself, and will avoid straining after effects, she has it in her to do good work in her chosen field."

— + N Y Times 19:462 O 25 '14 130w

HUTCHINSON, ARTHUR STUART-MEN-10 TETH. Clean heart. il *$1.35 (1c) Little 14-16203

He was called one of the lucky ones, Philip Wriford, the novelist. He was great and famous and popular and his books brought him much money. All his working and his earning, tho it had been for the sake of others, yielded him no happiness, for he had given without joy or inspiration or love. Then when, after work and worry have proved too much for him, he awakens from a period of mental derangement to find himself a vagabond on the road, companion to Mr. Puddlebox, he decides that the secret of happiness is to live only for self, to disregard all obligations and live joyously for the day. There are many stages in his progress, and of the people who help him on his way there is, first of all, foolish old Puddlebox, who rose to a mighty sacrifice for his sake, and, last of all, jolly little Essie, who proved herself ready to die for him, but who, mercifully, was spared, that he might learn his final lesson and know that the secret of true happiness is service, given with love.

HUTCHINSON, ARTHUR S.-M.—Continued.

"A poor story with bright spots."

+ — A L A Bkl 11:76 O '14

+ — Ath 1914.2:561 N 28 200w

"The book as a whole was a good deal of a disappointment." F. T. Cooper

+ — Bookm 40:396 N '14 1000w

"Scarcely a line of the story fails to fascinate and allure, and even his most unlikely episodes are made plausible by Mr. Hutchinson's narrative skill." E. F. E.

+ — Boston Transcript p8 S 19 '14 1600w

"It is the agony that Mr. Hutchinson is after, and agony that he insists upon. If he were less eager to squeeze the last possible tear from his situations he might perceive their essential falsity,—and construct better ones." Lucian Cary

+ — Dial 57:257 O 1 '14 200w

"If the book is not so well digested as 'The happy warrior,' which preceded it, it is even more picturesque, there is again an abundance of humor and pungency of description, and here and there a flawless bit of conversation which reveals the accomplished artist."

+ — Ind 7:449 S 28 '14 230w

"Mr. Hutchinson is more serious, or more lyrical, than Mr. Locke or Mr. Bennett. On the other hand, he has his undoubted vein of humor under less skilful control. He has not been able to compass that first duty of the humorist—to forget Dickens." H. W. Boynton

+ — Nation 99:462 O 15 '14 480w

"It is a grateful task to have to record that Mr. Hutchinson's new novel is a novel with an idea—a real, vital, intentional idea—animating it. From a technical point of view, the worst fault of 'The clean heart' is its echo of Dickens."

+ — N Y Times 19:328 S 27 '14 1250w

+ — Outlook 108:393 O 14 '14 270w

"Not a big book this, not full enough, rounded out enough, carefully knit enough for that, but a fine book, oh, an infinitely fine, clean-hearted book!" Fremont Rider

+ — Pub W 86:1285 O 17 '14 470w

+ — Spec 113:808 D 5 '14 230w

"While it will perhaps win fewer readers than 'The happy warrior,' it is a novel of distinctly unusual ability."

+ — Springfield Republican p5 S 24 '14 850w

HUTCHINSON, J. R. Press-gang afloat and ashore. il *$3 Dutton (Eng ed A14-490)

"The history of that most anomalous institution, the Impress system, has been written vivaciously, if not very seriously, by Mr. Hutchinson. Although originally only seafaring men were liable to be pressed, by the middle of the eighteenth century almost every class of the population was at the mercy of the press-gang. . . . Mr. Hutchinson has naturally many exciting stories to tell of the press-gang's operations, both on land and on sea, and quotes many entertaining passages from contemporary documents."—Spec

"A volume of absorbing interest, every page of which relates some anecdote or story supported by historical evidence. The illustrations are excellent."

+ — Ath 1913.2:452 O 25 110w

"The work is valuable as a history and is thrilling as a narrative of war and seagoing may be, and nothing affords material for more fascinating reading than either of these subjects. Mr. Hutchinson has made the most of his opportunity and his work is one of rare importance." F. L. W.

+ — Boston Transcript p22 Ap 8 '14 1200w

"Happily-conceived and engagingly-written book."

+ — Dial 56:190 Mr 1 '14 300w

+ — Nation 98:729 Je 18 '14 800w

+ N Y Times 19:212 Ap 26 '14 130w

+ — Spec 111:829 N 15 '13 400w

HUTCHINSON, WOODS. Civilization and health. *$1.50 (1½c) Houghton 14-20760

A cheerful book in which more than one hoary and revered superstition is knocked effectively on the head. The human race is not degenerating physically; we do not live under a greater nervous strain; the so called desertion of the "home" by women is the best thing that ever happened to women and to the home; far from sinking into a state of decay the home is just beginning to flourish; parents of the present day are not inferior, indeed they are far superior, to the parents of the good old times, and their children are given a correspondingly better bringing up. Some of the chapters are: The diseases of civilization; The dawn of the new doctor; The danger of patent medicines; Women in public life; The hardy nerves of woman; The hygiene of work; Why is a fly? Vivisection; The modern father.

+ A L A Bkl 11:293 Ja '15

Springfield Republican p5 D 24 '14 580w

HUTTEN ZUM STOLZENBERG, BETTINA (RIDDLE) frau v. Maria. *$1.35 Appleton 14-12073

"The romance has much in common with the Zenda type of story, with the woman the more prominent figure. Maria Drello falls in love at first sight with 'Mr. Frederick,' a chance acquaintance of her brother's. She is beautiful and a singer, and the handsome stranger as quickly reciprocates her affection. It speedily develops that he is the scion of the English royal family, but of German parentage. Difficulties besetting the pathway of their marriage are fully removed, but on the eve of the wedding the prince is chosen king over a small Balkan state. The girl bravely bows to the inevitable and the prince departs to his turbulent throne."—Springfield Republican

"The various situations and developments are well carried off, because Baroness von Hutten possesses excellent technique: she is a practised writer, and knows how to make her characters talk and behave. But her technique is, as a rule, too apparent; there is too much evidence of plan and purpose in the book, and so the story itself fails on the whole to convince us."

+ — Ath 1914.1:sup873 Je 20 150w

"Rather unfortunately for the story it is written in two parts, and the charm that distinguishes the first part is almost entirely lacking in the second."

+ — Boston Transcript p20 Jl 8 '14 450w

Reviewed by Lucian Cary

Dial 57:53 Jl 16 '14 700w

"This is an interesting love-story, but not particularly convincing nor satisfactory in its conclusions."

+ — Lit D 49:638 O 3 '14 300w

"The story is better in construction in some of its characterization and in its manner of telling than have been most of the author's previous novels."

+ — N Y Times 19:298 Jl 5 '14 500w

"This story, like almost all of its predecessors from the pen of Baroness von Hutten, is notable for the skill with which the main situation is put before the reader, and the curiosity and interest excited in the reader to watch the working out of the problem. Add to this that the author's characters are alive and that she has a sense of humor, and it will be admitted that her stories deserve the wide reading they always receive."

+ — Outlook 107:877 Ag 8 '14 170w

"The story does not exhibit the Baroness von Hutten at her best. The promise of fantasy which makes the opening chapters so delightful is not fulfilled, and the tale is developed on realistic lines, while the introduction of the names of many celebrated living persons is distinctly questionable."

+ — Sat R 117:774 Je 13 '14 500w

"Baroness Bettina von Hutten possesses the ability, not common to woman writers of light fiction, of skillfully combining vivid character drawing with diverting romance."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Jl 23 '14 370w

HUTTON, EDWARD. Cities of Romagna and the Marches. il *$2 Macmillan A14-398

"In this his latest volume Mr. Hutton describes the districts which, to the Romans, were the remote provinces of Flaminia and Picenum, reputed for the culture of fruit trees and little else, and which in many parts must be quite unknown even to the modern Italian. But the author writes with the same familiarity of Ravenna and Commachio, Bologna and Cagli, Ancona and the Republic of San Marino. He seems to be equally at home in all of them."

—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 10:225 F '14

"Mr. Hutton has certainly achieved a difficult task, for he has succeeded in writing a book which has all the charm of the irresponsible wanderer on the road, side by side with the authority of the scholar."

+ Ath 1913,2:585 N 22 500w

"Delightful and valuable as are all Mr. Hutton's books of travel, none is more so than this."

+ Boston Transcript p11 N 21 '13 $80w

"On the whole, the book is delightful."

+ Dial 56:114 F 1 '14 280w

"Choice volume of essays in his well known style." C: E. Hesselgrave

+ Ind 76:510 D 11 '13 30w

"We do not always agree with his judgments, which are often almost entirely subjective, and like the rest of us, he has his likes and dislikes. More than two score towns and villages are separately dealt with, historically, informatively, and impressionistically, and there is never a dull word in the whole volume. It is, we think, the best of all the series, and our author is to be congratulated on having produced a work which is at once learned and beautiful."

+ Nation 98:113 Ja 29 '14 300w

"A charming portion of Italy is dealt with in a very pleasing fashion."

+ N Y Times 19:28 Ja 18 '14 70w

"If Mr. Hutton were an Italian, his sympathy with the people, the history, the manners and customs, and the art could hardly be more genuine or more exquisitely expressed."

+ Outlook 106:154 Ja 17 '14 100w

HUTTON, EDWARD. England of my heart: 2 Spring. il $2.25 Putman

"It is the first of four volumes, with the subtitles of Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter, which the author hopes to complete covering, when all are completed, the story of the South England counties. . . . From London, he follows in the path of those immortal pilgrims who, one April night in 1375, made the Old Tabard Inn forever famous, along the Pilgrim's way, through Rochester, Faversham, and many a tranquilly picturesque village to Canterbury. In Kent he interprets Caesar's campaigns in Britain, through the study of Kentish monuments of antiquity."—Boston Transcript

"Characteristically sympathetic study."

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 12 '14 350w

+ Dial 57:457 D 1 '14 200w

Ind 80:412 D 14 '14 70w

"An interesting book."

+ Nation 100:81 Ja 21 '15 800w

"Gracefully written, but marred by religious ecstasies."

+ Pratt 5:39 Ja '15 25w

"To judge from the first volume, the reader of Mr. Hutton's sketches will be richly rewarded, whether or not he has had an opportunity to visit the country."

+ R of Rs 50:760 D 1 '14 110w

HUTTON, WILLIAM HOLDEN. Highways and byways in Shakespeare's country. il *$2 Macmillan 14-10119

"Mr. Hutton for four years wandered up and down Warwickshire from Four Shire Stane in the south to Temple Balsall in the north, and from Upper Shuckton in the east to Wootton Wawen in the west—everywhere finding archaic bits and quaint names. The tourist who knows Stratford, Warwick, Kenilworth, and Broadway will be astonished to find how much of legend, country charm, and historic tradition exist in parts of Shakespeare-land of which most Americans never heard. The volume is made attractive by many drawings from the pencil of Edmund H. New."—Outlook

"A scholarly guide book, at times showing a delicate humor."

+ A L A Bkl 11:115 N '14

"His work has been done in a thorough manner, and his volume is one of the best of the 'Highways and byways series.' We have noted a few misprints."

+ Ath 1914,1:710 My 23 1750w

"Numerous drawings by Edmund H. New add to the beauty and value of the volume, because of their own artistic excellence, because of their pictorial effect, and for the negative reason that they are not of the half-tone photographic process toward which familiarity in recent years has bred a well-deserved contempt. No village was too small or too obscure for him to pass it by, and he has gathered from his own tours and from the records of bygone ages a multitude of facts and impressions that are seen with an imaginative eye and described with an imaginative pen." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p11 Je 6 '14 630w

+ Cath World 100:267 N '14 90w

"It may well be given a place on the reference shelf, or in the travel library of those specially interested in minute, antiquarian lore."

+ Dial 57:297 S 16 '14 250w

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 100w

"An admirable guide-book to a delightful section."

+ Nation 99:257 Ag 27 '14 620w

"An agreeable addition to a pleasing series."

+ Outlook 107:503 Je 27 '14 100w

+ Sat R 117:572 My 2 '14 750w

HYSLOP, JAMES HERVEY. Psychological research and survival. *$1 Macmillan

(Eng ed 13-26730)

The author "describes the genesis and the work of psychical research with special reference to the central problem, and deals at length with its scientific, philosophic, religious and moral implications. He boldly throws down the gauntlet to those who would explain the entire phenomena of spiritualism by telepathy or mind reading. . . . Even after eliminating telepathy as an explanation, Professor Hyslop affirms his belief that the evidence for the survival of personal consciousness is sufficient to satisfy all intelligent people, and he points out as significant that every intelligent man who has devoted sufficient time and experiment to this subject has come out on the side of the spirits. But he frankly admits that what the process is by which they communicate or produce the effects which we observe is not known directly."—Boston Transcript

"He supplies a moderate and well-informed statement of a particularly complicated set of phenomena."

+ Ath 1913,2:498 N 1 100w

"Whether one agrees with Professor Hyslop or otherwise concerning his conclusions regarding the psychical problem, any one who is at all interested in the subject will find his latest work distinctly worth reading." C. H. O.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ja 10 '14 1150w

"The volume is a summary of his views,—a mixture of unconvincing philosophy and unphilosophical conviction. Much of it is either an insincere quibble or a genuine muddle."

— Dial 56:190 Mr 1 '14 450w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

I

IBSEN, SIGURD. Robert Frank; auth. tr. from the Norwegian by Marcia Hargis Janson. *$1.25 Scribner 14-19177

Sigurd Ibsen has chosen the problem of capital and labor as the theme for this play. Robert Frank is a statesman who attempts to settle the problem once and for all by the passing of a measure which shall be just to both sides. Both repudiate him and between the two he is crushed. The younger Ibsen shows much of his father's uncompromising spirit in carrying the play to its unlooked for, but quite logical, tragic ending. The play has a special interest for Americans because the wife of an American ambassador is introduced as one of the characters, and her niece, a newspaper correspondent, is the play's heroine, the one person who understands Frank and his motives.

"One notices in 'Robert Frank' the same seriousness and earnestness that have characterized the plays of John Galsworthy when he wrote of somewhat similar themes."

+ Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 200w

ILBERT, SIR COURTENAY PEGRINE. Mechanics of law making. *$1.50 (2½c) Columbia univ. press 14-7531

Sir Courtenay Ilbert, who delivered these lectures at Columbia university as the Carpenter lectures for 1913, has had a long experience in law drafting as parliamentary draftsman and as clerk of the House of commons. He believes that any one country can learn from the experiences of other countries, and he has here outlined British methods for the benefit of American law makers. His chapters take up: The legislature and the draftsman; Reform of the English statute book; Comparative study of legislation; Origin and functions of the parliamentary counsel's office in England; Duties of a government draftsman; Rules for the guidance of draftsmen; Forms of legislation; Codification; Some characteristics of modern legislation.

"Much that will be suggested to laymen as well as lawyers here."

+ A L A Bkl 11:98 N '14

"The book ought to have a wide circulation among those outside the legal profession. It affords an excellent example of what university schools of law are now attempting in the way of properly popularizing legal ideas and ideals."

+ Nation 99:306 S 10 '14 700w

"Sir Courtenay Ilbert has enjoyed unique opportunities for studying the mechanics of legislation, and the subject is one of which, in spite of its great importance and of the freedom with which we all criticize the incompetence of law-makers, most of us are surprisingly ignorant."

+ Spec 113:21 Jl 4 '14 670w

IM BANG, and YI RYUK. Korean folk tales; imps, ghosts and fairies; tr. from the Korean by James S. Gale. *$1.25 Dutton 14-8078

Im Bang, the first named author, lived from 1640 to 1722. Yi Ryuk belongs to a yet earlier century. "Those who seek a true interpretation of the soul of the Oriental could not do better than read this volume. . . . At first the admixture of such practical events as public examinations and such fantastic elements as goblins may strike the reader as bizarre, if not bad, art; but, when once he has grasped the truth that these tales are not conscious inventions of fancy, but accredited records of fact, born of the three great religions of the Far East—Taoism, Buddhism, and Confucianism—he will begin to understand something of the living mysteries of Asia." (Ath)

"We heartily recommend these Korean imps and ghosts and fairies to all serious students of folk-imagination."

+ Ath 1913,2:591 N 22 150w

"Korean folk tales have characteristics all their own and their wide range and attractive qualities are well shown in the fifty-three stories in this little volume. The translator obviously has done good work."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 11 '14 150w

"It is a pity that the good material he uses lacks the final cultural and philosophical finish that would give it a permanent place on the shelf."

+ Nation 99:500 O 22 '14 800w

"Mr. Gale's translations have much of interest in them, though the stories are rather 'scrappy,' and are certainly unsuitable for children."

+ N Y Times 19:129 Mr 22 '14 150w

"This is a very interesting group of stories. Dr. Gale gives us a glimpse into the back of the Korean brain."

+ Outlook 196:425 F 21 '14 240w

INDY, VINCENT D. Beethoven: a critical biography; tr. by Theodore Baker. il *$1.25 (3c) Boston music co. 14-9332

"It appears certain," says the author, "that the career of every creative artist whose life attains normal duration, divides into three periods differing from one another in the character of the compositions: imitation, transition, reflection." His study of Beethoven is a study of these three periods—the first lasting until 1801, the second extending from 1801 to 1815, the third from 1815 to 1827. To the first period belong the well-known minuets, the first symphony, and many lieder; the symphonies from the Second to the Eighth were composed in the second period; the Ninth symphony and the Missa solemnis are products of the third.

"The book grows better and better as it proceeds. The translation is readable and clear, though there are rather strange solecisms as if Dr. Baker had entrusted it to some German-American colleague. It is a book, however, which, in spite of generally unimportant errors, has great value and interest."

+ Boston Transcript p23 Ja 14 '14 600w

"A valuable book."

+ Nation 98:219 F 26 '14 550w

INGRAM, ELEANOR MARIE. Unafraid. il *$1.25 (1½c) Lippincott 13-21028

Stern, proud hero; beautiful, impulsive heroine; loyal friend; unscrupulous villain; wild, picturesque setting—all the elements necessary to thrilling romance are present in this story. Delight Warren of New York, on her way into Montenegro to meet and marry Lieutenant Michael Balsic of the Montenegrin army, is kidnapped by his brother, Count Stefan Balsic, who is also his enemy. Immured in his castle in the mountains, she evolves gradually from a rebellious to a willing captive, and finds after a time that her infatuation for Michael is dead and that a new feeling for Stefan has taken its place. A side interest is furnished by the comedy love affair of Jack Rupert, an American aviator and racing car driver, and Irenya Lesendra, a Montenegrin maiden who is destined, in Rupert's words, to make Broadway "sit up and take notice."

"Told with rapid action and a good deal of ability. The story gains much of its interest from its unique setting."

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 1 '13 280w

"Written in a crisp, lively vein. Miss Ingram has imbued her latest story with all the care-killing qualities of her 'From the car behind.'"

+ Ind 76:266 N 6 '13 70w

"A story of romance and adventure—you can spell them both with all capitals without exaggeration—Miss Ingram's new novel goes leaping along with an ardor in its telling that will endear it to the hearts of that army of readers who can never get enough of romance and adventure."

+ N Y Times 18:768 D 28 '13 300w

INNES ARTHUR DONALD. History of England and the British empire. il 4v v 1-3 ca *$1.60 Macmillan

v 1 and 2 "The present work is intended for the general reader who wishes to know the history of England with a fairly intimate knowledge. The work is to be issued in four volumes. Beginning with the earliest information of the British Islands found in Pytheas, the Greek writer, about the last quarter of the fourth century B. C., the work is to close only with the year 1914 A. D. The first volume begins with prehistoric Britain . . . [and] continues the story to the Battle of Bosworth, 1485. . . . With this volume closes the history of England. The second volume opens with the reign of Henry VII, and with his reign begins the history of the British empire. The second volume is to cover two centuries, beginning with the accession of Henry VII and closing with the year 1688."—Boston Transcript

v 3 "Mr. Innes in the third volume of his four volume work covers the period from 1689-1802 not only for England and the empire, but to a large extent for continental affairs as related to Great Britain. The critical century which established parliamentary government as an ineradicable part of the British constitution, won an Indian empire for England and lost an American one, practically destroyed the old class of landowning peasants and created the first community in history based upon machine industry, is treated by Mr. Innes in all its fulness."—Ind

"The reviewer suspects that the author's studies in the medieval field have never gone much beyond Freeman and Stubbs or at best Maitland. At least his treatment of this period shows little or no acquaintance with recent critical work. But even within these limitations he has not always taken the pains to understand his authorities or represent them clearly." B. T. + — — Am Hist R 19:859 J1 '14 900w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"Mr. Innes has thus achieved the distinction of presenting to the general reader a vital and significant interpretation of English history." A. P. Usher

+ Ann Am Acad 53:327 My '14 850w (Review of v 1 and 2)

Ath 1913,2:657 D 6 70w (Review of v 1)

"Mr. Innes has planned his new history for the 'general reader,' who wants something more than the compact textbook and something less than the cooperative history in a series of volumes, each by a different hand."

+ Ath 1913,2:698 D 13 200w (Review of v 1)

Ath 1913,2:750 D 27 30w (Review of v 2)

"The third volume is, like those already out, easy to read and commendably accurate, as tested by daily use for purposes of reference."

+ Ath 1914,2:452 O 31 140w (Review of v 3)

"The work does not duplicate any of its predecessors, and it is a welcome addition to our histories of the English people."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ja 10 '14 430w (Review of v 1)

"His arrangement is good, his style deliberate, and his judgments reasonably impartial."

+ Ind 79:173 Ag 3 '14 450w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"From the author of 'England's industrial development' we should have had a rather more extended account of the industrial revolution."

+ — — Ind 80:173 N 2 '14 130w (Review of v 3)

"His narrative, so far as we have tested it, is accurate and acquainted with the best scholarship, and is also very readable."

+ Nation 98:336 Mr 26 '14 300w (Review of v 1)

"Mr. Innes's work opens well; his first volume contains a clear, comprehensive, and readable story."

+ N Y Times 19:283 Je 21 '14 270w (Review of v 1)

"Mr. Innes has told his tale with admirable lucidity."

+ N Y Times 19:309 J1 12 '14 400w (Review of v 2)

"The salient feature of the work is the sureness with which Mr. Innes selects the significant tendency, the illuminating characteristic, casting aside befogging and unnecessary detail."

+ N Y Times 19:323 N 29 '14 100w (Review of v 3)

"Mr. Innes is thoroughly saturated with the modern point of view, and writes from the standpoint of the movements and ideas of peoples and classes, rather than by the old method of dynasties and wars."

+ R of Rs 49:370 Mr '14 100w (Review of v 1 and 2)

+ R of Rs 50:760 D '14 60w (Review of v 3)

"Mr. Innes has done a difficult thing very well."

+ Spec 113:261 Ag 22 '14 370w (Review of v 1 and 2)

INNES, ARTHUR DONALD, ed. Source book of English history, for the use of schools. v 1 and 2 ca *$1.10 Putnam A13-1004

v 1 and 2 "A. D. Innes, who is writing a four-volume 'History of England and the British empire,' is also publishing parallel with it a 'Source book of English history.' It is intended for use in schools, interesting the student by presenting history to him as it presented itself to the men of the time. . . . In the first volume, covering the years 597-1603 A. D., he naturally draws mostly from the delightful and fairly trustworthy chronicles, but adds also some selections of great literary as well as historical value such as those from Chaucer and 'Piers Plowman.' In the second volume, 1603-1815, he has shown good judgment in drawing largely from Clarendon, Cromwell's letters, Pepys, Defoe, Burnet, Walpole, and other interesting or amusing writers." —Nation

"One of the most attractive source-books we have seen."

+ Nation 99:196 Ag 13 '14 240w (Review of v 1 and 2)

"Neither so judiciously collected nor so attractively put forth [as the series issued by Messrs. Bell]."

— Sat R 115:88 Ja 18 '13 50w (Review of v 1)

"The selections seem almost elementary as compared with the American collections, and are evidently designed rather for the purpose of awakening a love for the reading of the sources than for the study of historical problems. Typographically the volume is a model of what such a book should be." V. L. Minor

+ — School R 22:423 Je '14 230w (Review of v 1)

IRELAND, ALLEYNE. Joseph Pulitzer: reminiscences of a secretary. il *$1.25 (3c) Kennerley 14-8264

The side of Joseph Pulitzer that was turned to a new secretary is disclosed here in the hope that someone who knew him intimately for a long time will supplement the record by a work which will "do justice to the varied and remarkable qualities of one of the most vigorous, picturesque, and original personalities that ever played a part in the interesting drama of American public life." (Preface) It is a sketch which shows concretely something of the "deep affection, keen intelligence, wide sympathy, tireless energy, delicate sensitiveness, tearing impatience, cold tyranny and flaming scorn" by which Pulitzer's character was dominated. His masterful test of the young secretary's fitness for the work is one of the best portions of the narrative.

"The book is better than a biography, for the impression left is not of a large number of highly different incidents and conditions, but a distinct, concrete impression of the personality of the man who created the character of one of the greatest newspapers in the United States." D. L. M.

IRELAND, ALLEYNE—Continued.

- + Boston Transcript p4 Je 3 '14 1150w
+ Dial 57:110 Ag 16 '14 430w

"The book gives a close view of one of the most interesting personalities of our time."

- + Nation 98:731 Je 18 '14 180w
+ R of Rs 49:758 Je '14 180w

"His little book is of unusual interest as a psychological study of a terribly sad, though strenuous career."

- + Spec 113:62 Jl 11 '14 200w

"It is a remarkable portrait; indeed, a word portrait scarcely less remarkable than is the picture by Sargent. Mr. Ireland has done his task with distinct literary deftness, with humor and with a frankness evidently approved by the Pulitzer family."

- + Springfield Republican p5 Ap 30 '14 1650w

IRWIN, FLORENCE. Auction high-lights: with a full exposition of the nullo count. il $1.25 (2c) Putnam 13-23229

An auction bridge manual which presupposes an acquaintance with the elements of the game. It treats only of the finer points of the play and covers the new count, nullo, which has lately been introduced into the game. Miss Irwin discards Foster's ten a trick for nullo and adopts eight, the same as hearts,—but hearts take precedence in bidding. There are thirty-six interesting test hands with suggestions and comments upon the plays in each.

- + A L A Bkl 10:398 Je '14

"Miss Irwin's skill in conveying her knowledge of auction has been frequently demonstrated and this latest volume will be warmly welcomed."

- + Boston Transcript p27 D 10 '13 470w

"The thirty-six test hands which the author gives are well selected and should prove an interesting study for the advanced players for whom the book is intended."

- + Nation 97:516 N 27 '13 200w

"Miss Irwin has sound knowledge of the game and is able to write of it clearly and concisely."

- + N Y Times 19:25 Ja 18 '11 100w

IRWIN, FLORENCE. Nullo auction. il $1.25 (2c) Putnam 14-18891

Devoting an entire volume to the subject of nullo is significant of the fact that this auction-addition is no longer a novelty but an accepted part of the game. Miss Irwin who is a very enthusiastic nullo expert here covers the whole field of nullo-auction, its use and abuse, bids, nullo hands, plays, the discard, decisive question of honors, the revoke, illustrative hands, etc. The laws of auction are appended to the volume including the laws of three-handed and duplicate auction.

- + N Y Times 20:5 Ja 3 '15 90w

IRWIN, VIOLET MARY. Human desire. il $1.35 (1½c) Small 13-23019

The story of a little convent-bred Italian girl who, altho she worships everyday at the feet of the Madonna who holds so lovingly the little bambino in her arms, has but once in her life seen a real bambino. Learning from an American visitor that there are many babies in the world who are cold, and hungry, and even unloved, she runs away from the convent to find them and care for them. The story follows her to America, where after many experiences, some of them deeply tragic, she finds a safe haven and the satisfaction of her desires.

"The author has developed the story with a delicate charm that helps her to carry Berenice through all sorts of adventures and leaves her in the end the same attractive lovable girl who entered the story."

- + Boston Transcript p12 D 8 '13 370w

"Miss Irwin starts out with some striking situations and the promise of an unusual plot.

But her 'prentice hand plays her false and the tale falls more and more into the easy paths of banality. Much the same is true of her characters."

- + N Y Times 18:708 N 30 '13 300w

ISAACS, LEWIS MONTEFIORE, and RAHLSON, KURT JULIAN. Hänsel and Gretel: a guide to Engelbert Humperdinck's opera. *$1 Dodd

"While the opera makes an immediate appeal to everybody by its emotional melody, it contains a wealth of detail that escapes the casual listener; and it is to call attention to these subtle merits that the guide was written. The story is told in full, the leading motives, twenty-six in all, are given in musical type, and the ingenious use made of them is fully explained."—Nation

"It is altogether an excellent little book, which should find its place on the shelf next to the guide to Humperdinck's 'Königskinder,' by the same writers."

- + Nation 97:600 D 18 '13 400w

- N Y Times 18:741 D 14 '13 120w

ISHAM, FREDERIC STEWART. Nothing but the truth. *50c (1c) Bobbs 14-17166

On a wager Bob Bennett undertakes to tell the truth and nothing but the truth for three weeks. As luck will have it he is invited to a house party during that period, and because the girl he loves is to be there he hasn't the strength to refuse, tho he knows well that the way of a truth-teller will be hard in such an assemblage. Many of the resulting complications are amusing, especially those involving the friends, Dan and Clarence and Dickie, who had forced Bob into the dilemma in the first place.

"Altogether a pleasant and companionable little book to while one's thoughts from the grim realities of today."

- + N Y Times 19:484 N 1 '14 160w

"Mr. Isham blends nicely the farcical and melodramatic elements."

- + Springfield Republican p5 N 26 '14 450w

IVENS, EDMUND MASTERS. Pumping by compressed air. il $3 Wiley 14-15463

"This book gathers from various sources practically all the scattered data on the subject of pumping by compressed air. . . . In his treatment, the author has discussed the general considerations governing the pumping of water by means of air and describes the various methods in use, including the direct-acting air-driven pump, the displacement pump, the return air system, the air lift, etc., together with other commercial systems. Following this discussion of the specific subject of pumping, are four chapters devoted to compressed air, which naturally is a necessary adjunct to the subject of pumping by air. The final chapter is devoted to discussion of the flow of water in pipes; the loss due to valves, elbows, etc."—Indust Engin

"The demand for a book of this kind has been made evident to the reviewer by the large number of requests from water-supply engineers and superintendents, chemists and manufacturers, for a bulletin on the air lift, which was published several years ago by the University of Wisconsin; and, notwithstanding the minor defects pointed out, he feels assured that Mr. Ivens' book will meet their needs. For classes in hydraulic machinery and compressed-air practice, it should be of value for reference, both to the teacher and student."

C. R. Weidner

- + Engin N 72:1048 N 19 '14 450w

- + Engin Rec 70:494 O 31 '14 330w

"In his attempt to prepare a volume which would present authoritative information on this subject, the author seems to have met with commendable success. He has produced a book which not only contains a large amount of the desired data, but is of pleasing appearance and interesting reading in those parts not devoted to the mathematics of his subject."

- + Indust Engin 14:407 O '14 220w

IVES, GEORGE. History of penal methods. *$3
5 Stokcs (Eng ed 14-11578)

"This work, the outcome of twenty years of study, is a critical and historical survey of penal systems of all countries and ages. It deals, however, less with theories than with facts, and is a history of punitive ideas from medieval times down to the present day. . . . It discusses persecutions, courts of law, life sentences, outlawry, exiles, suicides, and the treatment of the insane."—Ath

+ A L A Bkl 11:56 O '14
Ath 1913,2:sup397 O 11 70w

"Though this volume is scarcely likely to attain a permanent place in the growing literature on the subject—it reads in some parts too much like a laborious compilation from an overcrowded notebook, and in others too much like a rhetorical utterance at a meeting of a discharged prisoners' aid society—yet it contains a large amount of material which the less experienced student of penology may regard as novel and interesting."

— + Ath 1914,1:488 Ap 4 1100w
+ Boston Transcript p18 Ag 19 '14 500w
+ — Dial 57:394 N 16 '14 260w

Reviewed by R. P. Farley
+ Hibbert J 12:915 Jl '14 70w

N Y Times 19:419 O 4 '14 200w

"First, then, we discover that Mr. Ives writes with wise authority. Next we discover that his humanity is founded on knowledge; that his attitude towards the penal laws of today and his remedies are rooted in common sense. Here are no first impressions of a ready writer, but a pondered contribution to the permanent literature of criminology."

+ Sat R 117:344 Mr 14 '14 950w

"Mr. Ives's volume is an excellent specimen of its class. Its chief fault is a certain weakness of arrangement."

+ — Spec 113:98 Jl 18 '14 750w

Reviewed by C. R. Henderson
+ — Survey 32:639 S 26 '14 400w

J

JACKS, LAWRENCE PEARSALL. All men are
1 ghosts. *$1.35 Holt A14-399

"In 'All men are ghosts' are included six short stories of varying length, and with one exception they all possess a supernatural element. That exception is 'Farmer Jeremy and his ways'; the other titles are 'Panhandle and the ghosts,' 'The magic formula,' 'All men are ghosts,' 'The professor's mare,' and 'White roses.' They are all thoroughly alive, and they look upon man and life with the philosopher's eye. In them Mr. Jacks shows us things that we never saw before, opens our understanding to a new world of thought, reveals a new purpose in the fiction-writer's art, and gives us a new idea of the human soul."—Boston Transcript

"Will appeal only to a comparative few. Philosophical and whimsical at times, even fantastic."

+ — A L A Bkl 10:243 F '14

"Far above the numerous storytellers who make the supernormal the servant of lovers of the sensational is the editor of the Hibbert journal."

+ Ath 1913,2:587 N 22 500w

"A volume so full of whimsical fancies, blended with wise philosophy, that it will bring to the chosen few a brief hour or two of very genuine enjoyment." F: T. Cooper

+ Bookm 39:81 Mr '14 200w

"To read Mr. Jacks is to be both enlightened and entertained. Such stories as his dignify fiction." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p26 D 17 '13 1300w

Reviewed by F. C. S. Schiller

+ Hibbert J 12:702 Ap '14 1200w

"At times his mysticism runs into fantastic obscurity and the thread of the narrative becomes far too tangled to unravel."

+ — Ind 79:29 Jl 6 '14 80w

"His method is that of the philosophical satirist; his chief obstacle a somewhat lumbering sense of humor suggestive of the eighteenth-century essay, rather than the brisk and allusive 'short story' of to-day."

+ — Nation 98:83 Ja 22 '14 330w

Reviewed by A. E. Crawley

+ Nature 93:81 Mr 26 '14 120w

+ N Y Sun p3 D 13 '13 250w

"If you are curious about what lies beyond the reach of the five senses, beyond the paths of logic, almost beyond even the jungles of the imagination, and do not object to venturing as far as human comprehension can go among the shadows of the jungle, you will find in his collection of short stories entertainment and stimulus and mental refreshment."

+ N Y Times 19:66 F 8 '14 310w

"Whimsical, pungent, and satirical, it is an entirely original adventure into fiction. Some, perhaps, may be bewildered by it—may even be bored. But those who like to find in their novels something more than a mere story will revel in its humour and imaginative suggestion. For at the back of the seemingly impossible tales in this volume is some solid thinking."

+ Sat R 116:719 D 6 '13 650w

+ Spec 112:444 Mr 14 '14 40w

JACKSON, CHARLES TENNEY. Fountain of youth. il *$2 (3½c) Outing pub. 14-18563

Mr. Jackson and a companion called "Hen" start out to look for the fountain of youth. At thirty-five each confessed to feeling fifty, and ten minutes after they had been introduced they found their common bond in a general "disgruntlement" against the world and agreed to start out on the expedition referred to above. Florida, they decide, is too filled up with hotels and tourists and they agree on Louisiana as the field of exploration. They navigated its bayous in a pirogue, a craft native to the region, and the record of their adventures is the substance of this readable book.

"A book which will appeal to the large and increasing number of those who find their keenest delight in the wide outdoors of unspoiled nature."

+ Dial 57:506 D 16 '14 180w

JACKSON, CYRIL. Outlines of education in 5 England. *60c (1c) Young ch.

(Eng ed E14-183)

This book, published as one of the "Christian social union handbooks," gives an outline of the English educational system. The chapters take up: The organization of education and government of the schools; The taught; The elementary schools; Higher education—secondary schools; Technical education; Training of teachers; The universities, with a final chapter giving Conclusions.

"The book is useful as a compendium of facts, and the limitations imposed by the attitude of the writer—that of the Church of England—are slight."

+ — Ath 1913,2:sup642 N 29 40w

"What is actually done is admirably set forth, but what different reformers wish to be done, and how far tendencies follow them, is not shown. In calling the work a limited year-book on education we give a fairly accurate description of it."

+ — Ath 1914,1:sup108 Ja 17 370w

JACKSON, DUGALD CALEB, and JACKSON, JOHN PRICE. Alternating currents and alternating current machinery. il *$5.50 Macmillan 13-21883

A new edition, much revised and enlarged, of a work that appeared first in 1896. "In this edition are maintained the well-known features of the earlier book. . . . More attention is paid to the transient state in electric circuits than was the case in the original edition. A

JACKSON, D. C. and J. P.—Continued. considerable amount of related matter has been introduced in respect to vectors, complex quantities, and Fourier's series." (Preface) Other matters which have been given attention are power and power factors, hysteresis and eddy current losses, synchronous machines, asynchronous motors and generators, self-inductance.

+ Elec World 63:725 Mr 28 '14 670w

"This book is unquestionably, in its field, one of the best that has appeared in recent years. It is a very fair and full summary of almost everything that has been published in the line of electrical engineering, and liberal references are made to the work of others." E. J. Berg

+ Engin N 70:1272 D 18 '13 500w

"The first few chapters impressed us very favourably, and although we were somewhat disappointed with the later chapters, we consider the book a good one, which will be of service to advanced students. Taking the book as a whole, the explanations are not as clear and concise as they might be; indeed, we found it exceedingly difficult to follow some of them." D. Robertson

+ — Nature 94:250 N 5 '14 600w

"It forms a very complete and, on the whole, well-balanced treatise. The work is attractive, the style easy and the illustrations, many of them diagrammatic, are instructive. Attempting to cover so much in a single volume assigns a formidable task to both author and reader. Although on the whole satisfactory, the treatment might to advantage have been made more systematic; the book would not have suffered by being more condensed." F. Bedell

+ — Science n s 39:106 Ja 16 '14 350w

JACKSON, HOLBROOK. Eighteen nineties. il $3.50 Kennerley (Eng ed A14-180)

The object of this literary retrospect is "to appraise the artistic and literary forces which were at work in the period from 1890 to 1900. That decade was thought at the time to be one of decadence, but its historian contends that it was really a time of renaissance." (Ja 17 '14) "Among the exponents of the literature of the period so-called 'decadent,' are studied Oscar Wilde, 'G. B. S.,' Rudyard Kipling, Yeats, Davidson, Moore, Zangwill, Max Beerbohm, Le Gallienne, Symons, Dowson, Thompson; of pictorial art, Pryde, Nicholson, Ricketts, Shannon, Walter Crane, Phil May, Aubrey Beardsley; of arts and crafts, William Morris and Emery Walker; of the decorative art of the 'British impressionists,' Watts, Nicholson, Pryde, Couder and Aubrey Beardsley." (Ja 31 '14)—Boston Transcript

"The book is a study of unrest rather than a literary history. It will, nevertheless, appeal to a wide circle of readers, all the more because Mr. Jackson quotes aptly and at length, and has selected excellent illustrations."

+ — Ath 1913,2:490 N 1 250w

Reviewed by H. C. Shelley

Boston Transcript p9 Ja 17 '14 450w

"A book of rare interest and value is this, recreating a period unique in the art and literature of England, and giving vivid personality to the chief exemplars of its doctrine of realism. Throughout the study, written in a style sometimes epigrammatic and always finely distinctive, Mr. Jackson preserves an admirable poise of judgment and an equally admirable clarity of construction."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 31 '14 700w

"We miss the sympathetic spontaneity of Mr. Jackson's earlier and more casual studies of men and books. Nevertheless, 'The eighteen nineties' is good work, worthy of the fine setting and copious and interesting illustration that the publishers have provided."

+ Dial 56:303 Ap 1 '14 450w

"Mr. Jackson has written a book that is at once excellent in understanding and perverted in its conclusions." P. E. M.

+ — Nation 98:566; 598 My 14; 21 '14 6600w

Reviewed by Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 19:289 Je 28 '14 1500w

"I do not really know whether Mr. Holbrook Jackson is right or wrong as an interpreter of the literary tendencies of a dozen years or so ago, but I do know from this volume that he is quite admirable and interesting as an archeologist of whims." F. M. Colby

+ No Am 200:289 Ag '14 2350w

JACOBS, WILLIAM WYMARK. Night watches. 12 il $1.25 (3½c) Scribner 14-17981

"Night watches" is made up of ten of Mr. Jacobs's characteristic tales of sailor men and others. The stories are: Back to back; Keeping watch; The understudy; The weaker vessel; Stepping backwards; The three sisters; The unknown; The vigil; Easy money; and His other self.

+ A L A Bkl 11:174 D '14

"Mr. Jacobs has by no means lost his talent for invention and disposition of the wit and wisdom of the types and classes he has studied with such care."

+ Ath 1914,2:392 O 17 120w

"Every one who reads these merry tales must finish each with a chuckle as he realizes, but does not read about, just what happens." F. L. W.

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 28 '14 700w

+ Dial 57:391 N 16 '14 80w

"Another delightful collection."

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 50w

"The sketches in 'Night watches' are not unamusing, but they lack spontaneity—and it is time that the night watchman was relieved."

+ — Nation 99:552 N 5 '14 150w

+ New Republic 1:27 N 28 '14 90w

"A humorist of Mr. Jacobs's quality is a boon at any time, but in these days of darkness one peculiarly welcomes the smile that cannot fail to respond to his clever whimsies."

+ N Y Times 19:488 N 8 '14 200w

+ Outlook 108:846 D 9 '14 20w

+ Spec 113:567 O 24 '14 200w

JACOBY, HAROLD. Astronomy. il $2.50 (2c) Macmillan 13-20136

Descriptive note in December, 1913.

"It is readable, accurate, comprehensive and does not require much knowledge of mathematics. More scientific and more extended than Serviss' 'Astronomy in a nutshell.'"

+ A L A Bkl 10:141 D '13 ★

"The book will prove valuable to the general reader who cares to know more about its subject and the youth is lucky into whose hands it is placed as a guide to study." M. E. Martin

+ Chaut 72:477 F 14 '14 300w

"As a popular handbook for the general reader, however, it will be far more successful than as a student's text, because that nice balance of topics, abundance of direct definitions, and topical paragraphing, things prerequisite for a text, are quite disregarded. On the other hand, the very frequent cross-references in the text, while a help to the student who inclines to look them up, are a distinct drawback in general perusal because they interrupt the story's continuity and the reader's flow of thought." D. Dodd

+ — Educ R 47:524 My '14 800w

+ Ind 77:137 Ja 26 '14 30w

"Characterized by judiciousness of selection, sanity of opinion, and clarity of expression, which make a safe and authoritative book."

+ Nation 98:554 My 7 '14 1000w

"In reading the book a few points have come to the reviewer's notice which rather invite criticism. It may be said, however, that in spite of the above minor deficiencies, the book is one that will serve a very useful purpose, and should appeal to a large circle of readers."

+ — Nature 93:211 Ap 30 '14 450w

"It serves its purpose better than any recent handbook and ought to lead many inquirers toward this fascinating study which lends itself so easily to amateur work."

+ — N Y Times 18:724 D 7 '13 550w

"The volume is attractive in form, appears to be free from errors, and is admirably, if not profusely, illustrated. On the whole, the book is exceptionally well written, and as a popular exposition of the whole field of astronomy is unexcelled." S. L. Bailey

+ Science n s 39:27 Ja 2 '14 650w

+ Wis Lib Bull 10:87 Ap '14 50w

JACOBY, HENRY SYLVESTER, and DAVIS, ROLAND P. Foundations of bridges and buildings. il $5 McGraw 11-9857

A book "written primarily for use as a text-book for students and young engineers. . . . Some of the items which are discussed, and which add considerably to the value of the volume, are concrete piles, steel sheet piles, physiological effects of compressed air and prevention of caisson disease, various methods of constructing deep open wells for buildings, design of steel grillage, shoring and underpinning buildings, and test boring."—Engin N

+ A L A Bkl 11:104 N '14

"Briefly it may be said that 'Foundations of bridges and buildings' is essentially a book for the classroom. It is well written, systematic and accurate." C. S. Rindsfoos

+ Engin N 71:1389 Je 18 '14 570w

"The engineering profession is indebted to the authors for the painstaking care and the great labor involved in the preparation of this work. It fills a long-felt want." F. H. Constant

+ Engin Rec 70:141 Ag 1 '14 850w

JAMES, GEORGE WHARTON. California, romantic and beautiful. (See America first ser.) il $3.50 (3c) Page 14-19629

The author speaks of this as a small volume, and says that it has been impossible within its limits to describe adequately his great state. "My highest expectation is that in these pages I have given a fuller and more comprehensive view than most people, even Californians, have yet taken." However, it is a book of over four hundred pages with full-page plates added and the author seems to have covered the ground quite fully, devoting chapters to California's history, her picturesque mission days, her mountains, coast, climate, cities, industries, flowers, festivals, colleges, art, etc. Many of the pictures are in color and there is a large folding map of the state and an index.

Reviewed by G. I. Colbron

+ Bookm 40:572 Ja '15 70w

"He has not been betrayed into 'fine writing,' but has used the straightforward method of narrative and description. For the historical parts he has consulted good authorities, and in his citations is often strikingly felicitous. He has, moreover, furnished a well-selected bibliography, and also a satisfactory index."

+ Lit D 50:107 Ja 16 '15 250w

"The abundant and excellent illustrations combined with the persuasive text, make it a potent tract for the region and an entertaining one."

+ Nation 99:714 D 17 '14 300w

"Elaborate and exceedingly attractive work on California."

+ Outlook 108:788 D 2 '14 140w

+ Springfield Republican p5 D 3 '14 100w

JAMES, GEORGE WHARTON. Indian blankets and their makers. il $5 (5½c) McClurg 14-15372

Some years ago the author brought out a book on Indian basketry which has become a standard. In the present work he has endeavored "to do for the art of blanket-weaving what that book sought to do for the art of basket-making." He traces the history of blanket-making thru its three stages. First there was the primitive period when the blankets, made by the Indians for their own use, were both fine in quality and beautiful in color and design; then followed a cheap commercial period, with the introduction of cotton warps and aniline dyes, and blanket weaving deteriorated and became almost a lost art.

Fortunately however, under the influence of a few enthusiastic collectors and honest traders, it was revived, and the blankets of to-day are the equals in quality and beauty of the early products. The volume is beautifully illustrated with many reproductions in color of fine examples from the collection of the author and others.

A L A Bkl 11:109 N '14

+ Dial 57:459 D 1 '14 220w

"The Navaho designs are given in detail, and their meanings and the related customs and legends of the people so fully treated that the work is as valuable to one interested in the Indian himself, and to the folk-lore collector."

+ Ind 80:412 D 14 '14 70w

"It is time for an authoritative work on these blankets. And Mr. James would seem to have furnished it. Nothing is left untold."

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 150w

"The volume, if its exaggerations be passed over, is interesting and instructive. The illustrations are many and good, and the greatest value of the volume will be as a book of reference for the collector or the student of ethnology."

+ Nation 99:724 D 17 '14 300w

"This beautiful volume should be received gratefully by all lovers of art, and by all who are interested in the aesthetic instinct as it manifested itself among primitive people."

+ N Y Times 19:328 N 29 '14 90w

JAMES, GEORGE WHARTON. Old Franciscan missions of California. il $1.50 (2c) Little 13-22479

"This volume pretends to nothing new in the way of historical research or scholarship. It is merely an honest and simple attempt to meet a popular demand for an unpretentious work that shall give the ordinary tourist and reader enough of the history of the missions to make a visit to them of added interest, and to link their history with that of the other missions founded elsewhere in the country during the same or prior epochs of mission activity." (Foreword) The book is largely a condensation to guide book proportions of the author's "In and out of the old missions of California."

A L A Bkl 10:271 Mr '14

"This is a guide book in the best sense of the term."

+ Boston Transcript p9 N 15 '13 150w

+ Cath World 98:826 Mr '14 130w

+ Lit D 47:1019 N 22 '13 160w

Nation 99:48 J1 9 '14 70w

JAMES, HENRY. Notes of a son and brother. il $2.50 (2c) Scribner 14-5060

This volume of reminiscences follows "A small boy and others." The first memories are of school days in Geneva where Henry James, at the "Institution Rochette," struggled hopelessly in an atmosphere of "mathematics unmitigated." William James figures more largely in these pages than did the ever-vanishing elder brother of the earlier volume. His early artistic aspirations are touched upon, and there are many quotations from his letters, written from Cambridge, and later from abroad. There are letters too from the correspondence of the elder Henry James with Emerson and others. The time period covered is that of the sixties and early seventies.

+ A L A Bkl 10:355 My '14

"To devoted students these 'Notes of a son and brother' will present themselves as a peculiarly characteristic and peculiarly victorious display of the master's power."

+ Ath 1914:1:523 Ap 11 2000w

"Mr. James's volume is notable for its graphic portrayal of the personalities encountered by its writer, as well as for its revelation of a mind that leaves nothing unobserved and that sees nothing apparently unworthy of comment." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p24 Mr 11 '14 2150w

JAMES, HENRY—Continued.

"There is a wealth of matter in the book, presented with all the elaborate artistry dear to Mr. James's readers, that renders it a remarkable piece of autobiography and one of the most notable works of the season." P. F. Bicknell

+ Dial 56:289 Ap 1 '14 1850w

+ Ind 78:367 Je 1 '14 2:00w

"Though the stuff of this volume is far richer than that of the first, the manner of it is not less exasperating."

+ Nation 99:16 Jk-2 '14 2150w

"The reader with sufficient leisure and application will find much profitable entertainment in this exhaustive chronicle. To read the book through is to feel peculiarly intimate with its author, to feel, in fact, that one has become a member of his family." Joyce Kilmer

+ N Y Times 19:117 Mr 15 '14 1400w

Reviewed by F. M. Colby

+ No Am 200:632 O '14 1750w

+ Sat R 117:342 Mr 14 '14 1650w

"The second volume of Mr. Henry James's autobiography will seem to some readers less interesting than the first. It is more concerned with his family than with himself."

+ Spec 113:sup446 O 3 '14 1450w

Reviewed by S. M. Crothers

+ Yale R n s 4:414 Ja '15 730w

JAMES, HENRY. Notes on novelists, with some other notes. $2.50 (2c) Scribner 14-18367

Henry James's third volume of reminiscences takes the form of a series of definite papers, differing in this from the two books of random recollections and notes that preceded it. He writes of: Robert Louis Stevenson; Emile Zola; Gustave Flaubert; Honoré de Balzac; George Sand; Gabriele D'Annunzio; Matilde Serao; The new novel; Dumas the Younger; The novel in "The ring and the book"; An American art-scholar; Charles Eliot Norton; and brings the volume to a close with four brief chapters of London notes.

+ A L A Bkl 11:211 Ja '15

Ath 1914,2:471 N 7 1650w

"The style is not tortuous or mystifying; it is clear almost to transparency." Brander Matthews

+ Bookm 40:460 D '14 2000w

"A notable series of discourse upon the art of imaginative writing. They are thoroughly representative of Mr. James." E. F. E.

+ Boston Transcript p24 O 21 '14 1700w

+ Cath World 100:695 F '15 70w

"The interest attaching to these 'notes' is, indeed, very largely due to the point of view of the author, though, needless to say, the subjects are sketched with fine insight, with generous though discriminating appreciation, with the charm and felicity to which readers of Mr. James have so long been accustomed. As one reads this pleasant volume one feels that, though full of thought, it is not from the study; that, though charming in manner, it is not of the 'salon.' It comes from the artist's studio, full of shop talk about methods and processes." L. I. Bredvold

+ Dial 57:332 N 1 '14 1650w

+ Ind 80:243 N 16 '14 70w

Reviewed by Philip Littell

+ New Republic 1:26 N 21 '14 1450w

+ R of Rs 50:763 D '14 170w

+ Sat R 118:488 N 7 '14 1300w

"Mr James's suggestive criticism is mostly worth extracting from his complex and cryptic phrases."

+ Spec 113:sup697 N 21 '14 70w

JAMES, HERMAN GERLACH. Applied city government. il 75c (2c) Harper 14-16464

This book on the principles and practice of charter making is designed as a guide to charter framers, and as a help to students of city government in college classes. It is an outgrowth from the pamphlet, "A model charter for Texas cities," prepared by the author about a year ago, and it takes up in order the general provisions of a charter, as follows: Incorporation and powers; The electorate; The recall and direct legislation; The form of government; The administrative officers; The city's finances; The issuance of bonds and the granting of franchises. Following the Conclusion there is a selected list of references on American city government.

+ A L A Bkl 11:99 N '14 +

"Should be of use to legislators."

+ Dial 57:261 O 1 '14 80w

"It puts into small compass the advanced ideas of the present day upon such matters as commission government, city manager, recall, and direct legislation in cities. Yet it is not a radical book."

+ Nation 99:353 S 17 '14 180w

"The book is well adapted for its purpose."

+ N Y Times 20:8 Ja 3 '15 550w

JAMES, JAMES ALTON. ed. Readings in American history. $1.50 Scribner 14-4202

A source book in American history designed for use in secondary schools. "The author has in it brought together a good number of documents, extracts from journals and letters of persons who were contemporary with the events from the days of Columbus to the inaugural address of President Wilson." (Boston Transcript)

A L A Bkl 10:398 Je '14

"This volume will bring as much delight to the general reader as it will be helpful to the students in high schools, for whom it was prepared."

+ Boston Transcript p22 F 25 '14 200w

"The selections are of widely varied interest, and seem to us exceptionally well chosen."

+ Dial 56:307 Ap 1 '14 90w

"The selections are well made and well ordered."

+ Educ R 48:417 N '14 30w

"On the whole, the matter in the book is wisely and appropriately selected."

+ Nation 98:548 My 7 '14 200w

"On the whole, Professor James's volume succeeds in being adequately instructive and interesting."

+ No Am 199:784 My '14 650w

JAMES, MONTAGUE RHODES. Old Testament legends. il $1.25 Longmans A14-1014

The stories are taken from the less-known Apocryphal books of the Old Testament. There are eight of them, "chosen for their power to interest youth and for the sound sense that some of them, at least, inculcate either directly or indirectly. The translations are in some cases made by the author; in others, they are taken from standard editions of the various apocryphal books." (Bib World)

"[The legends] are here retold in such a way that they lose none of their ancient charm, and yet will be easily understood."

+ Ath 1913,2:sup475 O 25 50w

"The collection is well fitted to arouse an interest in the Apocrypha and a desire for further knowledge of them."

+ Bib World 43:140 F '14 190w

"Though there are the utmost 'naïveté' and anthropomorphism, there is no irreverent or flippant spirit whatever in these tales. Dr. James tells them in simple, dignified, sometimes Elizabethan English, and there is not even the slightest trace of that laughing in his sleeve which added piquancy to his ghost stories, invented for grown-up readers as much as for the young listeners. Mr. Henry Ford knows how to indicate the dignity of saintly patriarchs and the graceful lines which are proper to angels. There is also that unobtrusive fitness which comes of friendly collaboration between author and illustrator, the lack of which is so often irritatingly obtrusive."

+ Spec 111:sup692 N 1 '13 550w

JANSKY, CYRIL. METHODIUS. Elementary magnetism and electricity; prepared in the Extension division of the Univ. of Wisconsin. (Industrial education ser.) il *$1.50 McGraw 14-5049

"A practical elementary treatise on magnetism and electricity as well as some of their chief applications. The book is intended either for students at their own homes or for students in evening classes at industrial schools. The ten chapters into which the book is divided relate to the following subjects: Magnetism, electromagnetism, some practical applications of electromagnets, electromagnetic induction, current electricity, electrolysis, resistance, electric generator and motor, work and energy."—Elec World

"A clear, concise treatment for beginners."

+ A L A Bkl 11:104 N '14

Elec World 64:777 O 17 '14 120w

JANVIER, THOMAS ALLIBONE. At the Casa 7 Napoléon. il *$1.25 (2c) Harper 14-11309

Five studies of foreign folk, quaint and interesting, who in Janvier's day frequented a little hotel in the vicinity of lower Fifth avenue. "They are French, Italian, Spanish and Mexicans, and their little weaknesses, such as stacking a pack or adding extras to a hotel bill, are told with a touch of humor as if this, after all, were a confidential matter among gentlemen, while the real sacrifices they were ready to make, impoverished though they might be, when the young American bride in the little hotel fell ill of fever, make it appear that, after all, their faults were merely the accidents of circumstance and that their virtues were their more real characteristics." (Springfield Republican)

+ Boston Transcript p20 J1 15 '14 900w

"The stories are on the borderland between smiles and tears, so delicate is their sentiment, so true their humor, and they are endowed with a distinct charm which is always found in Mr. Janvier's writings."

+ Ind 78:537 Je 22 '14 70w

"It is a book of real stories by a real author whose books touch all human sympathies."

+ Lit D 49:199 Ag 1 '14 200w

"It is a book to be particularly enjoyed by middle-aged readers who have tender memories of a phase of the American short story which, in default of 'punch,' relied openly on its recipe of whimsical humor and graceful sentiment."

+ Nation 98:756 Je 25 '14 300w

+ N Y Times 19:270 Je 14 '14 450w

"Those who want a rattling, crashing 'quick lunch' tale will not like these stories; they are too leisurely, too atmospheric, too human, and too well bred."

+ Outlook 107:626 J1 11 '14 250w

"The stories are delicate in their literary craftsmanship, and they are altogether delightful in their sentiment and in their humor."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 470w

JAQUES, E. T. Charles Dickens in Chancery. 10 pa *40c Longmans

"Bearing the memorable case of Jarndyce versus Jarndyce in mind, it is interesting to learn of the intimate connection that the author of 'Bleak house' had with the Court of chancery. The incident forms the theme of this book. E. T. Jaques tells of the famous novelist's experiences as a litigant in the court that eight years later he satirized so mercilessly."—N Y Times

"A readable little book. To suggest that Dickens was inspired to write his immortal satire of the Court of chancery merely because he failed to obtain his costs from an impecunious set of impudent pirates is, surely, to do injustice to his character as an artist."

+ Ath 1914:2:75 J1 18 1000w

"His pamphlet is a masterpiece of circumlocution and verbiage." E. R. E.

+ Boston Transcript p21 S 2 '14 480w

+ N Y Times 19:340 Ag 9 '14 380w

"A real addition to Dickens literature."
+ Spec 113:398 S 19 '14 750w

JARINTZOFF, N. Russia, the country of extremes. il *$4 Holt (Eng ed 14-13602)

"The book had its nucleus in a number of articles published in the English reviews, yet, oddly enough, these original chapters are the least pertinent. It is in padding out her material to volume size that the author has given us her best work, and come closest to justifying the title of the book. The original articles were historical in nature, and interesting enough in a rather academic fashion. It is the chapters dealing with the Russia of to-day that give us a vivid picture of a land and a people of extremes."—Nation

"She is most interesting and informing when she deals with the universities and the general revolutionary movement, of which she writes with entire sympathy."

+ A L A Bkl 11:25 S '14

"A fascinating book that casts a flood of clear light on the great country of the Czars. It has a good index and a very accurate glossary of Russian words, but like so many books on Russia, the transliteration of Russian words is erratic in the extreme." N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p22 S 16 '14 900w

"Loyally yet fairly written."

+ Ind 73:324 My 25 '14 20w

"A curious mixture of curiosities, chapters dealing with history, biography, education, social customs and religion is her account, thrown together without order and told in a naive style, and containing many interesting things that would be hard to find elsewhere."

+ Ind 79:415 S 21 '14 320w

"A better account of the Cossacks' past and present we have never read."

+ Lit D 49:1187 D 12 '14 220w

"A valuable study of a fascinating and apparently inexhaustible subject."

+ Nation 99:79 J1 16 '14 320w

+ N Y Times 10:359 Ag 23 '14 250w

"Everything is put before us by an author who understands the art of entertaining as well as that of instructing the reader."

+ Outlook 107:371 Je 13 '14 150w

"It is a curious jumble of facts, brought together in book form, without a thread of narrative or connection of any kind."

+ Sat R 118:148 Ag 1 '14 850w

"Alme. Jarintzoff is not intentionally unfair, but her attitude towards the revolution is one of consistent and admiring sympathy."

+ Spec 112:sup1064 Je 27 '14 1200w

"What can be said without qualification for the Russian author is that she gives a deeply moving and impressive picture of the sufferings which have brought the revolutionists into existence."

+ Springfield Republican p5 Je 18 '14 700w

JASTROW, MORRIS, jr. Hebrew and Babylonian traditions. *$2.50 Scribner 14-4232

The Haskell lectures delivered at Oberlin college in 1913, and since revised and enlarged. The work aims "to indicate not merely the points of divergence between the two civilizations that started out with much in common, but more particularly to indicate why, with important traditions and beliefs so close to one another as to be practically identical, we find the Hebrews proceeding along a line of development which gradually transformed these traditions and beliefs into a medium for expressing the highest spiritual aspirations of the human race and led to one of the most impressive endeavors to find a solution for the mysteries by which we are surrounded."

"It is a sane, reverent, scientific treatment of the subject, happy throughout both in its method and its spirit. The two works together effectually dispose of the extravagant claims of the pan-Babylonians. The whole discussion is so sane and persuasive that the conclusions for the most part commend themselves." G: A. Barton

JASTROW, MORRIS, jr.—Continued.

+ — Am J Theol 18:425 Jl '14 600w

"A thoughtful and learned presentation of the results of long research in the author's special field."

+ A L A Bkl 10:398 Je '14

"Deserves a particularly warm welcome from wide circles of readers. We have in our reading of the work noted some points on which differences of opinion may arise. The points to which exception may justly be taken are, however, but few, and they leave undiminished our high appreciation of the work as a whole."

+ — Ath 1914:1648 My 9 1050w

"In the treatment of so large a subject as this, differences of interpretation are bound to arise. The value of this book lies in the fact that it will undoubtedly commend itself almost throughout to a very large number of competent scholars. It is a most sober and illuminating discussion of a great and important problem."

+ Bib World 43:417 Je '14 650w

"The book is one of human as well as historical interest. It is primarily intended for the scholar, but the average reader who picks it up will not do amiss, for he will find much in it of a fresh outlook and of keen interest."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 28 '14 630w

"Professor Jastrow has abundantly proved his thesis."

+ Dial 57:112 Ag 16 '14 320w

"The author is one of the greatest authorities on the subject and his volume is as judicious as it is scholarly."

+ Ind 80:245 N 16 '14 70w

"The volume shows admirable mastery of the material."

+ Nation 99:528 O 29 '14 750w

"Professor Jastrow's treatise is highly readable; the treatment is on the whole popular rather than technical, although it is characterized by the conscientious accuracy and conservatism of scholarship. In expounding a complex subject, as full of uncertainty as of interest, the author's definiteness of aim and his unmistakable, consistent emphasis on the points he deems of most importance are most helpful."

+ No Am 199:950 Je 14 570w

+ Outlook 107:562 Jl 4 '14 250w

JAY, JUNIUS, pseud. Open-air politics and the conversion of Governor Soothem. *$1.25 (3½c) Houghton 14-18678

Altho the sensational incidents of a general strike are introduced toward the end of this story, it has little or no action, being made up largely of conversations. It can hardly be called a story at all. Its characters are a group of men, including a general, a professor, a clergyman, and a governor, who, around a hunter's camp fire, discuss problems of the day, popular government, woman suffrage, syndicalism, etc.

Nation 99:780 D 31 '14 130w

"Some rather interesting discussions."

+ N Y Times 19:499 N 15 '14 100w

JEFFERSON, CHARLES EDWARD. Cause of the war. *50c (6½c) Crowell 14-22286

A study of the causes of the war which exonerates the Kaiser and all other individuals immediately concerned. The author finds that the fundamental cause of the war is a false philosophy of national life, "a philosophy which maintains that the foundation of all power is physical force, and that greatness is to be computed in terms of brute strength."

N Y Times 19:586 D 27 '14 80w

JEFFERSON, THOMAS. Autobiography of Thomas Jefferson, 1743-1790, together with a summary of the chief events in Jefferson's life; new ed. with introd. and notes by Paul Leicester Ford. il *$1.50 (2½c) Putnam 11-13437

An autobiography of Jefferson which was begun in 1821, during Jefferson's seventy-seventh year, and which is brought down only to 1790, leaving out the period from 1790 to 1826. The value of the sketch lies mainly in the activities leading up to the revolution in which Jefferson's leadership was important.

"Mr. Ford's illuminating pages relating to Jefferson's career will be found of exceptional interest, and those persons who have read only one of Jefferson's writings, the imperishable Declaration of Independence, will now be able to see the great Virginian from quite another angle of vision."

+ Boston Transcript p22 Ap 8 '14 400w

"A valuable historical document which throws much light on the ideals and motives of one of the leading founders of the United States."

+ Spec 112:920 My 30 '14 90w

JENKINS, E. H. Small rock garden; ed. by F. W. Harvey. (Country life lib.) il *$1 Scribner Agri4-1473

The book gives "scientific information in regard to arranging a rock garden, and the kinds of soil, plants, and methods of growing plants, for this form of horticulture." (Boston Transcript) "A valuable feature is the lists of plants suitable for the different kinds of gardens described—wall, rock, bog, moraine, and so on." (Spec)

"While dealing in detail with all the necessary information, Mr. Jenkins has made his chapters concise, and by this and by his tabulated forms his book is exceedingly practical."

+ Boston Transcript p8 F 21 '14 230w

+ N Y Times 19:331 Ag 2 '14 60w

+ — Spec 112:838 My 16 '14 40w

JENKINS, MACGREGOR. Reading public. *75c (5c) Houghton 14-17478

An essay by the publisher of the Atlantic Monthly. The first part of the essay is a discussion of books and reading, with a classification of readers into three classes: sponge; sieve; and duck-back readers. The first is the reader who absorbs what he reads. The second is the darling of the publisher's heart. "It is he who keeps the best-sellers selling." And it is for the third that the subscription books are published. The remainder of the essay is concerned with the relationship of the editor to both author and public.

A L A Bkl 11:203 Ja '15

"A volume of genial, witty, often incisive comments. Incidentally, he throws out numerous comments and bits of advice which the budding author might well take to heart." C. Winter

+ Bookm 40:567 Ja '15 70w

"Even if you are a 'sieve' or a 'duckback' you will enjoy a perusal of 'The reading public.' His criticism of our habits is not only suggestive, but has the fascination of being written by a keen observer who has helped to supply the demand, yet without any esoteric superiority in the point of view or any censorious severity in the style."

+ Nation 100:58 Ja 14 '15 210w

"Amusing and truthful essay."

+ N Y Br Lib News 1:55 N '14 20w

JENKINS, STEPHEN. Old Boston post road. il *$3.50 (2½c) Putnam 13-25381

The highway which in stage coach days served as the mail route between New York and Boston is the subject of the author's historical and descriptive sketch. A chapter on "The era of the post-rider, and one on "The era of the stage coach is followed by descriptions of the road itself and the towns thru which it passes. The many pictures, from old prints and from modern photographs, are an interesting feature of the book.

"Needed only in large collections or where local interest warrants the purchase."

+ A L A Bkl 10:271 Mr '14

"On the whole the work has been well done and the volume is interestingly written."

+ — Boston Transcript p7 Ja 10 '14 330w

Figures in parenthesis following price indicate cost per 1000 words

"Especially noteworthy are the two hundred well-chosen illustrations from both early and later sources."

+ Dial 53:533 D 16 '13 180w

"The lover of New England will be grateful to Mr. Jenkins for the industry and patient thoroughness with which he has uncovered the trail of the old Boston post road." J. E. Chase

+ Nation 99:655 D 3 '14 900w

"The writing of it was a service well worth rendering to the community, as the wide public to which it appeals may show."

